Whereas, on account of the very great hardship that has been brought about by the conflicting decisions aforesaid, great disturbance and trouble has already arisen and is likely to arise unless some satisfactory and just action be taken by the State and General Government relating to this subject; and

Whereas the settlers aforesaid are wholly without remedy under the effect of said rulings of the various Departments and officers of the General Government and courts, and they only desire that the United States should take proper action to protect them, and it has become a matter of vital importance to all the settlers on these lands, whether holding under the United States laws as pre-emptors, or under the company, as well as to all other people residing along the Des Moines Valley from the Raccoon Fork to the north line of 92 on the east side and the north line of 88 on the west side of the river, to which point said lands were certified, that these long-continued and vexing controversies connected with the legislation referred to be fully and finally settled; and

Whereas the settlers upon said lands believe that no action has ever been taken relating to these lands in which the United States and the interest of the United States have been fairly and properly represented in court and only desire that this may be done: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Iowa, (the senate concurring.) That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives requested to favor the immediate passage of a bill which shall in some manner provide for the Attorney-General of the United States to immediately commence proceedings or cause such proceedings or cause such proceedings to be instituted by suit, either in law or in equity, or both, as may be necessary, and appear in the name of the United States as to remove all clouds from the title to said lands, in which suits any person or persons in possession of, or claiming title to, any tract or tracts of land under the United States involved in such suits may, at his or their expense, units with the United States in the prosecution of such suits to the end that the title, or titles, of any person or persons, claiming said lands, may be forever settled.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Mr. Speaker, had this House permitted what we believed it would, the reading of the minority report which has become a report of this House, it would have lessened our labors on this question materially and enabled us to present to the House a statement of the case, at once lucid and, as we believe, most convincing. But, it not being permitted, we are compelled to make a short statement of the facts in addition to those which have been already made by the honorable gentleman from Lowa, and of the facts as they are by the honorable gentleman from Iowa, and of the facts as they appear in evidence; because this matter has been often before the Congress of the United States, at least before four different Congresses, has it been considered in one form or another.

gress of the United States, at least before four different Congresses, has it been considered in one form or another.

The facts appear, as the gentleman from Iowa suggests, that a bill was passed in 1846 giving certain lands to the State of Iowa for the purpose of certain improvements of the Des Moines River. That act provided that there be, and hereby is, granted to said Territory of Iowa for the purpose of aiding said Territory to improve the navigation of the Des Moines River from its mouth to the Raccoon Fork, so called, in said Territory, one equal moiety, in alternate sections of public land, remaining unsold, in a strip five miles wide on each side of the river, to be selected, &c.

While this was a Territory (and upon the argument in Congress upon which this act was passed) it was claimed that the lands were to be conveyed up to the Raccoon Fork, which, as the gentleman from Iowa has said, is about midway of the State. Subsequently, after the organization of the Territory into a State, the State claimed and demanded by reason of this act of Congress that it was entitled to some six hundred thousand acres more lying between the Raccoon Fork and the head of the river. This, as the gentleman stated, was disputed in one way or another and continued as a matter of uncertainty until 1851, when the United States ceded to the State of Iowa two hundred and seventy odd thousand acres of the land lying above Raccoon Fork, and these were ceded to the State upon the basis of improvements that had been made upon the said Des Moines River. These improvements, to the amount of $332,000, had been made by the Des Moines Navigation Company; and, in a settlement between the State and this company, the State by an act of its Legislature provided that the governor and other proper officers should deed these lands which they had so received or make such provisions as should be necessary to convey them to the Des Moines Navigation Company to pay them for the improvements already made upon the river, amounting, as I have alrea amounting, as I have already said, to some three hundred and thirty-two thousand dollars.

They were compelled to advance certain moneys and to do other things which appear in the reports. The State went on and executed this deed. The governor signed a deed conveying the lands referred to, and in order that there might be no question in reference to the matter, the lands were designated by metes and bounds, so that their location is absolutely clear; and to avoid any uncertainty they also executed a general deed covering some 155,000 acres of these lands above Raccoon Fork. These, as I say, were received by the Des Moines Navigation Company in payment of improvements made by them, and were sold by the said company, and to-day these parties holding under said purchase are the parties who are opposing the passage of this bill.

This was in 1858. The record in the Forty-third Command.

This was in 1858. The record in the Forty-third Congress shows that not one of these men who now come to claim that this bill should be passed squatted upon or claimed to take possession of the land until 1862, from that up to 1868. Consequently, before any one of them entered upon the lands there was recorded in the State of Iowa them entered upon the lands there was recorded in the State of Iowa a perfect deed from the governor and State officers of that State to the Des Moines Navigation Company. Afterward, in 1859, the Supreme Court of the United States, in a case which came before them, held that the original act of 1846 only conveyed lands up to the Raccoon Fork. That being so, in 1861 they came to Congress and succeeded in securing the passage of a joint resolution which has once been read, but I do not know whether the House understood it. That joint resolution provided that all the title which the United States shall retain in the tracts of land along the Des Moines River and above shall retain in the tracts of land along the Des Moines River and above the mouth of the Raccoon Fork thereof, in the State of Iowa, which have been certified to said State improperly by the Department of the Interior—that all title which they have is hereby granted and vested in this State of Iowa.

That is the substance of the joint resolution. Following that, in 1861 Congress passed an act by which they provided that the State of Iowa should have all the lands on the Des Moines River to its of Iowa should have all the lands on the Des Moines River to its boundary line, some five hundred and odd thousand acres.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, whether the lands conveyed to the said Des Moines Navigation Company did not revert to the State because of the failure of the company to make the improvements you have spoken of?

Mr. PRESCOTT. That question arose soon afterward in the United States Supreme Court, where a party who had become a purchaser came before the court. It was held that, although the State had no title at the time they deeded by virtue of the act in 1846, yet by the subsequent legislation of 1860 and the act of 1861 the title vested in the State for the benefit of all such parties, and therefore that there was a perfect title vested in the Des Moines Navigation Company.

Company.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, this bill affects the title to over three hundred thousand acres of land in the State of Iowa, worth probably upward of three millions of dollars. It seeks, by the fiat of Congress, to wrest these lands from their owners, and bestow them on citizens of Iowa. It is an act of spoliation—an act of the worst kind of agrarianism. The owners of the lands, whom this bill attempts to rob, are the grantees of the State of Iowa. They bought these lands of the State of Iowa in 1858, and paid full value to that State for them. They have paid taxes on them to the State of Iowa for twenty of the State of Iowa in 1858, and paid full value to that State for them. They have paid taxes on them to the State of Iowa for twenty years. Many of these owners are non-residents of Iowa, and the taxes have been laid upon them with a heavy hand.

Only in April last, Mr. Litchfield, of New York, who owns a few acres of these lands, paid $10,352.12 taxes assessed upon them to the State of Iowa. This occurred since this bill was reported to this House. This sum was not paid until the supreme court of the State of Iowa had rendered a judgment against him for the amount and that judgment had been affirmed in the United States Supreme Court. The lands upon which Litchfield was compelled to pay this large sum as taxes this bill takes away from him, if it has any force whatever. The persons to whom this bill seeks to transfer the lands in question never bought them, never paid for them, never paid taxes on them, and have no title or color of title, legal or equitable, to them. They are mere squatters. They went onto these lands as trespassers, after the State of Iowa had conveyed them away. They have made no valuable improvements, but they have in many instances stripped the land of its valuable timber.

It has been asserted that there are more than twelve hundred of these squatters or settlers. This is one of the many inventions made to deceive the members of this House. The number of these settlers has been the subject of official investigation, and the number was, to be exact, three hundred and forty-four. During the Forty-third Congress a commission was appointed by the President which investigated the question, and this commission reported that the whole number of settlers is three hundred and forty-four. (See Senate Report, Forty-third Congress, second session, No. 609, page 2; Ex. Doc. No. 25, Forty-third Congress, second session, No. 609, page 2; Ex. Doc. No. 25, Forty-third Congress.)

Mr. John Browne, agent of the grantees of the Navigation Company, in a letter addressed to Hon. Addison Oliver, of the House

The total claimants of all kinds are only three hundred and forty-five, and of these upward of two hundred and seventy have bought their claims from the Navigation Company or its grantees, so there are only about seventy-five of these claimants who are asking Congress to disturb and put again into litigation titles to the homes of upward of six thousand citizens of lowa. And these seventy-five old claimants, put under the ordinary form of examination followed in proving of pre-emption claims, would be reduced to six or ten persons. This number may be increased by other persons who are now going into possession of these lands making claims under the encouragement of this proposed legislation, and who some day will urge their demands upon the attention of Congress.

This statement of Mr. Browne is without doubt correct.

Senator Pratt, in a report from the Committee on the Public Lands of the Senate in the Forty-third Congress, states that the number of settlers, or beneficiaries as they are termed in his report, is three hundred and forty-four.

There were, according to Mr. Browne's statement, only seventy-five settlers who did not buy their lands of the Navigation Company and pay the Government price therefor. The seventy-five might have done likewise, but would not. Of these seventy-five only six or ten have, even in form, filed any pre-emption claim, and these were in the face of a positive order prohibiting them, issued by the then Secretary of the Interior. The twelve hundred are men in buckram. They have shrunk to nine or ten. Without doubt there are plenty of men in the State of Lowa who would take the property of anybody. They have shrunk to nine or ten. Without doubt there are plenty of men in the State of Iowa who would take the property of anybody, if Congress would only give it to them and order the Attorney-General to protect them in the courts at the expense of the Government. These men are ravenous now to grab these lands and pay the Government $1.25 per acre for them. That chance this bill proposes to give them. The words of Mr. Browne, spoken fourteen years ago, are prophetic. phetic.

The bill reads as follows:

A bill to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That it was the true intent and meaning of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act confirming the title to certain lands," to ratify and confirm the adjustment and settlement of 1866 therein referred to, and the title to the lands claimed, allowed, set apart, and received thereby and thereunder, as a full, complete, and final adjustment and satisfaction of all right and claim of the State of Iowa, and its grantees, under the joint resolution of Congress,

March 2, 1861, entitled "Joint resolution to quiet title to lands in the State of Iowa," and the act of Congress approved July 12, 1862, entitled "An act confirming a land-claim in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes;" and that the said act of 1871 was not intended to be, and shall not be construed to be, a grant of additional lands to said State, or its grantees; and that all lands for which indemnity lands were selected and received, except such as were sold by the United States prior to the said joint resolution of 1861, are, and are hereby declared to be, public lands of the United States; Provided, That the title of all bone fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with pre-emption or homestead claimants, are hereby ratified, confirmed, and made valid: And provided further, That the claims of all persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, entered or remained upon any tract of said lands, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, are hereby confirmed to them, their heirs or assigns, and upon due proof thereof, and payment of the usual fees and price, shall be carried to patent.

Sec. 2. That it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-General, within ninety days after the passage of this act, to institute or cause to be instituted such suit or suits, either in law or equity, or both, as may be necessary and proper to assert and protect the title of the United States to said lands and remove all clouds from its title thereto; and until such suits shall be determined and Congress shall so provide, no part of said lands shall be open for settlement or sale except as here-inbefore provided. And in any suits so instituted any person or persons in possession of or claiming title to any tract or tracts of land under the United States involved in such suits may, at his or their expense, unite with the United States in the prosecution of such suits.

This bill ought not to pass, for reasons of law and of fact which are conclusive.

1. The bill seeks to construe the act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act confirming the title to certain lands," as an act destroying the title to the lands in question instead of confirming it. That act may undoubtedly be repealed, but it is the province of the court to construe it. There is nothing doubtful or ambiguous in that act; and the effect of this bill is not to construe it, but to destroy its force.

By that act the title to all the lands referred to in it "is ratified and confirmed to the State of Iowa and its grantees."

The lands now in question are not referred to or included in that act. The lands thus referred to are those and only those comprised in the Harvey settlement of 1866. The Supreme Court so held in Wolsey and the State of Iowa vs. Chapman, decided in April, 1880. The court say in that case:

The court say in that case:

4. As to the adjustment of 1866.

We are clearly of the opinion that this adjustment settled no rights as between any other parties than the State and the United States. The conflicting claimants were not parties to that settlement. The agent of the State was instructed not to relinquish the claim of the State under the school-land grant, and he did not do so. The United States simply applied themselves to the adjustment of quantities under all the grants, and whenever they did speak were careful to say that nothing which was done should be construed as affecting adversely any existing rights. The result was to leave the whole question to the ultimate determination of the courts.

But if the Supreme Court was mistaken and this act of 1871 does include the lands in question, the act by its express terms confirms the title of the grantees of the State of Iowa. This bill therefore, under the false pretense of construing the act of 1871, repeals and rescinds that act.

This bill purports upon its face to be an act to quiet the title of certain settlers on the Des Moines River lands. In truth and in fact, the settlers referred to never had any title to the lands in question; and the effect of the bill is to take away from non-residents of the and the effect of the bill is to take away from non-residents of the State of Iowa, by act of Congress, lands which they have long owned and to which they have a perfect title, and transfer those lands to persons who never owned them, never paid for them, and never had any title to them or lien upon them. That is to say, it quiets title by taking it away from the true owners, who reside in New York and elsewhere outside of the State of Iowa, and conferring it, by act of Congress, upon residents of the State of Iowa.

The bill directs the Attorney-General to bring, or cause to be instituted uppnymbered lawnits in law or centity to "protect the title stituted, unnumbered lawsuits, in law or equity, to "protect the title of the United States" in lands to which the United States has no title and claims none, and to "remove all clouds from its title thereto."

There cannot be said to be any cloud upon the title of the United States in a case where the United States does not claim to have any States in a case where the United States does not claim to have any title, and has none in fact.

The bill also provides that in any suit so instituted, any person or persons in possession of or claiming title to any of such lands, may unite with the United States in the prosecution of such suits.

Whatever suit should be brought to recover possession of these lands from the grantees of Iowa would be in the nature of ejectment. A separate suit would have to be brought against each individual. Nothing is better settled than that an action will not lie to recover the possession of land against two or more persons who hold in severalty. The Attorney-General, therefore, would have to commence about six thousand actions, against as many grantees of the State. Mr. Browne thousand actions, against as many grantees of the State. Mr. Browne states that there are that number of them.

There should therefore be coupled with this act an appropriation to pay at least fifty assistant attorneys-general, for without at least that number this business cannot be done with promptness and with dispatch.

This clause of the bill is very objectionable, because (1) there is no good reason why the United States should be made to bear the burden of litigations for the benefit of individuals; (2) there is no obstacle in the way of any private person conducting his own litigation in his own name; and (3) the questions of law involved in the title to these lands have been before the Supreme Court of the United States in twelve different actions, and in each case the decision has been adverse to the claims of the promoters of this bill. The Supreme Court adverse to the claims of the promoters of this bill. The Supreme Court has passed upon every phase of the questions involved, and it cannot be expected that a decision of the thirteenth cause, in that high court, would be any different from that of the twelve preceding cases.

It is one of the false pretenses upon which this measure is supported that the bill only gives somebody a day in court and a chance to try a legal question. If these squatters have any right they also have a remedy. Where there is a right there is also a remedy. No man needs an act of Congress to enable him to assert his rights in the courts. The courts are open to all to establish existing rights. But this bill first creates the right and then provides a mode of enforcing it at the cost of the United States.

The questions, therefore, which the promoters of this bill seek toraise and to have the court pass upon are all res adjudicata, and it is time litigation concerning these Des Moines lands was ended.

time litigation concerning these Des Moines lands was ended.

It is necessary, however, to make a statement of the facts as they exist in relation to these Des Moines lands. Those facts I proceed to

On the 8th August, 1846, Congress passed the following act:

An act granting certain lands to the Territory of Iowa, to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River in said Territory.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be, and hereby is, granted to said Territory of Iowa, for the purpose of aiding said Territory to improve the navigation of the Des Moines River from its mouth to the Raccoon Fork, (so called.) in said Territory, one equal moiety, in alternate sections, of the public land (remaining unsold, and not otherwise disposed of, encumbered, or appropriated) in a strip five miles in width on each side of said river, to be selected within said Territory by an agentor agents to be appointed by the governor thereof, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the lands hereby granted shall not be conveyed or disposed of by said Territory, nor by any State to be formed out of the same, except as said improvement shall progress; that is, the said Territory or State may sell so much of said lands as shall produce the sum of $30,000, and then the sales shall cease until the governor of said Territory or State shall certify the fact to the President of the United States that one-half of said sum has been expended upon said improvements, when the said Territory or State may sell and convey a quantity of the residue of said lands sufficient to replace the amount expended; and thus the sale shall progress as the proceeds thereof shall be expended, and the fact of such expenditure shall be certified as aforesaid.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted. That the said river Des Moines shall be and forever remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, free from any toll or other charge whatever for any property of the United States, or persons in their service passing through or along the same: Provided always, That it shall

This grant was accepted by the State of Iowa by legislative act

January 9, 1847.
Under this act of Congress the President of the United States withdrew from sale all the lands now in controversy, so that no pre-emption or homestead rights could be made to them or to any of them.

Under this act the officers of the United States certified lands to the State of Iowa until the amount of lands so certified above the Raccoon Fork was 300,000 acres or more.

The State of Iowa operated the Des Moines River improvement through a board of public works from 1847 to 1854; it sold about three hundred and eighteen thousand acres of the grant and expended the money in this improvement. In 1854 the Legislature of Iowa incorporated the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, and contracted with that company to finish or complete the improvement, then estimated to cost $1,300,000, and agreed to convey to it all the remaining lands which had theretofore been certified to the State and all that might thereafter be so certified.

This company entered upon the work and continued until May, 1858. It expended upon the improvement the sum of $332,634.01. This amount is certified by the governor of the State. The certificate is in the words and figures following:

EXECUTIVE CHAMBER, IOWA, Des Moines, April 28, 1858.

His Excellency James Buchanan, President of the United States:

President of the United States:

I, Ralph P. Lowe, governor of the State of Iowa, as required by act of Congress approved August 8, 1846, "granting certain lands of the Territory of Iowa to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River in said Territory," do hereby certify that there has been expended from time to time, prior to the date hereof, on the improvement of said river, as the work has progressed and the money has been required, under certain contracts made by the State of Iowa with the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, the sum of $332,644.04, and in consideration of said expenditures on said improvement, and in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress approved as aforesaid, there will be conveyed to said Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company 266,107.23 acres of the land belonging to said grant, and which have been certified and approved to the State of Iowa under said act, for the prosecution of the improvement of said River Des Moines. In testimony whereof I, Ralph P. Lowe, governor of the State of Iowa, have caused the great seal of the State of Iowa to be hereunto affixed, together with my signature.

[L. S.]

By the governor:

ELLIAH SELLS,

ecretary of State.

There can be no question that Governor Lowe, by this certificate, addressed to the President of the United States, asserted $332,644.04 to be the amount expended by the company. If there could be any question, Judge Nelson has settled it in his opinion in the case of Wolcott, (5 Wallace, 681.) The court construed that certificate in that case to assert that the company had expended $332,634.01 on this work. There is no evidence to the contrary.

On the 17th of October, 1884, the Commissioner of the General Land Office requested the governor of the Territory to appoint an agent to select the land under Missouri line to the Raccoon. Fork of the Des Moisea Silver. On the 17th of December, a few days before the admission of the State, the territorial authorities designated the odd numbered sections as the lands selected under the grant. the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, March 2, 1849, and the Secretary of the Interior, October 29, 1851. On the 30th of December, 1853, the Secretary of the Interior approved to the State, "under the act of August 8, 1846, without prejudice to the rights, if any there be, of other parties," a list of the 12,813.51 acres erroneously approved 20th February, 1851, as lands selected under the act of 1841, "previous to the adjustment of the grant and before it was known that they belonged to the State under the Des Moines River grant."

Until the 17th of December, 1853, the State itself, through its board of public works, carried on the work of improving the river, paying the expense from the proceeds of the sales of the lands included in the river grant. A land office had also been established for the sale of these lands. On that day the State entered into a contract with one Henry O'Reilly to complete the work. This contract O'Reilly transferred, with the consent of the State, to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, a New York corporation, and on the 9th of June, 1854, in consequence of this transfer, a new contract was entered into between the State and the corporation, for the purpose of simplifying and more fully explaining the original contracts and agreements. By the new contract the State agreed to convey to the company "all of the lands donated to the State of Iowa for the improvement of the Des Moines River by act of Congress of August 8, 1846, which the said party of the second part [the State] had not sold up to the 23d day of December, 1853."

This was the date at which it was supposed the sale of the lands could be stopped at the State land office after the contract with O'Reilly.

On the 15th of May, 1856, Congress passed an act (11 Stat., 9) granting to the State of Iowa, to aid in the construction of certain railroads, every alternate section of land designated by odd numbers for six sections in width on each side of each of the several roads. The granting clause of the act conta the several roads. The granting clause of the act contained, however, the following provise:

"And provided further, That any and all lands heretofore reserved to the United States by any act of Congress, or in any other manner by competent authority for the purpose of aiding in any object of internal improvement, or for any other purpose whatsoever, be, and the same are hereby, reserved to the United States from the operation of this act, except so far as it may be found necessary to locate the routes of said railroads through such reserved lands, in which case the right of way only shall be granted, subject to the approval of the President of the United States."

Its 1856 the Commissioner of the General Land Office decided not to certify any.

routes of said railroads through such reserved lands, in which case the right of way only shall be granted, subject to the approval of the President of the United States."

In 1856 the Commissioner of the General Land Office decided not to certify any more lands to the State under the river grant, and thereupon the Navigation Company suspended work on the improvement. This led to a settlement between the State and the company, under the authority of a joint resolution of the General Assembly for that purpose, passed March 22, 1858, by which the State agreed to convey to the Navigation Company all the lands contained in the river grant which had been approved and certified to the State by the General Government, "excepting all lands sold or conveyed, or agreed to be sold or conveyed, by the State of Iowa by its officers and agents, prior to the 23d day of December, 1833, under said grant."

Afterward, May 3, 1858, the governor of the State executed to the company a deed conveying the lands now in controversy, with others, by a specific description of sections, townships, and ranges; and on the 18th of the same month he executed another deed, which purported on its face to have been made pursuant to the joint resolution of the General Assembly authorizing the settlement with the company, and described the lands in the exact language of general description used in the resolution.

Chapman, the plaintiff below, has all the little to the lands involved in this suit which passed in this way to the Navigation Company.

At the December term, 1859, of this court, and during the month of April, 1860, in the case of the Dubuque and Pacific Railroad Company vs. Litchfield, 23 How., 65, it was decided that the river grant as originally made did not extend above the Raecoon Fork, and thereupon, on the 18th of May, 1850, the Commissioner of the General Land Offices as notice to be promulgated, as follows:

"Notice is hereby given that the lands along the Des Moines River, in Iowa, and within the claimed limits of the Des Moin

And on the 12th of July, 1862, (12 Stat., 543.) the following act was passed:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the grant of lands to the Territory of Iowa, for the improvement of the Des Moines River, made by the act of August 8, 1846, is hereby extended so as to include the alternate sections (designated by odd numbers) lying within five miles of said river, between the Raccoon Forks and the northern boundary of said State; such lands are to be held and applied in accordance with provisions of the original grant, except that the consent of Congress is hereby given to the application of a portion thereof to aid in the construction of the Keckuk, Fort Des Moines and Minnesota Railroad, in accordance with the provisions of the act of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa approved March 22, 1835; and if any of said lands shall have been sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States to the grantees of the State of Iowa, under the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to set apart an equal amount of lands within said State to be certified in lieu thereof: Provided, That if the said State shall have sold and conveyed any portion of the lands lying within the limits of this grant, the title of which has proved invalid, any lands which shall be certified to said State in lieu thereof, by virtue of the provisions of this act, shall inure to and be held as a trust fund for the benefit of the person or persons, respectively, whose titles shall have failed as aforesaid."

After the passage of the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, the Commissioner of the General Land Office called on the governor and land commissioner of the State, on the 20th of November, 1862, furnished the list required, and, among others, included the which had been certified to the State above what it was entitled to receive under the act of September 4, 1841, and the lands falling due under the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, and the act of July 12, 1862. This act contained the following section:

"Sec. 2. Said commissioner shall proceed to Washington City, and present said claims to the Department of the Interior, and urge the same to settlement as early and as speedily as may be consistent with the interests of the State, and is hereby authorized to adjust the said excess of the five-hundred-thousand-ace grant by permitting the United States to retain, out of the indemnity land falling to the State under said act of Congress of July 12, 1852, an amount equivalent to such excess: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to be a relinquishment of the claim of the State under the said five-hundred-thousand-acre grant to the 12,813.55 acres selected as a part of such grant and subsequently rejected from a supposed conflict with the act of Congress approved Angust, 1846, known as the Des Moines River grant; and the said commissioner is hereby instructed to secure a restoration of said selections as a part of the five-hundred-thousand-acre grant, and a confirmation of the title of the State thereto, as a part of such grant."

grant."

Under this authority an adjustment was had with the United States, by which it appeared that the State was entitled to 558,004.96 acres, under the river grant, and that under the five-hundred-thousand-acre grant it had received certificates for 22,660.95 acres more than it was entitled to, if the 12,813.51 acres, also certified under the river grant, was not included, and 35,473.54 if it was. The excess was charged to the account of the river grant, and a balance struck accordingly. The Navigation and Railroad Company was not a party to this settlement. The adjustment was ratified by an act of the General Assembly of the State passed March 31, 1868.

At the December term, 1866, of this court, it was decided, in the case of Wolcott vs. Des Moines Company, (5 Wallace, 681,) that the lands included in the river grant above the Fork, as finally settled by Congress, did not pass to the State for the benefit of the railroad companies under the act of 1856, because, at the time of the passage of that act, the lands were reserved for the purpose of aiding in the improvement of the Des Moines River, and therefore fell within the provise limiting the grant to lands not so reserved.

At the December term, 1869, of this court, it was decided, in the case of Riley vs. Wells, No. 337 on the docket of the term, but not reported, that the lands above the Raccoon Fork were so far "reserved by the action of the officers of the United States as not to be subject to pre-emption in 1855, under the tenth section of the act of 1841."

At the December term, 1899, of this court, it was decided, in the case of Riley ex. Wells, No. 370 on the docked of the term, but not reported, that the lands above the Raccoon Fork were so far "reserved by the action of the officers of the United States as not to be subject to pre-emption in 1855, under the tenth section of the act of 1841.

34 March, 1671. Congress passed an act (16 Statutes, 583) ratifying and confirming to the State of Lowa and its grantees the title to the lands, in accordance with the adjustment made in 1866; but expressly provided "that nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to affect adversely any existing legal rights, or the rights of any party claiming title, or the rights of any party party of said lands under the provisions of the so-called homestead or pre-emption laws of the United States, or claiming any part thereof as swamp lands.

At the December term, 1872, of this court, after fall consideration, the cases of Williams 22, Balacines Company and Riley 28. Wells were distinctly affirmed in Yead Company (17 Wall, 183) it was said to be "no longer an open question that neither the State of Lowa nor the railroad companies, for whose benefit the grant of 1856 was made, took any title by that act to the lands claimed to belong to the Des Moines River grant of 1846, and that the joint resolution of 2d of March, 1861, and act of July 13, 1862, transferred the title from the United States and vested it in the State of Lowa for the use of its grantees under the river grant.

To reverse that decree this appeal was taken. The following propositions were relied upon in the argument for the approach of the decreal Assembly was passed March 12, 1674, authorizing this to be done. of particular words is never necessary except in cases of doubt. Sections 8 and 10 are parts of the same act. By one, a grant of public lands to certain States for certain purposes was provided for, and by the other pre-emption rights were given to individual citizens. Both had reference to public lands, and gave the respective beneficiaries the power of making their own selections. There seems to be no good reason why the selections of the pre-emptioner should be restricted within narrower limits than those of the State, and we cannot believe it was the intention of Congress to give a State the power to take lands under section 8, which had actually been reserved by the United States for any purpose whatever. It is true in that section only reservation by a law of Congress or the proclamation of the President are specially spoken of, but it must have been the intention to include in this all lawfulreservations. In the tenth section a reservation by treaty is specially mentioned, but we can hardly believe it would be seriously contended that under the eighth section a State could select lands reserved by a treaty because the word treaty was omitted in that section.

The truth is, there can be no reservation of public lands from sale except by reason of some treaty, law, or authorized act of the executive department of the Government; and the acts of the President. In Wilcox ts. Jackson, 13 Pet., 498, the question was directly presented whether a reservation from sale by an order from the War Department was a reservation "by order of the President," and the court held it was. The language of the statute then under consideration was (page 511) "or which is reserved from sale by act of Congress or by order of the President in presuming that it was done by the approbation and direction of the President," and in the opinion of the court it is said, (page 513:) "Now, although the immediate agent in requiring this reservation was the Secretary of War, yet we feel justified in presuming that it was done by the approbat der our former decisions, no title passed to the State by the approval of the selection of the lands in dispute under the act of 1841. Being lawfully reserved from sale at the time of the selection, they were not included in the grant which that act provided for.

2. As to the right of Chapman to question Wolsey's title.

Of this we entertain no doubt. If the State had no title when the patent issued to Wolsey, he took nothing by the grant. No question of estoppel by warranty arises, neither does the after-acquired title inure to the benefit of Wolsey, because when the United States made the grant in 1861 it was for the benefit of the selection of the selection of the selection of 1861 as from the end of 1862. The relinquishment when the United States made the grant in 1861 it was for the benefit of the selection of the joint resolution is of all the title which the United States restained in the tracts of land above the Raccoon Fork "which have been certified to said State improperly by the Department of the Interior as part of the grant by the act of Congress approved August 8, 1846, and which is now held by bona fide purchasers under the State of Lowa," and by the act of 1862 the lands are in terms to be held and applied in accordance with the provisions of the original grant. The legislation, being in pari-materia, is to be construed together, and manifests most unmistakably an intention on the part of Congress to put the State and bona fide purchasers from the State just where they would be if the original act had itself granted all that was finally given for the river improvement. The original grant contemplated sales by the State in execution of the trust created, and the bone fide purchasers referred to must have been purchasers at such sales. This being so, the grant when finally made inured to the benefit of Chapman rather than Wolsey. Neither took title from the State at first, and as the final grant from the United States was in legal effect to Chapman or his grantors, be has he is part to the late

I give the entire opinion in this case, because the case is an important one, not only so far as it settles the facts in relation to the Des Moines lands, but also because it reaffirms the title of the non-residents of Iowa, whose title is sought to be affected by this bill

Notwithstanding this abstract of the facts of the case, it is necessary that some of the leading documentary evidence should be presented in extenso.

In 1858 it was deemed best by the State to stop the work and settle with the Navigation Company. To carry that purpose into effect the Legislature of Iowa passed the following joint resolution:

Joint resolution of the Legislature of Iowa, approved March 22, 1858, authorizing an abandonment of the contract with the Navigation Company, and a settlement with said company.

Jedin resolution of the Legislature of Lowa, approved March 22, 1883, authorizing an abandonment of the contract with the Navigation Company, and a settlement with said company.

Whereas the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company have heretofore claimed, and do now claim, to have entered into certain contracts with the State of Iowa, by its officers and agents, concerning the improvement of the Des Moines River, in the State of Iowa, by its officers and agents, concerning the improvement of the Des Moines River, in the State of Iowa and said company, and its heing conceived to be to the interest of all parties concerned to have said matters, and all matters and things between said company and the State of Iowa, settled and adjusted: Now, therefore.

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, That for the purpose of such settlement, and for that purpose only, the following propositions are made by that State to said company: That the said company shall execute to the State of such settlement, and for that purpose only, the following propositions are made by that State to said company: That the said company shall execute to the State of Lowa shall be seen to the State of Iowa and the lands connected with the Des Moines River improvement, excepting such as are hereby by the State secured to the said company; and also surrender to said State the of Iowa shall, by its proper officer, certify and convey to the said company all lands or in the improvement of the Des Moines River, which have been approved and certified to the State of Iowa by the General Government, saving and excepting all vits officers and agents, prior to the Stat day of December, 1833, under said grant, and said company, or its assignees, shall have right to all of said lands as herein granted to them as fully as the State of Iowa who have been sold by the General Government, what of said company; and the State of Iowa.

And it is further agreed that said company release and converse of said company; and the State of Iowa.

This resolution was carefully reported upon by a committee of the Iowa Legislature, of which committee Hon. C. C. CARPENTER, since governor of the State of Iowa, and now a member of the House of Representatives from Iowa, was a member.

Representatives from Iowa, was a member.

The Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company ratified and accepted the proposition embodied in this joint resolution within the time and in the manner therein specified. The company paid to the State the sum of $20,000 in cash, and released and conveyed to the State the dredge-boat and materials in said resolution mentioned, which were of the cash value of more than one hundred thousand dollars, and in all respects, on its part, fully complied with all the terms of settlement in said joint resolution provided.

By another act of the General Assembly of Iowa of 22d March, 1858, a grant was made to the Keokuk, Des Moines and Minnesota Railroad Company of the remaining lands claimed by the State lying above the forks and not granted to the Navigation Company.

This resolution of the Iowa Legislature was deliberately passed. It is a resolution which the Legislature of Iowa was competent to pass. Acting under the authority of that resolution the governor of the State executed to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, on the 18th day of May, 1858, a deed conveying all of the lands pany, on the 18th day of May, 1858, a deed conveying all of the lands remaining which had been certified to the State of Iowa by the United States, including about two hundred and seventy-one thousand acres of land above the Raccoon Fork. That deed is in the words and figures following:

This indenture, made this 18th day of May, 1858, by and between the State of Iowa, party of the first part, and the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, parties of the second part, witnesseth:

That the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of one dollar, paid by the parties of the second part, and in pursuance of a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa approved the 22d day of March, 1858, does hereby sell, grant, bargain, and convey to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company the following described lands, to wit: All lands granted by an act of Congress approved Angust 8, 1846, to the Territory of Iowa to aid in the improvement of the Des Moines River, which have been approved and certified to the State of Iowa by the General Government, saving and excepting all lands sold or conveyed, or agreed to be sold or conveyed, by the State of Iowa, by its officers and agents, prior to the 23d day of December, 1853, under said grant, and said company, or its assigns, shall have right to all of said lands so herein granted to them as fully as the, State of Iowa could have under or by virtue of said grant, or in any manner whatever, with full power to settle all errors, false locations, omissions, or claims in reference to the same, and all pay or compensation therefor by the General Government, but at the costs and charges of said company; and the State to hold all the balance of said lands, and all rights, powers, and privileges, under and by virtue of said grant, entirely released from any claim by or through said company. And it is understood that among the lands excepted and not granted by the State to said company, are 25,488.87 acres lying immediately above Raccoon Fork, supposed to have been sold by the General Government, but claimed by the State of Iowa.

To have and to hold the above-described lands, and each and every parcel thereof, with all the rights, privileges, immunities, and appurtenances of whatever nature thereunto belonging or appertaining, unto the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, their successors and assigns,

By the governor:

ELIJAH SELLS, Secretary of State. By JNO. M. DAVIS, Deputy.

ELIJAH SELLS. Secretary of State. By Jno. M. Davis, Deputy.

In that same year, 1858, the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company conveyed a large portion of those lands to persons residing out of the State of Iowa and in other States, who paid for them their full value at that time. Among these purchasers were General John H. Martindale, of Rochester, New York, who bought one thousand acres, and has held them and paid taxes on them to the State of Iowa for more than twenty years; the late Roswell S. Burrows, of Albion, New York, purchased several thousand acres of land, of which his estate now owns fifteen thousand acres; John Stryker, of Rome, New York, and a large number of other persons, some of whose names are given below, were purchasers of those lands, namely: Peter Carroll, of Canada; Mr. Dibble, of Detroit; Mr. Kibbee, Mr. Speed, of Detroit; Mr. Tregent, of Detroit; Witteman, of Detroit; Sanger, of Detroit; Stuart, of Detroit; Plumb, of Albany; Kenrich, of Albany; Pumpelly, of Albany; Washington Hunt, of Lockport; George W. Rogers, of Lockport; Van Valkenburg, of Lockport; Ten Eyck, of Cazenovia; E. C. Litchfield, of Cazenovia, New York; Wendell, of same place; William M. Burr, of same place; M. B. Anderson, of Rochester; Davenport, of Bath; Tracy, of Buffalo; Taft, of same place; Armstrong and Huntington and Boardman & Walsh, of Rome, New York; Andrew Dexter, George F. Parsons, W. C. Johnson, George R. Thomas, of Utica. There are altogether three to four hundred of these purchasers.

The foregoing deed is a general deed given by the State of Iowa to the Des Moines River Navigation and Railroad Company; but there were several other deeds of the same form conveying the lands in the different counties, which contained specific descriptions of the lands, all dated in the month of May and a few days prior to the general deed.

The general deed was made so as to convey any lands which might lands, all dated in the month of May and a few days prior to the general deed.

The general deed was made so as to convey any lands which might have been omitted in the descriptions in the other deeds.

The grantees of the Des Moines River Navigation Company went into possession of the lands purchased, and have held undisturbed possession ever since by themselves and their grantees. There are over six thousand families now on those lands who obtained their title from the State of lows through the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company and its grantees and whose title this bill over-Railroad Company and its grantees, and whose title this bill over-

In 1859, as stated by Chief-Justice Waite, the Supreme Court of the United States, in the Litchfield case, decided that the grant to the State of Iowa of August 8, 1846, did not extend above the Raccoon

This decision was very unexpected to the people of the State of Iowa and disastrous to the title of the grantees of the State. The representatives of the State of Iowa in the Senate and the House of Representatives besought Congress to grant to the State of Iowa the lands so conveyed by the State, in order that the conveyance of the State of the 371,000 acres above the Raccoon Fork might be made valid and effective, and the greatest of the State of the state. valid and effective, and the grantees of the State obtain the title which the State intended to give when it executed the said deeds.

Accordingly, on the 2d day of March, 1861, (12 Stat., 251,) Congress passed a joint resolution in these words:

Joint resolution to quit title to lands in the State of Iowa

Resolved, &c., That all the title which the United States still retain in the tracts of land along the Des Moines River, and above the mouth of the Raccoon Fork thereof, in the State of Iowa, which have been certified to said State improperly by the Department of the Interior, as part of the grant by act of Congress approved August 8, 1846, and which is now held by bona fide purchasers under the State of Iowa, be, and the same is hereby, relinquished to the State of Iowa.

This resolution was passed at the earnest solicitation of the governor of Iowa, and of every Senator and Representative in Congress from that State. This resolution has been held by the United States Supreme Court in repeated cases to be an original grant of the lands now in controversy for the benefit of the grantees of Iowa, precisely the same as if there never had been any previous attempt to grant these lands.

That the grant of this joint resolution inured to the benefit of the grantees of the State does not admit of question. This has been expressly decided by the Supreme Court. The contract between the State and the company provided that the lands "were secured to the company." The deeds undertook to "sell, grant, bargain, and convey" these lands, and that the company and their successors and assigns should hold them forever in fee-simple.

This, though not in form a warranty deed, was such as the State executed in all such cases, or as to all these grants, and had the effect of passing not only the title which the State then had, but all that it might acquire. It is said that this cannot be so, since this was not a deed of warranty. I answer that, however this might be by the common law, all doubt is removed under the Iowa statute, and especially, as in this instance, where a deed is made by a sovereign State.

cially, as in this instance, where a deed is made by a sovereign State.

The code of that State (1851) in force when these deeds were made provided:

§ 1901. Every conveyance of real estate passes all the interest of the grantor therein, unless a contrary intent can be inferred from the terms used. § 1902. When a deed purports to convey a greater interest than the grantor was at the time possessed of, any after-acquired interest of such grantor, to the extent of that which the deed purports to convey, inures to the benefit of the grantee.

These sections were re-enacted in the code of June of 1860, and

were in force in 1861–62.

It will be seen that the statute refers to and includes all deeds, not warranty deeds alone, but "when a deed purports," &c., and as a consequence when the act of 1861 was passed it had the effect, ex proprio vigore, of making good, and passed to the company, its successors, and assigns all the title which the State took thereby or had before that time, and which it had conveyed by the deeds aforesaid.

That in this I am right, see Van Orman vs. McGregor, (23 Iowa, 300;) also, Wolcott vs. Des Moines N. & R. R. Co., (5 Wallace, 681,) where Nelson, J., speaking for the court, says:

For, although the State possessed no title to the lot in dispute at the time of the conveyance to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, yet, having an after-acquired title by the act of Congress, it would inure to the benefit of the grantees, and so in respect to these conveyances to the plaintiff. This is in accordance with the laws of Iowa.

Before referring to the cases in the Supreme Court, it is proper to state that of the 371,000 acres certified to the State above Raccoon Fork the State had conveyed and sold to individuals 57,919 acres before it made its conveyances to the Navigation Company, and these individuals, after the decision of 1859, were in the same situation as to their title as were the grantees of the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company. The joint resolution of 1861 operated to confirm their title, and such title has never been questioned since.

except a squatter's title. They paid nothing for the lands; they have paid no taxes; they have paid nothing for the use of the lands they have occupied, and in many instances they have stripped the land of its valuable timber. They have no right upon which they can get any standing in a court of law or equity; and their pretensions that the joint resolution of 1861 and the deeds of the State of Iowa constitute any cloud upon any title which they possess is without foundation.

But several litigations have from time to time been prosecuted involving such title, and in each instance such litigations have been volving such title, and in each instance such litigations have been determined adversely to the squatters or settlers.

None of the settlers, so far as known, got upon these lands prior to 1861, except Riley, who took possession of his lot in 1855, but did not offer any proofs till 1862.

As far back as 1867 the supreme court of the State of Iowa, in the case of Stryker vs. Polk County, decided that the Des Moines Navigation Company was a bona fide purchaser from the State of the lands in question. (22 Iowa Rep., 134.)

It appears that Stryker was a purchaser from the Des Moines Navigation Company, and held title under the State's deed of 3d May, 1858. He sought to enjoin the county from enforcing the taxes of 1859 and subsequent years against his lands.

The decision of the court appears to have been entered at the April term, 1867, and the injunction was refused on the ground that the lands were taxable for 1859. The court say:

That Congress in 1861 made not a new grant, but, for the purpose of giving effect lands were taxable for 1859. The court say:

That Congress in 1861 made not a new grant, but, for the purpose of giving effect to and carrying out the construction placed upon the original act, relinquished to the State, for the use of bona fide purchasers, all the interest which the United States still retained. * * * Plaintiff held under a deed from the State; the State claimed under the original grant, the lists being duly certified; he was abona fide purchaser, and the title still retained by the United States was relinquished to the State for his use. The subsequent action on the part of the State and Federal authorities was necessary, that the proper officers might know the specific tracts held by bona fide purchasers. The United States had already, in the manner contemplated by the act of 1846, parted with the title. The State, upon the faith of the title thus acquired, had sold and conveyed, and the joint resolution was intended, as a matter of justice and right, to secure and quiet bona fide purchasers in their titles, unsettled as they were by the decision of the Supreme Court.

This reference is to the case of Litchfield vs. Dubuque and Pacific Railroad Company, (23 Howard, 66.)

Thus the highest court in the State of Iowa, in two well-considered cases, has decided that the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company and its grantees were bona fide purchasers and holders of these pany and its grantees were bona fide purchasers and holders of these

These two propositions are established judicially in the cases of Wolcott vs. The Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company and The Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company vs. Burr, (5 Wallace's Reports, 681,) decided by the United States Supreme Court at the December term, 1866. Wolcott sued the company for a breach of covenant. He had purchased the east one-half of section 17, township 88 north, range 27 west, from said company, and taken its deed. In his complaint he alleged that his title had failed. The court held that his title was good. The land is above the Raccoon Fork, and in a section listed to the State "improperly" in 1851 or 1852. The court, in its decision, has stated the law and the facts. I quote the following:

Although the State possessed no title to the lot in dispute at the time of the conveyance to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, yet, having an after-acquired title by the act of Congress, it would inure to the benefit of the grantees, and so in respect to these conveyances to the plaintiff. This is in accordance with the laws of Iowa.

At pages 688 and 689 the court said:

At pages 688 and 689 the court said:

It has been argued that these lands had not been reserved by competent authority, and hence that the reservation was nugatory. As we have seen, they were reserved from sale for the special purpose of aiding in the improvement of the Des Moines River—first, by the Secretary of the Treasury, when the Land Department was under his supervision and control, and again by the Secretary of the Interior, after the establishment of this Department, to which the duties were assigned, and afterward continued by this Department, under instructions from the President and Cabinet. Besides, if this power was not competent, which we think it was ever since the establishment of the Land Department, and which has been exercised down to the present time, the grant of 8th of August, 1846, carried along with it by necessary implication not only the power but the duty of the Land Office to reserve from sale the lands embraced in the grant. Otherwise its object might be utterly defeated. Hence, immediately upon a grant being made by Congress for any of these public purposes to a State, notice is given by the Commissioner of the Land Office to the registers and receivers to stop all sales, either public or by private entry. Such notice was given the same day the grant was made, in 1836, for the benefit of these railroads. That there was a dispute existing as to the extent of this grant of 1846 in no way affects this question. The serious conflict of opinion among the public aathorities on the subject made it the duty of the land officers to withhold the sales and reserve them to the United States till it was ultimately disposed of.

It should be stated also in connection with this provise, that the improvements withhold the sales and reserve them to the United States till it was ultimately disposed of.

It should be stated, also, in connection with this proviso, that the improvements of this river were in progress at the time of the passage of the act of 1856, and had been for years, but was suspended soon after on account of the refnsal of the Land Department to certify any more sections under the act of 1846; and, as appears from the certificate of the governor of Iowa, the sum of $332,034.04 had already been expended by these defendants under their contract.

This decision was announced in the spring of 1867.

The unreported case of Riley vs. Welles was determined at the December term, 1869, of the same court. Riley claimed under the pre-emption laws the northwest quarter of section 33, township 89 north, range 28 west, and, on proof of settlement, obtained an entry and patent, dated October 15, 1863, from the United States. Welles held title under the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, and filed his bill to set aside the patent to Riley. The following is the whole of this opinion:

Mr. Justice Nelson delivered the opinion of the court:
This is an appeal from the circuit court of the United States for the district of Iowa.
This case is not distinguishable from that of Wolcott vs. The Des Moines Company, (5 Wall., 681.) Welles, the plaintiff below, derives his title by deeds from the company, the same as Wolcott in the former case. The suit in that case was brought to recover back the consideration money from the Des Moines Company, the grantors, or the ground of failure of title. The court held that Wolcott received a good title to the lot in question under his deed.

In that case it was insisted that the title was not in the Des Moines Company, but in the Dubuque and Pacific Railroad Company.

In the present case the defendant claims title under, and in pursuance of, the pre-emption act of September 4, 1841.

Her husband took possession of the lot in 1855, and she was permitted by the register to prove up her possession and occupation May, 1862. The patent was issued October 15, 1863.

It will appear from the case of Wolcott vs. The Des Moines Company, that the tract of land of which the lot in question was a part had been withdrawn from sale and entry on account of a difference of opinion among the officers of the Land Department as to the extent of the original grant-by Congress of lands in aid of the improvement of the Des Moines River, from the year 1846 down to the resolution of Congress of March 2, 1861, and the act of July 12, 1862, which acts we held confirmed the title in the Des Moines Company. As the husband of the plaintiff entered upon the lot in 1855 without right, and the possession was continued without right, the permission of the register to prove up the possession and improvements, and to make the entry under the pre-emption laws, were acts in violation of law and void, as was also the issuing of the patent.

The reasons for this withdrawal of the lands from public sale or private entry are stated at large in the opinion in the case of Wolcott vs. The Des Moines Company

The next case is that of George Crilley, and is as follows; I give the opinion entire:

Supreme Court of the United States, December term, 1782. GEORGE CRILLEY, APPELLANT, vs. Roswell S. Burrows.

Appeal from the circuit court of the United States for the district of Iowa.

Mr. Justice Davis delivered the opinion of the court:
This case is controlled by the recent decisions of this court relating to the Dea Mines River land litigation, and especially by the decision in Riley vs. Welles.
That case is in no essential respect different from this, and we need not, therefore, repeat the argument by which the judgment there was supported.

In both cases the entries were made and patents issued after plaintiff's title accrued under the joint resolution of 1861, and in both cases the settlements were made in 1855.

It is argued that Crilley can defend his possession under the statute of limitations of lowa, but this is not so, because the statute does not begin to run so long as the title is in the State or the United States, and his proof of pre-emption was never offered until after the United States parted with its title to the State. It is true that he had prior to this applied to enter the land with gold and to file a declaratory statement, but he took nothing by these applications, because they were denied by the land officers.

Equally ineffectual to sustain his defense is the act of Congress of 3d of March, 1853, (10 Statutes, page 244,) to extend pre-emption rights to certain lands therein named.

It is plain that the proviso to the section which he relies on for his protection relates to grants by foreign governments of lands within territory subsequently acquired by the United States, and has, therefore, no application to this case. But if it were otherwise, the right of pro-emption did not attach until after the lands were released from reservation. We have already decided that the Des Moines River lands were reserved from sale; and this reservation continued until Congress, by the joint resolution of 1861, released to the State for the use of its grantees the legal title still in the General Government, without any saving clause in behalf of settlers or those who might claim under the pre-emption laws of the United States. This may have been a "casus omissus" on the part of Congress, but this court has no power to supply the omission. We are unable to see in this case any principle which has not been already passed upon by this court in some one of the suits relating to this protracted litigation.

The decree of the circuit court is affirmed.

The next two cases are Williams vs. Baker and C. R. and M. R. R. Co. vs. Martindale and others, (17 Wallace, 144.) These were suits in chancery, and Miller, J., for the court, goes over the whole ground, examines most fully and ably this long-contested title, and, among other things, says:

other things, says:

This decision, (Litchfield vs. D. and R. R. Co., 23 Howard, 66, decided in 1860.) in which the Supreme Court held that the grant did not extend above the Raccoon Fork, was accepted as a final settlement of the long-contested question of the extent of the grant.

But it left the State of Iowa, which had made engagements on the faith of the lands certified to her, in an embarrassed condition, and it destroyed the title of the Navigation Company to lands of the value of hundreds of thousands of dollars, which it had received from the State for money, labor, and material actually expended and furnished. What was also to be regretted was, that many persons, purchasers for value from the State or the Navigation Company, found their supposed title an invalid one.

This decision was made and published in 1860, and to remedy the grave evils above mentioned, Congress, on the 2d March, 1861, passed a joint resolution in the following words:

[Here follows a copy of the joint resolution.]

To show still further the intention of Congress to make good to the State, as far as possible, all that was claimed by her under the original grant, Congress passed an act, approved July 12, 1862, by which the grant was, in express terms, extended to the northern boundary of the State, and as some of the land had been sold by lands of the Government in any other part of the State.

This legislative history of the title of the State.

This legislative history of the title of the State of Iowa, and of those to whom she had conveyed the lands certified to her by the Secretary of the Interior as part of the grant of 1846, including among her grantees the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, needs no gloss or criticism to show that the title of the State and her grantees is perfect, unless impaired or defeated by some other and extrinsic matter which would have that effect.

Such matter is supposed to be found in the act of 1856, already referred to, granting lands to the State of Iowa to aid in building railroads.

And he then proceeds to show that the title of the State and her grantees, including the River Company and its grantees, is perfect and complete, notwithstanding the other matters thus suggested. He reviews and reaffirms the Wolcott case, saying that it was then de-

That by the joint resolution of 1861 the title erroneously certified to the State, under the act of 1846, was validated and made good. * . * * And we therefore reaffirm * * * that by the joint resolution of 1861 and the act of July 12, 1862, the State of Iowa did receive the title for the use of those to whom she had sold them as part of that grant, (August 8, 1846,) and for such other purposes as had become proper under that grant.

Then there is the case of the Iowa Homestead Company vs. Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company and others, (17 Wallace, page 153.)

Davis, J., after reaffirming the Wolcott and other cases above cited,

It is therefore no longer an open question that * * * the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, and the act of July 12, 1862, transferred the title from the United States and vested it in the State of Iowa for the use of its grantees under the river grant

The case of Litchfield vs. The County of Webster, in the State of Iowa, and Jonathan Hutchison, treasurer of said county, and the case of the County of Webster, in the Sate of Iowa, and Jonathan Hutchison, treasurer of said county, vs. Litchfield, were argued together at the October term of the Supreme Court of the United States for 1879. The decision in those cases was made since the majority report on this bill was filed. It is a very important case, and I present it in fall. it in full:

Supreme Court of the United States. Nos. 1002 and 1003. October term, 1879.

EDWIN C. LITCHFIELD, APPELLANT. THE COUNTY OF WEBSTER, IN THE STATE of Iowa, and Jonathan Hutchison, treasurer of said county.

and
THE COUNTY OF WEBSTER, IN THE STATE of Iowa, and Jonathan Hutchison, treasurer of said county, appellants,

No. 1003.

EDWIN C. LITCHFIELD. Appeals from the circuit court of the United States for the district of Iowa.

Mr. Chief-Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court.

The primary question to be decided in this case is as to the time when the lands which passed to the bons fide purchasers from the State of Iowa under the joint resolution of Congress approved March 2, 1861, (12 Stats., 251.) became taxable by 160, 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864, 1863, and 1866.

The facts affecting the title are fully stated in the case of Wolsey vs. Chapman, decided at the present term, where we held, following the principles settled in Litch-field vs. D. & F. R. Co., (23 How., 66.) Wolcott vs. Des Moines Co., (5 Wall., 681.) Riley vs. Wells, not reported;) Williams vs. Baker, (17 Wall., 144) and Homestead Co. vs. Valley R. R., (16., 133.) that the United States continued to own the lands until the adoption of the joint resolution. Nothing was included in the original river grant of 1846, except the lands below the Raccoon Fork. While on account of the action of the executive department of the General Government those above the Fork were reserved from sale and did not pass to the State when selected as school lands under the act of 1841, or as railroad lands by the grant of 1856, and were not open to pre-emption entry, they were not actually donated by the United States to the State or to the purchasers from the State until the joint resolution was adopted. The grant made by that resolution was just as much an original grant as it would have been if the act of 1866 had never been passed. The reservation from sale by the executive department neither transferred any title to nor created any interest in the State. It simply kept the ownership in the United States. While the subsequent gift was undoubtedly made because of what had happened before, the United States continued to be the owners of the lands, both in law and in equity, until this last step was taken. Such being the case, the lands were not taxable before March March 1875. The Well of the Well of "SEC. 759. On the 1st day of February, the unpaid taxes, of whatever description, for the preceding year shall become delinquent, and shall draw interest, as hereinafter provided."

"SEC. 760. The treasurer shall continue to receive taxes after they have become delinquent, until collected by distress and sale; but if they are not paid before the lat of March, he shall collect as a penalty for non-payment, from each taxpayer so delinquent, I per cent. of the amount of his tax additional, and if not paid before the lat day of April, he shall collect another I per cent. additional, and so for each full month which shall expire before the tax shall have been paid. The treasurer shall, in all cases, make out and deliver to the taxpayer a receipt for taxes paid, stating the time of payment, the description of the land, the amount of each kind of tax, the interest on each, and costs, if any, giving a separate receipt for each year; and shall make the proper entries of such payments in the books of his office, and such receipt shall be in full for his taxes that year."

By section 761 the clerk of the county board of supervisors is required to keep full and complete accounts with the county treasurer, and, among other things, to charge him with "interest on delinquent taxes," and "on the 1st day of each month ascertain the amount of delinquent taxes," and "on the 1st day of each month ascertain the amount of delinquent taxes," and "on the 1st day of each ment ascertain the amount of delinquent taxes," and "on the 1st day of each ment ascertain the amount of delinquent and unpaid taxes of all classes on said day, and charge said treasurer in said account with 1 per cent, on the amount thereof to be collected by him, as provided in section 52 (section 760) of this act." (Laws of Iowa, Rev. 1860, pages 118, 119.) On the 1st day of October in each year the treasurer is required to offer a public sale all the lands on which the taxes for the previous year had not been paid. Of this salentice was to be given by advertissemen not be advertised for sale. Before that time, on the 14th of June, 1800, the auditor of the State wrote the auditors of the several counties in which the disputed lands were situated as follows:

"We conclude, in view of the so-called river lands, and the further question as to their being liable to tax, that it would be well not to offer them for sale for the taxes until these matters are determined or adjusted in some manner. There are two questions in regard to them: Firstly, has the State any title to them under the river grant! which is reported has been decided in the negative, but of which we have no official information; second, whether they are taxable prior to 1859 as the property of the river company or their grantes. The last question Ithought had been decided by our courts, but learn from Attorney-General Rice that there is some decided by our courts, but learn from Attorney-General Rice that there is some decided by our courts, but learn from Attorney-General Rice that there is some decided by our particulars in excess of what the law allowed. No person was designated on the tax-book as owner. Any one could pay the taxes and get a receipt. If one of the contesting claimants paid the taxes, supposing the lands were his, he could not, if he finally failed to maintain his title, recover from the real owner what he thus advanced. We so held in Homestead Company 2s. Valley Railroad, (17 Wall., 183.)

It thus appears that while Litchfield, or his grantor, was in reality the owner of the lands from 1862 to 1866, and bound to pay the taxes for those years as assessed, the State from which the taxing power came, disputed his title and set up an adventigation of the contest of the state of the contest of the decidence of the contest of the parties in interest that the lands would be put on the annual tax-books and charged with the taxes the owner should pay, if the title had passed out of the United States or the State, in law or in equity, but that to avoid "unnecessary trouble or expense," on legal steps by the fault of him to whom it is to be paid, interest during the delay is not recoverable.

Here the delay was caused by the improper interference of the State and the United States with the title. Litchfield himself has been guilty of no fraud or willful default. The State has voluntarily abstained from enforcing the collection because of doubts about its right to do so, and Litchfield has had the use of his money while the dispute remained unsettled. As soon as the title was adjusted he offered to pay what was actually due, with ordinary interest, and this was refused. Under these circumstances we think the court below was right in enjoining the collection of all penalty or interest in excess of 6 per cent. per annum. In Stryker 28. Polk County (32 Jowa, 137) there is a strong intimation that in a case like this such relief might be granted. None of the objections which were found to granting the injunction asked for in that case exist here, and it is clearly made to appear that the action of the State affected the title of this plaintiff prejudicially. Such a case was made by the bill and established by the evidence. It may fairly be inferred, from what is said in Litchfield vs. Hamilton County, (40 Iowa, 70,) that in such a case the courts of the State would afford the remedy.

Although taxes in Iowa are levied and collected by the counties, all is done under the authority of the State, and the counties are charged with whatever is done by the State affecting the rights of the taxpayer. No complaint is made by Litchfield of the amount found due from him by the court below, if the decree is in other respects right, as we find it to be.

Decree affirmed, each party to pay the costs of his own appeal.

I have now given every opinion of the Supreme Court of the United

I have now given every opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States affecting the lands in question. Every point raised by the advocates of this bill has been disposed of by the court in these several decisions. They form a bulwark which is impregnable. The questions settled by these cases are the following:

1. That the grant made by the resolution of 1861 was an original grant of the land in question.

2. That this grant inured to the benefit of the grantees of the State

3. That such grantees are bona fide purchasers and bona fide holders of the lands in question.

4. That these lands were taxable as the lands of such grantees after

4. That these lands were taxable as the lands of stell grantees after the year 1861.

5. That after the resolution of 1861 went into effect, the United States had no longer any interest in these lands, legal or equitable.

6. That the Harvey settlement does not affect the right of the grantees of the State of Iowa in any manner; and that settlement of 1866 does not affect the case now before Congress.

This bill is in direct conflict with these cases, and if it becomes a law it reconstrily everthrows the Supreme Court and its judgments.

law it necessarily overthrows the Supreme Court and its judgments.

I have no doubt that such a law would be void, as in conflict with the organic law.

Suppose that this bill should become a law, and the Attorney-General should sit down to draw his complaint. It being a bill to quiet title or to remove a cloud upon the title of the United States, it would be a complaint in equity. The learned gentlemen who advocate the passage of this bill have neglected to state what sort of a complaint passage of this bill have neglected to state what sort of a complaint the Attorney-General could make. It must be assumed that the facts would all be set out in the bill. Let us see what he could allege.

He would begin, of course, by alleging the act of Congress of 1846. He would state that the United States administrative officers, although entertaining doubts, decided that the grant contained in this act extended clear through the State; that for eight years the State of Iowa, by means of her board of public works, carried on the improvement of the river; that in 1854 the Iowa Legislature organized a corporation called the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, and made a contract with that company to complete the improvement of the river, and received the remainder of the lands; that the United States certified, from time to time, under this grant. that the United States certified, from time to time, under this grant, lands to the State of Iowa, until in 1858 it so certified a large amount of lands below the Raccoon Fork, and more than three hundred thousand acres above the Fork; that in that year it appeared to be for the interest of the State of Iowa to stop this improvement and use the remainder of the grant in the construction of railroads; that by virtue of a resolution of the Legislature, the State settled with the Navigation Company and deeded to it about two hundred and seventy-one gation Company and deeded to it about two hundred and seventy-one thousand acres of the lands of this grant above Raccoon Fork; that this conveyance was made in good faith and for a full consideration. The State of Iowa then believed and the Navigation Company believed that the State had the complete and indefeasible title to the lands thus conveyed; that in truth and in fact the said grant did not extend above the Raccoon Fork, and the State had no title; that the Navigation Company immediately on getting its deeds from that the Navigation Company, immediately on getting its deeds from the State, conveyed the lands to divers persons, mostly non-residents of Iowa, who had advanced the money for them beforehand and taken the company's obligation for a conveyance when the company should obtain the title; that for the purpose of giving to the State of Iowa the title to the lands she had so conveyed, Congress in July, 1861, granted those lands to the State for the benefit of her said grantees. This grant was by joint resolution; but it might be here stated in the bill by way of emphasis that the Supreme Court of the United States, in twelve cases, had decided that this joint resolution was a grant; that it inured to the benefit of the grantees of the State, and that such grantees are bona fide holders of the lands in controversy.

And here the allegations of fact might stop, because every fact material to the case is stated. Any additional statement of facts would only raise immaterial issues. Upon these facts what relief could the Attorney-General ask the chancellor to grant?

The object of the bill is to restore the title of the lands to the United States. No fraud is alleged. There is no principle of equity upon which the Attorney-General could expect to sustain his action for a moment, and should he bring a suit, as this bill directs him to do, it would result in humiliating defeat. Why put these grantees of the State of Iowa into this worse than useless litigation?

The litigation proposed by this bill would last at least ten years, and probably fifteen. While it lasts renters will not pay the rent, and the purchasers will pay neither principal nor interest. It is equivalent to taking a man's land away from him to compel him to fight ten years for it in the courts.

The claims, or pretended claims, of these so-called settlers are not new in the Halls of Congress. For many years they have been before Congress in various shapes. They appear to be supported by powerful influences outside of this House. There are said to be "millions in it."

ions in it."

I have been furnished with a printed form of a contract made by each claimant with a mythical party called "Settlers' Union," by which these poor settlers agree to pay $1 per acre to the "Settlers' Union," for some purpose, presumably to compensate the promoters of this bill outside of Congress. That form is in the following words and figures:

FORT DODGE, IQWA. -

Sixty days after the resumption of the so-called river lands, by act of Congress, as Government land, by which acts, as a bona fide settler, I may perfect my title under Government to the following lands, to wit:

The _____ of section No. ____, township No. ____ north, of range No. ____ west, fifth P. M. Iowa.

under Government to the following lands, to wit:

The — of section No. —, township No. — north, of range No. — west, fifth P. M., Iowa.

I promise to pay to treasurer of "Settlers' Union," or bearer, the sum of — dollars, being at the rate of $1 per acre on said tract so confirmed by Congress in me by means of resumption of the so-called Des Moines Navigation and Kaliroad lands. Said sum so owing by me shall be and become and remain a mortgage lien on said piece or parcel of land claimed by me until said note is paid. Also, said note is and shall be a special lien on any compensation or indemnity that may be granted by Congress and accepted by "Settlers' Union" or myself in lieu of said land, and be paid as soon as such compensation or indemnity is set apart for such purpose by such act, and retained out of such moneys by the "Settlers' Union" for payment of this note.

But in case the Settlers' Union fails to secure the title as above, or compensation, or indemnity, then this note is null and void.

STATE OF IOWA, Ss: On this — day of —, 187-, before me, a — in and for said county, personally appeared —, to me well known to be the identical person whose name is signed to the foregoing instrument and acknowledged same to be his voluntary act and deed.

Witness my hand and seal the day and date herein written.

I suppose the promoters of this bill entertain a deep and cordial sympathy for the weak, poor, and defenseless settlers. They are willing, however, to squeeze out of them $300,000 for fees and expenses to the lawyers who practice their profession before the bar of Congress. There is somebody besides the settlers interested in the passage of this bill, at least to the extent of $300,000.

Mr. PRESCOTT. In answer to a question which has been suggested I desire to read from the opinion in the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Wolsey vs. Chapman. It says:

It has been settled in this court that the title of the Des Moines company is good as against the State and railroad companies under the railroad grant of 1856, and as against pre-emptors after 1855, under the act of 1841. We are not asked to disturb these rulings, and should not be inclined to do so if we were.

It was held if there was any title which had been conveyed by the acts of 1859 and 1860 it was a title which went to the State. If the State had not transferred it to the Des Moines Navigation Company, then it remains still in the State and under this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States it had vested absolutely in the Des Moines Navigation Company, they being the trustees for whose benefit it was passed. And in conclusion the court says:

The right of the governor to convey the lands in question to the Des Moines company under the joint resolution of March 23, 1858, authorized a conveyance upon settlement with the company.

It conveyed all the title the State had. [Here the hammer fell.] I desire to call attention to the peculiar wording of this bill, if the House will give me two minutes.

Mr. WILBER. Let the gentleman have that time. We want information on this question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed for debate in opposition to the bill has expired.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I ask that a paper be read showing how much money there is in this bill. [Cries of "Object!" and "Not in order!"]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I ask that a paper be read showing how much money there is in this bill. [Cries of "Object!" and "Not in order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Converse] is entitled to five minutes.

Mr. CONVERSE. I propose to occupy but two or three minutes and not the whole five, because the House is impatient and desires to vote. What is the question involved in this bill? Here are a thousand families, a thousand land-holders, citizens of the United States, who desire the privilege of going into a court of the United States and having their claims to their own homes tested there.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. CONVERSE. No, sir; I do not yield. They ask that the Attorney-General of the United States shall go in also, and that the parties who represent the Des Moines Navigation Company and who claim the lands in opposition to the settlers shall have the privilege also of going into court. If the Navigation Company have such a case as they claim, they should not object to going into court and having all disputes settled there.

These settlers, some of whom have lived twenty-five or thirty years on this land, who have built up the country, who have improved their farms, put up buildings on them, planted orchards, made fences, built school-houses and churches, and reared their families to manhood and womanhood, ask merely that they may be permitted to go into court to test their title to the land where their children were born and reared, and which they always thought and believed to be their own homes. This bill does not confer a single right on the settlers or on anybody else. It will leave the law in relation to the lands just where it is, but it gives the settlers a standing in court and commands the Attorney-General of the United States, and when the questions of difference are determined in that way the settlers say they will submit. If the decision is against them they will quietly move off the land and allow the Navigation Company to take it notwithstanding th

Mr. CONVERSE. Yes, sir.
Mr. LAPHAM. Why have they not a standing in court now? Why do they need this act?
Mr. CONVERSE. It would take too long to explain it. But the gentleman knows a mere squatter on land till he gets a title or patent from the Government cannot go into court and defend his claim to

The bill gives the settler a right to go into court, the settler who has been invited to go on the Government lands and pre-empt and establish homesteads under the laws of the United States, the settler who has reared his family there, who has built up the country—

Mr. LAPHAM. Then it is for the benefit of mere squatters.
Mr. CONVERSE. Yes; mere squatters for twenty-five or thirty years; squatters who have built up that beautiful Des Moines Valley and made it a garden.

I do not desire to detain the House, but I will say that if there ever was a meritorious case presented to this House, such a case is presented by these thousand settlers with their families, now comprising in all five or six thousand people, who are about to be ousted from their homes their homes.

Gentlemen refer to the fact that there has been some litigation on this subject. This adroit corporation has managed to go into court both as plaintiff and as defendant. They have tried both sides of the case in the interest of this corporation and their privies, but never in a single instance has the squatter or settler, pre-emptor or homesteader been allowed to go into court and have his claim tested with a full and fair statement of the facts as they really exist. The Government has never had a chance to go into court. These 213,000 acres which this company claims have been twice paid for by the United States. After the Government gave the land to the State of Iowa, that State came back to Congress and said that the settlers, pre-emptors, and homesteaders were on the land in controversy, and other lands were wanted in place of them. The Government gave to the State 227,000 acres of land in lieu of this very tract of 213,000 acres of land, se that the settlers might have the land upon which they had settled; and now, having got pay for the land, the Navigation Cempany comes back here and wants the land too.

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Cries of "Vote!" Vote!"]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I ask permission to print the remainder of my remarks.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I ask permission to print the remainder of my remarks.

Mr. REAGAN objected, but subsequently withdrew his objection. No objection being made, leave was granted accordingly.

The question was taken upon suspending the rules and passing the bill; and upon a viva voce vote the Speaker pro tempore amounced that two-thirds had voted in the affirmative.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So (two-thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended.

So (two-thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 4477) to regulate the mode of purchasing tobaces for the United States Navy.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 308) to confirm the title to certain lands in Platte County, Missouri, and to authorize patents to be issued therefor to the assignee of George Smith and Joseph Meyer;

A bill (S. No. 626) for the relief of the Albemarle and Chesapealse Canal Company;

A bill (S. No. 626) for the relief of the Albemarle and Chesapealee Canal Company;
A bill (S. No. 676) to amend clause 2 of the general incorporation laws of the District of Columbia;
A bill (S. No. 758) for the relief of James M. Bacon;
A bill (S. No. 1487) to restore the lands included in the Fort Reading and Fort Crook military reservations, in the State of California, to the public domain, and for other purposes;
A bill (S. No. 1573) to provide for the furnishing of certain public documents to soldiers' homes;
A bill (S. No. 1581) authorizing and directing the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury for the public use of the property known as the Freedman's Bank and the real estate and parcels of ground adjacent thereto belonging to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, located on Pennsylvania avenue, between Fifteenth and Fifteen-and-a-half streets, Washington, District of Columbia;
A bill (S. No. 1631) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to convert into cash certain bonds in trust for the Shawnee Indians; and

A bill (S. No. 1922) for the relief of Brigadier-General and Brevet Major-General Edward O. C. Ord, United States Army.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The next committee having the right to-day to move to suspend the rules— Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House now adjourn.

PENSIONS FOR EMPLOYÉS IN LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

Pending the motion to adjourn,
The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending the extension of the pension laws to the employés of the life-saving service; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MILWAUKEE BAY AND SOUTH BAY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports of the survey of Milwaukee Bay and South Bay; which was referred to the Committee on Com-

CAPITOL BUILDING IN NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter frem the Secretary of the Interior, recommending an appropriation to complete the capitol building in the Territory of New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

COLONEL GRIERSON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the military services of Colonel Grierson; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the public building at Baltimore, Maryland; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EMPLOYÉS IN THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a list of the employés in the Navy Department during the year 1880; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

FUNDING BILL.

Mr. BLAND asked and obtained unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a portion of the debates some remarks prepared by him upon the funding bill. [See Appendix.]

Mr. CHALMERS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the following proposed amendment to the funding bill now pending in the Committee of the Whole:

pending in the Committee of the Whole:

Sec. 6. That from and after the passage of this act, all notes of national banks which may be received by the Treasury Department, or by any officer thereof, shall be retained and forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury at Washington, who shall retain the same, and shall not pay them out again for any purpose whatever; but shall assort them, and whenever the notes of any one bank shall be received to the amount of $1,000, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to immediately notify the officers of such bank and require them to come forward and witness, if they see fit, the destruction of said notes, and thereupon the bonds of the United States pledged for the redemption of said notes, to an amount equal, after computing the interest thereon, to the said national-bank notes so held, and the notes so held shall be immediately canceled and destroyed by the Secretary, in accordance with the provision of existing laws.

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, whenever the notes of any national bank to the amount of $1,000 or more shall be canceled and destroyed under the provisions of this act, to cause to be printed and made ready for use an amount of Treasury notes, under the form provided in the law of 1862 and subsequent acts anthorizing the issue of Treasury notes, exactly equal to the amount of national-bank notes so canceled and destroyed; which said Treasury notes shall be issued and paid out, to all persons willing to receive the same, for any and all demands against the Government of the United States, as fast as may be by law authorized and permitted, and when so issued they shall not be held and esteemed a legal tender.

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorize I and directed to purchase, without limit, all silver bullion, trade-dollars, and foreign silver coins that may be offered for sale at the market value of silver, and such purchases shall be continued as long as 412 grains of standard silver can be purchased for one dollar of Treasury notes. All such purchases shall be paid for with this new issue of Treasury notes. And all holders of any of the silver coins of the United States may present the same in any sum not less than $20 and receive therefor Treasury notes at par for the same. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to have the silver bullion, trade-dollars, and foreign silver pieces coined as fast as possible into American silver coins and to apply all silver coins of the United States that may come into the Treasury to the payment of the interest and principal of the public debt.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 18, 1881.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. REPORT OF DISTRICT HEALTH OFFICER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia be printed, 300 copies thereof for the use of the House of Representatives, 100 copies for the use of the Senate, and 2,100 copies for the use of said health officer.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 5th instant, the report of the Superintendent of the Census touching the alleged frauds in the enumeration of the inhabitants of South Carolina under the law providing for the taking of the tenth census; which, on motion of Mr. BUTLER, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the 8th instant, the report of the Superintendent of the Census giving complete returns of the population of each State and Territory on the 1st day of June, 1880; which, on motion of Mr. PENDLETON, was referred to the Select Committee to make provision for taking the Tenth Census, and ordered to be printed.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION IN NEVADA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the governor of the State of Nevada; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

governor of the State of Nevada; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

State of Nevada, Executive Department,
Carson City, Nevada, December 23, 1880.

Sir: The Legislature of this State, desiring to afford the people of the State an opportunity of expressing their wishes upon the subject of Chinese immigration, passed an act, approved February 11, 1879, entitled "An act to ascertain and express the will of the people of the State of Nevada upon the subject of Chinese immigration."

The act provided for the submission to the electors of the State, at the next general election, the question of the continuance or prohibition of Chinese immigration. It provided that electors in favor of such immigration should so declare by placing on their ballots the words "For Chinese immigration," and that electors opposed to such immigration should express their will by placing upon their ballots the words "Against Chinese immigration."

Public attention was directed to the subject by an executive proclamation, issued thirty days before the election, and at said election, held on the 2d day of November, 1880, the question was duly submitted to the electors.

The total vote cast at said election was 18,397, a very full vote. The canvass of the vote shows that there were:

For Chinese immigration, 183; against Chinese immigration, 17,259; not voting on the question submitted to the people, and an abstract of the vote thereon, and transmit copies, properly certified, to the President and Vice-President of the United States, to each Cabinet minister, Senator, and Member of the House of Representatives, and to the governor of each State and Territory.

Wherefore, in pursuance of the law, and for your information as to the sentiment of the people of Nevada concerning the continuance of Chinese immigration, I have the honor to transmit you this statement.

Very respectfully,

JOHN H. KINKEAD,

Governor of Nevada.

JOHN H. KINKEAD, Governor of Nevada. JASPER BABCOCK,

To his excellency THE VICE-PRESIDENT, U. S. A., Washington, D. C.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONAS presented a petition of certain citizens of Saint Landry Parish, residing along the line of the forfeited grant to aid in the construction partly of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad, and partly of the New Orleans, Vicksburgh and Baton Rouge Railroad, asking for a legislative declaration of the forfeiture of said grants during the pending session of Congress, and to confirm all entries made therein or within the limits of said grants to the railroads named, to extend the provisions of the act of Congress of June 16, 1880, to the State of Louisiana, and to also extend the act of March 3, 1879, to the State of Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads. the Committee on Railroads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McPHERSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1933) to establish and equalize the grades and regulate appointments and promotions in the Marine Corps, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred a concurrent resolution to print 10,000 additional copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1880, have instructed me to report back the same with a recommendation that it pass, and to ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed 10,000 additional copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1889; of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries; the illustrations to be made by the Public Printer, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Public Printing; and 500 copies for sale by the Public Printer, under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent, thereon.

DISTRIBUTION OF CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is a report of the Committee on Printing that was objected to by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who withdraws his objection very kindly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not withdraw my dislike to the report; I merely withdraw my objection to its consideration.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask that House joint resolution No. 340 be taken my and acted men.

up and acted upon.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 340) in reference to the distribution of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Public Printer be authorized to furnish the Chief-Justice and each of the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the clerk and marshal of the court, with a current copy of the daily Congressional Record, and at the end of each session a bound copy of the proceedings of Congress for such session.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Printing with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 4, before the word "justices," to insert "associate;" so as to read:

And each of the associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.
The next amendment was to add to the bill:

And the Public Printer shall also furnish to the Official Reporter of the Senate five bound copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for each session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass !

Mr. EDMUNDS. I vote "no." The joint resolution was passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAWES asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2049) to amend an act granting a pension to Elizabeth D. Stone, approved May 14, 1878; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2050) for the relief of George Milsom, Henry Spindelow, and George V. Watson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Patents.

INTEROCEANIC TRANSIT COMPANY.

Mr. VEST. I ask that the bill (S. No. 1060) to incorporate the Interoceanic Transit Company, and for other purposes, be taken from the Calendar and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a bill about the Nicaragua or Panama

canali

Mr. VEST. It is the railway project of Captain Eads.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe the other bill introduced by the Senator from California [Mr. BOOTH] was referred to the Committee on Commerce. Of course it is of no consequence, so far as the Senate is concerned, which committee considers this subject; but it seems to me that one committee or the other ought to have the whole subject before them and we should not divide it. The Senator from California can express his views about it.

Mr. VEST. I ask the reference to the Committee on Foreign Re-Mr. VEST. I ask the reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations for the simple reason that if it goes to the Committee on Commerce there cannot be any report at the present session. We know very well that the river and harbor bill will go before that committee together with other important business. There are but about six weeks of the working session left. This bill, I think from its nature, ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is relative to a passage across the territory of Mexico and it involves the gravest questions of international law. I think that the bill referred to, introduced by the Senator from Minnesota, went to the Committee on Commerce. Commerc

Mr. VEST. My impression was that the Senator from Minnesota

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

GENEVA AWARD FUND.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If there is no further business for the morning hour

Mr. HOAR. There is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend says there is. Then I wish to give notice that as soon as the order of resolutions is gone through with, if I can get the floor I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill to provide can get the floor I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories, which has been before the Senate, is almost finished, and which it is extremely desirable for public and private interests in the new Territories through which the Southern Pacific Railway is going, should be disposed of in one way or another.

Mr. HOAR. I proposed to move to take up at this time a resolution introduced by me at the last session instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to report forthwith a bill providing compensation from the moneys received under the Geneva award for all persons whose ships were destroyed by confederate cruisers, &c.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the morning hour the Senator from Massachusetts calls up a resolution for consideration which will be reported.

Mr. HOAR. I stated that I had proposed to call that up at this time, but I see the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. Thurman] is not in his seat. I give notice that at an early day—to-morrow morning if there shall be no reason on account of the absence of any morning if there shall be no reason on account of the absence of any Senator who is specially charged with the subject—I shall endeavor to call up that resolution. I desire to say, however, in giving the notice, that I understand no considerable number of Senators and no considerable number of persons at former sessions in the other House has expressed an opinion against compensating from the Geneva award moneys persons whose ships and property were actually destroyed by any confederate craisers, but there is a very near approach to unanimity of opinion, as I believe, upon that subject. If that be true, it seems unreasonable that action to that extent should be deferred by reason of differences of opinion in the Judiciary Committee or on the floor of the Senate in regard to what should be done with regard to other classes of sufferers with the moneys received by the same award. I shall therefore urge that resolution at a very early

SETTLEMENT OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate consider the Calendar of Resolutions for the remainder of the morning hour? If not, the business of the morning hour is closed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. According to the notice that I gave about five minutes ago, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 818.

Senate bill No. 818.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont moves that the further consideration of the standing order be postponed, indicating his purpose to move the consideration of a certain bill. The question is on that motion.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate consider at this time the bill he has named.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 818) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill has been read and gone through with as in Committee of the Whole as it respects, I think, the committee's amendments, and I believe the pending question is on an amendment offered by the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Teller.]

The amendment and the amendment to the amendment will be reported. ported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 12, after line 15, it is proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] to strike out all down to and including the word "act" in line 23, as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To which amendment the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] moves an amendment, which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 18 of the part proposed to be stricken out it is moved to strike out the words "effected the donation or sale of" and to insert in lieu "be such as has been held by the courts and in the practice of the Government to carry;" so as to read:

Unless the grant claimed be such as has been held by the courts and in the practice of the Government to carry such mines or minerals to the grantee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York on the 12th day of May last,

the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, this bill and the reason for the amendment are naturally somewhat out of my mind. To that occasion I would be glad to ask the attention of the Senator from Vermont. amendment are laterally somewhat one of my limit. To that occasion I would be glad to ask the attention of the Senator from Vermont. I remember the occasion of offering this amendment, which was that a number of persons (and I am not able now prudently to attempt to state with any exactness the fact) called my attention to an allegation of theirs that they had purchased or succeeded to rights, which rights would be cut off or impaired without some such provision as this. That, as I think the Senator having the bill in charge will remember, was the substance of a statement made at the time. My purpose was, it is now, unless I am corrected by somebody who is able to say that the occasion has passed away, to save the rights, if there be rights, of those who in good faith paid their money, changed their residence, cast in their lot, upon the belief that they were entitled to what they bought, namely, the same improvements of all kinds that the courts and the authorities proceeding there had pronounced, if they had pronounced, that they were entitled to in that state of the case.

Some other Senator, and I am not sure who, at this same time had, I remember, in his hands, as I had in mine, letters and statements from those who were involved, stating their case; and had I known that this bill was to be brought up this morning, which I did not, I would have been prepared with the material I had in my hand when the amendment was moved. At this moment I cannot advisedly say much more about it than I have done.

My EDMUNDS

much more about it than I have done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The object of the committee in putting in this third limitation and the general effect of the proposed act, was to give to the grantee whose claim should be confirmed precisely what his original grant entitled him to, and no more. That was the object of the committee, for that would carry out the treaty between the United States and Mexico, and the treaty between the United States and France in respect of that part of the country covered by this bill that was derived from Snain to France and from France under the that was derived from Spain to France and from France under the Louisiana purchase. So the committee provided that these confirmations should not carry the precious metals unless the grant claimed effected the donation or sale of those metals; that is, unless that was the legal effect of the grant. If it was the legal effect of the grant, then it should carry it; if it was not, it should not; and it was stated in that way in order to preserve precisely the real and equitable as well as legal rights of every grantee who claimed a confirmation.

In some part of the territory covered by this bill as in some part of Arizona, which I believe was anciently a part of the independent State of Sonora under the Mexican constitution, the legislature of that state, if I may call it such, it was alleged had made some grants in absolute fee which did carry under their laws the right to the precious metals that lay within the ground. In the case of Spanish grants proper, and in the case of the national Mexican grants, unless there was a special provision to the contrary the committee understood the law to be clear that the precious metals were not conveyed. What is the practical result, aside from the law and equity of giving the grantees precisely what they got by the grant and nothing more? This bill is limited to eleven square leagues, which makes a very large territory, almost half a million acres, 446,000 acres. A great many of these grants are for these enormous quantities of land, indeed vastly more than I have stated; but the Mexican and the Spanish settlement laws and ordinances, as we thought, always in-

Spanish settlement laws and ordinances, as we thought, always intended to confine grants of the character that now exist to that limitation. Going up to that, there are enormous areas of territory unfit for cultivation, of no value for cultivation, and only valuable for the

It appeared to us, aside from doing the equity and justice of giving whatever the party was lawfully entitled to under his grant, that the practical injustice to the mining interests of the United States and its citizens in those vast arid regions that are good for nothing else, of allowing some old grant to be confirmed which had been lying dormant for a century or half a century, and putting into the hands of the owner of the soil the domination over all the mines in this yest area would be very great. We thought it would be better else, of allowing some old grant to be confirmed which had been lying dormant for a century or half a century, and putting into the hands of the owner of the soil the domination over all the mines in this vast area would be very great. We thought it would be better, as in the Territories, formerly, of Colorado and Nevada, now States, to allow the mining laws of the United States to operate, and the rights of miners subject to the proprietary interest in fee to have free scope; in other words, to leave the minerals exactly where the grant left them, that is, the property of the public, to be arranged and regulated for in some public way. That was our motive.

As to the amendment of the Senator from New York, I very much fear that to make a reference here to the decision of the courts and the practice of the Departments will lead to great confusion, and I am afraid to considerable injustice for the reason that the courts in those Territories have sometimes in particular cases decided one way and sometimes another, as courts are in the habit of doing everywhere, and the practice of the Departments, I fear it will be found, has not been uniform. So you can find a decision and a practice which from year under one Commissioner has been one thing, and under another Commissioner in another year another thing, just as it has been, I am sorry to say, about all the public and private land claims in the United States. I should hope, therefore, that my friend from New York would be content with the provision in this bill that whatever the grant carries the party shall be entitled to, and whatever it does not carry shall be left just where the law under which he took his grant would leave it, in the United States.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I can see no answer to the statement of the Senator from Vermont except this, and that, I submit to him and to the Senator from Vermont except this, and that, I submit to him and to the Senator from Vermont just of the Department, if they have not conflicted, have varied from time to t of instances of that sort. The honorable Senator from Vermont places a fence or an erection upon property which belongs to me; he has no paper title at all; he pretends none; he maintains his structure there for twenty years; and my right is gone. Why † Because of what is called adverse possession, or, adopting the phraseology of the civil law, he has prescribed for that right. So he travels across my land; he has an easement, a servitude, a convenience to himself, and after a certain time I can no longer go into court and say: "You have no title to this land; you are a trespasser here." He may by mere prescription ripen his right to anything in the world except a nuisance; I believe no man can prescribe for that, but anything else he may acquire by mere lapse of time.

with the ruling of the Land Office and the Interior Department and entrenched behind decisions of the courts, have taken rights. I submit to the Senator from Vermont that these rights ought not to be passed upon necessarily now, as they would be if they originated yesterday or to-day; that the equities, one of which is that action on the part of the Government which induced these grantees to buy and remove there, ought to be respected.

If the bill as it is produces that effect, (which I remember now better than I did when saying a word about this a moment ago,) which

If the bill as it is produces that effect, (which I remember now better than I did when saying a word about this a moment ago,) which it was very strongly my impression at the time and of other Senators it did not; if it does shield vested rights—vested rights which may not be technically perfect, but which nevertheless are substantial enough to be respected—so be it. I thought then it did not, and so I moved this amendment. It seems to me still that if there be objection to this particular mode of putting it, if there be objection to appealing to the rulings of the Department and to the decisions of the courts, to which latter it seems to me there ought to be no objection, then let us put it in some other way. The Senator from of the courts, to which latter it seems to me there ought to be no objection, then let us put it in some other way. The Senator from Vermont says and says truly that the decisions of the courts conflict everywhere; certainly they do more or less, but still I think it could hardly be said even in the case of territorial courts, even in the case of the courts of a State which State had made the least advance in jurisprudence, that you pay no heed or little heed to the decisions of its courts under which rights have accrued, because you could turn to some other court, the Supreme Court of the United States or some other judicial tribunal, and say "in that tribunal we should have vastly more confidence than in this."

So I am disposed to insist that either this amendment or something better to be suggested should be interposed here as a ground on better to be suggested should be interposed here as a ground on which these grantees can stand in respect of their vested rights, if they have any, even though a court taking up the question now as an original question would say in strict law these men were mistaken; they did not buy what they paid for; they did not take what they supposed they took; minerals did not pass by this grant; they took nothing but a fee to the soil, and the minerals buried in that soil did not pass under the grant.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only wish to say one word in reply to the Senator from New York; and that is that unless the reference to courts means, as I suppose it does, as it is stated a court in any district in any Territory; one court holding one thing in one district and another judge another thing in his,—unless it means that, the bill is right as it is, because it will be for the court to determine in the case of any disbecause it will be for the court to determine in the case of any dispute under the bill as it stands whether the grant carried the minerals or whether it did not. Congress does not undertake to decide anything about it by this bill except simply to say we will fulfill to the last letter our treaty obligation and wherever the grant that is to be confirmed did produce the result of entitling the grantee to work the mines and minerals within the granted lands, there he shall have them; wherever by his grant he got no title to the precious metals, there he shall not have them, but they shall belong to all the people of the United States as they did to the Governments of Spain and Mexico and to be disposed of as the United States, for the benefit of its people may think it fit to do.

That is the effect of the bill as it stands. The bill if it is amended as proposed by the Senator from New York will be quite a different thing. It will be a different thing to itself in one Territory from another, in one judicial district of a Territory from another just as the local judge may happen to have hitherto, with or without proper advice and knowledge, decided. It appears to me that is a very unsafe rule. If the Senator from New York would be content with this addition to the words of the committee for one—not speaking for the committee for I have no right to speak for them—I should have no objection; that is, adding after the word "grantee" the words "or he has become otherwise lawfully entitled thereto," so as to read:

No allowance or confirmation of any claim shall confer any right or title to any read allowed the proper and the state of the same and confer any right or title to any read allowed the grant claimed effected the pute under the bill as it stands whether the grant carried the minerals

No allowance or confirmation of any claim shall confer any right or title to any gold, silver, or quicksilver mines or minerals unless the grant claimed effected the donation or sale of such mines or minerals to the grantee, or unless he has become otherwise lawfully entitled thereto.

If by any subsequent proceeding he has got a right, I am willing he should have it. I am willing to leave him to his lawful rights. That is all I think that the committee wish to do. They do not wish to go beyond that. Then if in any way at the time the case comes on to be disposed of the grantee has got a lawful title to the mines and minerals, he shall have them. I am willing to go that far. I am willing to give every claimant whatever his legal rights are.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the amendment of the Senator from New York reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. CONKLING.

Mr. TELLER. I think when this bill was before the Senata here.

Mr. TELLER. I think when this bill was before the Senate heretofore I made a motion to strike out the whole of what is called the third clause here third clause here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That motion is pending; but the Senator from New York moves to perfect the clause before the motion to strike out is put. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. Although all Senators agreeing with me are not quite satisfied with the suggestion, I am disposed to accept the modification suggested by the Senator from Vermont. These people had better get a finger than get nothing; and although I do not regard these words as going very far, I think they are suggestive to the courts that they ought not to try this case upon the dots of the i's or the crosses of the t's, but that they ought to have some regard to the history of the case. I therefore modify my amendment, if I have a history of the case. I therefore modify my amendment, if I have a right to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That can be done.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Blair] makes a suggestion to me to which I hope the Senator from Vermont will have no objection. He uses the words "lawfully entitled." Is there any objection to saying "or otherwise entitled in law or in equity?"

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir, because, stating it in that way, it means legal equity, and to that I have no objection.

Mr. CONKLING. I think it does mean that. Then I ask the Senator to allow the amendment to read "otherwise entitled in law or in certific". in equity.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will read then after the word "grantee," in line 19, "or unless such grantee has become otherwise entitled thereto in law or in equity."

Mr. CONKLING. That will do. I modify my amendment in that way if I have leave to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment of the Senator from New York is modified.

Mr. CONKLING. Now I suggest that we need not have the yeas and nays, there being no opposition to my amendment in this form.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the amendment as modified. It is agreed to. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Teller,] to strike out the clause

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that insisted on ?

Mr. TELLER. I mean to insist on my amendment, because it does not appear to me that the change of phraseology materially affects the legal effect of this provision. If the grantee has any title at all to the minerals he has it by virtue of his grant from the Mexican Government, which, whatever we may say about it, we could not legally interfere with. I do not suppose that he did have any legal title to the minerals. I do not pretend that under the Mexican Government he had any such title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Unless the grant did say so; some grants did say so.

Mr. TELLER. I speak now of the grants that were silent on that subject. Of course if the grant said that the grantee took the mineral, under the treaty made with the Mexican Government, we are eral, under the treaty made with the Mexican Government, we are not at liberty to disregard that provision, and his rights are the same as if the General Government had said so by patent.

I was going to say that under the Mexican Government the grantee could not hold the minerals. In the first place, before the Mexican Government the Spanish King provided for the methods of working the minerals on lands owned by individuals, and the king reserved to himself a royalty in mines worked on the public unappropriated domain as well as those worked upon private property. That was the policy of all crowned governments, I believe. That was the rule in reference to the precious metals in England and in other countries; and it was put upon the ground that the precious metals were of so high a character that they belonged naturally to royalty.

There never has been any such principle recognized in the United States. I stated before when this bill was under discussion, and I repeat it now, that in every instance where the Supreme Court has touched upon this subject or the courts of the States where land has passed from the Government to individuals the Government has recogpassed from the Government to individuals the Government has recognized an absolute fee in the individual which carried everything in the soil. When the Government gives its patent, it parts with every-thing, no matter whether the patent is made for agricultural land or whether it is made for mineral land; the Government parts absolutely with everything under the earth and above it, and the highest title it is possible for the Government to confer upon its citizens is a patent of the United States.

patent of the United States.

When we bought of the Spanish and French crowns a portion of the country, we adopted the plan of parting with the absolute title and everything connected with it. In Missouri a great number of claims were made by subjects of the then Spanish Government and they were recognized by the United States Government as carrying with them all the title to everything beneath the soil. There has never been any legislation in this country that recognized the right of the Government to reserve to itself the minerals in the land that was owned by individuals; and commencing immediately with the of the Government to reserve to itself the minerals in the land that was owned by individuals; and commencing immediately with the Louisiana purchase a great number of acts have been passed at different times with reference to the confirmation of titles, and not a single one has ever provided that the Government of the United States reserved to itself anything at all, and why? Because we had no such theory in our Government as that the silver and the gold were avaluable that they belonged to sovereighty. There was nothing so valuable that they belonged to sovereignty. There was nothing of the kind, and it is foreign to our Government and to the character of a republican government that the government should reserve to itself either the minerals or the right to charge a royalty for the working of those minerals after it has parted with the title to the land.

When we acquired California we acquired a vast region of country including that where this land lies, a portion of Colorado and other sections that are to be affected by this bill, with a great number of these inchoate titles. By many acts we have recognized the right of claimants to everything in the soil.

I do not pretend to say because the act that confirms one piece of ground recognizes the right to the mineral it is absolutely necessary that the Government should do it in another case, or that the Government is bound to do it; therefore I do not think the words incorporated ment is bound to do it; therefore I do not think the words incorporated into this third clause now by the unanimous consent of the Senate change the meaning at all, because parties have not acquired it by any other method if they did not have it before, and the Government can keep faith with the Mexican Government not violating any provision of this treaty and reserve to itself the right to this mineral. But early in the history of California as a member of our Union, such claims were litigated and the courts of California held that the title to the mineral passed to the individual owning the land; Judge Field held it in several cases; they held so because it was inconsistent with our theory of government and because there was no method by which the Government retaining the right to the mineral could work it without detriment to the owner of the land. Under the Spanish Crown, out detriment to the owner of the land. Under the Spanish Crown, and under the Mexican Government that succeeded, which contained the same laws practically, the government provided that a man might denounce a mine or any private property, and the government then provided how he should proceed to do it, and that compensation should be made to the party. Here it is proposed to reserve the right of the Government and to throw open all these grants to prospectors, and every man in the United States who sees fit can invade every other man's possession in that section who has this kind of a title and can appropriate it absolutely. Here is a man with a vineyard other man's possession in that section who has this kind of a title and can appropriate it absolutely. Here is a man with a vineyard or an orchard or a garden; the land is mineral land; all the land is mineral in almost the entire region of country where these grants are; and the prospectors will swarm over the gardens and swarm over the vineyards and through the orchards, and render the land absolutely worthless to the owner. What inducements have parties to go on and make settlements and cultivate their lands when if somebody who supposes there is mineral in there should find a very little mineral or a great deal (it is immaterial which) he can go on and dis unthe fields and tear down the fences and destroy the improvements because the Government has reserved to itself the right to the mineral and the right to work the soil for the purpose of extracting it?

This third clause then withholds and reserves to the Government what the Mexican Government did not do and what the Spanish Government did not do before that time. It is not a proposition simply to give these parties what the Spanish Government gave them; the proposition is to reserve to the Government of the United States a greater right and a greater authority and a greater power over this land than the old Spanish and Mexican Governments reserved. The Government is by this asserting a right in the land that no Spanish crown or Mexican Government ever did assert.

What practical benefit will it be? I want to read a few lines from the decision rendered in 1861, by Judge Field:

What practical benefit will it be? I want to read a few lines from the decision rendered in 1861, by Judge Field:

The premises in controversy in the present case being private property, it follows that there is no pretense for the justification of the defense of a license from either the General or State government. If the mineral belong to either government, there must be, as held in Stoakes vs. Barrett, more specific legislation than any yet resorted to before the invasion of private property can be permitted in search of it or for its extraction. What that specific legislation should be in such cose it is unnecessary to determine. It is but reasonable to say that it should embody provisions for the protection of the rights of the landed proprietor, and furnish ample indemnity against the damage arising from the injury to his possessions.

The doctrine of an unlimited general license, put forth in many instances and advocated by the defense, is pregnant with the most pernicious consequences. If upheld it must lead to the spoliation of landed estates under the pretense of mining, without possibility of protection or redress on the part of the owner. There is gold in limited quantities scattered through large and valuable districts, where the land is held in private proprietorship, and under this pretended license the whole might be invaded, and for all useful purposes destroyed, no matter how little remunerative the product of the mining. The entry might be made at all seasons, whether the land was under cultivation or not, and without reference to its condition, whether covered with orchards, vineyards, gardens, or otherwise. Under such a state of things the proprietor would never be secure in his possessions, and without security there would be little development, for the incentive to improvement would be wanting. What value would there be to a title in one man, with a right of invasion in the whole world? And what property would the owner possess in mineral land, the same being, in fact, to him poor and va

This was a decision made by Mr. Justice Field in 1861. Now, I desire to call attention to another decision rendered by the same learned justice. The case from the decision in which I have just read ultimately came to the Supreme Court of the United States, and Judge Field's opinion was there sustained.

Such being the case-

The court say-

the question arises as to what passed by the patents to Fernandez and to Fremont, and to this question there can be but one answer: all the interest of the United States, whatever it may have been, in everything connected with the soil, in everything forming any portion of its bed or fixed to its surface, in everything which is embraced within the signification of the term land; and that term, says Blackstone, "includes not only the face of the earth, but everything under it or over it. And therefore," he continues. "if a man grants all his lands, he grants thereby all his mines of metal, and other fossils, his woods, his waters, and his houses, as well as his fields and meadows." (Book II, 19.) Such is the view universally entertained by the legal profession as to the effect of a patent from the General Government. The United States occupy, with reference to their real property within the limits of the State, only the position of a private proprietor, with the exception of exemption from State taxation, and their patent of such property is subject to the same general rules of construction which apply to conveyances of individuals. From the operation of conveyances of this nature, that is, of individuals, the minerals of gold and silver are not reserved unless by express terms. They pass with the transfer of the soil in which they are contained. And the same is true of the operation of the patent—the instrument of transfer of the governmental proprietor, the United States; no interest in the minerals remains in them without a similar reservation. Nor is there anything in the language of the Supreme Court, in the opinion rendered in the Fremont case, which gives countenance to any other view.

lar reservation. Nor is there anything in the language of the Supreme Court, in the opinion rendered in the Fremont case, which gives countenance to any other view.

The Attorney-General of the United States objected to the confirmation of the claim of Fremont upon the ground that the grant to Alvarado contained mines of gold and silver. His argument was to this effect: that as the mines did not pass to the grantee by the Mexican law the claim should not be confirmed, as Fremont would obtain as a consequence of such confirmation a patent which would pass the minerals, to which, by the original grant, he was not entitled. But to this the court replied, that under the mining laws of Spain the discovery of a mine of gold and silver did not destroy the title of the individual to the land granted, and that the only question before the court was the validity of the title; and whether there were any mines in the land, and, if there were any, what were the rights of sovereignty in them, were questions which must be decided in another form of proceeding, and were not submitted to the jurisdiction of the commissioners or the court by the act of 1851; in other words, the court said, in substance, that its consideration was confined to the title presented, and the effect of its decree and the patent following it upon the ownership of the minerals was a matter with which it had nothing to do.

The construction given by the United States to their patents ever since the organization of the Government has uniformly been to the same effect. In several of the States, particularly those carved out of territories ceded by Virginia, North Carolina, and Georgia, and out of the territory acquired by the treaty with France in 1803, and by the treaty with Spain in 1819, the title to a large portion of the lands is held under patents from the United States. Some of these patents were issued upon a sale of lands, some of them upon a confirmation of a previously existing grants of the former governments. They were issued to extensive trac

I have read so much of this opinion of Judge Field, because upon the former discussion of this case I made the statement that it had been the uniform practice of the courts in this country to so hold, and that was questioned by the honorable Senator from Vermont.

Mr. President, the present exception, the third clause here, is:

No allowance or confirmation of any claim shall confer any right or title to any gold, silver, or quicksilver mines or minerals, unless the grant claimed effected the donation or sale of such mines and minerals to the grantee; but all such mines and minerals shall remain the property of the United States.

At no time, under no government, has there ever been a claim that all minerals were retained by the Crown. The reservation applied only to gold and silver. This word "minerals" here employed includes all sorts of mineral substances; it includes coal mines; it includes marble mines; it includes undoubtedly deposits of lime and various other substances that come under the head of "mineral." No such claim was ever made by the Spanish Government; there was no pretense that they owned iron mines, coal mines, and mines of that character. So under any view of the case the provision goes further no pretense that they owned iron mines, coal mines, and mines of that character. So under any view of the case the provision goes further than we are justified in going.

I do not believe that the reservation of this mineral by the Government is of any practical benefit to the Government unless it is so used as to be utterly destructive of the rights of individuals. If the Government sees fit to reserve as it does here all this mineral, with the right to work it and to work it in accordance with the statutes governing mining property, that is, to give to the discoverer of a vein certain rights on the surface on each side of the vein, the entire ground may be taken, and I repeat that never was done by the Spanish Government. All that the Spanish Government, all that the Mexican Government that succeeded it ever did claim was the right to denounce a mine, and by an adjudication determine what should be the damage that the owner of the soil should be paid. I have mislaid a brief that I prepared for the purpose of considering this case, but an examination of Rockwell on Mines, of Halleck's Mining Institutes, and of other works that are used in the mining regions, will show that I am not mistaken on this subject. The former government did not claim any right of that character. It claimed the right to a royalty on a mine, allowing it to be worked, and that was independent of the length of time a person might have held his property. A thousand years his title might have been traced, and yet the Government could step in there and allow some other man to take it and work it if there were precious metals in it; but if they did so the hunter for the precious metals must pay the damage the owners of the land-sustained. There is nothing of that kind here, and the grants which will be ratified or confirmed under this bill will, if they have gold and silver and coal and iron, as they have, be actually worthless to the owners, and the confirmation is of no consequence. and iron, as they have, be actually worthless to the owners, and the Confirmation is of no consequence.

Now, Mr. President, the great trouble they have had in New Mexico, one great reason why New Mexico, with its vast extent of territory, has so small a population, is the uncertainty of its titles, and those titles will be rendered still more uncertain by the passage of such a bill as this. Who will occupy a little fertile valley with his garden and with his field if he is liable any day, without a dollar's compensation, to have some man step in there and say, "This is mining ground, and I propose to set up here my sluices and to sluice out your ground?"

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time has expired for the consideration of the bill unless it be extended by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope my friend from Colorade will be allowed to complete his remarks.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I nope my friend from Colorade will be allowed to complete his remarks.

Mr. TELLER. I should a good deal rather complete them to-morrow, when I can put my hand on the brief I prepared, which I have not now, because I did not expect the bill to come up to-day. This is a bill of some importance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont move that the bill be considered further?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask it because it is a duty. The bill affects so many interests.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. INGALLS and others. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I give notice that to-morrow morning after the call of the resolutions, if I can get the floor, I shall ask the Senate to take up this bill again, and my duty will be done.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 15th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 105) for the relief of John Gault, jr., late a major of the Twenty-eighth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry;

and

An act (S. No. 1353) for the relief N. & G. Taylor Company.

The message also announced that the President had, on this day, approved and signed the act (S. No. 323) for the relief of the Winnebago Indians in Wisconsin, and to aid them to obtain subsistence by agricultural pursuits and to promote their civilization.

MARY HOPPERTON.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the action of the Senate denying the prayer of the petition of Mary Hopperton be reconsidered and that the case be sent back to the Committee on Pensions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and an order will be entered to that effect.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the first amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6613) making appropriation for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, and agreed to the remaining amendments.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1067) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BEN. HOLLADAY.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben. Holladay, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. KERNAN to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, I took the floor

Mr. Cameron, or Wisconsin. Mr. President, I took the floor yesterday afternoon for the purpose of submitting some remarks in support of this pending bill. Before proceeding, however, with what I designed to say in support of the bill, I desire to call attention to some of the statements made by the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Beck] yesterday in the remarks that he favored the Senate with against the passage of the bill. I desire to refer to a statement that appears on page 674 of the Record. The Senator said:

When that bill was up the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. Cameron,] and the then Senator from Oregon, Mr. Mitchell, and the others supporting it proposed that the case go to the Court of Claims. They insisted that it should be decided there upon affidavits then ten years old, without cross-examination, without the right of the Government to inquire who those men were and whether they had told the

I heard the Senator make that statement at the time it was made, and my recollection then was that the statement could not be sustained by the fact. In order to know precisely what the Committee on Claims did propose on the occasion referred to, I have sent for the bill that was reported from that committee, and I now hold it in my hand. It appears from the printed bill reported November 26, 1877, now before me, that its language was this:

now before me, that its language was this:

That the claim of Benjamin Holladay, now before Congress, for spoliations by hostile Indians, on his property, while carrying the United States mails, during the existence of Indian hostilities on the line of said mail-route; for property taken and used by United States troops for the benefit of the United States, and for losses of property and expenses incurred in changing his mail-route, in compliance with the orders of the United States commanding officer, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for adjustment, upon the affidavits and orders now before Congress, and such additional testimony as either party may present, to ascertain the amount of losses of property and expenses sustained by him as aforesaid, and render judgment thereon.

SEC. 2. That the said court shall have the power, in its discretion, to cause the production for cross-examination of any witness whose affidavit is now before Congress.

not propose, as was stated by the Senator from Kentucky, "that it should be decided there upon affidavits then ten years old, without cross-examination, without the right of the Government to inquire who those men were and whether they had told the truth or not." The committee were of the opinion that it was simple justice to the claimant to allow these affidavits, whether they were ten years old or more than ten years old, to go to the Court of Claims for what they were worth, not that the claim should be decided upon these affidavits. If that bill had become a law the Court of Claims under its general that bill had become a law the Court of Claims, under its general powers, would have called every man who made an affidavit, and whose affidavit was presented to the court, if he were still alive or accessible to the process of the court, before the court, and he could have been examined and cross-examined touching all the matters referred to in the affidavits.

The same Senator criticised the committee with some severity for not having called the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. Plumb] before the committee as a witness in this case. Now I will state that the committee had reason to believe that it would not be agreeable to that Senator to be called before the committee. That reason, if there were no other, would have decided the committee not to have called him; but the committee then believed and still believe that called him; but the committee then believed and still believe that the Senate will give precisely as much weight to the statement of that Senator made upon this floor, if such statement be upon his personal knowledge, as it would if he had gone before the committee and testified as a witness. I submit, then, sir, that the committee ought not to be criticised for not having called that Senator before it as a witness. The statement that he made two years ago has been read during this discussion. He made a statement yesterday. That statement is before the Senate, and I, for one, will give just as much credit to those statements made by the Senator in his place on the floor of the Senate as I would if he had appeared in the committeeroom and testified as a witness before the committee there.

The Senator from Kentucky states on page 678 of the Record that he has no respect for the report of this committee. As a member of the committee, I feel badly about that, and I have no doubt the other members of the committee sympathize with me in this. But all we can do is to go on and do our duty as we understand it. I will state, however, that since this statement was made by the Sentander of the committee of the committee of the committee sympathic with me in this. I will state, however, that since this statement was made by the Senator yesterday I have thought over and referred to the records of the Committee on Claims. I have had the honor—if it be an honor—and after the criticisms made upon the committee I have some doubt whether it be or not—I say I have had the honor of being a member of that committee since the spring of 1875. During the first two years of my service upon the committee the then distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] was chairman of the committee; during the next two years my friend from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN] was chairman of the committee; during the last two years the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has been chairman of the committee. During that period from five to six hundred reports have been made by that committee to the Senate, and so far as I can now remember the Senate has never disagreed with the committee upon a single report. It would seem that although the committee now remember the Senate has never disagreed with the committee upon a single report. It would seem that although the committee has not the respect of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, it has the confidence of this body.

The Senator from Kentucky referred to two cases which have been before that committee, and he animadverted upon the action of the committee in regard to those cases. The first was the case of his friend, as he denominated him, Warren Mitchell. That case was this: Warren Mitchell was a resident of Louisville, Kentucky. Prior to 1861 he was engaged in business in that city as a merchant; his firm traded extensively with merchants in the States that seceded. Some time early in 1861 he obtained permission from the Federal military authorities then in command of the Department of Kentucky to go into the Confederate States for the purpose of collecting debts then authorities then in command of the Department of Kentucky to go into the Confederate States for the purpose of collecting debts then owing to his firm. Under that permit he went into the Southern States, and about the first thing we hear of him after he got there was that he became pecuniarily interested in a contract at Clarksville, Tennessee, for the purpose of supplying the confederate government with meat. The Senator from Kentucky stated that his friend, Warren Mitchell, was a loval man. When this testimony appeared before the Committee on Claims that committee had some slight doubt in regard to his loyalty. He remained within the Confederate States from some time early in 1861 until the fall of Savannah, in 1864. It appeared from the testimony before the committee that he traveled all over the southwestern Confederate States: that ill that was reported from that committee, and I now hold it in my and. It appears from the printed bill reported November 26, 1877, low before me, that its language was this:

That the claim of Benjamin Holladay, now before Congress, for spoliations by lostile Indians, on his property, while carrying the United States mails, during the united States mails, during he existence of Indian hostilities on the line of said mail-route; for property taken and used by United States the United States and the same is hereby refrect to the Court of Claims for adjustment, upon the affidavits and orders now effore Congress, and such additional testimony as either party may present, to secrtain the route of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the same is hereby rescentian the amount of losses of property and expenses sustained by him as aforeald, and render judgment thereon.

Sec. 2. That the said court shall have the power, in its discretion, to cause the roduction for cross-examination of any witness whose affidavit is now before Congress.

That is what the Committee on Claims then proposed. They did that he traveled all over the southwestern Confederate States; that that he was a citizen of an adhering State—a citizen of Kentucky—and he traded with the enemy, which, under the laws of war as recognized by the whole world, he had no right to do.

The other case that the Senator from Kentucky complained of—Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me just one word there?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. The only reason why Mr. Mitchell came before Congress was because, while the money in the Treasury was his, the cotton that produced the money was his, and, as the Senator from Wisconsin has said, every confederate from Mr. Davis down could have recovered it under exactly similar circumstances, he had no status in court, when all the equities were in his favor. The committee, of which the Senator from Wisconsin is a distinguished member, would not allow him to get his own money, admitted to be his, under circumstances which tor from Wisconsin is a distinguished member, would not allow him to get his own money, admitted to be his, under circumstances which made it apparent to the mind of I think every man who was at all inclined to be liberal that he ought to have had it. The only objection was that he was a citizen of Kentucky and had become very poor. I will answer all this after a while; and no matter what the Senator from Wisconsin may say about any remarks I have made, in the course of his argument, I will not interrupt him any further but will reply when I hold the floor myself.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I disagree with the Senator from Kentucky that the money belonged to Mitchell. If the money belonged to Mitchell, the Court of Claims would have said so; if it belonged to Mitchell, the Supreme Court of the United States would have said so. Warren Mitchell, as I have stated and as the Senator has stated, was Mitchell, the Supreme Court of the United States would have said so. Warren Mitchell, as I have stated and as the Senator has stated, was a resident of Kentucky. He traded with the enemy.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, one other word I wish to say.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. BECK. He went there to collect debts by permission from the Federal authorities at Louisville. He was there inside the lines; he was without money; he had to work for a living or starve, and he did work for a living in the only things that could then be done—matters connected with supplying pork to the confederate army. It was a question of starvation or labor with him, and he chose to labor rather than to starve.

Mr. CAMERON of Wisconsin. It did not appear before the com-

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It did not appear before the committee whether Warren Mitchell was in danger of starving while within the confederacy or not. I presume, however, that the Senator from Kentucky has some knowledge in regard to it that the committee was not furnished with; but the fact is that he became peenniarily interested in a contract to supply the confederate army with meat; that he remained in the confederacy four years or thereabout—I think a little over four years—and during all that time was allowed by the confederate government to trade with the citizens of the confederacy.

The Senator from Kentucky also criticised the committee for the The Senator from Kentucky also criticised the committee for the action taken by the committee in regard to the Camp Nelson claim. That claim was simply this: the military authorities of the United States took possession of certain lands and other property in Kentucky for the purpose of making a military camp. Actual war existed in Kentucky at that time. Under the laws of war, as recognized not only by this country but by all the countries of the civilized world, the Federal Government had a legal right to take possession of any property in Kentucky that was deemed necessary by the military authorities to successfully carry on the military operations of the Government, and the Government was under no legal obligation to pay a cent for it—not under any more legal obligation to pay for the rent of the Camp Nelson property than it would be for the damage done by the Army to a field of wheat in marching from one point to another. to another.

But perhaps it would have been sufficient for me to say that the Senate sustained the Committee on Claims in its report upon each of

But perhaps it would have been sufficient for me to say that the Senate sustained the Committee on Claims in its report upon each of these cases, so that when the Senator from Kentucky criticises the Committee on Claims for the action the committee took in regard to these claims, he simply criticises the Senate, because the Senate sustained the committee in its report.

In examining this case, Mr. President, I do not care to go back of the Forty-fifth Congress for the purpose of tracing the history of this claim. The petition of Mr. Holladay was introduced in the Forty-fifth Congress, and by order of the Senate was referred to the Committee on Claims. That committee considered the petition, as it was its duty to do. The affidavits which are printed as a part of the testimony were then before the committee. No other evidence was before the committee at that time. These affidavits were carefully examined by the committee, and after such examination the committee came to the conclusion that the best thing to do under all the circumstances of the case was to report a bill to the Senate referring the claim to the Court of Claims for adjudication. When that bill was considered in the Senate, the Senate did not concur with the committee so far as the recommendation of the committee in reference to referring it to the Court of Claims was concerned, but the claim was recommitted to the committee—not recommitted without instructions, but with instructions. What were the instructions? The resolution under which the claim was recommitted has been referred to once or twice, but I beg the indulgence of the Senate while I refer to it again. This is the resolution under which the bill and the claim were recommitted to the committee: and the claim were recommitted to the committee:

Resolved. That the bill (S. No. 346) referring the claim of Benjamin Holladay to the Court of Claims be recommitted to the Committee on Claims, with instructions to report to the Senate-what amount, if any, is equitably due the claimant on account of his claim; and the said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers and to take testimony.

This was not a duty that the committee sought, but it was imposed upon the committee by the Senate, and the committee, as it was its duty to do, proceeded to examine the case. The claim made by the claimant consisted of four distinct and separate items. The first to claimant consisted of four distinct and separate items. The first to which I will call attention is for damages consequent upon the change of the mail-route from what was called the Sweetwater route to the southern or Cherokee Trail route, made in 1862. It has been stated that the claimant ought not to be paid anything for the damages sustained by him in consequence of this change of route because it was not made pursuant to the order of any military authorities or of any authority of the United States. When Mr. Holladay became the proprietor of the Overland Mail he found the mail running through upon this northern route. When the route was established profound peace existed on the plains, the Indians were quiet, had been quiet and peaceable for a long time; but in the latter part of 1861 or in 1862 they became hostile.

Now, I will inquire first what were the reasons for the change of

Now, I will inquire first what were the reasons for the change of route made in 1862? The reasons will appear from a reference to the testimony given before the committee upon that subject. General James Craig, now a distinguished citizen of the State of Missouri, was called by the Committee on Claims before it as a witness under James Craig, now a distinguished citizen of the State of Missouri, was called by the Committee on Claims before it as a witness under the authority given by the resolution recommitting the claim to that committee. He testified in regard to this change of route. His testimony will be found on pages 54 and 55 of the printed volume:

Question. When did you go on that line?

Answer. In the spring of 1862; probably April.

Q. Go on and state what condition of affairs you found on the line; how many troops you had; what you did, and what was done by the Indians. Give the narrative in your own way.

A. Before I arrived on the line the Indians had broken up a section of the mailroute between Green River and Fort Laramie, and before arriving at Laramie I commenced to give orders for the protection of the stations—that portion of the line where the Indians had worked—and to restore the stations and the service on the route. After getting to Fort Laramie, where I made my headquarters for the time, I employed the troops generally in protecting the line between Fort Laramie and the South Pass. The Indians generally seemed to be aware of the United States being engaged in a civil war, and with the advice of and incited by bad white men among them they were disposed to make war upon the whites, that is, the Cheyennes, Arapahoes, Shoshones or Snake Indians, and all of the bands of the Sioux tribe, with perhaps the exception of the band of Little Thunder. I repeatedly asked for re-enforcements, and at one time Colonel C. C. Washurne was ordered to report to me, but on account of the necessities for troops South the order was countermanded, and I was left with six companies of Ohio troops, commanded by Colonel Collins, and two small companies of the Fourth United States Cavalry, in command of Colonel Alexander, and one company soon afterward sent to me from Kansas. I afterward procured authority from the War Department and asked for troops to Utah, and about one hundred men were sent to me, commanded by Captain Locke Smith. I fo

Q. With your knowledge of the country, was it possible or not for the company to have carried mails on that Sweetwater route with the number of troops you had !

A. It would only be possible with the consent of the Indians.

Mr. Holladay himself testified in regard to the necessity for the removal of the route made in 1862. His testimony may be found on pages 61 and 62 of this printed volume. Mr. Holladay says in his testimony:

In an interview with the Postmaster-General, before leaving-that is before leaving Washington-

that is before leaving Washington—
I explained, from my thorough knowledge of the country northwest of Fort Laranie, along the stage-road from Horseshoe Creek up the Sweetwater, through South Pass, to Green River and Ham's Fork, a mail never could be carried with any certainty, for the reason it was through a mountainous country, with fine grass and water, and full of game, a great hunting-region for several tribes of Indians, all refusing to sell or treat with the Government; but little open country, Indians could drop on a station or coach without a moment's warning. After several interviews, I explained my knowledge of the country south of this, having passed through it in August, 1850. There was no road except an Indian lodge-pole trail for two hundred and fifty miles, no grass, and bad water; but it was an open country, and I believed there would be less Indian troubles.

Mr. Eaton, who I believe is a very distinguished citizen of the State of Kansas, also testified in regard to the necessity for this removal. His testimony will be found on page 10. He states, in substance, that it was impossible for the Overland Mail Company to carry the mail on that route on account of the Indian hostilities, that the mail company in making the change of route abandoned five hundred miles of road and twenty-six stations road and twenty-six stations.

It is true that this change was not made by virtue of any military order; but it became necessary in consequence of actual war existing in that country. Some Senators treat this matter as though it were a matter of indifference to the Government whether the mail was carried or not. The Government at that time did not so regard it. It appears from the testimony of the witnesses who appeared be-fore the committee that the mail could not be carried on the northern or Sweetwater route on account of Indian hostilities. In the opinion of the Government, and in the opinion of the proprietor and of those who were engaged with him in running the overland mail, it became absolutely necessary to remove it; it became necessary in consequence of the existence of actual war in that country. The committee were of the opinion that the existence of war was quite as good a reason for the removal of the route as would have been an order by the military authorities in command in that region. If, however, the Senate disagree with the committee in regard to this, then it will not be necessary to inquire what damages, if any, Mr. Holladay sustained in consequence of this removal. If, however, the Senate concurs with the committee in the opinion that under the Senate concurs with the committee in the opinion that under the state of facts then existing it was a necessity that the route should be removed, the question arises whether or not the proprietor, Mr. Holladay, ought to sustain all the loss and damage consequent upon that removal or whether it ought to be sustained by the Government.

that removal or whether it ought to be sustained by the Government. The committee were of the opinion that the Government ought to sustain that loss and not the proprietor of the overland mail-route.

Without reading the testimony of the witnesses on this point, I state generally that the proprietor of the Overland mail route was compelled in consequence of this removal to abandon about five hundred miles of his road, to abandon or remove twenty-six or thirty stations, and to remove his stations and all his property upon the line

Now, how much were these stations worth? One witness who was called upon the part of the Government, Mr. Murdock, stated that in his opinion they were worth $600 or $800 each. Five or six other witnesses stated that in their opinion they were worth from $2,000 witnesses stated that in their opinion they were worth from $2,000 to $3,000 each. That is the testimony in regard to the value of the stations. The committee did as any court, as any jury would have done under similar circumstances; they were compelled to report in accordance with the preponderance of evidence. Five or six witnesses, who were not impeached, who appeared to be respectable, testified that in their opinion the stations were worth $2,000 or $3,000 each, and one witness testified that in his opinion they were worth from $600 to $800 apiece. The committee were compelled to be governed by the opinion of the five or six witnesses, who appeared to have as much information, in fact, I may say that they appeared to have more information in regard to the value of these stations, the cost of erecting them, and so forth, than did the witness who testified that in his opinion they were worth only $600 or $800. The committee found that these stations were worth $2,000 apiece. The testimony would, in my opinion, have justified the committee in finding that they were worth at least $2,500 apiece; but the committee took the smaller sum, and found that they were worth only $2,000 apiece.

Twenty-six stations at $2,000 apiece would be $52,000.

A number of witnesses were examined in regard to the other losses

A number of witnesses were examined in regard to the other losses consequent upon this removal. Some of them put them as high as $35,000, some put them as low as $20,000, and some put them at $25,000. The committee adopted the medium sum and found that the other damages consequent upon the removal were $25,000. The committee, as I have stated, were of the opinion that it was absolutely necessary that the removal should have taken place; otherwise the mail could not have been carried. The committee were also of the opinion that this necessity having arisen in consequence of actual war existing in that territory the proprietor of the Overland Stage Company ought not to be compelled to bear the loss, but that I have referred to the testimony of various witnesses in regard to the amount of the loss. Fifty-two thousand dollars and $25,000 make $77,000, which is the amount that the committee found was the direct loss resulting from this removal.

The next ground for which Mr. Holladay claimed damages was the removal made in 1864. Some Senators have confounded the two removals. The removal made in 1864 was made pursuant to the order removals. The removal made in 1864 was made pursuant to the order of Colonel Chivington. That order has been referred to several times and I will not detain the Senate by reading it. It was, however, a positive order, directing Mr. Holladay to remove his line. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] the other day said in substance that the order was not peremptory, that Mr. Holladay might have removed or he might have taken his chances of running it on the northern route, where it then was. He seemed to lose sight of the fact that it was of the utmost consequence to the Government that the mail should be carried through with regularity and with celerity. After Colonel Chivington had given this positive order, I am of the opinion that the proprietor of the Overland Stage Company was convinced that if he did not comply with it the military authorities would have removed it themselves.

Now, what damage resulted to Mr. Holladay from this removal

Now, what damage resulted to Mr. Holladay from this removal under the order of Colonel Chivington? Upon that point I desire to refer to the testimony of George K. Otis. George K. Otis was the general superintendent of the line at that time. He now occupies, or did occupy recently, and I think he still occupies it, a very important position in connection with the postal service in the city of New York. York. He is a man of intelligence, and apparently a man of high integrity. The evidence I will refer to is on page 58 of the printed volume of testimony.

Q. As the whole matter That is, the whole of this removal-

Q. As the whole matter was under your charge, what would be your estimate or approximation of the cost of removing the buildings, forage, corrals, &c., from the Platte route to the Cut-off route?

A. I gave full instructions to the division agents in regard to the removal, and made a computation at the time and estimated the cost, knowing the number of teams required, and the distance to make, and a fair estimate of the destruction and loss of grain and hay in the removal; and, as you will see, my estimate is already appended to the affidavits of Reynolds and Thomas, amounting to $50,000, and I am well satisfied that it cost us fully that or more.

and I am well satisfied that it cost us fally that or more.

Mr. Holladay, on page 62, states that $50,000 would not pay him for the loss that he sustained directly in consequence of the Chivington removal. The committee was of the opinion that this removal having been made under a positive order issued by the military authorities of the Government, it ought to be at the expense of making the removal and not the proprietor of the Overland Stage Company. The committee found upon the testimony that the direct cost and loss consequent upon that removal was $50,000. Having first found that the Government, in the opinion of the committee, ought to pay this sum, they recommended that Mr. Holladay be paid this sum, $50,000 to compensate him for the loss and damage occasioned by that removal.

The next ground upon which Mr. Holladay claimed damages was for property taken by the military authorities. Mr. Otis testifies in regard to the property taken. He, as I have stated, was the general superintendent and had the general management and control of the superintendent and had the general management and control of the whole line. He testifies in regard to the property taken by the military authorities on page 58.

Mr. CONKLING. While the honorable Senator is referring to some fact there, I wish to remind him that it has been intimated once or twice in this debate that Mr. Holladay was the gainer by this change of route, that it was in some way a better and shorter route; that he are the reset there of his own early and for his corn advertigation.

or route, that it was in some way a better and shorter route; that he rather went there of his own accord and for his own advantage.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That was the removal made in 1862.

It, I believe, was perhaps fifty or seventy-five miles shorter. The Senator from Colorado will know.

Mr. TELLER. No; it was longer.

Mr. CONKLING. It was longer; and that was what I wanted the Senator from Wisconsin to correct. I wish to call his attention to a map which, if I send it around to him and he will look at, will undeceive him and any other Senator who has fallen into such an error as that. When this change of route took place, instead of going where he had been ordered to go along here, [indicating,] north of Denver and then running up that notch and down with whatever mail went to Denver, he was compelled to carry the entire mail around here [indicating] to Denver on that angle, and then from Denver back there and all the way around on this new route, and in place of its being a shorter route, it was a longer route and a much more expen-

Mr. PLUMB.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) Do the Senator from New York and the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kansas

Senator from Kansas?

Mr. PLUMB. I did not say that the Cut-off route, of which the Senator from Wisconsin is now speaking, was shorter than the other. When I spoke of the saving of distance to Mr. Holladay, by the change of route, I referred to the first change from Laramie to the South Pass route, and not to the route which is the subject of the map and the remarks of the Senator from New York.

Mr. CONKLING. Owing to the misfortune of being demanded by other people when the Senator from Kansas was speaking yesterday, I did not hear any observation whatever of his touching these routes and therefore I did not refer, as I could not have referred, to anything that he said; but I did hear other Senators, and markedly one, assert with great vigor not only that the order under which Holladay was driven from one place to the other was a most mild and persuasive suggestion as to its legal effect, leaving him at liberty to go or not suggestion as to its legal effect, leaving him at liberty to go or not very much as he pleased, but that in short he rather chose and picked out this route to which he changed and found it a very advantageous thing, shorter and generally preferable, and that now he came here and asked something or other for that, whereas the map shows, and the truth is, that, being coerced to go from one place to the other, he was driven all the way around an elbow, in addition to other things, to Denver to trundle the whole of his mail around there and bring it to Denver to trundle the whole of his mail around there and bring it back. Instead of its being a shorter route, it was a longer route, one of more hardship, more expense, and more disadvantage to him.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I withdraw whatever might be construed as inferentially reflecting on the Senator from New York as having referred to my remarks. I will now apply my remarks to the Senator from Colorado. He noticed yesterday that I had made an error, that I was referring to the change of route to the Cache la Poudre, whereas I was referring to the other change entirely. I said nothing whatever about the change from what was called the Cut-off route; I was referring simply to the change that was made in 1862. I said nothing about the change under the order of Colonel Chivington, whatever the effect of that order might have been.

I said nothing about the change under the order of Colonel Chivington, whatever the effect of that order might have been.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator from Colorado has the map before him and is familiar with that country, and can state whether the route consequent on the change of 1862 was shorter than the one occupied prior to the change, and whether the route occupied after the Chivington order was shorter or longer than the route ran by Holladay prior to that order.

Mr. TELLER. The early emigrants over this country had two roads; one was a trifle shorter than the other, but destitute of grass and destitute of timber, and much more dangerous to travel. The stage company took the northern route when they first laid their line after an examination of both lines, because it was the preferable route. It went through a grass country, with better water and better timber, and in every way it was a region better calculated to run a stage line over; and so, while Mr. Holladay may have in a small degree shortened the length of his line, yet he largely increased the expense of the operation of it. I speak now of the change made in 1862. The change under the Chivington order not only took him out of a better region of grass and feed and a better country to run through but length. of grass and feed, and a better country took him out of a better region of grass and feed, and a better country to run through, but lengthened his line and compelled him, as stated, to carry all his mail and express matter by the way of Denver and then convey it back again. It took him around two sides of or very nearly an equal triangle, where he had been before, across one side, and thus it lengthened the line. Independent of the question of putting on new stations and all that, it did, as did the removal of 1862, add much to the expense of running the line thereafter.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, it has been said during this debate that Mr. Holladay's name does not appear in the contract under which this route was run. That is true. Mr. Holladay was not the original contractor with the Government, and I understand that the Post-Office Department retains the name of the origistand that the Post-Office Department retains the name of the original contractor; that if you were to go there to-day and inquire whether Mr. A's name appeared as a contractor with the Post-Office Department, you knowing that he had actually carried the mail for years, you might find that his name did not appear at all; you might find that the contract was taken originally by Mr. B, and that Mr. A was running it as a sub-contractor. Just so with Mr. Holladay. He was not the original contractor; he was a sub-contractor; but the fact that Ben. Holladay carried the overland mail from 1861 to 1866 is just as much a matter of public history as it is that Abraham Lincoln was President of the United States from 1861 until his death in 1865.

The Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. McPherson,] some days ago, in the remarks that he submitted against this bill, insisted pretty stoutly that it was not at all necessary for Mr. Holladay to have one hundred and ten coaches, to have two thousand horses and mules, or to have about five hundred men in order to carry this overland mail. The Senator suggested that he might have carried it on horseback, or in a wheelbarrow, or in some other way, and not in these great and expensive coaches. That argument was answered when the original contract under which the mail was carried by Mr. Holladay was introexpensive coaches. That argument was answered when the original contract under which the mail was carried by Mr. Holladay was introduced in evidence here. It appears by that contract that the contractors agreed to carry it in four-horse coaches or in four-horse spring-wagons. The object of the Government, doubtless, was not only that the mail should be carried, but that facilities should be furnished to the people residing in those remote regions to communicate with the Mississippi and Atlantic States. It does not at all appear that Mr. Holladay employed an excess of men, an excess of horses, or an excess of coaches. It is not at all likely that he would employ more men, more horses, more coaches than were absolutely necessary. They all caused him expense which he as a prudent business man would have liked very much to avoid.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. I notice in the reports of the debate on this bill papers purporting to be copies of the contracts, and if I have read these contracts aright they certainly did not require of Mr. Holladay the running of four-horse coaches. They directed him to carry the mail in any way he pleased; if carried in coaches, it should be under the seat of the driver and protected. My attention was not called especially to the manuscript copy of the contract; but I suppose the Senator refers to the one brought in here by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That is the one I refer to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That is the one I refer to.
Mr. McPHERSON. Now, if the Senator will yield to me a moment longer, I still insist that the memorial presented by Mr. Holladay states that during a portion of the time he was transporting this mail he carried fifty tons of mail matter during a period of three months. Now, I do not know that the Government are really committed under any particular law that exists for the purpose of carrying the mail to make an official contract for carrying passengers, nor did I suppose that contract looked to that. If, then, he only had to transport fifty tons of mail matter in the period of three months, I submit that he would not require fifteen hundred or two thousand horses and one hundred and ten coaches to perform that service. I only take the petition of Mr. Holladay himself, in which he states that he transported fifty tons of mail matter during the period of three months.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, the contract required that he should have passenger coaches. If he had refused to carry passengers, if, under his contract he could have refused to carry passengers. sengers, perhaps he might have got along with a fewer number of horses and a fewer number of men and a fewer number of coaches; but, as I have already stated, one object of the Government, one great object of the Government was to promote trade and commerce between the East and the West. Those great mining regions in the Rocky Mountains were then just being developed, and it was of the highest importance that communication, easy and rapid, should be kept up not only between the Pacific coast and the far East, but between these parts of the Pacific coast and the far East, but between these parts of the Pacific coast and the far East, but between these parts of the Pacific coast and the far East, but between the pacific coast and the tween these new mining regions and the East.

The next ground upon which Mr. Holladay claims to be compensated is for spoliations upon his property by hostile Indians. It is claimed by some Senators that under no circumstances ought the Government to make compensation to any one for spoliations upon his property by hostile Indians. Perhaps it is sufficient in reply to that to say that the Government repeatedly has made compensation to those who suffered loss of property by the spoliations of hostile Indians. But the committee did not put this case entirely upon that dians. But the committee did not put this case entirely upon that ground. The committee regarded it as an exceptional case and to be treated in an exceptional manner. Mr. Holladay came into the ownership of this great overland mail route early in 1861. Soon afterward the Indians began to attack and destroy his property, to kill his employes, to break up his line. The committee were of the opinion that some force ought to be given to the interview had by Mr. Holladay and Mr. Otis, his general agent, with Mr. Lincoln, the President of the United States. The committee did not find and do not claim that Mr. Lincoln pretended to enter into any contract with Mr. Holladay agreeing that he should be compensated for any damages in consequence of Indian spoliations. Mr. Lincoln knew perfectly well that he had no right to enter into any such contract. What he did say was that it was of the utmost importance that the line should be consequence of Indian spoliations. Mr. Lincoln knew perfectly well that he had no right to enter into any such contract. What he did say was that it was of the utmost importance that the line should be maintained. When Mr. Holladay told him that he could not maintain it unless he had military protection from the Government, Mr. Lincoln assured him that he would give him all the military protection possible, and that in his opinion—that is all there was of it—if he suffered damages in consequence of Indian spoliations, Congress in the plenitude of its power would compensate him for those losses. That is all there was of it.

What is the evidence that such promises, if I may call them promises, were ever made by Mr. Lincoln to Mr. Holladay? Mr. Holladay swears that after his line was broken up in 1862 he visited Washington and had an interview with Mr. Lincoln, and he details the conversation that he had with the President at that time, in which the versation that he had with the President at that time, in which the President assured him that he would give him all the protection possible, and if he sustained loss, in his opinion Congress would compensate him for that loss. Mr. Holladay was accompanied at that time by Mr. George K. Otis, the general superintendent of the line. Mr. Otis, however, did not go into the room where this interview was alleged to have taken place between Mr. Holladay and the President; but Mr. Otis swears that Mr. Holladay immediately on coming out of the room stated to him the conversation that he had with the President. Subsequently in 1864 after the line had again been broken dent. Subsequently, in 1864, after the line had again been broken up and great damages committed upon the property of Mr. Holladay, Mr. Holladay himself at that time being in San Francisco, Mr. Otis, Mr. Holladay himself at that time being in San Francisco, Mr. Otis, the general superintendent of the line, came to Washington and had an interview with President Lincoln, in which President Lincoln again states that it is of the utmost importance that the line should be maintained; that he will give all the protection he can, and that if the property of Mr. Holladay is destroyed by Indian spoliations Congress, in the exercise of its powers, will compensate him for that I am of the opinion that the conversation with Mr. Lincoln is very satisfactorily proven, first, by the testimony of Mr. Holladay, then by the testimony of Mr. Otis relating to the conversation between the President and Mr. Holladay, which was detailed to Mr. Otis by Mr. Holladay immediately on coming out of the President's office, and again by the testimony of Mr. Otis in regard to an interview had with the President in 1864, in which he stated substantially the same thing.

Mr. Holladay states in his testimony—I will not stop to read it—that he said to the President, "I cannot run this line unless I have protection; I will abandon it." He undoubtedly had a legal right to abandon it. War had broken out and the superior force of the Inmediant to prevent him from running it, unless he had dians was sufficient to prevent him from running it, unless he had military protection from the Government. I say he had a legal right to abandon it. The President did not want it abandoned; the country did not want it abandoned. As was stated by the Senator from Colorado yesterday, the country at that time would have been willing to pay perhaps ten times the compensation that Mr. Holladay received for the service rather than that the line should have been abandoned. They would not have submitted to its being abandoned at all, no matter what the cost might be.

The committee, as I have stated, are of the opinion that this is an exceptional case. It is not an ordinary claim for Indian spoliations. Mr. Holladay was engaged in a great enterprise in which the Government was largely interested, and not only the Government but thousands and tens of thousands of the inhabitants of this country were largely interested in it. He, the committee find, was assured that he would have protection, and he had the opinion of the President that if the protection were not sufficient to preserve his property from hostile Indians he would be compensated by Congress. Mr. Holladay states in his testimony that had he not received these assurances from the President he would have abandoned his contract, he would have ceased to attempt to run the overland mail. Mr. Otis was asked whether in his opinion Mr. Holladay would have restocked the line were it not that he had these assurances from the President. He answered that, regarding Mr. Holladay as a shrewd business man, he was of the opinion that he would not have restocked the line that he was of the opinion that he would not have restocked the line, that he would have abandoned it, and not have attempted to run it. Under the peculiar circumstances of the case the committee were of the opinion that Mr. Holladay ought to be paid for the losses that he sustained in consequence of these Indian depredations. If the Senate agree with the committee upon this point, then the next step is to inquire what damage Mr. Holladay did sustain in consequence of these Indian depredations. As that opens a wide field, I shall not have time to do more than merely giance at it.

It appears from the testimony how many stations were destroyed by the Indians. As to the value of these stations, if the testimony shows how many stations were destroyed and the evidence shows satisfactorily what the value of these stations was, it requires merely an arithmetical calculation to ascertain how much damage Mr. Hol-an arithmetical calculation to ascertain how much damage Mr. Holladay sustained in consequence of the destruction of the stations. Quite a number of witnesses have testified in regard to the value of the stations. How many stations were there? It appears from the testimony of Mr. Carlyle, on page 36, who was employed by Mr. Holladay in a responsible capacity, that the stations on the road were from ten to twelve miles apart along the entire route. All the way, then, from the Missouri River to Salt Lake City, some fifteen hundred miles, I believe, these stations were erected at a distance of from ten to twelve miles apart. Then there would be from one hundred and twenty to one hundred and fifty stations. Mr. Eaton testifies, on page 11—perhaps I ought not to say testifies, because that may grate upon the ear of some Senators, but it appears in the affidavit of Mr. Eaton, on page 11, that in his opinion the stations were worth $2,000 apiece.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator happen to remember how far an arithmetical calculation to ascertain how much damage Mr. Hol-

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator happen to remember how far the timber that built them was hauled, and how much it cost?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will refer to that directly. Mr. Carlyle, on page 36, describes the stations, as follows:

Carlyle, on page 36, describes the stations, as follows:

The stations were either hewn cedar or they were frame, except one or two which were of adobe material.

Q. How much did they cost, generally speaking?

A. It would be difficult to say what they cost, but I would say they were worth at least $2,000 each.

Q. Why were they worth that?

A. On account of the high price of lumber; lumber had to be freighted from Denver City down there; the logs had to be hewn there one hundred miles away; they had to go on the bluffs and hew them, and the lumber had to be hauled from Denver City.

Q. How far was that?

A. Well, from Fort Kearney to Denver City was four hundred miles. Ganarally every other station, had a fear of the station had a fear of the station had a fear of the station.

ver City.

Q. How far was that?

A. Well, from Fort Kearney to Denver City was four hundred miles. Generally every other station had a frame house, called a home station; there was a dwelling as well as a stable, and a corral around the hay and barn, which made them expensive. At Cottonwood we also had a warehouse; about every one hundred miles we had a warehouse capable of holding four or five thousand bushels of grain; this was convenient to scatter along the road, the grain, when it was needed. Cottonwood station is half-way between Kearney and Julesburgh. We had a warehouse there capable of holding 5,000 bushels of grain. At Julesburgh we had a large warehouse, a blacksmith-shop, repair shop, telegraph office, boarding-house, and a very large corral around them.

Mr. Spotswood, who has already been referred to during this dis-cussion, testifies regarding the value of the stations on pages 43 and 44. He was a division superintendent. He was asked:

Was there any station destroyed on your division, and how was the station constructed, and what was their order?

And his answer was:

There was one station burned on my division and that was Little Laramie; that was built of hewn logs; it was daubed and pointed out. This was a swing station, and there was a stable twenty-five feet front and forty-five feet deep. It would hold twenty-five head of horses, with a well in it, and one room fitted up eight by ten, and a cooking-stove, with furniture, &c. The station and corral there destroyed was worth $3,500. I think that is a fair valuation.

stroyed was worth $3,500. I think that is a fair valuation.

Mr. Hooker testifies, on page 49, in regard to the value of the stations. Mr. Holladay himself testifies on page 63, Mr. Otis on page 83, and General Hughes on pages 87 and 88. The value of the stations is placed by all these witnesses somewhere from $2,000 to $4,000, except the Julesburgh station, to which I shall refer directly. Mr. Murdock testifies in regard to the value of the stations. His testimony is on page 68. He says that the stations that were not eating-houses would probably be worth from $300 to $500. I think he does not testify in regard to the value of stations which were eating-houses.

The committee have been criticised by some Senators because they did not adopt the estimate of Mr. Murdock, and because they did adopt substantially the testimony in regard to the value of the stations given by eight or ten other witnesses. If those Senators were on a jury, and this testimony had been submitted to them, I am of the opinion that there is not one among them who would find the value of the stations in accordance with the testimony of Murdock; they must find the value of the stations in accordance with the testimony with the testimony of Murdock; value of the stations in accordance with the testimony of Murdock; they must find the value of the stations in accordance with the testimony of the other witnesses. I submit, then, that the committee did not err in finding the value of the stations.

Considerable has been said in regard to the value of horses and mules. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. Morrill] seems to be dissatisfied because the committee did not inquire particularly what the black horse was worth, and what the gray horse was worth, and what the red horse was worth. We were not able to do that. All that the committee deemed it essential that they should do was to essential what they should do was to ascertain generally what was the value of such horses as were used ascertain generally what was the value of such horses as were used by the Overland Stage Company in that country, at that time. They did not think it was their duty to go into it any further than that. The following witnesses testified in regard to the value of horses and mules: Mr. Street, on page 53; General Mitchell, on page 60; Mr. Otis, on page 83; Mr. Hughes, on page 87; Mr. Hooker, on page 48; Mr. Murdock, on page 69. Other witnesses, perhaps, testified also in regard to the value of horses, but nearly all the witnesses placed the value of the horses in general terms at from $200 to $250.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for moment?

a moment?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I noticed in reading the debate upon this subject a few days ago that the name of a witness resident in Iowa was alluded to especially.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. Hooker.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Colonel Hooker. I am glad of the opportunity of saying in regard to him that there is no man in the United States within my knowledge better calculated than he to speak intelligently upon this question. He was for many years in the State where I live, before we had railroads, very extensively engaged as a member of the Western Stage Company, and I do not think there is a man in the United States better calculated than he is to speak intelligently upon this subject. I take pleasure in saying further that there is not a man of my acquaintance whose character ought to give more weight to his of my acquaintance whose character ought to give more weight to his testimony than Colonel Hooker's character gives to his.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will refer the Senator from Iowa to the testimony of Colonel Hooker, on page 48:

Q. Do you know anything about the character of the steck of the overland road after Mr. Holladay commenced running it?
A. Very well; I know all about it.
Q. What was the character of the stock used?
A. Mostly mules, west of Fort Kearney.
Q. In your judgment, what was a fair price for such animals as were used on that road?
A. The average cost of those mules would be about two hundred dollars.
Q. How about the horses?
A. The horses cost about the same; that would be the average cost of them.

I will refer also to the testimony of Colonel Charles G. Otis in regard to the value of horses and mules, found on page 83:

Q. Please state the character of stock used.

A. The stock on the route was the finest stock I ever saw on a stage line. They drove four horses on the eastern end of the line to a coach, and on the western end they drove mules—that is, in the mountains—especially on the eastern end there were five horses. The stage would start each day with four horses. They started every morning and came through in time.

Q. What were such horses worth in that country?

A. I should think that the stock they had then would cost at least $200 apiece.

All the witnesses, except Mr. Murdock and the witness whose testimony was introduced in the shape of a letter here yesterday by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. Plumb,] placed the value of the horses as high as $200, some higher. I am of the opinion, then, that the committee did not err in finding that the value of the horses and mules was $200.

Next, in regard to the value of hay, grain, and fuel. Several Senators have expressed surprise that the committee should find the value of hay, grain, and fuel as high as they did find it in their report. Any Senator who will take the trouble to read the testimony I think will come to the conclusion that the committee did in regard to the value of hay, grain, and fuel. Mr. Carlyle was examined in regard to the value of hay and grain. His testimony upon that point is found on page 36. is found on page 36:

Q. Now, you may go on and state about the cost of grain and hay—the average cost of the grain and hay that was used on the route.

A. I have frequently measured the hay for the line, and all the grain that was delivered was delivered by me, or I saw to the delivery. We delivered two hundred and fifty sacks, which averaged two bushels and a peck to the sack. We delivered that to each station.

Then on page 37:

Q. What was the average price at the time this grain was destroyed to replace

A. It could not have been replaced at all, because money would not do it; but I estimate at twenty cents a pound for corn, because I could get that price. The hay we were in the habit of putting up, one hundred tons at each station, and that year, on account of Indian troubles, we did not get more than about fifty tons at each station. I measured the hay, and I think it would average about fifty tons at each station.

station. I measured the hay, and I think it would average about nity tons at each station.
Q. Where did you get your hay?
A. We had to get it wherever we could, and if it was not in the neighborhood we had to haul it with teams.
Q. How far did you have to haul it?
A. Sometimes seventy-five to one hundred miles.
Q. What was hay worth?
A. Upon the average, at least $50 a ton. It cost that much a ton during the Indian trouble.

The testimony of Mr. Spotswood in regard to the value of hay, grain, and fuel is on page 43:

Q. What was the price of grain at that time?

A. I know that the usual price was twenty cents a pound at Benver, and I have paid as high as twenty-five cents a pound for the stage line on my division at Big Thompson.

Q. How far was that from Denver?

A. It was fifty-two miles west from Denver.

Q. How about the prices of forage, &c.?

A. They were very high. I remember paying $80 a ton for hay at Fort Kearney.

We had a contract out on the hay ground, but the hay was burned, and there was but one man in the country that had hay. I protested against giving him his price, which was very high, but he would not take less and I had to take it; and I was informed that he got $20—the Government afterward paid him.

This was not hay purchased by Mr. Holladay, but purchased by General Mitchell for the United States. He testifies that he paid $80 a ton for it. I found in a newspaper the other day an article headed "High Priced Hay in Colorado," from the Virginia (Nevada) Enterprise, December 16, 1880, which is as follows:

Hay is now selling in San Juan County, Colorado, for $300 per ton. That is pretty well up, but is still far behind what was seen on the Comstock in early days. All old-timers will remember when hay sold at twenty-five cents per pound. Green grass was then retailed at ten cents per pound. In the summer of 1860 an old Frenchman made a snug little raise at packing grass up from Flowery District on an old horse. This grass grew in bunches about a rod apart, was about the thickness of a riding-whip, and from six to eight feet long. Having no scales, the old man used to count his hay out, giving from three to five stalks for a pound. When this kind of hay was criticised by customers, the good old man, who did his mowing with a hatchet, was wont to say: "Ah, sare, I agree wis you! Zee hay is a leetle coarse, but he is ver succulent. Besides, I give zee good weight. I nevaire cut one hay in two—nevaire, sare, nevaire!"

Senators need not be very much surprised that hay was worth $50 a ton on the overland route during the Indian troubles when in December last, in San Juan County, in Colorado, it was worth $300 a ton.

Various witnesses testify in regard to the price of fuel. Fuel had to be hauled two and three hundred miles; it was very difficult to get it at all; and I am of the opinion that the price of fuel, hay, and grain, as found by the committee, is fully justified by the testimony.

Several Senators have referred to the estimates or statements at-saveral senators have ferred to the estimates of statements are tached to the various affidavits and wondered who placed them there. Those statements were made and placed there by George K. Otis, the general superintendent of the line. He testifies to that on page 58. I will refer to it. After speaking of the cost of the Chivington removal, Mr. Otis goes on and states:

And I might say here that most of the estimates and prices of grain, forage, horses, and stations, that is the cost, were made by myself and appended to these affidavits. I did it fairly and honestly, and I do not think that in any one instance I have overestimated any item contained in any one of the estimates.

Those statements or estimates were put there by Mr. Otis. those statements of estimates were put there by Mr. Out. He states that he made them fairly and honestly, and that in his opinion he did not overestimate a single item. I think the testimony fully justified the committee in finding the amount of damages that they did find consequent upon the destruction by the Indians of states.

they did find consequent upon the destruction by the Indians of stations, fuel, grain, &c.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] a few days ago criticised the committee because the committee found that the damage sustained by Mr. Holladay in consequence of the destruction of Julesburgh was $35,000. He said that one witness, Mr. Murdock, testified that in his opinion all the buildings at Julesburgh could be erected for $10,000. It is true Mr. Murdock did so testify, but at least six other witnesses testified that those buildings would have cost from $35,000 to $45,000, and the committee were compelled to believe the five or six witnesses and not the one witness.

so,000 to $45,000, and the committee were compensed to believe the five or six witnesses and not the one witness.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Did Mr. Murdock give it as his opinion that the buildings could have been erected when they were erected for $10,000, or that it could be done now for that sum?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That they could have been erected when they were erected for that sum.

When this bill was up a year or two ago, and also yesterday, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Plumb] stated that the mails were carried at a certain time, and for a certain length of time, by the military. There is testimony upon that point. There is the testimony of Mr. Spotswood, on pages 44 and 47. Mr. Spotswood was asked:

Did the Government furnish you any assistance in carrying them?

That is, the mails.

- A. Sometimes, and sometimes not; sometimes five or six soldiers, and sometimes they would furnish the road with a guard, and sometimes I would furnish the guard myself.

 Q. Did the Government furnish you with any stock at any time?

 A. They did on two occasions.

 Q. How much?

 A. Twelve head of mules, when making a trip between Virginia Dale and North Platte, and six head of mules at another time between North Platte and Sulphur Springs.

- Q. Are you positive that the Government did not carry the mail for you, or did they furnish mules or soldiers, except as a loan?

 A. They never by themselves carried the mail. They merely assisted as a guard, and no mail was carried over my division unless I accompanied it, and no vehicle of the Government went except Holladay's coaches. On one occasion I borrowed an ambulance from an officer at Fort Halleck.

General Hughes, now of Denver, who was the general attorney for Mr. Holladay at that time, testifies, on page 88:

If the Government of the United States, or any of its military officers or soldiers, ever did carry any mails for Holladay, at any time, he [Hughes] never did hear of such a thing, and is confident, from his position as the attorney of the line, from March, 1863, to November, 1866, that no such thing ever did occur.

Mr. Holladay himself, on page 63, was examined on this point, and this was his testimony:

this was his testimony:

Q. During the year 1865, or at any other time, did the troops, with their own men, horses, and wagons transport the mails, as far as you know?

A. No, sir; at all times, and most particularly during the Indian war, I was daily advised by my agents on the road of all depredations, murders, &c., both by telegraph and letters. The military on various occasions rendered the line assistance in the way of loaning mules, corn, men to drive when mine had been killed, stations burned, and stock stolen. We always returned the forage and paid the soldiers for their work. At times, also, soldiers, with the consent of their officers, assisted in cutting and hauling hay, rebuilding stations, &c.; but they were paid for all work.

Here are three witnesses, Mr. Spotswood, Mr. Hughes, and Mr. Holladay, who testify that the Government did not carry the mails.

One Senator stated that these stations were used for the purposes of trade by Mr. Holladay and his employés. Various witnesses testified that they were not used for any such purpose; that they were used only for purposes legitimately and necessarily belonging to the running of the line.

Mr. President, I do not care to protract this discussion, so far as I am concerned, much lenger. The committee find that a removal took place in 1862; that that removal was rendered necessary by a state of war existing at that time; that the mail could not have been carried on the old route. This removal having been rendered necessary by a state of actual war, the committee were of the opinion that the Government and not Mr. Holladay ought to bear the loss of such removal. They find that the loss, according to the testimony, was $77,000. The committee also find that in 1864 another removal was ward by the direct and residue will be a state of the committee also find that in 1864 another removal was $77,000. The committee also find that in 1864 another removal was made by the direct and positive military order issued by Colonel Chivington, who then commanded in that department; that the damage and loss occasioned to the proprietor by this removal was $50,000. The committee also find that Mr. Holladay's property, food, hay, hardware, &c., was taken by the military authorities to the amount of $30,000, and that he ought to be compensated for that. They also find that he suffered very large losses in consequence of Indian spoliations. The committee have figured out the amount of those spoliations. tions. The committee have figured out the amount of those spolia-tions. This figuring appears as an appendix to the report, and they are of the opinion that the testimony fully justified them in finding that he did sustain damages to that amount in consequence of such spoliations, and under the peculiar circumstances of the case the committee are of the opinion that the Government ought to pay him for

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment. My attention has been called to a line of the testimony of Mr.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment. My attention has been called to a line of the testimony of Mr. Spotswood, and it is evidently an error, whether of the printer, or of the person who reported the testimony, or of the witness himself. Mr. Spotswood says that "no mail was carried over my division unless I accompanied it." I speak of that as a sample. When a mail was carried daily it would have been a physical impossibility for Mr. Spotswood to have accompanied every mail-coach that went over the line each way. I think, therefore, that the entire statement he has made was in some way garbled by the person who reported him.

As to the statement I made yesterday concerning the carrying of mails by Government forces, that is one of those things which, if there were any necessity for proof, could be proved by seven or eight hundred men whom I know. Mr. Holladay or Mr. Spotswood might be absent and not know what was going on in the portion of the line from which stock had been removed for prudential reasons. The officer in charge of the line was under instructions to furnish the facilities for carrying the mail, and to see, if possible, that the mail went through at all hazards. The mail was carried in Mr. Holladay's coaches usually, but from points where he had no stock, for the reasons I have named, to points beyond where he had stock. At times there was a distance of two or three hundred miles, and I think sometimes even farther, where the mail was carried by Government teams, Government mules, and Government horses, driven, in many cases, and I suppose in all suppose in all suppose in all suppose in all suppose in successive decomposed the successive properties.

there was a distance of two or three hundred miles, and I think sometimes even farther, where the mail was carried by Government teams, Government mules, and Government horses, driven, in many cases, and I suppose in all such cases, by Government soldiers.

I am informed by the Post-Office Department also that Mr. Holladay never was fined; that is to say, he got all his pay no matter whether the mail was carried or not. During a large portion of the time of which I speak the mail was not carried every day, because it could not be done. I know Mr. Spotswood, I knew him at that time, I know where he lives, and there were many times when Mr. Spotswood was not on any considerable portion of the line lying between the station where he lived and the North Platte, a distance of a couple of hundred miles, perhaps; it was not safe for him to be there, and perhaps it was not necessary that he should be there. Mr. Holladay, as I said, got his pay, however, whether the mail went once a week, once a day, or not at all.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If he got his pay, the Post-Office Department must have been of opinion that he had performed the service according to the terms of the contract.

Mr. CONKLING. Or else they must have done a downright dishonest thing; there is no alternative.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not going to impute motives to the Post-Office Department; I have no occasion to do so. No one I suppose in favor of this bill and familiar with the facts will deny that a large portion of the time the mail was not carried at all. If Senators want a witness on that point I would call the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Teller,] who certainly is in favor of this bill. My own construction of the action of the Post-Office Department is, and I think it will some time be shown more satisfactorily than it is now, that all the Departments of the Government were disposed to treat Holladay with great courtesy and great liberality.

ments of the Government were disposed to treat Holladay with great courtesy and great liberality.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Why?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Wisconsin wants a motive. As this is not a criminal prosecution the motive is not necessary. I am this is not a criminal prosecution the motive is not necessary. I am not bound to find the motive. They did pay Mr. Holladay for services he did not render, that is that he did not technically render, and they did not treat him as they do other mail contractors, some other mail contractors at all events.

While on that subject I will say what I might have said yesterday, that whereas Mr. Holladay was permitted to change his line of route from the Laramie to the Bridger's Pass route on condition that he carried the mail once a week from Julesburgh to Fort Laramie, it was carried in the summer of 1865 by the military in an ambulance driven by soldiers. All the way through, in the allowance of his accounts by the Quartermaster's Department, Mr. Holladay was treated as a man who was entitled to consideration by reason of his having made this effort to carry the mail. He was compensated in that way to a very large degree, and, as I think, the Department supposed it to be full compensation. It was a very large amount, and I believe the payment he received did so compensate him. I think it can be shown that a large portion of the allowance by the Quartermaster's Department was of a character that would not have been allowed under ordinary circumstances at all.

I do not care to go into this matter any more fully than has already been done. My own conviction upon it is quite strong. I regret that I am not able to construe this testimony as the Senator from Wisconsin does and as many others do. I desire to call attention to one thing in the testimony of Mr. Holladay. I will read what he said in his testimony on page 63:

O. Did you consider the Government bound to you to repay and reimburse you?

A. I did. Having been assured by the President that it was necessary that these mails should be continued, and that I could safely rely upon the honor of the Government to reimburse me for losses, I relied implicitly on those promises and assurances. Had it not been for those assurances of protection and reimbursement, I would have been compelled to suspend, and the overland mail would not have been continued, in my opinion.

I do not know anything about what took place between Mr. Holladay and the President except what he stated. What we are interested in is in knowing what each party understood to be the effect and intent of that conversation. I refer now to the memorial of Mr. Holladay presented in 1872, which is a copy of the original memorial he filed. That stated his case for relief as he understood it. He did not ask for permission to go to the Court of Claims; and it will be noticed that in stating his case he nowhere refers to any promise on the part of the President as constituting any reason for the allowance. the part of the President as constituting any reason for the allowance of his claim; he does not mention the President in any way at all. It seems to me a little singular, if he was relying during all this period solely and wholly upon the promise of the President of the United States that he should be reimbursed, that when he comes to Congress for the purpose of reimbursement and presents his petition he does not make any mention of that promise at all. If that promise had had the effect that Mr. Holladay seems to give it, it seems to me he would have presented himself during some period of time when Mr. Lincoln was alive, and when he could have recommended to Congress and stated precisely what was the agreement, what was the understanding, and what was the obligation of the Government, and had reimbursement for so much of the losses as at that time at least should have been sustained

The CHIEF CLERK. 'It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That Ben. Holladay be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to institute and prosecute an action in the Court of Claims against the United States for the recovery of any amount for which the United States are justly liable to him on account of any seizure or destruction by hostile Indians of property owned and used by him in performing the contract with the United States to transport the mails on what was known as the Overland Mail Route, between the Missouri River and Salt Lake City, between the year 1860 and the 13th of November, 1866; also on account of any loss of property and expenses incurred in changing the route in carrying the mail, in compliance with the orders of the United States commanding officer, and also for any property owned by said Holladay and taken and used by United States troops; and the said Court of Claims is hereby authorized to hear and determine said suit upon the merits and render judgment therein in accordance with the rights of the parties: Provided. That nothing herein shall be construed as an admission that said Holladay, either as an original party or by subrogation or assignment, had any interest in or title to any such contract, or that he has any valid or just claim, legal or equitable, against the United States.

So the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, this question has been very fully discussed. I had intended submitting some views as one of the representatives of the minority of the Committee on Claims. No written minority report was made; but the motion of the Senator from Ohio has to a considerable extent relieved me of the responsibility of submitting the views I had intended to present in regard to the amount of the claim.

mitting the views I had intended to present in regard to the amount of the claim.

I have been making every effort possible to get at the data in this case, to obtain all the information which has been suggested and developed by the various speeches that have been made. I introduced one resolution calling for information from the Post-Office Department. That information was given. It is now contained in Executive Document No. 21. That discloses the fact that the Department did not furnish us a part of the material facts called for in the resolution, and they were the facts in regard to the amounts paid for this service. That necessitated the introduction and passage of another resolution, which was passed on Friday evening last, before the Senate adjourned, calling upon the Treasury Department for a detailed statement of all amounts paid under these contracts from 1860 up to 1868. I supposed that those facts would be before the Senate before to-day. They were not laid before the Senate this morning, and I presume they have not been received since, though it was very important that we should have the data which could be furnished by that Department. Having ascertained that the Quartermaster-General's Department had something to do with it, I addressed a letter to the Quartermaster-General yesterday, and I have received from him the following letter, which I ask to have read and printed in the Record for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
October 22, 1867.

October 22, 1867.

I certify that there is due from the United States to the following parties: Holladay Overland Mail and Express Company, for transportation by stage of Government troops and baggage from February to May, 1866, amounting to $2,616.87.

Overland Mail Company:
For transportation by stage of Government troops and baggage from 1864 to 1866, amounting to $2,218.62.

Overland Stage Company:
For 534 per cent. deducted from accounts of this company for transportation of Government troops and baggage, referred to General 8. Van Vliet for payment February 27, and April 9 and 27, 1866; amounting to $33,490.88.

The above claims are allowed on the papers herewith and the reports of the Quartermaster-General, dated July 31, August 22, and October 7, 1867.

Appropriation, Army transportation, payable as follows:
Twenty-six hundred and sixteen dollars and eighty-seven cents to George K.
Otis, Secretary Holladay Overland Mail and Express Company, 35 William Street,
New York City; §2,218.62 to Theodore F. Wood, assistant treasurer Overland Mail Company, 84 Broadway, New York City; §33,480.88 to Ben. Holladay, president Overland Stage Company, 35 William Street, New York City; as appears from the statement and vouchers herewith transmitted for the decision of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury thereon.

JOHN WILSON, Auditor.

Hon. John M. Brodhead, Second Comptroller of the Treasury.

SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE.

I admit and certify the above balance this 25th day of October, 1867.

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S Office, January 17, 1881.

I desire to get at the exact amount that may be due the claimant, and pay it without reference to any outside matters, and I now move to insert in the place where "five hundred and twenty-six thousand seven hundred and thirty-nine" have been stricken out the words "one hundred thousand."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, in line 5, after the word "of," to insert "one hundred thousand."

Mr. GARLAND. I am going to move to amend that.

Mr. THURMAN. It is not necessary to amend. In view of the parliamentary law and in view of Rule 32, any number of motions can be simultaneously made or can be pending at the same time to fill a blank in amount. I wish to move that the amount be filled with "fifty thousand." The Senator can move his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio will be noted.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, when I addressed the Senate some days ago on this subject I stated that I had ciphered this matter out in three different ways or stated the amount in three different modes.

days ago on this subject I stated that I had ciphered this matter out in three different ways or stated the amount in three different modes. One would bring Mr. Holladay's claim up to near $600,000; another would bring it very well up to the finding of the committee; and another would bring it, leaving out the fractions and taking even numbers, to $365,000. I have gone over these figures again, and, taking the lowest possible allowance sustained by the proof, I am satisfied he is entitled to $365,000. I move to amend by inserting "three hundred and sixty-five thousand" in the blank as to the number of dollars to be paid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will note the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, and will now report all three of the amendments proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments in the Senate?

Mr. THURMAN. Are we in Senate or in committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was reported to the Senate some months ago at a former session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That Ben. Holladay be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to institute and prosecute an action in the Court of Claims against the United States for the recovery of any amount for which the United States are justly liable to him on account of any seizure or destruction by hostile Indians of property owned and used by him in performing the contract with the United States to transport the mails on what was known as the Overland mail route, between the Missouri River and Salt Lake City, between the year 1860 and the 13th of November, 1865; also on account of any loss of property and expenses incurred in changing the route in carrying the mail, in compliance with the orders of the United States commanding officer, and also for any property owned by said Holladay and taken and used by United States troops; and the said Court of Claims is hereby authorized to bear and determine said suit upon the merits and render judgment therein in accordance with the rights of the parties: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as an admission that said Holladay, either as an original party, or by subrogation or assignment, had any interest in, or title to, any such contract, or that he has any valid or just claim, legal or equitable, against the United States; and the affidavits, which may have been heretofore taken relating to said matter, of persons who are dead or beyond the jurisdiction of the United States, may be used in evidence in said causes, and be given such weight as under the circumstances the court may think them entitled to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator from Vermont include with the affidavits the testimony that was taken by the Com-

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that testimony was taken in the form of an affidavit so that it is in writing, it falls under that provision.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Do you understand it does fall under it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it was taken in the form of an affidavit it certainly does. Any affidavit taken in relation to this matter of persons who are either beyond the jurisdiction of the United States territorially or are dead and gone may be used before the court and given such weight as the court think it entitled to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. These were not taken in the form of affidavits.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to understand whether the Senator from

Mr. HOAR. I should like to understand whether the Senator from Vermont conceives that that has any other meaning when he speaks of "justly due" than the words "legally due;" that is, whether this amendment means to confine Mr. Holladay to a lawful claim, which may be enforced at law as between private parties, or whether he means by legislation to confer upon the Court of Claims the power of determining what the United States in its administration of justice, dealing with citizens, might properly confer upon them?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, Mr. President, if the question were res nova, I should say that a phrase in the law which said that a court is to try and to give judgment for what may be justly due meant what in point of law or legal equity between private parties the person would be entitled to, and that it would not give the court the political power of making gifts of generosity or charity to anybody. But I believe under similar provisions of law in cases that have occurred, the Court of Claims has held, and I think the Supreme Court on appeal, that such words authorized the court to proceed without regard to the strict rules of law or contract but to do absolute natural equity according to the circumstances of the case, that equity being guided according to the circumstances of the case, that equity being guided in the same way that it would be if a private person had stood in the same relation that the United States did and had caused the same things to be done that the United States are supposed to have. That is as clear a definition as I can give of my opinion about this language.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator from Vermont think it sound policy

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator from Vermont think it sound policy or within our constitutional power to confer on any other tribunal the legislative power of administering between the United States and parties' rights which that tribunal itself for the first time creates? It seems to me that the objection to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, as he explains it, is very much greater than any objection could be to paying a claim of the most unfounded description by set of Congress.

act of Congres act of Congress.

There are many cases where private citizens would feel bound to make a gift or grants to persons in their employ or persons with whom they had contracted who had no right whatever growing out of the contract, either at law or in equity, as administered in courts of equity. That is a legislative power, an exercise of generosity from the consideration of the Government, like the provision of an employer for a person who falls sick in his service or a person who, having made a hard bargain and lost money by it, from which the other party has gained, a private citizen dealing justly and liberally with his neighbor would make a gift; but it seems to me utterly objectionable to confer such power on the Court of Claims both in point of public policy and in point of constitutional power.

confer such power on the Court of Claims both in point of public policy and in point of constitutional power.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So should I think most decidedly, and I am sorry that I did not state with sufficient clearness—it was my own fault no doubt—my proposition, not to mislead my friend from Massachusetts in his commentary upon it. I thought I said—I certainly meant to say—that while I believed according to precedent that the Court of Claims would not feel itself under that language bound by the strict miles of law or the strict rules of legal equity either, yet it would not feel itself authorized to make gifts, grants, or do charities, but to do justice under the circumstances of the transactions that had happened between the United States and this claimant. That was what I intended to state; and if I did not state it clearly before, I wish to state it now as clearly as I can. I am not very hungry even for that, because tended to state; and if I did not state it clearly before, I wish to state it now as clearly as I can. I am not very hungry even for that, because the more I hear this case discussed, I have greater and greater doubts as to the propriety of taking any steps at all after this lapse of time and after what has taken place.

At the same time the bill, after the amendment that has been adopted, is inconsistent in itself. We are acting on the report of a committee who say that they think more than half a million dollars is due, not who say that they think more than half a million dollars is due, not as a charity or a donation, but as a right to this man, and the friends of this man have voted to say that instead of giving him that they will give him $100,000. That either means that that is to end this affair or that it is merely on account and that we are to have another bill for another $100,000 or as much as can be got at the next session of Congress. We have had experience of that class of cases. I do not wish to do that. I wish to make an end of this matter once for all; and inasmuch as I had heard it stated by Senators for whose opinions I have very great respect that they thought the Court of Claims was the true place to send this matter, but that the death and going away of witnesses and so forth might embarrass this claimant, I was willing to go to the extent of providing that in case of death or absence beyond the reach of the process of the United States the affidavits already taken in support of this claim and in the time of it as it was said should be given in any evidence and be given such weight as the court thought under the circumstances they were entitled to weight as the court thought under the circumstances they were entitled to.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I have already expressed my opinion in regard to the propriety of sending this case to the Court of Claims, and I do not wish to trouble the Senate with a repetition of what I have said twice. I will only say that I adhere to the opinion I have expressed, that this is not a case for the Court of Claims, and I hope that it will not be sent to that court. Although the bill in the shape in which it now stands is much less objectionable than it was a criginally reported as it seems to me, yet I cannot you for it. the shape in which it now stands is much less objectionable than it was as originally reported as it seems to me, yet I cannot vote for it still, for I think the amount now in the bill is too large, but I would prefer to see the bill pass, indeed I would prefer to vote for the bill rather than to send it to the Court of Claims. I hope, therefore, that the amendment offered by the Senstor from Vermont will not be adopted, and that we shall proceed to get a vote on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senstor from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1067) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Meines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the first amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. LANDS IN SEVERALTY TO INDIANS.

Mr. COKE. I move that the Senate now take up and consider Senate bill No. 1773, being a bill to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations. I will remark that severalty to Indians on the various reservations. I will remark that this is a bill of great importance, though a short bill, and the principle embraced in it was considered at the last session of Congress in the discussion of the Ute bill. I am very much pressed by the Secretary of the Interior to have the bill acted on.

Mr. TELLER. We have not the slightest idea in this part of the Chamber what bill is proposed to be brought up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill referred to by the Senator from Texas will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the title of the bill (S. No. 1773) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the States and ervations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the States and Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas moves that

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas moves that the pending and all prior orders be postponed in order that he may move to take up the bill just reported.

Mr. TELLER. What are the prior orders.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are none.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Calendar of General Orders, the Chair supposes. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not like to antagonize the motion of the Senator from Texas, yet there are two bills reported back from the Committee on Agriculture a few days ago that I feel great interest in, Senate bills Nos. 1893 and 1667, both being for the prevention of the spread of contagious cattle diseases. I think it is more important to the Senate to have those bills taken up than the bill moved by the Senator from Texas, and unless there be some very urgent necessity for the bill named by him I feel inclined to ask the Senate to vote down his motion and take up one of these bills.

Mr. COKE. I will state—

Mr. BURNSIDE. I appeal to the Senator from Texas that his motion will lead to a contest, and this is quite a late hour. I hope the Senator will give way for a motion to adjourn; I think we shall save

Mr. COKE. I only desire to make a remark in reference to this bill. It is a bill to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the States and Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes. I have been specially instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs at the earliest possible moment to bring up and get this bill considered. I have received several requests from the Secretary of the Interior to urge the passage of the bill, and the committee of which I am chairman has been waited upon by a delegation of distinguished gentlemen from different portions of the country to urge the passage of the bill. The bill is a short one. Every principle involved in it was discussed fully at the last session of Congress. I think it can be disposed of in a very short time; and until it is disposed of the Interior Department is seriously obstructed in the administration of the affairs of several of the tribes of Indians. I therefore hope that it will be the pleasure of the Senate to take the bill up and consider it. If the bill can be taken up I shall then be willing to yield for an adjournment.

Mr. TELLER. This bill which is proposed to be taken up to-night will cause some considerable discussion, and I do not believe we are prepared to take it up now.

The question of lands in severalty was discussed somewhat during the last session in connection with the Ute bill. The members of the commission who were appointed to go out and settle the Indians under that bill and distribute the lands, I understand are prepared to report that these Ute Indians declined to sign the treaty until the commission had assured them that they would come back here to Congress and make an effort to abrogate that portion of the treaty. I have that from one member of the commission, that that was an insurmountable obstacle in the treaty and it would not have been signed. surmountable obstacle in the treaty and it would not have been signed surmountable obstacle in the treaty and it would not have been signed but for a stipulation and agreement on their part that they would have that abrogated at this session.

This is a question of the very highest importance in connection with the Indian problem. The attempt to force upon these wild Indians land in severalty and make it obligatory upon them to take it will require the army. It cannot be done without it. I speak of what I know when I say that, and Senators should understand this is a very important question in connection with the Indians. Now I want to walt until that commission report, which I understand they will be ready to do in a day or two.

Mr. COKE. Allow me to say that the bill I am trying to get up does not seek to enforce anything on the Indians, and proposes to do nothing except with their free consent.

except with their free consent.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the bill. This land in severalty is supposed to be the panacea for all the ills that afflict the Indians.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the present occupant of the chair

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the present occupant of the chair understands the rules, it is not in order to discuss the merits of a proposition on a motion to take it up.

Mr. TELLER. I will not discuss the merits, but I will move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved by the Senator from Colorado that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. COKE. I had the floor, and my motion was pending, I submit.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose my motion is in order if the Senator's

Mr. TELLER. I suppose my motion is in order if the Senator's

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had recognized the Senator from Colorado as entitled to the floor. He certainly had a right to make his motion.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and forty minutes

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I call for the regular order.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I can not the regular order.

Mr. KEIFER. I rise to make a privileged report—a unanimous report from the Committee on Elections on the contested-election case from the second congressional district of Florida. I ask that the report be printed and laid on the table, and give notice that at an early day I will call up the subject for the consideration of the House. I ask that the resolutions appended to the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

1. Resolved, That Noble A. Hull is not entitled to retain his seat as a member of the Forty-sixth Congress of the United States as a Representative of the second congressional district of the State of Florida.

2. Resolved, That Horatio Bisbee, jr., is entitled to a seat as a member of the Forty-sixth Congress as a Representative of the second congressional district of the State of Florida.

The SPEAKER. The report will be ordered to be printed and will be laid on the table, to be called up hereafter.

EVENING SESSION FOR SENATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] has called for the regular order.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman from New York yields to allow me to ask unanimous consent to introduce a resolution providing for an evening session to-morrow to consider only Senate bills on the Private Calendar.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. CARLISLE. It relates to to-morrow night only, and to Senate bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. COFFROTH. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER, as the regular order, proceeded to call the committees for reports. When several committees had been called, Mr. ACKLEN moved that the call of committees be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The motion comes too late; the call has commenced.

REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The Committee on the Judiciary have directed me to report back a resolution of inquiry with a recommendation that it be adopted.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be acted on during this call. The Chair will allow it to be reported now; and action can be taken on it under the rules immediately after the call of committees for reported has been concluded. The resolution will be read now. ports has been concluded. The resolution will be read now.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, requested to inform this House under and by what authority the registration of trade-marks is permitted, and fees for such registration are charged and collected, since the Supreme Court of the United States, at its October term, 1879, in the case of Emil Steffins et al. vs. The United States, decided that the enactments of Congress authorizing such registration and collection of fees are void, because unconstitutional.

Mr. CALKINS. Is that resolution recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary for adoption?

The SPEAKER. It is; but it cannot be acted on now. As soon as all of the committees shall have been called, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Georgia to call up the resolution for action. The call of committees cannot be interrupted.

Mr. DIBRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 5320) for the relief of Simon B. Ellis; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HENRY ISENBERG.

Mr. DIBRELL also, from the same committee, reported back, with amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 6652) for the relief of Henry Isenberg; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF PAYMASTERS' CLERKS.

Mr. DIBRELL also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 5178) regulating the compensation of paymasters' clerks in the United States Army; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM M'ELROY.

Mr. DIBRELL also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 3173) for the relief of William McElroy, late first lieutenant United States Infantry; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

BREVET MAJOR-GENERAL WILLIAM W. AVERELL.

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. No. 6794) authorizing the retirement of Brevet Major-General William W. Averell, United States Army, with the rank and pay of a brigadier-general; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Mr. SPARKS. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs Mr. SPARKS. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back House bill No. 6519, to place Ulysses S. Grant, late General of the Army, and ex-President of the United States, upon the retired list of the Army, with an adverse report. The minority of the committee have views which they desire to present, and I am authorized to state the Committee on Military Affairs consent, I think unanimously, that they may have that opportunity.

The SPEAKER. The bill and reports will be laid upon the table and the report ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCOOK. I understand the Committee on Military Affairs did not authorize the chairman or anybody else to lay that bill upon the table, and therefore, sir—

The SPEAKER. That is the practice, but if any member asks it shall go upon the Calendar, it will go there accompanied by the adverse report. Mr. McCOOK.

Mr. McCOOK. I ask it shall go upon the Calendar.
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What Calendar?
Mr. SPARKS. That is the report, that the bill shall not pass.
Mr. McCOOK. I ask the bill go to the Calendam.
Mr. SPARKS. Precisely, and it goes there with the recommendation that it shall not pass.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What Calendar?

Mr. McCOOK. The Speaker said the bill would lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not notice the title of the bill at all, and the practice has been, unless some gentleman objected, where a committee made an adverse report the bill was laid upon the table and the report ordered to be printed. Any member of the House has the right to demand the bill shall go to the Calendar, but it goes there with the adverse recommendation.

there with the adverse recommendation.

Mr. McCOOK. Certainly, and in the exercise of that right—
The SPEAKER. The House controls its legislation notwithstanding the judgment or opinion of any committee.

Mr. McCOOK. And simply in the exercise of that right I have asked that the bill shall go upon the Calendar. And now, sir, I present the views of the minority and ask they also be printed.

Mr. SPARKS. The report is precisely in keeping with that statement—not that it be laid upon the table, but that it go upon the Calendar with the recommendation that it do not pass. I gave notice that the minority of the committee, by consent of the Committee on Military Affairs, had views to present—

Mr. McCOOK. The chairman of the committee does not understand that I am reflecting on him, I hope. I am merely in the exerstand that I am reflecting on him, I hope. I am merely in the exercise of my right as a member asking that the bill shall go upon the Calendar.

Calendar.

Mr. SPARKS. There is no disagreement between the gentleman and myself. I am merely correcting the statement of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did what he always does when an adverse report is submitted from any committee, and when no member intervenes to prevent the bill going on the table. Of course the action of the committee is not conclusive of the House at all. An adverse report does not preclude the bill going on the Calendar and being reached in its regular order.

Mr. McCOOK. I wish in explanation to state, Mr. Speaker, that the views of the minority are signed by two of the minority members of the Committee on Military Affairs. The other two gentlemen have not seen it, but I assume they will sign it; however, I know nothing of that fact.

nothing of that fact.

The SPEAKER. The views of the minority presented by the gentleman from New York will be received and ordered to be printed with the majority report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. On what Calendar does it go?

The SPEAKER. The Private Calendar.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I want the majority and minority

mr. 10 wisher, of Onto. I want the majority and the other reports read.

Mr. SPARKS. The majority report is a formal report, and the other is a long one. They will be printed in a short time.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I ask they now be read.

Mr. DIBRELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes the gentleman desires to have them printed in the RECORD, but the reading of them will not necessity to be them into the RECORD.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. SPARKS. I suggest to the gentleman that these reports will be printed in a day or two, and that is all I wish to say on the subject. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio demands the reading of these reports. The language of Rule XXIV is "there shall be a morning hour for reports from committees, which shall be appropriately referred and printed," and the language of Rule XXXI is "when the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded, and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House." The practice under the new rules has never been where bills are presented for printing to read the reports. The Chair, however, thinks if the gentleman desires the printing of these reports in the RECORD, there will be no objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Yes, I object. Let these take the usual course with all similar reports.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I will accept that. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain that motion at this time, but will recognize the gentleman from Ohio later in the day to make the motion. The gentleman from Illinois objects at present.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Does any one object to the printing of the report in the RECORD?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I insist that these reports shall take their usual course with other reports of this House.

Mr. McCOOK. Mr. Speaker, I have refrained from making any comment upon the request of the gentleman from Ohio for the reason that this is my report, but I would like to understand if the Chair rules that the report cannot at this time be read.

The SPEAKER. The practical effect or force of the construction under the new rules of the two rules which the Chair has caused to be read would not, in the indement of the Chair, give a warrant for be read would not, in the judgment of the Chair, give a warrant for the reading at this time, because these rules provide that the report shall be printed, while no provision is made for their reading. The Chair is of opinion, however, that it ought to be in the scope of the rule that certain papers should be read, and the Chair would not like to make an absolute decision covering this point which would cut off the reading if demanded, until he has had a further opportunity to review the rules in all their bearing upon the question

Mr. McCOOK. If the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his opposition to the printing of the reports in the RECORD, I am sure the gentleman from Ohio will not insist on the reading at this time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I know of no rule or practice of this House which authorizes this morning hour to be consumed in the reading of such papers. I insist, therefore, upon the objection. I desire that the report in this case may take the usual course of all reports in this House.

Mr. McCOOK. But we are endeavoring to find out what is the usual course

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It is to have the reports printed and referred in the usual manner to one of the Calendars.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. If the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his objection to having the majority and minority reports printed in the RECORD, I will not insist upon the reading now or at any other time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I must object to the printing iu the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the rule carefully during The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the rule carefully during the day, and give the gentleman from Ohio an opportunity of being heard on the point if he so desires. The difficulty would seem to be that gentlemen coming in with reports from committees may if they so desire submit lengthy reports that would take up the entire hour.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to insist upon his objection?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I do insist upon it.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I was under the impression that the gentleman had withdrawn the objection to printing in the RECORD. The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand; but on the contrary understands the gentleman as insisting on the objection and demand that they shall take their usual course.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I do insist on the objection and demand the regular order.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Then I reserve the right to make the request at a later period.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman hereafter, when he has had an opportunity of examining the rules and seeing when he has had an opportunity of examining the rules and seeing their bearing upon this question.

Mr. FRYE. I hope in the interest of the new rules the Speaker will not rule, although I would like to have the reports read, that in the morning hour such reports may be read on demand of any one member of this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so ruled, but prefers not to rule absolutely until he has had an opportunity of reading the rules and examining the question more carefully.

Mr. FRYE. It might spoil the morning hour every day if this ruling is sustained.

Mr. SPARKS. I do not see much in this whole matter. The majority report is a mere formal report, adverse; the minority report is a favorable report, in connection with which there is some little ver-biage. I think the whole matter should take the regular course, like all other questions that come before the House from committees. There is very little in it, and I do not see why gentlemen insist upon its going into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio later in the day, if he so desires.

NAVAL MONUMENT, ANNAPOLIS.

Mr. TALBOTT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with an amendment, the bill of the House No. 1851, to provide for the erection of a monument at the naval cemetery, Annapolis, Maryland, in commemoration of the officers and others who perished in the wreck of the United States steamer Huron; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accommittee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accommittee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accommittee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accommittee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accommittee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accommittee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accommittee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accommittee of the Union of the Original Research of the panying report ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL CHASE BARNEY.

TALBOTT also, from the same committee, reported back, as a Mr. TALBOTT also, from the same committee, reported back, as a substitute for the bill of the House No. 4266, a bill (H. R. No. 6963) for the relief of Samuel Chase Barney; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SARAH WILLIAMS VERY.

On motion of Mr. TALBOTT, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Naval Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Sarah Williams Very; and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

SIOUX INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

Mr. POEHLER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 3695) to restore to certain scouts and soldiers of the United States Army in the Sioux Nation of Indians the moneys and annuities belonging to them confiscated and forfeited to the United States, under an act for the relief of persons for damages sustained by reason of depredations and injuries by certain bands of Sioux Indians, approved February 16, 1863; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

METALLIC CARTRIDGES, UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. CASWELL, from the Committee on Patents, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6964) to authorize the Secretary of War to contract for the legal right to make and use the metallic cartridges adopted for the Army service; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. COFFROTH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4653) for the relief of John Sharpe, of Pennsylvania; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COFFROTH also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6965) granting a pension to Margaret D. Marchaud; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. COFFROTH also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 5015) granting a pension to Emma A. Ramsey; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 5237) granting a pension to Minnie Hamman; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

mittee of the Whole of the Fried Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 5228) granting arrears of pension to Elizabeth Winters; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be

Mr. HOSTETLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2352) granting an increase of pension to Henry Binnamon; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6966) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Frederick A. Garlick; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. MASON also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 4991) granting a pension to Bennett J. Denson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALDWELL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6967) granting a pension to Adam Petry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered bil the Fivate Calcular, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. WHITEAKER, from the Committee on Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6968) granting a pension to John T. Harrington, late a soldier in the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. WHITEAKER also, from the same committee, reported back, with favorable recommendations, bills of the following titles, and the same were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 537) to grant a pension to Anson Smith;

A bill (S. No. 1411) granting a pension to James Morgan;

A bill (S. No. 913) granting a pension to Thomas P. Johnson;

A bill (S. No. 576) for the relief of Phæbe Meech;

A bill (S. No. 1729) granting a pension to William Stockwell; and A bill (S. No. 1546) granting a pension to P. B. Berry, sr.

Mr. WHITEAKER. I am instructed also by the Committee on Pensions to report back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 205) granting an increase of pension to Abigail S. Tilton, and

(S. No. 205) granting an increase of pension to Abigail S. Tilton, and to ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Senate bills which have just been reported by the gentleman from Oregon are accompanied by reports of the Senate committee. Have the House committee adopted the views of the Senate committee?

Mr. WHITEAKER. They have. With reference to the Senate bill
No. 205, as this is an extreme case, I wish to ask its present consideration by the House.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done under this call.

Mr. WHITEAKER. Then I will withdraw the report for the present. I will take my chance of getting it in at some future time.

JOHN D. YOUNG.

Mr. HORR. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims to make a report in reference to the claim of Hon. John D. Young, of Kentucky, and ask that the same be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with a view to an appropriation being inserted in the sundry civil bill.

The report was ordered to be printed; and, with the accompanying petition, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

A. L. H. CRENSHAW.

Mr. ROTHWELL, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1710) for the relief of A. L. H. Crenshaw; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES VS. JOHN S. DICKERSON.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice have instructed me to make a report on the memorial ment of Justice have instructed me to make a report on the memorial of Fred. Wallroth, of New York City, praying an investigation in the matter of the income-tax case, the United States against John S. Dickerson. I ask that the report be printed, and that the resolution be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Mr. KEIFER. What is asked to be done?

Mr. SPRINGER. Nothing but to print the report and refer the resolution and report to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. This is the unanimous report of the committee.

There was no objection and it was so ordered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ARREARS OF PAY AND BOUNTY.

Mr. CASWELL. I desire to report at this time, from the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, a resolution, and ask for its immediate passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to report from that committee at any time.

Mr. CASWELL. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot interrupt this call by the consideration of the resolution at this time.

Mr. CASWELL. I think no one would object to the consideration

Arr. CASWELL. I think no one would object to the consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman after the call of committees is through under his right to report at any time.

REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hammond] is now recognized to call up the resolution of inquiry from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ATKINS. Will it give rise to much debate?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. It will not. I send to the desk the resolution which the Committee on the Judiciary have directed me to report back with a favorable recommendation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this House under and by what authority the registration of trade-marks is permitted and fees for such registration are charged and collected, since the Supreme Court of the United States, at its October term, 1879, in the case of Emil Steffins et al. vs. The United States, decided that the enactments of Congress authorizing such registration and collection of fees are void, because unconstitutional

Mr. KEIFER. I think the form of that resolution had better be changed; that it should be modified so as simply to make the inquiry, without giving any reason therefor. As it now reads it conveys a sort of reflection on the Secretary of the Interior, which I think should not be put in our resolution.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. That is immaterial to me. It is simply giving the reason why we make the inquiry.

Mr. KEIFER. The reason had better not go into the resolution, for it would seem to indicate that the Secretary of the Interior has been and is doing seventhing wayner. been and is doing something wrong.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Will the gentleman move some amendment?

Mr. KEIFER. I make the suggestion to the gentleman who wants the information to strike out all that part of the resolution which refers to the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I have no objection, so that we get the information.

Mr. KEIFER. My motion would be to strike out all that relates to the case decided by the Supreme Court, and simply to call for information on the subject of registration of trade-marks.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I have no objection to that, and I presume the committee will have none.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot accept the amendment, but the Chair will submit it to the House.

The question was taken upon the amendment proposed by Mr. Keifer; and it was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was then adopted.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution, as amended, was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARREARS OF PAY AND BOUNTY.

Mr. CASWELL, from the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, authorized to report at any time, submitted the following:

Resolved. That the Committee on Appropriations be directed to add to the appropriation bill for the payment of bounties now due and payable to soldiers serving in the war of the rebellion the following:

For the payment of arrears of pay and bounty to volunteer soldiers who served in the war of the rebellion, or their heirs, and to discharged soldiers of the United States Army, which may be allowed and certified after the 20th of December, 1880, $300,000.

The question was upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. CASWELL. I can make no better explanation of this resolution than is contained in the letters which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Is this resolution of higher privilege than a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this resolution will take but a moment, and the committee has the right to report at any

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. "Any time" is very indefinite.
The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair thinks, and therefore he exercises a discretion in the matter of entertaining such reports.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The rule provides that a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall be enter-

The SPEAKER. This will take but a few moments.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I propose now to go into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the funding bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CASWELL. This resolution will take but a moment.

The SPEAKER. It relates to pension matters, and the Chair thinks it had better be considered now.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. If it can be passed without debate or discussion, I will yield for that purpose, and also to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations.

The letters referred to by Mr. CASWELL are as follows:

The letters referred to by Mr. Caswell are as follows:

Teeasury Department, Second Auditor's Office,
Washington, D. C., December 20, 1880.

Sir: The necessity and justice of making an appropriation in advance for the payment of arrears of pay and bounty to volunteer soldiers who served in the war of the rebellion, their widows and legal heirs, and to discharged soldiers of the United States Army, have been brought to the attention of Congress on several occasions, as will be seen by reference to the following Senate executive documents: No. 76, Forty-fifth Congress, second session; No. 17, Forty-sixth Congress, first session; and No. 136, Forty-sixth Congress, third session.

In April last the House of Representatives adopted a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury to state the cause of delay in paying bounty and back pay due soldiers or other persons entitled thereto, and to report why he permitted these claims to remain unpaid from six to twelve months without asking Congress for an appropriation.

I have this day transmitted to you an estimate for the payment of claims allowed by the accounting officers under section 4, act June 14, 1878, but that estimate embraces only such claims as have been certified up to the 18th instant. There is no provision for the payment of the numerous claims already filed and awaiting their turn for settlement, nor for those that are being daily presented for adjustment. Unless a special appropriation be made it is not very probable that claims certified after this date will be paid before June or July, 1882.

In view of all the facts in the case, I deem it my duty to urgently recommend that Congress be asked to appropriate a sum sufficient to meet all claims for arrears of pay and bounty that may be certified by the accounting officers up to the close of the next fiscal year, namely, June 30, 1882.

I estimate that $300,000 will be required under the following heads of appropriation:

Pay of two and three year volunteers

Pay of two and three year volunteers $85,000
Bounty to volunteers, and their widows and legal heirs 200,000
Pay, &c., of the Army 15,000

Very respectfully,

O. FERRISS, Auditor.

Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND AUDITOR'S OFFICE, January 11, 1881.

Six: I am in receipt of your letter of the 10th instant relative to the delay accruing each year in the payment of bounty claims which may be allowed subsequent to the annual report submitted by the Secretary to Congress at the beginning of cach session, &c.

In answer I inclose herewith a copy of a letter addressed by me to the honorable Secretary of War of the 20th ultimo, which I believe will fully meet the requirements of your committee. I will say, in addition, that for the last four of five years the attention of Congress has been regularly invited to the importance of providing for the payment of pay and bounty claims as soon as settled, which can be done by simply appropriating one year in advance. The attention of the committee is invited to the fact that the appropriation for payment of one of the bounties, namely, the additional bounty provided by the act of July 28, 1866, is a continuous one. It therefore very frequently occurs that claims involving arrearages of pay, original bounty, and the additional bounty are settled at the same time and under one application. One of these bounties can be immediately paid; while the other and the arrearages of pay has to await the pleasure of Congress. This causes confusion and delays in the entries and completion of the records of this office, and, consequently, an extra amount of labor. It is needless for me to say that complaints in behalf of poor soldiers and the heirs of those deceased are continually reaching me from all quarters, for nearly every member of Congress can well attest the fact from the inquiries and complaints of his constituents.

The system of payment of all pay and bounty claims in this office should be a uniform one.

uniform one. Very respectfully,

O. FERRISS, Auditor.

Hou. L. B. Caswell, Chairman Sub-Committee on the Payment of Bounties and Pensions, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., (through the honorable Secretary of the Treasury.)

Mr. CASWELL. In addition to the statement contained in the let Mr. CASWELL. In addition to the statement contained in the letters, I will say that a bounty audited at this time cannot be paid under a year and a half, until an appropriation is made by the next Congress to meet it. For that reason this resolution is reported. There is no reason why an appropriation should not be made to pay these bounties as they are audited.

The resolution reported by Mr. CASWELL was adopted.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6969) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HARMER. I reserve all points of order upon the bill just reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Points of order will be reserved.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to give notice that I shall ask the House to consider this bill to-morrow, if I can obtain consent for that purpose.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississppi, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 6613) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the

for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, with the Senate amendments thereto, with the recommendation that Senate amendment numbered 1 be not concurred in, and that Senate amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 be concurred in.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Chair will submit the question of concurring in gross in the Senate amendments, which the Committee on Appropriations recommend be concurred in.

Mr. SIMONTON. Cannot the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] be allowed to state the effect of these amendments?

The SPEAKER. Certainly; if it is desired.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. It will not take many minutes for me to explain these amendments, which are generally of an unimportant character. The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence in all but one of the Senate amendments. Two of the amendments propose to raise consuls from a lower to a higher grade, concurrence in all but one of the Senate amendments. Two of the amendments propose to raise consuls from a lower to a higher grade, giving them $500 each in addition to their present pay.

Upon examination it will be found that the business at Ceylon, and at Belfast, Ireland, has greatly increased within the last few years. In consequence of the additional labors imposed upon our officers at those points, it was deemed but right that they should have this increased compensation which the Senate has inserted by way of amendments. ment. We therefore recommend concurrence.

The salary of one of these officers, now $1,000, is raised to $1,500; the salary of the other is raised from $2,000 to $2,500.

The other amendments are for the most part merely verbal. There is one of them which proposes to appropriate $1,000 for postage upon the Congressional Record, which by resolution of this House has been ordered to be sent every morning to each of our representatives abroad. The Public Printer has not been able to comply with that resolution because he had no funds at his command with which to pay postage. This has been provided for by the amendment of the Senate, in which we recommend concurrence.

One other amendment (and I believe it is the only one) is this: In the bill as passed by the House we raised the rank of our repre-In the bill as passed by the House we raised the rank of our representative to the new government in Roumania from diplomatic agent to charge d'affaires. We did this at the instance of Prince Charles, who governs that country, he preferring that our representative should be accredited directly to himself, instead of to the officer corresponding with Secretary of State in our country. There is no change in the salary, simply a change in the title of the office.

Mr. DUNNELL. What is the amendment in which the committee recommend non-concurrence?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. It is the one last named. The Senate—without thinking about the matter, I suppose—changed the title of our representative to Roumania from that of chargé d'affaires to diplomatic agent. That representative was confirmed by the Senate as chargé d'affaires and consul-general, and his commission was so made out. We recommend non-concurrence with a view to having the Senate recede; and we have assurances that it will do so.

These amendments altogether only add $2,000 to the bill as it passed the House.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations will be agreed to, and the amend-ments concurred in or non-concurred in respectively as recommended. There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask the gentleman from New York to yield to me for the introduction of a bill.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose merely, but this is the last time I can yield.

Mr. HUNTON. I send to the desk a bill which I desire to have referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill to improve the Washington and Georgetown Harbor.

Mr. ACKLEN. What reference is proposed for this bill?
The SPEAKER. The Committee on Commerce.
Mr. ACKLEN. I think that the bill ought to go to the Committee on the District of Columbia.
Mr. HUNTON. I trust that the gentleman from Louisiana will not make a point of that sort. This matter has been before the Committee on Commerce this morning, and for the convenience of the committee

I want to have this bill introduced, referred, and printed.

Mr. ACKLEN. The best settlement of the question as to the reference of the bill would be to have it read so as to see whether it in any way involves a matter belonging properly to the Committee on Commerce

The SPEAKER. The Chair presumes the gentleman from New York will not yield to allow the bill to be read.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I cannot yield if there is any question

The SPEAKER. The bill, The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House. The gentleman from Louisiana has demanded the reading of the bill and the gentleman from New York declines to yield for that purpose.

ARMY CLOTHING ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the scarcity of Army clothing on the Pacific coast; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SURVEY OF CALCASIEU RIVER, LOUISIANA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the survey of the Calcasieu River, Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEYS OF MATAWAN CREEK, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of surveys of Matawan Creek, New Jersey; Shark River, New Jersey; Perth and South Amboy to main ship-channel of Great Kills, Raritan Bay, and of Ticonderoga River, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

FUNDING BILL.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the funding bill; and pending that motion I move that all debate upon the pending section and substitutes and amendments thereto shall cease in twenty minutes.

ments thereto shall cease in twenty minutes.

Mr. PRICE. Does that cover amendments yet to be offered?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. PRICE. Then the motion ought not to be adopted.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I move to make the time one hour.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. ATKINS] has already given notice to this House that he will to-morrow morning call up the naval appropriation bill, so that if this bill should not be disposed of to-day it may go over indefinitely. Now, I intend to ask the House to conclude the consideration of this bill to-day, and, in order to accomplish that result, it seems to me necessary to curtail discussion as much as possible. I am willing to extend the debate to half an hour on the pending section and amendment, and it does seem to me that will give ample time for amendment, and it does seem to me that will give ample time for whatever debate is necessary.

Mr. CLAFLIN. This is a most important section. It changes the whole character of several laws; it is really subject to a point of order, but the point was not taken in time. It is now before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration, and it cannot probably be considered in the short time of half an hour.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. How much time does the gentleman from Massachusetts ask?

Mr. CLAFLIN. An hour.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Very well; I will modify my proposi-

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Very well; I will modify my proposition to one hour. I will make that concession to the gentleman.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I also ask that five minutes be allowed for, and five minutes egainst each amendment that may be hereafter offered.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Excluding all technical amendments.

Mr. PRICE. Yes; including only bona fide amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not clearly comprehend the modification which the gentleman from Massachusetts proposes.

Mr. CLAFLIN. That we shall have a debate of five minutes for, and five minutes against each amendment.

and five minutes against each amendment.

The SPEAKER. Up to one hour?

Mr. CLAFLIN. No, sir; but in addition to the hour provided for by the modified motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLAND. Five minutes for and five minutes against each amendment in addition to the hour.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I am willing the hour shall be taken, and that within that time on each amendment gentlemen may speak as long as they may wish, provided only there shall be no debate on mere technical or formal amendments usually moved for the purpose of getting in another speech. I wish, sir, to confine the House to the work and to proceed with the consideration of this bill, and nothing

Mr. CLAFLIN. I quite agree with the gentleman, and I wish to confine the House to the work, but I want to have an opportunity for myself and friends to explain our amendments when offered to the House.

House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first submit the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts, as the original proposition of the gentleman from New York, as modified, provides for one hour's debate on the pending section and all amendments thereto. The gentleman from Massachusetts proposes to amend that motion so there shall also be, in addition to the one hour's debate on the pending section and the amendments now pending thereto, five minutes' debate allowed in favor of each amendment hereafter offered and five minutes against it. against it.

Mr. PRICE. Confining the debate to bona fide amendments. Mr. KEIFER. Substantive amendments; and I understand the gentleman to agree to that. Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. No; I agree to the hour, but I cannot consent to any continuation of the debate beyond that hour.

Mr. KEIFER. We misunderstood you, then, on this side.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts as stated by the Chair.

Mr. CALKINS. That applies simply to the section now under discretion.

The SPEAKER. It will apply in this wise: that there shall be one hour's debate on the pending section and the pending amendments thereto, and there shall be allowed five minutes' debate in favor of, and five minutes' debate against any substantive amendment which may in the future be offered to the section.

Mr. CARLISLE. Under which no mere formal amendment can claim any right to debate.

The SPEAKER. It will cut off pro forma amendments because the object of pro forma amendments is to reach debate.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. As this is the last section of the bill I accept the modification of the gentleman from Massachusetts, trusting to the committee not to allow anything but substantive amendments and partipant debate. ments and pertinent debate.

Mr. WEAVER. Does the arrangement in regard to pro forma amendments require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will have to regulate that. The Chair would not like to answer how far the chairman of the committee will allow pro forma amendments. Under the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York, with the modification of the gentleman from Massachusetts which has been accepted, the Chair would think the instruction of the House was that debate should not be allowed on any forma amendments.

allowed on pro forma amendments.

Mr. PRESCOTT. If I understand the proposition as it now stands before the House, it amounts to cutting off all debate after the pending amendment; that is, if the pending amendments do not occupy an hour, then all the future amendments beyond that will be considered for the printer at time. ered for ten minutes at a time. Consequently it cuts off all debate beyond five minutes on either side on all amendments except those pending.

The SPEAKER. It does on all amendments which may be offered in the future to this section.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Whether or not the hour is occupied?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the hour's debate is ordered on the pending amendment.

Mr. PRESCOTT. And those presented in the hour?

The SPEAKER. And then ceases. But if any substantive amendment should be offered to this section not now before the committee, then there would be five minutes' debate for and five minutes against, under this agreement.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Suppose I present an amendment immediately, does that come within the hour's debate?

The SPEAKER. An amendment, immediately, would not be in order, for the reason that there are sufficient amendments to cover what are allowed by the rule; but when they are disposed of the gentleman can then have the opportunity of offering his amendments.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Amendments, then, are not now in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not; but would not say absolutely without an examination. This would be a proper question for the chairman of the Committee of the Whole to determine.

Mr. PRESCOTT. As printed now in the RECORD it would appear that amendments are in order, there being printed only one amend-ment which is offered as a substitute for the bill, the substitute being, of course, amendable

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had better allow the debate to run on the amendments that are now pending for the hour. Then run on the amendments that are now pending for the hour. Then if he desires to offer another amendment he can claim his right to debate it under the second branch of the agreement.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I have an amendment which I desire to propose either to the section or to the substitute, which ever may be proper. The SPEAKER. The Chair would not like to say absolutely whether an amendment would be immediately in order or not, because if he did, he would trench upon the right which belongs properly to the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. But there will be no difficulty upon that point when the question really comes before the committee.

Mr. BLAND. Would this cut off debate on a substitute for the whole bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not; but as before stated the Chair does not decide that, for the reason that it belongs properly to the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the

The Chair will now repeat the proposition so that there may be no mistake in reference to the point as proposed. The gentleman from New York having accepted the amendment offered makes his motion in this form: that pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union he moves that all debate on the pending paragraphs thereto be closed in one hour.

Mr. KEIFER. On the pending section and amendments thereto;

Mr. KEIFER. On the pending section and amendments thereto; not the paragraph.

The SPEAKER. Yes; the pending section and amendments thereto be closed in one hour, and that there be allowed in addition five minutes to advocate and five minutes against any amendment which may be offered to this section hereafter. But that these shall be amendments of a substantive nature and not mere pro forma amendments.

The proposition being submitted to the House, it was agreed to.

DEFICIENCIES FOR 1881.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of defi-ciencies for the year 1881 and for prior years; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REFUNDING THE NATIONAL DEBT.

The SPEAKER. The resolution of the gentleman from New York having been agreed to, the question now recurs on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the funding bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, (Mr. COVERT in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill known as the funding bill. Under the order of the House all discussion upon the pending section and amendments thereto is limited to one hour. As to other amendments, which are of a substantive nature, to the bill, debate is limited to five minutes; five minutes to be utilized by the friends and five minutes by the opponents of the measure.

The pending question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 5 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"From and after the 1st day of May, 1881, the 3 per cent. bonds authorized by the first section of this act shall be the only bond receivable as security for national-bank circulation, or as security for the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the public money deposited with such banks; but when any such bonds deposited for the purposes aforesaid shall be designated for purchase or redemption by the Secretary of the Treasury, the banking association depositing the same shall have the right to substitute other issues of the bonds of the United States in lieu thereof: *Provided, That no bond upon which interest has ceased shall be accepted or shall be continued on deposit as security for circulation or for the safe-keeping of the public money; and in case bonds so deposited shall not be withdrawn as provided by law within thirty days after interest has ceased thereon, the banking association depositing the same shall be subject to the liabilities and proceedings on the part of the Comptroller provided for in section 5234 of the Revised Statutes of the United States: *And provided further, That section 4 of the act of June 20, 1874, entitled 'An act fixing the amount of United States notes, providing for a redistribution of the national-bank currency, and for other purposes, be, and the same are hereby, re-enacted."

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD Mr. Chairman I am very desirous if

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am very desirous, if possible, to remove an erroneous impression which, in my judgment, exists in the minds of many very intelligent and honorable members of this House with reference to the probability of the negotiation of the 3 per cent. bonds at par. If I had entertained any doubt on the subject myself before this time, I hold in my hand an authority, that is recognized and conceded to be an authority throughout all parts of the United States, which would set at rest any such impression. I repeat, if I had entertained any doubt upon the subject, this article we have, Mr. Chairman, for many years, had published in the city of New York a high financial and banking authority known as the Commercial and Financial Chronicle of New York. This paper is kept by all bankers and capitalists and moneyed institutions of all characters, who refer to it constantly as settling doubtful questions upon any financial subjects. I desire, therefore, to ask the Clerk to read the article which I have marked from its last Saturday's issue, which is the most recent publication of that journal.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Griefa Read has made rapid progress at Washington. It looked at one time as if the House was about to resolve itself into a party of obstructionists, but later wiser counsels have predominated and 3 per cent. and a five to ten year option are the conditions the bonds are to bear if the views of the House provail. We should have liked to see a little longer date for maturity named, or some discretion in the interest rate given the Treasury Department. And yet there is a very good prospect for the successful negotiation of the loan in its present shape. We dislike much the provision which attempts to force banks to use the bonds as a basis for circulation. That section is a kind of a signal of distress, and a silly one at that. If Congress does not want banks to issue currency it has the power, and we hope the dignity, to say so directly; if it does want them to issue it, we but utter an evident truth when we say that banks will do so only in case it is made profitable to them. So far as Wall street is concerned, the disposition is to look favorably on the bill and to discount its passage and the successful negotiation of the bonds.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Chairman, in addition to that I hold in my hand a copy of the London Economist, which is the greatauthority in England on financial matters. It is a paper that has been continuously printed for probably one hundred years, and is regarded as an able authority upon all questions of finance. Without detaining the House to read a lengthy article I will simply quote an extract from it showing that the Indian Government has just succeeded in negotiating a new loan at 3½ per cent., while the old 4 per cent. loan yields as an investment only 3½ per cent. interest. The article to which I refer is as follows: article to which I refer is as follows:

The action of the Indian Government in issuing the new loan for £3,500,000 at 3\frac{1}{4} per cent, shows a praiseworthy promptitude in making use of the existing position of the money market for the advantage of India. It will assist in removing the traditional feeling which, based probably on the company's 10 per cent, stock, has so long associated India in people's minds with borrowing at high rates of interest. The present price of India 4 per cent, stock, which, assuming conversion when it is redeemable at the end of eight years, now yields the investor only 3\frac{1}{4} per cent.

Now, as regards another point, it has been declared on this floor and repeated, especially by my honorable friend from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] whom I do not see in his seat, that at no time have the British consols reached par. I hold the London Economist as authority for stating that they not only have reached par and three-eighths besides, but in the month of November they reached 2 per cent. premium, showing conclusively that the reliance which some gentlemen have placed on intelligence they have received in reference to a question with which they acknowledge they are not practically acquainted is not well founded, and that the facts, the absolute sales, negotiations and investments prove that the United States bond when free from taxation will readily be sold at par, and in my judgment it will command a small premium within a very few months.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask, if the extract from the Financial Chronicle be authority on one point it is not also authority on the other, that the proposition contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, designed to compel the banks to take these 3 per cent. bonds, is as the paragraph states, a signal of distress, and a silly one

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. It is for the gentleman to form his own opinion as to that.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The real reason why the United States can negotiate this bond at 3 per cent., and cheaper than any other nation, is because the United States to-day is substantially and financially stronger before the world than any of the other civilized financially stronger before the world than any of the other civilized nations that borrow money.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the United States stands so strong financially and this loan is a popular loan, so that we do not want the intervention of the banks, but the people are ready to take it, why is this amendment brought in here that compels the banks, that draws the cord tightly around them and says you shall take those bonds?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I want this to be a popular loan just as was the case when France appealed to her citizens. France in her moment of distress appealed to the body of her people, threw aside the Rothschilds, the syndicates, and appealed to the great body of the people, and succeeded to an extent that many of the advertisements for loans were covered forty times over by the bids of the people. And to-day the indebtedness of the French Government is held in small sums among the masses of the people. The bonds belong to the mechanic, to the landholder, to people of every class; and the consequence is that the whole body of the people are interested in maintaining the credit of the Government of France as the whole body of the people's representatives in this House should be engaged in upholding instead of decrying the credit of the American Government.

Mr. WEAVER. If we had as good a financial system as France has our mechanics would hold our bonds too.

Mr. PRICE, Mr. CLAFLIN, and Mr. MILLS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. No member will be recognized until gentlemen who are standing resume their seats and order is restored.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to inquire if the whole hour allotted for debate on this question can be taken up in a discussion of what we have already done?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot dictate to gentlemen the phraseology they shall employ in presenting their views to the committee.

Mr. MILLS. But the House has dictated that one hour shall be devoted to debate on the question now pending before the commit-tee, while the question of the rate of interest and the time the bonds shall run has already been decided irrevocably so far as the Committee of the Whole is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. It is competent for gentlemen to rise to a ques-

The CHAIRMAN. It is competent for gentlemen to rise to a question of order, if gentlemen who are addressing the committee are not speaking on the subject under consideration.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I desire, if it is in order, to make a motion to strike out the first proviso of the pending amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Carlisle.] That proviso, if I understand it, compels the national banks who have bonds on deposit, that was the A or 5 or 6 per cent bands much their falling due on upper may be 4, or 5, or 6 per cent. bonds, upon their falling due, or upon notice being given, to withdraw them and substitute other interest-bearing notes or bonds. If the banks are willing to let their bonds remain after notice and draw no interest, I do not see why we should compel the people to pay interest. If the bankers are content, in other words, to receive no interest upon their bonds, what good policy is it upon the part of the people to pay them interest? I do not see it, and I think, therefore, this provision ought to be withdrawn.

Allow me to add, Mr. Chairman, that this being withdrawn, I regard the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] as almost essential to the pending proposition; and in myjudgment, in his proposition to repeal the sections of the Revised Statutes referred to, he does no injustice to the bankers at all, because it is simply a privilege that they now have and which the Government with-draws from them.

Mr. CARLISLE. Which they did not have for ten years.

Mr. CARLISLE. Which they did not have for ten years.
Mr. WHITTHORNE. But I submit to my friend from Kentucky that he will give strength to his proposition by withdrawing the pro-that he will give strength to his proposition by withdrawing the proviso I have referred to.

Mr. CARLISLE. The law as it now stands, and as it has always existed since the establishment of the national banking systems, requires these associations to deposit as security for their circulation bonds of the United States bearing interest, but it contains no provision which prohibits a bond from remaining on deposit as security for bank circulation after it has ceased to bear interest. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Whittinoxe] moves to strike out from the proposed substitute the provise which prohibits the bond from the proposed substitute the proviso which prohibits the bond from remaining on deposit as security for the circulation of the bank or for public deposits after it has ceased to bear interest; and he urges in support of his proposition that if the bank sees proper to allow its bonds to remain with the Treasurer after the interest on them has

Now I submit to the gentleman that this case may arise, (if these banking associations shall determine to enter into combination to prevent refunding under this act,) and probably will arise, that the people will be paying interest on these 3 per cent. bonds, notwithstanding the banks may have on deposit as security for their circulation bonds upon which interest has ceased under the law.

Suppose, for instance, that the Secretary of the Treasury should Suppose, for Instance, that the Secretary of the Treasury should sell $100,000,000 of 3 per cent. bonds and receive the money for them. Those bonds will begin to bear interest from the moment he sells them, and the money he receives for them will go into the Treasury and remain there in the hands of the Secretary for the purpose of reand remain there in the hands of the Secretary for the purpose of re-deeming the 5 and 6 per cent. bonds which have been deposited by the national banks as security for their circulation. Suppose such banks shall refuse to withdraw their fives and sixes, notwithstanding interest has ceased to run upon them. We would then have a state of affairs in which the Secretary of the Treasury has put on the mar-ket interest-bearing bonds to the amount of $100,000,000, and has hoarded in the Treasury and withdrawn from circulation $100,000,000 to pay these fives and sixes, which he cannot pay because the banks refuse to surrender them.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle] seems to suppose that the Secretary of the Treasury will sell bonds when there is no necessity to sell them for redemption purposes.

when there is no necessity to sell them for redemption purposes.

Mr. CARLISLE. Not at all. This bill says he shall sell them and realize money with which to redeem the 5 and 6 per cent. bonds; and the holders of the 5 and 6 per cent. bonds, notwithstanding the Secretary of the Treasury has sold 3 per cent. bonds, and has in the Treasury the money to take up the other bonds, may refuse to surrender them, and the Secretary would then be compelled to hoard that money in the Treasury until such time as it shall suit the pleasure of these institutions to take the money from him in redemption of the bonds they have deposited to secure their circulation. The of the bonds they have deposited to secure their circulation. The effect will be to withdraw from circulation $100,000,000 and contract the currency to that extent, which, in my judgment, would be a great the currency to that extent, which, in my judgment, would be a great disaster to the country.

It is to meet that probable case that this provision is inserted in the proposed substitute, so that we may accomplish, if it be practicable to accomplish it at all, this process of refunding without injuring the business of the country and without contracting the currency. That is the sole object of the provision.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. One word in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Carlisle,] and it is this: that under the operation of this law the city banks will take advantage of the country banks and compal them to submit to their terms. Under your existing laws.

and compel them to submit to their terms. Under your existing laws, I submit that there are bonds on deposit as security for circulation which are not drawing interest.

Mr. CARLISLE. That is so.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. And why? Because the country banks do not want to pay the existing premium on bonds to be deposited as security for their circulation. The operation of the pending amendment, as it now stands, will be to put the country banks at the mercy of the city banks.

Mr. CARLISLE. The country banks can purchase the 3 per cent. bonds without paying any premium thereon, and substitute them for the bonds now bearing no interest whatever, which they have on deposit as security for their circulation. To that extent it would be a benefit instead of a disadvantage to the country banks. They would receive 3 per cent. Interest on their bonds deposited, whereas now they receive nothing in the cases supposed by the gentleman.

Mr. ROBINSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentreky IMr. CARLISLE I a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] a question.
Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly.
Mr. ROBINSON. The amendment of the gentleman, as printed in the RECORD, gives the Comptroller of the Currency the powers described and set forth in section 5224 of the Revised Statutes. I understand that the gentleman would have it read "section 5234." Is that so? that so ?

Mr. CARLISLE. That is correct.
Mr. ROBINSON. The committee should observe that the distinction is this: in the one case, under section 5224, the Comptroller of the Currency in case of default on the part of any bank has the right to sell in the public market the bonds deposited by the bank, and after satisfying all demands pay over the balance to the bank. But under section 5234 the Comptroller of the Currency has the right to put the bank in the hands of a receiver, close up its entire business, and close up the bank. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky intends institute.

Mr. CARLISLE. I intend that the refusal on the part of the banks either to withdraw their circulation or reduce their circulation and thereby take up these bonds on which interest shall have ceased to run, or to substitute other bonds for non-interest-bearing bonds, after the time stated in the amendment, shall have precisely the same effect as the refusal of a bank to redeem its circulating notes has—precisely

Mr. ROBINSON. And put it in the hands of the receiver.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. CARLISLE. I would like to say further—

Mr. TUCKER obtained the floor and said: I yield my five minutes

Mr. TUCKER obtained the floor and said: I yield my five minutes to my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE.]
Mr. CARLISLE. I simply desire to say, in further response to the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, that there is no reason whatever why any national banking association in this country should ever incur the penalty prescribed by the proviso in this amendment. By the first section of this bill the interest upon the 5 per cent. bonds, which it is now proposed to refund, will not cease until the expiration of three full months after they have been designated for redemytion by the Secretary of the Tresury; and cease until the expiration of three full months after they have been designated for redemption by the Secretary of the Treasury; and under the proviso which was added upon motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Randall, the Speaker of the House] the interest upon the 6 per cent. outstanding bonds which it is now proposed to refund will not cease until the expiration of thirty days after they have been called for redemption by the Secretary of the Treasury. Therefore every banking association of the country which has bonds on deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury as security for its circulation, or for the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the public moneys, will have in the one case four full months to surrender its circulation and take out its bonds or to substitute other bonds; and in the other case the banks will have two full months in which to do the same thing. Now, if there be a banking association in this country which does not avail itself of this ample opportunity to preserve its existence and transact its business under the law, it certainly must be because it really desires to go into liquidation; and never until that occurs can this proceeding be taken against it.

Mr. CLAFLIN. Mr. Chairman, there are many things in this amendment besides those referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee which ment besides those referred to by the gentleman from remiesses which require explanation before it can meet my approbation. In the first place, as I read the amendment, the three percents are to be substituted for all the bonds now in the hands of the banks, whether they be four percents, four-and-one-half percents, five percents, or six per-

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Oh, no!
Mr. WARNER. That is not the effect of the amendment.
Mr. CLAFLIN. The language is perfectly clear. If it is not intended to have the effect I have pointed out, it ought to be amended. It says that the only bonds deposited by the banks after the 1st of May next shall be these three percents. If the gentleman does not mean that, he should correct the language of the amendment. I will read it for the information of the House:

From and after the 1st day of May, 1881, the 3 per cent, bonds authorized by the first section of this act shall be the only bonds receivable as security for national-bank circulation or as security for the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the public money deposited with such banks.

It does not say banks starting thereafter, but provides that these shall be the only bonds receivable.

Mr. CARLISLE. After that date.

Mr. CLAFLIN. It does not say that.

Mr. CARLISLE. Oh, yes, it does. The language is, "from and after the 1st day of May."

Mr. CLAFLIN. But in the Treasury Department this will probably be construed to mean bonds on hand. That Department is bound

Mr. CLAFLIN. But in the Treasury Department this will probably be construed to mean bonds on hand. That Department is bound to construe provisions of this kind in the closest possible manner, and there should be nothing doubtful in the language. It is the duty of the friends of this amendment to make it clear.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The gentleman will pardon me a moment. In the amendment which I reported from the Committee on Ways and Means I inserted the word "thereafter" after the word "receivable" so as to remove any possible doubt.

Mr. CLAFLIN. But that is not in this amendment.

Mr. CLAFLIN. If that is the meaning, the amendment should say so. Then, again, by the amendment repealing those sections you take from the large banks any chance to have an adequate amount of circulation. A bank starting with $3,000,000 of capital can have only $500,000 circulation. You compel the bank to take $1,000,000 of these bonds before it can start, and you make the tax on $500,000 of circulation $17,500, or $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., which is paid into the Treasury. I think it is not generally understood that under this amendment no bank can have more than $500,000 of circulation.

Mr. CARLISLE. Do I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to say that no banking association under the law as it now stands can have a circulation exceeding $500,000 ?

setts to say that no banking association under the law as is now stands can have a circulation exceeding $500,000?

Mr. CLAFLIN. No new bank. Does the gentleman wish by this amendment to require that no bank shall be established unless restricted to this amount of circulation, thus establishing an inequality between the different banks? There is no question that this provision takes away all power from the Secretary of the Treasury to establish new banks except with that limited amount of circulation. In consequence of such a restriction the banking capital of this country has increased and 50 000 000 in two large very. While the second try has increased only $8,000,000 in twelve years. While the population has increased 13,000,000 the banking capital of the country has increased only $8,000,000—not a dollar to a person.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The limitation as to circulation does not grow out of this amendment, but out of the existing law—the law of $124 if the property of the second country in the law of $124 if the property of the second country is a second country to the second country to the law of $124 if the property of the second country to the second country to

Mr. RANDALI, (the Speaker.) The land of the existing law—the law of 1874, if I remember rightly.

Mr. CLAFLIN. But by this you revive those laws.

Mr. RANDALI, (the Speaker.) Not in that particular.

Mr. WEAVER. The limitation on the amount of circulation grows out of the resumption act of 1875.

Mr. CLAFLIN. Then, again, the gentleman wishes to take from the Treasury fifty millions of dollars or more held for the purposes of resumption, when, as every gentleman knows, the Treasury to-day has for the protection of the legal tender notes only 33 per cent., or even less, including money of every kind belonging to the United States—gold, silver, and notes.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I for one have not the least confidence in the editorials which are presented here and read that have been prepared and published since this discussion commenced. I do not mean to insinuate they have been inspired here, but I do mean to say they could be and likely have been manufactured to meet the say they could be and likely have been inspired here, but I do mean to say they could be and likely have been manufactured to meet the emergencies of this case and uses to which they are here put.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Randall, the Speaker] says he wishes to have this a popular loan, and he has taken frequent occasion to disclaim any intention on his part to attack the national banks. And I reply the bill under consideration as now amended is against a popular loan, and compels a forced loan of the national banks or their discontinuance as the alternative, as has been declared by some gentlemen, who have taken part in this debate, to be their

As has been well said by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLAFLIN] there has been no increase in the capital of national banks during the last five years. On the other hand, since 1875 the volume of capital thus invested has decreased over seventy million dollars. That class of investment to-day is not so profitable as to invite capital. With the prosperous times which we have had, there has been no corresponding increase of capital investment in national-bank stock.

And we confront the other fact, that the rate of interest to-day is higher than it has been at any time since 1874. The Comptroller states in his last report:

The average rate of interest in New York City for each of the fiscal years from 1874 to 1880, as ascertained from data derived from the Journal of Commerce and The Commercial and Financial Chronicle, was as follows:

1874, call loans, 3.8 per cent.; commercial paper, 6.4 per cent. 1875, call loans, 3.0 per cent.; commercial paper, 5.6 per cent. 1876, call loans, 3.3 per cent.; commercial paper, 5.2 per cent. 1877, call loans, 3.0 per cent.; commercial paper, 5.2 per cent. 1878, call loans, 4.4 per cent.; commercial paper, 5.1 per cent. 1879, call loans, 4.4 per cent.; commercial paper, 5.1 per cent. 1889, call loans, 4.4 per cent.; commercial paper, 5.1 per cent.

And when we speak of call loans it is of a class of loans made upon Government securities or those equally as good. The average rate of interest at all our commercial centers upon unquestionable securities has been above the rate of 4 per cent. And yet substantially a call loan it is claimed by the other side can be placed at the rate of 3 per cent. As I have remarked, it has been disclaimed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [the Speaker] that there was any intention of striking at the national-bank system; and there are paraded here statements of the immense amount of profit national banks can make upon these bonds as deposits for their capital and circulation because they escape taxation, when it is a fact that every dollar that goes into a Government bond and thence into bank capital is taxed to its full actual value. In every State in the Union the most stringent laws have been passed, until it is notorious that Government bonds owned by national banks pay a much larger rate of taxation than is paid by any other species of personal property. The logic of the situation and of the proposed legislation is, the national banks must to the extent of two hundred millions take a 3 per cent. 5-10 loan, though they cannot afford it though money commands a higher rate to the extent of two hundred millions take a 3 per cent. 3-10 loan, though they cannot afford it, though money commands a higher rate of interest, or withdraw from business.

I repeat, the scheme of the bill is not to place a popular loan, as it is claimed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but to force a loan from the banks; or if that is not the object and purpose, it is to force from existence the national-bank system. If any further evidence were needed on that point it can be found in the amendment of the gentleneeded on that point it can be found in the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Carlisle.] By it sections 5159 and 5160 of the Revised Statutes are to be re-enacted, so that the bank cannot take its bonds out of deposit until it brings in its circulation, which is almost an utter impossibility, scattered as it is over the entire country. Section 4 of the act of June 20, 1874, afforded relief. It contained the reasonable provision that whenever a national bank wished to withdraw its circulation it could deposit lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States to its amount and withdraw its bonds. This afforded full security to bill-holders. Under the provision of the gentleman from Kentucky, once the bonds are deposited the banks must go into liquidation and go out of existence as the only way of getting them from the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Let me say to the gentleman from

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Let me say to the gentleman from New York the surplus of the banks now amounts to $120,000,000, and they have been making dividends right along. Therefore I do not think it can justly be claimed they have suffered any hardship. By the act of 1863 the Government takes gold from individuals and issues certificates and pays no interest upon them; and by the act of 1878 it takes individual silver, issues certificates for it, and pays no interest. Yet the banks receive interest on every transaction with the Government. The bare recital of these facts shows at once the difference between banks and individuals, and the advantages which are given to the banks over individuals, and the advantages which are given to the banks over individuals.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to say a word in answer to the gentleman, and I hope I shall be allowed to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels constrained to say that the time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will give me the time out of his own.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I will give the gentleman my time when I can get the floor.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yield it now.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I have not got the floor, and only get it by a sort of rush. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired, and the Chair must of necessity enforce the rule.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, there can be no question whatever, it seems to me, about the right of the Government to prescribe what bonds shall be deposited as security for circulation and what the interest on those bonds shall be; whether it shall be 5 per cent., 3 per cent., or 2 per cent., or whether they shall bear any interest at all. Nor is there anything whatever in the nature of forced loan connected with this question. The Government simply prescribes what bonds after the passage of this act shall be deposited as security for circulation. If the banks do not choose to deposit the bonds and continue their circulation, they have the right to withdraw it; and that circulation. If the banks do not choose to deposit the bonds and continue their circulation, they have the right to withdraw it; and that is all there is to it. There is no forced loan about it.

Now, will the banks withdraw or surrender their circulation rather than accept and deposit as security for notes a 3 per cent. bond? I stated the other day that whether they would or not depended upon the rate of interest at which they could loan their capital. I had not then made or seen any figures or calculations in reference to the subject. But it is a question of profit alone; not a forced loan, but simply a question of a rithmetic. I have here some figures to which I ply a question of arithmetic. I have here some figures to which I wish to call the attention of gentlemen who are opposing this bill on the ground that the national banks may reduce or withdraw entirely their circulation. It will be seen by a little inspection that they will not withdraw their circulation unless they can loan their capital at more than 13 per cent.; and why? Simply because it is not their interest to do so. Take, for instance, a bank with a capital of $1,000,000. It is entitled under the law to a circulation of $800,000; to secure this it must deposit bonds to the amount of $900,000.

Now, as to the results: $900,000 at 3 per cent. yields $27,000, which is the interest the bank receives on its bonds. On this amount the bank gets $800,000 of circulation, less $40,000 of reserve which it must deposit as a redemption fund in the Treasury, leaving $670,000, which, if it loans at 5 per cent., will amount to $38,000 more. Or if loaned at 7 per cent. it amounts to $52,200, and at 10 per cent. to $76,000. Take the 1 per cent. tax off and you have a profit to the banks with interest at 5 per cent. of $57,000, at 7 per cent. of $71,200, and at 10 per cent. of $95,000. Suppose, now, instead of depositing bonds and taking circulation the bank loans the capital, it would have to invest in bonds to secure circulation at the same rates as given above; what would be the result? It would lose $12,000 if loaned at 5 per cent., $8,200 if loaned at 7 per cent., or $5,000 if loaned at 10 per cent. Or rather it would make so much less. If the banks could loan the capital invested in bonds deposited for circulation at about 13½ per cent. it would be their interest to so loan it rather than deposit it for circulation and loan the circulation; but short of that rate of interest it would be more profitable to take the circulation and loan that, as the would be more profitable to take the circulation and loan that, as the plain figures show. The question, therefore, which bankers will consider will be simply one of arithmetical calculation—a question of profit and loss, and nothing else.

I will put the figures I have given in tabular form for more convenient inspection. I have assumed the bonds to rate at par. If they had to be bought at a premium it will change to the extent of interest on the premium the result; but should the bonds fall below par the result would not be changed as long as the bank held the bonds. The following presents the figures in tabular form:

Circulation : Capital stock Circulation allowed by law. Three per cent. bonds required			$1,000,000 800,000 900,000
Results: $900, 000, at 3 per cent	$27, 0 0 0 -	e27, 000 =	$27,000
760, 000 loaned, at 5 per ct	38,000; at 7%,	52, 200; at 10	%, 76,000
Less 1 per cent. tax	65, 000 8, 000	79, 200 8, 900	103, 000 8, 000
Profit	57, 000	71, 200	95, 000
at 5 percent	45,000; at 7 %,	63,000; at 10	%, 90,000
	12.000	8.200	5 000

When the lending rate rises to about 13½ per cent. there will be no gain in taking circulation; and no doubt it would be refused somewhat short of that rate, as there must be some inducement to take the circulation; but with the rate of interest less than from 10 to 12 the circulation; but with the rate of interest less than from 10 to 12 per cent. the circulation would be preferred.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I would like to ask my colleague if he is in favor of destroying the national banks?

Mr. WARNER. That question is not involved here at all. They will continue in existence as long as they find it profitable, and I have shown that it will be more profitable to them to take a 3 per cent. bond and get their circulation on it and loan that than to loan direct the capital they invest in bonds. I do not hesitate, however, to say that I am opposed to intrusting the issue or regulation of currency to banks at all. Nor have I changed my opinion as to the practicability of extending this loan much beyond the banks requiring these bonds for their circulation.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, if we were endeavoring to pass a bill

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, if we were endeavoring to pass a bill here for the purpose of preventing the funding of the national debt, I can think of only one or two alterations which could be made to make it perfect, and one is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, which, I say to him in all candor, strikes down, if adopted, every country national bank in the United States and drives them into liquidation. At least I think that will be the inevitable result of his amendment. The country banks cannot possibly live and do business profitably with a circulation based on 3 per cent. and do business profitably with a circulation based on 3 per cent-bonds, especially if you remove nene of their burdens of taxation. You gentlemen upon the democratic side of this House have a method of opposing and finding fault with everything that is existing to-day. I have made a little list of the things I have listened to and heard you oppose on this floor. You are opposed to national banks. You are opposed to private banks. You are down on the railroads. You are down on all corporations. You are no friend of the bondholders. You are opposed to the tariff. You want to repeal the tax on whisky, and you would like to take the revenue tax off of tobacco. You are opposed to the tariff. You want to repeal the tax on whisky, and you would like to take the revenue tax off of tobacco. You are opposed to the improvement of our harbors. You are opposed to the defense of our cities and harbors. You want to reduce the Army. You want to cripple the Navy. You are opposed to home defenses. You are opposed to all laws and subsidies which would lead to shipbuilding, and which would benefit our shipping on the high seas. You are dissatisfied with the management of the Indian affairs; unhappy over our postal system; you find fault with our Supreme Court; abuse our public officials generally, and you are opposed to a fair election and an honest count. [Laughter on the republican side.]

Now, what institutions are you in favor of? I have tried to look up and see, but have found nothing that you really seem to unanimously favor except forgery, fraud, and free whisky. [Great laughter on the republican side.] I may be mistaken, but it is certainly an unfortunate habit you have all fallen into of placing yourselves in opposition to everything in existence which contributes to the real welfare of the country.

The combined action of men of means and the institutions built up by organized labor are the distinguishing marks of our modern civilization. The prosperity of the country depends largely upon the success of all such undertakings.

Now, my young friend from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] says that the reason why he joins in these complaints is because there is a wail continually coming up from the people all over this land, a wail of opposition to banks, bondholders, and corporations. He says the people are opposed to all interest, opposed to those institutions which develop the industries and resources of our great country. Now, my friend will excuse me if I say to him that I think he is mistaken. The wail in Iowa is not on that account. The wailing party in that State went from 48,000 down to 32,000 in the last election. [Laughter on the republican side.] Right after the Maine election my friend will not claim that there was any wail among the democrats in Iowa, for all over our country they were the happiest fellows in the whole land. [Laughter.]

Some of us who knew that that election in Maine was a simple green-

Some of us who knew that that election in Maine was a simple green-back victory, wondered at their making so much fuss about it. But they became so anxious for something to shout about, got into such a queer habit, that every time a greenback pullet laid an egg during the entire campaign, they did all the cackling. [Laughter.]

In addition to this complaint of the people, we hear another thing. They tell us the reason we should oppose this funding business is because the interest in a hundred years or a thousand years figures up cause the interest in a hundred years or a thousand years figures up fearfully. So it does. Aggregates are appalling things to shape one's conduct by. Every man who eats ordinarily takes up in eating twenty-three whole days in a year. In an ordinary lifetime that would consume four and a half years. Think of a man's eating four and a half years! [Great laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED was recognized and yielded his time to Mr. Horr.

Mr. HORR. Still I always sit down and take my lunch three times a day notwithstanding the appalling nature of that aggregate. And again, every man who lives out the period allotted to many men sleeps twenty-three years. If you should let that thought take possession of you, you would never take another nap. Interest accumusleeps twenty-three years. If you should let that thought take possession of you, you would never take another nap. Interest accumulates; still the manly way for this nation to do is to pay its interest promptly until it can discharge the principal.

I say that this country believes in some of the present institutions. We submitted some of these questions to the people last November. The bank question, the currency question, the tariff, resumption, were all in direct issue in that campaign. The people rendered their verdict. There was not then, nor has there since been, any such complaint from the people as these men would have us believe. After verdict. There was not then, nor has there since been, any such complaint from the people as these men would have us believe. After Maine came Indiana. Then there was undoubtedly a wail on the part of our democratic friends, but it was not on account of the public debt. Whether the bonds should bear 3, 4, 5, or 6 per cent. did not enter into their grief. It was because they saw "the handwriting on the wall." The 184,000 republicans in Iowa did not wail. The gentleman will hardly claim that. After November the situation became still more serious to the democrats; but it was not the funding of the public debt that so bothered them then. What worried them after November was a peculiar disease that seemed to have ing of the public debt that so bothered them then. What worried them after November was a peculiar disease that seemed to have taken possession of some of their leading men just before the election, a sort of color-blindness, so that they did not know the handwriting of their own neighbors, long-time comrades. [Laughter.] I know how to sympathize with them. I have always been troubled with that color-blindness myself. I could never tell certain shades of blue from green, especially after dark; and God knows it was dark enough for the democracy after Indiana to excuse some blindness. [Great laughter.]

what I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, is this: we submitted these financial questions to the American people. By an overwhelming majority they decided that our banking system is a good one; that the currency of the country is satisfactory. They decided that these institutions which you would break down are beneficial; that the tariff is best for the people; that it is a good thing to build up our home industries.

Then why should we have these continued attempts to break down these national banks? Why, sir, there is no class of institutions in the United States to-day freer from political meddling than the national banks of this country. Their directors and members are usually among our best and most enterprising citizens. I never in my life among our best and most enterprising citizens. I never in my life knew a national bank, as such, to give a dollar for any political purpose. [Laughter on democratic side.] As a rule they keep entirely aloof from all politics. There are some democrats who are national bankers, perhaps not so many as there are republicans, but that grows out of the fact that the large majority of the business men of the country are republicans. The banks are not to blame for this. I say there are no institutions in the whole land farther removed from political corruption or even from meddling in politics than are the national banks of this country, and I do not own a dollar in one of them.

Then why all this prejudice and continued legislation against them? It is plain that we ought to pass a bill here whereby we can fund our maturing bonds at a lower rate of interest. I would give the Secretary of the Treasury a little discretion in the matter, so that if the loan cannot be placed at 3 per cent. he shall be permitted to place it at 3\frac{1}{2}. Let us go at this work like business men, if we would accomplish anything. The suspicion is strong that most of you do not desire to fund the debt at all. I believe we ought to fund it, and that we can do it with a long-time bond at 3 per cent. Such a bond might be sold. But the moment you add short time to a low rate of interest you destroy the possibility of selling these bonds, notwith-standing the article which my friend from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] has just had read.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Here the committee informally rose and the Speaker took the chair.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

signed bills of the following titles:
An act (H. R. No. 460) granting a right of way to the county of Warren, in the State of Mississippi, and the Memphis and Vicksburgh Railroad Company through the United States cemetery tract of land near Vicksburgh, Mississippi.
An act (H. R. No. 4006) authorizing the Blue Hill National Bank of Dorchester, Massachusetts, to change its location and name.
An act (H. R. No. 6256) for the relief of certain settlers on restored railroad lands.

FUNDING BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Horn.] They do not merit the slighest notice. It is the most unsatisfactory thing in the world the slighest notice. It is the most unsatisfactory thing in the world to strike at nothing. I wish, however, to submit a few remarks upon the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Carlisle,] and particularly on that feature of his amendment which repeals the fourth section of the act of June 20, 1874. In my judgment it is both wise and just to repeal this section. Under the law as it now stands a national bank may retire its circulation in whole or in part by depositing lawful money with the Secretary of the Treasury and withdrawing a proportionate amount of bonds. It then becomes the duty of the Government to redeem the outstanding circulation to the extent required by the deposit of lawful money, and the expense of said redemption is borne entirely by the Government. If they are to be allowed to retire their circulation and take up their bonds, let it be done at their own expense. Do not compel the people to pay a tax be allowed to retire their circulation and take up their bonds, let it be done at their own expense. Do not compel the people to pay a tax for the privilege of being robbed.

How has that law operated? By reference to page 19 of the last annual report of the Treasurer of the United States, it will be found that its operation has been very deleterious to the business interests of the country; that the banks, in the language of the Treasurer of the United States, have not conducted their business with a view to the welfare of the country, but solely with a view to their own profit; that they have retired and expanded their circulation whenever they have seen prepare without regard to the business interests of the have seen proper, without regard to the business interests of the country, and that they are controlled entirely by the price of Government bonds; that the most shameful practices have grown up under this extraordinary and iniquitous section.

Illustrations are given in that report. One where a bank having a circulation of $450,000, within the brief period of three years, at three separate times, reduced its circulation to $45,000, and as often extended it to $450,000, without any regard to the business interests of the country, but simply for the purpose of securing the premium on the country, but simply for the purpose of securing the premium on its bonds deposited as security for its circulation. Through the operation of that law, that bank at one time had in actual circulation $852,550, when it was authorized under the law to have but $450,000,

other banks have been repeatedly guilty of the same thing. Thus the currency of the country is made the mere plaything of these national banks, the mere instrument to serve the purposes of private speculation; to be retired or expanded whenever it suits their purpose, without regard to the demands of commerce. Now, we demand that this dangerous and constantly abused power shall be taken away from the banks, and that the circulating medium shall not be so easily withdrawn, but shall be kept where it belongs, afloat among the people. Sir, it is safe to say that whenever a dollar is placed in circulation it should never again be permanently withdrawn. This very practice of contracting and canceling our circulating medium has caused more bankruptcy, crime, misery, and heartache than all other legislation put together from the foundation of the Government down to the present time. It is the worst kind of class legislation. It is the power put together from the foundation of the Government down to the present time. It is the worst kind of class legislation. It is the power conferred by law upon a few capitalists to rob and plunder the balance of mankind. Thank God, the discussion of this bill has laid bare the fact that the national banking system is but a temporary expedient. That its longest possible lease of life is the life-time of our national debt. The debt and the banks will perish together, and perish quickly.

The people will not be long about settling this question. This public debt, this cancer upon the body-politic must be torn out even to its roots. The honorable Speaker of this House alluded to the financial condition of the French people, and said that the debt of that country was held by the great mass of her people. So it is, and so will our laborers and mechanics be able to do the same thing when we shall have adopted, like France, a sensible financial policy when we have $50 per capita in circulation, our laboring population will be tranquil and prosperous, and all classes of men who now shirk the just burdens of society will forever disappear.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. CARLISLE. I am very reluctant, Mr. Chairman, to appear to be consuming more than my share of the time allotted to this debate, and yet I desire to say a very few words in response to one or two of the points made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.] That gentleman asserted that there was a less amount of nationalbank notes in circulation now than there was five years ago.

bank notes in circulation now than there was five years ago.

Mr. HISCOCK. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I asserted that there was a less amount of capital invested in national banking now than there was five years ago.

Mr. CARLISLE. Then I misunderstood the gentleman, and I was prepared to show by statistics from the Treasury Department that the banking circulation is very considerably larger now than it was five years ago.

The gentleman also asserted that if the amendment proposed by

The gentleman also asserted that if the amendment proposed by me shall be incorporated into the bill, then, when a bank has once placed its bonds on deposit as security for its circulation or for public deposits, there will be no way in which it can withdraw that circulation except by closing up its business and going into liquidation.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to interrupt the gentleman right there. I said there was practically no other way. Under the provisions of the law which he proposes to revive, the only way is by a surrender of its circulation, which is practically impossible.

Mr. CARLISLE. If this amendment shall be adopted, or that part of it to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] refers, then these national banking associations, with reference to their right to retire their circulation and withdraw their bonds, will stand precisely where they stood from June 30, 1864, until June 20, 1874, a period of ten years, and I presume no gentleman here will undertake to assert that during that period the business of these institutions was not reasonably profitable.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman allow me to make another suggestion to him?

Mr. HISCOCK. Whithe gentleman abow he to make another auggestion to him?

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly.

Mr. HISCOCK. What created, what brought into force the law which the gentleman proposes to repeal was that national banking, compared with other business, had ceased to be profitable. That law was intended to enable them to withdraw from the business of national banking, and from that time to this the amount of capital invested in national banking has steadily decreased until within the last two or three years.

last two or three years.

Mr. CARLISLE. One of the reasons, and I presume the principal reason, for the passage of the fourth section of the act of June 20, 1874, was that at that time there was supposed to be outstanding a redundancy of paper currency. On the 1st day of July, 1874, there was outstanding in United States Treasury notes, national-bank notes, and all other forms of paper money, $781,490,916; whereas on the 1st day of July, 1880, there was outstanding of such currency only $735,522,956, or more than forty-five million dollars less than there was in 1874, although the volume of business transacted in the country was these to maching larger in 1880 than in 1874.

It was thought that this redundancy of circulation could not be reduced with sufficient rapidity under the slow process required at that time by the law, which was for the national banks to redeem their own circulating notes and present them to the Treasury Department for the withdrawal of their bonds deposited as security for such circulation. Consequently the act of June, 1874, was passed, which authorizes these national banking associations to deposit currency with the Treasurer of the United States, and thus throw upon the United States the labor and expense of redeeming their outstanding

The effect of that has been, as shown by the report of the Treasurer of the United States, sent to this Congress at the beginning of its present session, that many of these national banks have speculated in the bonds of the United States deposited in the Treasury Department for security of their circulation. They have carried on in that Department two and three and four and sometimes five different accounts at the same time on the books of the Government; in some of which they were reducing their circulation and withdrawing their bonds, and in others of which they were increasing their circulations. culation and depositing bonds as security for the new notes issued. In such cases the United States Government was all the time, at the expense of the people, printing new notes and delivering them to the banks.

The CHAIRMAN. By the order of the House discussion upon the pending section and amendments is exhausted. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky,

[Mr. CARLISLE.]

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Is not my amendment striking out the first

The CHAIRMAN. It was the understanding of the Chair that the amendment was simply suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee for the information of the House, and was intended for subsequent action, in the event of the failure of the pending amendment. The action, in the event of the failure of the pending amendment. The status of this matter, as the Chair understands, is this: the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Fernando Wood,] chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, presented a verbal formal amendment to the bill as reported by his committee; to that amendment the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle] presented for the consideration of the committee the amendment which has been under discussion. The Chair holds, therefore, that, there being two amendments pending at this time, no further amendment is now in order. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 100, noes 97.
Mr. KEIFER called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CARLISLE and Mr. DUNNELL were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 128, noes 101. So the amendment of Mr. Carlisle was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from New York as amended.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Is the amendment indicated by myself now in order ?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.
Mr. WHITTHORNE. Then I move to strike out the first proviso.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following:
"Provided, That no bond upon which interest has ceased shall be accepted or shall be continued on deposit as security for circulation or for the safe-keeping of the public money; and in case bonds so deposited shall not be withdrawn as provided by law within thirty days after interest has ceased thereon the banking association depositing the same shall be subject to the liabilities and proceedings on the part of the Comptroller provided for in section 5234 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this proviso, if not struck out, will be in my judgment to compel some of the banks of the country to go into liquidation or into the hands of a receiver. Mr. PRICE. That is the intention.

Mr. WARNER. It cannot have that effect for five years.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I cannot see, Mr. Chairman, why we should object to any of these institutions continuing as banking institutions without receiving interest upon their bonds. In other words, I do not see why we should compel the people to pay interest on bonds to the amount of the circulation of any bank, if the bank is willing to retain as security for its circulation bonds bearing no interest. In my opinion, if this provision be retained, the city banks, which have

In my opinion, if this provision be retained, the city banks, which have In my opinion, if this provision be retained, the city banks, which have under the banking laws a portion of the reserves of the country banks to operate upon, may combine so as to take advantage of the want of financial wisdom of the country bankers; in other words, may compel them to pay the price of bonds as dictated by the city bankers. Believing that this provision will accomplish no good and that its tendency is hurtful to the people, I think it ought to be stricken out.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Certainly.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, The gentleman takes exception to the provision that hereafter the national banks shall not hold as security for their circulation any overdue bonds on which interest has ceased. Now, it has been asserted that the banks cannot afford to maintain a circulation upon a deposit of bonds bearing only 3 per cent. If the a circulation upon a deposit of bonds bearing only 3 per cent. If the banks can afford to have a circulation upon bonds bearing no interest, why can they not afford to take at par a 3 per cent. bond giving them that much interest?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Why not leave this matter, for a short time at least, to be regulated by what may be the interest of the banks?

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I cannot conceive that the rate of interest on these bonds will cause I cannot conceive that the rate of interest on these bonds will cause any bank of the United States to go into liquidation. So far as the question of interest is concerned, I do not doubt that with 3 per cent. bonds the banks will find it to their interest to go on in business. But there is a reason which has not been adverted to why many of the banks, as I conceive, will see that their going out of existence is only a question of time, a very short time; and this may prevail upon them to cease operations at once rather than take bonds that may be called in within the next five, six, or seven years. The real trouble is that the foundation of our national banking system depends upon the indebtedness of the Government; and just as the business prosis that the foundation of our national banking system depends upon the indebtedness of the Government; and just as the business prosperity of the country enables us to pay off this indebtedness, to that extent the banks become insecure, and the superstructure must give way. It will be a question with many of the banks whether they will wait to go out of business, when they must necessarily do so within a very limited time. There are now $199,000,000 of 6 per cent. bonds outstanding; and I think it can be said with absolute certainty that not many of the banks will buy 4 and 4½ per cent. bonds at the rate which must now be paid in order to obtain security for their circulation. But this bill will give them an option they would not otherwise have; it will enable them to purchase 3 per cent. bonds as a basis for their circulation. What will be their condition if we make no change in the present law? The banks will be compelled within five years—those who have the 6 per cent. bonds within less than a year—to give up their circulation necessarily; and that will create a far greater contraction in the currency than can be caused by this proposed legislation. I say the difficulty with gentlemen on the other a far greater contraction in the currency than can be caused by this proposed legislation. I say the difficulty with gentlemen on the other side is that the banks are founded upon the indebtedness of the country, and therefore just as that indebtedness is paid off—and this House has determined it shall be paid off as fast as we are able to pay it and within ten years—many of these banks will begin to set their houses in order for the purpose of going into liquidation. And that is the trouble and there is the difficulty with gentlemen on the other side. The whole difficulty comes from this payment of the public debt. If they want to continue these banks, this bill will place no obstacle in their way. And it is perfectly right in another view that the Government should use these bonds as long as they can be made the instruments to aid the Government for the purpose of carrying out its policy of paying off the public indebtedness. The great object of the establishment of national banks was not to give us uniform circulation, but as any one will find who will read the reports of the former distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, Chase, the main object was to find a market for the bonds of the Government of the United States and for the purpose of maintaining the great its result. United States and for the purpose of maintaining its credit. That, sir, was the great purpose; and when gentlemen who are the friends of the banks oppose this bill upon the ground they are now opposing it, they are making far more enemies than friends for the real and original object of the national banks, which was to aid in sustaining the eredit of the Government.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri what he would have the banks do? I refer to the banks which would be compelled to take these 3 per cent. bonds which we now propose to issue. What would he propose they should do after the Government paid those bonds off ?

Mr. BUCKNER. This provides they can buy 4 per cent. and 4½ per cent. bonds.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, no! they are prohibited from doing that. Mr. KEIFER. This bill already provides for it.
Mr. BUCKNER. This bill already provides for it.
Mr. BUCKNER. No; the bill expressly provides for it.
Mr. CARLISLE. But it provides that just as soon as the Secretary of the Treasury has designated for redemption any of these 3 per cent. bonds, not even waiting until he has paid them, but as soon as he has designated them for redemption, then the national banks may substitute other bonds in lieu of them.

[Here the harmon fall]

The question recurred on Mr. Whitthorne's amendment.
The committee divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 76.
So the amendment was rejected.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to strike out the closing provise of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE.] It provides for repealing section 4 of the act of June 20, 1874. I desire to strike that out for this reason: Section 5159, Revised Statutes, provides for the deposit of bonds to secure circulation to an amount not less than $30,000, and not less than one-third of the capital stock paid in. Section 5160 provides that the amount of such pledged bonds shall be increased as the capital is increased and shall never fall below one-third of such capital, and further provides for the withdrawal of said bonds upon the return of the circulating notes of the issuing bank. That is the old law which the amendment proposes to restore. of said bonds upon the return of the circulating notes of the issuing bank. That is the old law which the amendment proposes to restore. Now, sir, that was found to work bally for the obvious and well-known reason that when a bank puts out its notes the bills scatter like the swallows, and you scarcely ever see them again in any great quantity. They melt into the general mass of circulation. They are all good, all secured at Washington by the deposit of bonds, but I say the banks never get them again. So it was, under that law, exceedingly difficult for a bank to retire its circulation and regain its bonds.

Mr. PRICE.

Mr. PRICE. Some never have come in yet.
Mr. HAWLEY. Wherefore, by section 4 of the act of June 20, 1874, it was provided, that if a bank would bring greenbacks, the Government's own notes, to an equivalent amount, that is, to an amount equal to the value of its notes out, then it might have its bonds back immediately. That is common sense, just, fair, and secure for everybody. The banks could then wind up business promptly if they desired to do so.

If they desired to do so.

That is what the gentleman from Kentucky desires to repeal, and he would go backward nearly seven years against an exhaustive discussion, running through two sessions of Congress, and against the uniform experience of the whole banking interest of the country, and revive a provision which has been shown to be utterly impracticable. The motive for that is beyond my comprehension altogether. It is a part of a series of measures that is going to make it impossible for men to engage in the business of national banking. When a man fires a gun down a crowded street and kills somebody, the law does not excuse him on his saying he did not mean to kill anybody, but he is held to intend that which is the natural result of his action; and I am instified in saying that all the elements there are of hosand I am justified in saying that all the elements there are of hostility to a sound national banking system, the best ever known in the world, are arrayed in favor of this bill and these successive, mischievous provisions. The result of their success would be the destruction of the circulating functions of these banks, and then would follow the most depressions. struction of the circulating functions of these banks, and then would follow the most dangerous condition of a national currency ever known, a condition involving ultimate inflation, speculation, bankruptcy, and probable repudiation; that is to say, there would follow issue of paper money by the flat of Congress, its volume to be dependent upon the whims and passions of a majority and not upon natural laws. And, although I have much respect for this body in general, I can have no confidence in its wise exercise of the power of issuing illimitable quantities of irredeemable paper.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am exceedingly sorry I cannot make the argument I have ready. It would take me five minutes longer.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, some gentleman on the other side of the House a few days ago took occasion to eulogize the republican management of the finances of the country; and I simply wish to say a few words in that connection. I wish to call attention to the fact, that of a certain issue of Treasury notes authorized to be issued by law, in the process of redemption the Secretary of the Treasury used nearly one million of dollars more of the funds for that purpose than was ever legally issued. In other words, of the one year 5 per cent. Treasury notes issued under the act of March 3, 1863, the report of the Secretary shows that there were $44,520,000 issued. His subsequent report shows that there were redeemed $45,473,320, or an report of the Secretary shows that there were $44,520,000 issued. His subsequent report shows that there were redeemed $45,473,320, or an excess of redemption over the issue of nearly one million of dollars. I want to give the gentleman that eulogizes the management of the Treasury full opportunity to look into this matter or to explain it in any way, for which reason I will cite him to the page and figures and let him take his time to dispute it.

On page 75 of the finance report, Executive Document, volume 7, the Secretary of the Treasury reports that of the one-year 5 per cent. notes there were issued, all told, $44,520,000 of the one-year 5 per cent. interest-bearing Treasury notes. In Executive Document, volume 3, of 1865, the Secretary of the Treasury reports the amount of that issue that was redeemed. I give you the page. It will be found on page 48 of that document, volume 3, for 1865, Executive Document. That for the redemption of the one-year 5 per cent. Treasury notes under that act of March 3, 1863, $38,473,320 were used, which would leave remaining about six million dollars. Again, in 1866, (Executive Document, volume 3, page 38,) he reports the balance of that issue redeemed as $7,000,000. Now, add together the first amount of the redemption, that is to say, $38,473,320 that were redeemed as against an issue of $44,520,000, being an excess of redemption over issue of $953,320. But some gentlemen may say, inasmuch as these were interest-bearing notes, that the difference was caused by the fact that the interest was included. My answer is that the gentleman who makes the assertion will find that in addition to stating that this amount was issued for redemption purposes, he will find on page 37 of Executive Document 3, for 1865, the interest is included. Now I want the gentleman to explain, or I would like the Secretary of the Treasury to explain, if his books tell the truth and if his report nearly a million of dollars in excess of the amount issued. demption of the Treasury notes mentioned in his report nearly a million of dollars in excess of the amount issued.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman from Kentucky ought to have an opportunity to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should be glad to have the committee rise in order that we might go into the House and extend the time for debate. I have suffered myself from the order of the House limiting it.

Mr. PRICE. The debate has been confined to a few gentlemen.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) My object was to enable the gentleman from Kentucky to explain his amendment, the scope of which the gentleman from Connecticut has misapprehended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state in response to the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa, that it has been the desire of the Chair to recognize gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber alternately without any effort at partiality.

Mr. PRICE. It certainly was not my intention to reflect upon the chairman, who I know has an onerous duty to perform and is placed in an exceedingly embarrassing position. But, as the Chair will find in our rules, it is specially provided that no gentleman shall speak twice to the same question until other gentlemen desiring to do so have been heard. been heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is aware of the rule to which the gentleman from Iowa refers, and had any gentleman risen in his place and directed the attention of the Chair to this rule the Chair would have applied it; but the point of order not having been made, the Chair did not feel called upon to take cognizance of the fact himself and insist upon the enforcement of the rule.

The question is on the amendment submitted by the gentleman fram Connecticut.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 77, noes 102.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HASKELL. My point of order is that I have been recognized by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. I desire to submit the amendment which I send to the desk

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be reported. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the close of section 5 the following:

"And any bank duly chartered or incorporated and doing business under the laws of any State shall, on transfer and delivery to the Treasurer of the United States of registered 3 per cent. bonds authorized by the first section of this act, be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes in the same manner, proportion, and amount as is authorized and prescribed by law for national-bank associations, which circulating notes shall be subject to the same regulations and taxation as is or may be prescribed by law for the issue and taxation of circulating notes furnished to national-bank associations, and any law or part thereof in conflict with this provision is hereby repealed."

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to ask the mover of the amend-Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to ask the mover of the amendment, which has just been read whether in giving this privilege to the State banks all the provisions of taxation applicable to national banks would apply; or whether it is designed to give the State banks certain privileges not possessed by national banks?

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr MILLS. That it is not germane.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And I make the further point of order that it is substantially the same as a bill now pending before

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] desire to address the Chair on the point of order?

Mr. HATCH. I prefer to speak to the merits of the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman can do that by

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is the question of order raised by the gentleman from Texas; and to that question the gentleman should direct his remarks.

tleman should direct his remarks.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized to speak on the merits of the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. I am advised by the report of the Comptroller of the Currency that on the 31st day of May, 1880, we had 4,456 State banks, savings-banks, trust companies, and private bankers in the United States, with an aggregate capital of $194,136,825 and a deposit account of $1,319,094,576.

The surpose of this amendment is to aid in placing a short-time.

The purpose of this amendment is to aid in placing a short-time, low-interest bond issued by the Government at par. Since the commencement of this discussion we have heard from every side of the House complaints that a 3 per cent, bond based upon the period of five to ten years could not be placed by the Government of the United States at par in the present financial condition of the country. Ah, gentlemen, if you will break the monopoly given to the national banks alone, and allow the private bankers and the State banks of this country the same privilege of placing their reserve funds in the 3 per cent. bonds of the country, provided for by this act, thus popularizing this great loan, you will find it will not be as gentlemen characterize it, a "forced loan" by the Government, but it will become a popular loan, taken by the people, and glad of the chance to take it.

why should not the State banks, why should not a bank doing business under a State law have the same privilege of buying the bonds of the United States, depositing them with the Comptroller and receiving the same percentage of the same currency accorded to the national banks upon the same terms, the same taxation, and the same regulations as govern the national banks? It is not proposed by this amendment to make State banks national banks, or to bring them within the general provisions of the laws governing national banks. But so far as the control of this currency is concerned they will come under the same laws, the same rules, and the same regulations, and pay the same taxation that the national banks do.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. They can do it now.

Mr. WEAVER. What is there to prevent a private bank or a State bank from organizing now as a national bank under the existing law?

Mr. WEAVER. What is there to prevent a private bank or a State bank from organizing now as a national bank under the existing law? Mr. HATCH. As previously distinctly stated, I do not propose by this amendment to compel State or private banks to organize under the national-bank act or to come within its general provisions to secure this privilege. Let the privilege go with the buying of the bond and depositing it with the Comptroller of the Currency. The security would be the same, the rules and regulations governing it would be the same.

The only difference would be that in

The only difference would be that instead of this large surplus held by the State banks, in your State and mine, wherever that surplus exists the banks could deposit it with the Comptroller of the Currency in these 3 per cent. bonds and bring back 90 per cent. of that amount of money to circulate among the people where the banks exist, to aid in the commercial transactions of the country. And not only that, but it would break down the power of any limited number of banks, national or otherwise, to control the price of these bonds in the banks, national or otherwise, to control the price of these bonds in the market.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as an original proposition I am not in favor of this bank currency. I am not in favor of the national-bank currency. I prefer the substitution of the legal-tender notes—of the Treasury notes—to the entire system of national-bank currency. But I know that such substitution cannot be made during the expiring days of this Congress. And recognizing that fact, I would do the next best thing that can be done in the interest of the people: I would give to every organized representative of money in this country the authority and the power and the right to buy this bonded debt, deposit it, and receive this circulation. To what extent they would avail themselves of this privilege I am not prepared to say, but I would extend it to them. Break the monopoly, destroy the exclusive prerogative of national banks to control so large a proportion of the circulating medium of the country, and to the extent that tion of the circulating medium of the country, and to the extent that State banks should avail themselves of the privilege the demand for the bonds would be increased, the circulating medium enlarged, and the danger of a sudden contraction of the currency avoided.

The result of the adoption of this amendment would be to give to The result of the adoption of this amendment would be to give to the country a banking system organized and doing business under State laws, and in all matters except paper circulation subject to State control, while the Federal Government, as it now does, would control the issue and secure the certain redemption of all the paper money of the country.

money of the country.

Mr. CARLISLE. I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HATCH,] and I propose to do so by showing that the amendment just adopted by the Committee of the Whole ought to stand without further amendment of any sort.

In the first place, I desire to say in response to the gentleman that under existing law a private bank or a State bank can at any moment organize under the national banking act and avail itself of all the privileges conferred upon a national banking association. It will become thereby exempt from the 10 per cent. tax on its circulation and enjoy all the privileges and immunities enjoyed by the national banks.

leges conferred upon a national banking association. It will become thereby exempt from the 10 per cent. tax on its circulation and, enjoy all the privileges and immunities enjoyed by the national banks.

And now, sir, a word in reply to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. Hawley.] After the best examination I could give to the subject, my opinion is that it was not the intention of Congress by the passage of the fourth section of the act of June 20, 1874, to repeal sections 5159 and 5160 of the Revised Statutes. But last April the Attorney-General of the United States, upon a question submitted to him by the Treasurer, decided that the provisions of that fourth section were inconsistent with the provision of the two sections of the Revised Statutes I have named, and that therefore they were constructively repealed. And what, sir, has been the effect of that decision? By sections 5159 and 5160 every national banking association is required to keep on deposit with the Treasurer of the United States bonds equal in amount to one-third of its capital paid in, and in no case less than $30,000. And if they desire to reduce their circulation and withdraw their bonds they must themselves take up that circulation and produce it at the Treasury Department for cancellation and for the withdrawal of their bonds. But under the construction which has been placed upon these laws by the Attorney-General, a national banking association with $5,000,000 of capital need not place on deposit with the Treasurer more than $50,000 in bonds.

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. CARLISLE. I assert that by the provisions of the fourth section of the act of June 20, 1874, (and I refer the gentleman to that act,) the only limitation upon the reduction of the amount of bonds on deposit as security for circulation is that it shall not be reduced below $50,000, whereas under the act of 1864, as embodied in the Revised Statutes, the national banks were required to keep on deposit in the Treasury, as a security against the impairment of their capital, an duce the amount of their circulating notes to the extent of $200,000,000, and by that means to contract the currency to that extent. Now, if my amendment shall stand as adopted by the committee, the reduction of the currency must be slow and gradual; whereas if the law is left to stand as it is now these national banks may take currency into the Treasury Department, deposit it there, and demand that the United States shall redeem their notes for them at its expense, and this enormous contraction of the currency may take place immediately and to the great detriment of the public interest.

Mr. PRICE. I know the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle] means to be right. He has made that statement twice, and he is in error about it.

error about it.

Mr. CARLISLE. To what extent?

Mr. PRICE. In regard to that point—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted

Mr. PRICE. Cannot I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. CARLISLE. Let him ask it.
Mr. PRICE. With reference to this one point.
The CHAIRMAN. Only by consent.
Mr. PRICE. I hope I will have that consent.

There was no objection.

Mr. PRICE. The redemptions made by the Government for the national banks are not made at the expense of the Government.

Mr. CARLISLE. It certainly is, except that the Government does not pay the notes with its own money. The Government furnishes all the clerical labor and pays all the other incidental expenses of the redemption.

Mr. PRICE. Allow me to say right there that every gentleman who knows anything about the internal workings of national banks will indorse what I say when I make the statement that bills or currency are sent in by the national banks to pay for the expense of that redemption.

Mr. CARLISLE. The largest bill for expense sent to any national bank is $6.28, I believe.

Mr. PRICE. Excuse me; I have myself seen a bill sent to one bank

Mr. CARLISLE. Here is the report of the Treasurer-

Mr. PRICE. Very well; I say I saw that bill myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon the pending amendment. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HATCH.]

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 22,

No further count being called for, the amendment of Mr. HATCH was not agreed to.

Mr. WARD. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk as an addition to section 5.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That all acts and parts of acts imposing taxation upon the capital and deposits of savings-banks, national banks, State banks, and private bankers are hereby repealed; and that all acts and parts of acts imposing taxation upon the circulating notes of national banks issued upon the bonds authorized by this act are hereby repealed; and that all acts and parts of acts imposing tax or stamp duties on checks are hereby repealed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I make a point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I make a point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My first point of order is that the proposed amendment is not germane to the bill. Then I make a further point of order, that two bills of substantially the same character as the amendment now proposed are pending in this House and undisposed of. I have copies of those bills in my hand, and will send them to the Chair that he may compare them with the proposed amendment. One is a bill introduced by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Morton,] and the other a bill introduced by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.]

I will further remark that the Chair has already ruled upon a similar amendment to this when offered to the first section of this bill, and ruled it out of order.

Mr. WARD. Mr. Chairman, there has been no ruling by the Chair since the bill has been under discussion that establishes any precedent for sustaining the point of order now made.

The portion of the bill upon which the Chair was called to rule heretofore was the first section, which relates to the distribution of these bonds throughout the country at large and in every class of investment.

investment.

The section now under consideration is especially directed to the management of these bonds in connection with national banks, and to no other class of purchasers whatever. It is in effect the national bank section of the act. The amendment which I propose is in the direction of controlling the dealings of the Government with the national banks in connection with their taking of these bonds.

My amendment proposes that in case the national banks do take these bonds at this lower rate of interest, and under the limitations contained in the section as amended on motion of my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. Carlisle,] then measurable relief shall be afforded them in the respect of the taking off of certain taxes now levied on their deposits and circulation.

It is not only strictly germane to the bill and the section, it is not only closely allied to it, but my amendment is "bone of its bone and flesh of its flesh." It is therefore not open to the first point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND,] that it is not germane to this portion of the bill. Nor is it open to the second point of order made by the gentleman. If it is, it must be under section 4 of Rule XXI, which provides:

No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or in-corporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House.

corporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House.

What other bill or resolution is now pending before this House of the same substance as the amendment which I have proposed to this bill? It cannot be found. The two bills referred to as now pending before this House, and as having any relation whatever to this subject, are substantive propositions, proposing distinct enactments of their own. This amendment provides simply for the removal of certain taxations upon the fulfillment of certain conditions by the national banks. The bills now before the House provide for that relief from taxation without any conditions whatever. The bill of my friend from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] in regard to the abolition of check-stamps, which is one of the petty annoying vestiges of the burdens of the war, provides a general and unconditional repeal of all laws imposing check-stamp tax. My amendment does not propose any such thing as that.

My amendment proposes that when a certain event shall happen, to wit, when these bonds authorized by this act shall be taken by national banks and deposited by them as security for their circulation, then this check-stamp duty shall be released, and not before. I submit, therefore, that the amendment which I have offered is obnoxious to neither of the points of order made against it by my friend from Illinois, [Mr. Townshend.]

Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, the business people are in much greater danger of injury from this hostile legislation than the banks, for its effect will be this: where money is in demand, banks, having full use for it, will withdraw their notes, sell the bonds, and use the money for discounts. This will curtail circulation, make a greater demand for money, and raise the rate of interest on the business community.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. of Illinois, rose.

munity.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would submit to the gentleman from Illinois that he is prepared to rule upon the point of order, unless the gentleman specially desires to be heard upon it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I want to make one remark in support of the first point of order which I raised.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The subject-matter of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WARD] is taxation mon banks ment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WARD] is taxation upon banks.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to suggest that the question before the committee is the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I am speaking upon that alone.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is addressing himself to the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The subject-matter of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in relation to taxes upon banks. The subject-matter of the bill under consideration, of the fifth section as well as the whole bill, is the issuance of bonds and certificates for funding purposes, an entirely different subject from taxation on banks. I maintain that the amendment is not germane to the bill. The object of the amendment and the object of the bill are entirely distinct and not substantially related to each other.

Now, one word further in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylva-nia, [Mr. Ward.] I make the statement that Federal taxation upon national banks does not exceed in all 2 per cent., while there is a tax upon food and upon raiment and even upon knowledge and religion

mr. HAWLEY. Order!

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If we are to commence the work of reduction of taxes, I insist we shall begin at the other end of the

Mr. HAWLEY. I call the gentleman to order.
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There are men and women starving and freezing to death this winter in sight of this Capitol. Let us first remove the heavy burdens on the necessaries of life—
Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman is certainly not in order.
The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the merits of the amendment is not in order.

not in order

Mr. WARD. There is no country in the world so good to its poor as America.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If amendments reducing taxation are held to be in order, I give notice that I shall offer an amendment which I introduced the other day, as follows:

That on and after July 1, 1881, no duty shall be levied, assessed, and collected on merchandise imported into the United States in excess of 60 per cent ad valorem on any article embraced in section 2504 of the Revised Statutes, and not subject to tax under the internal-revenue laws, except perfumery of which alcohol forms a component part, rum essence or oil, and bay-rum essence or oil, fusel-oil, or amylic alcohol, opium and all preparations of opium, and playing cards.

Now, sin it is extimated by the Secretary of the Tracey we that the Now, sir, it is estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury that the Now, sir, it is estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury that the surplus revenues will, for the current year, amount to ninety millions, while others have estimated them at over one hundred millions. This indicates that we have reached a point where the reduction of taxation may safely begin. If so, we certainly should commence the work with the most onerous burdens. If my amendment is adopted, it will apparently lessen the revenue about seventy-four millions, but still leave a surplus of nearly fifteen and a-half millions annually. In truth, however, its adoption would not result in a reduction of the revenue, because this amendment would stimulate importations, and thereby make up the full amount of the reduction. The present tariff on many articles is not only protective but it is prohibitive, and from such no revenue is collected. This amendment would raise the embargo on such articles. bargo on such articles.

It will, however, if adopted, reduce the cost of necessaries in a much larger sum than seventy-four millions annually, and its effect would greatly diminish the ill-gotten gains of monopolists without injury to our legitimate manufacturing interest. It would bring a happy relief to the poor and result in benefit to the people throughout the whole country, whereas if the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is adopted the Government will lose irrevocably over seven millions of its revenue annually, and only bankers and banks will profit mainly by the reduction. I believe with Jeremy Bentham that "the greatest happiness of the greatest number is the foundation of morals and legislation." If this House holds to the same doctrine some such reform as I am advocating ought to be accomplished. Tell me from whom has the Treasury collected its ninety millions of surplus, and from what source has come the hoarded millions which are overflowing the coffers of the tariff monopolists? Need I answer that these vast sums have been wrung from the people by our iniquitous tariff system. Hunger and cold have been potent allies of the tax-gatherer to secure the enormous tribute to monopoly. The lean wolf does not look in at the door of the impoverished more remorse-essly than does the tariff extortionist and the tax-gatherer. And It will, however, if adopted, reduce the cost of necessaries in a much wolf does not look in at the door of the impoverished more remorse-essly than does the tariff extortionist and the tax-gatherer. And the one brings misery there as well as the other. The laboring man has seen his earnings slip rapidly away from him when wintry blasts have forced him to purchase a woolen coat and pay 90 per cent. of its cost in taxes. The poor widow, when she robes herself in a calico gown, taxed 71 per cent., pays more than "a mite" to the grim allied tax-gatherers, and it may be there is not enough left of her little store to buy high-taxed shoes for her barefooted children. The sur-plus in the Treasury and the bounty to the monopolists come from such as these, and those who buy sugar, taxed 62 per cent.; rice, taxed 100 per cent.; salt, taxed over 60 per cent.; the Bible and school-books, taxed 25 per cent., and all who pay enormous taxes upon nearly everything that goes into the mouth or upon the back. This tribute-money comes from exactions upon food, raiment, intelligence, and religion.

A legend has come down to us from the days of King Edward I, which it will not be inappropriate for me to relate. A large tax, known as danegelt, had been collected by order of the king, which had been conveyed to the palace, and the king was called to see it. At the sight of it he started back, exclaiming that he beheld a demon dancing upon it and rejoicing. Thereupon he commanded that the gold should be restored to those from whom it had been extorted, and released his subjects from that grievous hurden. released his subjects from that grievous burden.

Sir, when I contemplate the oppressive taxes collected through our tariff from the comforts and necessaries of life, I see a dancing demon rejoicing over the unhallowed tribute. I would to God that a spirit as good as that of King Edward's could soften the hard hearts of those on this floor who refuse to relieve the suffering poor from such grievous burdens.

There are some who assail the tax on bankers as iniquitous, and yet they denounce as demagogues those who make appeals for the relief of the people by a reduction of the taxes on the necessaries of life.

I give notice that when the reduction of taxation shall commence, I will resist every effort to begin with the burden so lightly born by oppulent bankers, and will demand that we begin with exactions which impoverish the masses. Almost every day somebody is asking when impovered the masses. Almost every day somebody is asking us to reduce taxation on banks. I will join gentlemen in that work when they join me in measures like the one I advocate to-day.

If banks cannot prosper under 1 or 2 per cent. Federal taxation, how can you expect labor to prosper with 41 per cent. taxation on

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has had occasion before to pass upon question somewhat similar in character to the one now presented. While the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania may perhaps be indirectly of kin to and indirectly associated and connected with the subject-matter of the bill under consideration, yet the Chair is disposed to hold that it is not so directly germane to the question under consideration as under the rules and under decisions made upon those rules would fairly entitle it to be admitted at this time. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to strike out the last two provisos of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Carlisle,] that being different from my previous amendment. I am a little puzzled to know

Mr. CARLISLE: I make a point of order against that amendment.
Mr. HAWLEY. I think that striking out two provisos is a very

Mr. HAWLEY. I think that striking out two provisos is a very different thing from striking out only one.

Mr. CARLISLE. I will state my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Whittenene] moved to strike out the first proviso, and the committee rejected that amendment. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hawley] then moved to strike out the second proviso, and that was voted down. Now the gentleman seeks to avoid the point of order by moving to strike out the two provisos together.

Mr. HAWLEY. A motion which, if successful, will produce a very different effect upon the bill.

different effect upon the bill.

Mr. CARLISLE. Precisely the same effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Connecticut strictly upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Kentucky

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to say just a word. Some gentleman on the other side moved to strike out the first proviso, which would have left in the second proviso. I moved to strike out the second proviso, which would have left in the first proviso. In either case the bill would have been very different from what I propose to make it by this amendment.

Mr. CARLISLE. But the committee refused to strike out either proviso.

Mr. HAWLEY. I know that the Committee of the Whole has refused to strike out either separately; but it has not refused to strike out both.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I shall be compelled very speedily, if we are to be kept here all night with these amendments, to move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate to one minute upon the balance of the bill.

Mr. CHALMERS. If it be in order I desire to offer an amendment as an additional section.

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments are still in order to the fifth section.

Mr. BLAND. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:
"The Secretary of the Treasury shall, for resumption purposes, maintain a reserve of coin in the Treasury equal to 25 per cent, of all legal-tender notes outstanding, and a further sum of coin sufficient to redeem all certificates issued thereon in pursuance of law. The residue of all standard gold and silver coin now in the Treasury, or hereafter to accrue thereto, shall be paid out monthly in the redemption of the public debt on which interest has ceased, and upon the interest-bearing debt of the United States payable in the years 1839 and 1831. It is further provided that he shall pay out, in the manner and for the purposes aforesaid, all other surplus revenues not otherwise appropriated, and the amount of moneys thus paid shall be credited to the sinking fund: Be it further provided. That in order to aid the Secretary of the Treasury to procure the coin herein required, he shall cause to be coined monthly the maximum amount of silver bullion into standard silver dollars in the manner now anthorized by law.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine by lot, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, the particular bonds to be redeemed from time to time in pursuance of this act: Provided, That the bonds bearing the highest rate of interest shall be first paid.

"SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws, so far as the same may authorize the issuing of bonds for the purpose of refunding or redeeming the interest-bearing debt of the United States, be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

The CHAIRMAN. The announcement was made that the fifth section of the bill was under consideration for amendments to the text; but from the reading of this amendment the Chair understands the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] offers it as a substitute for the whole bill.

As an amendment in the nature of a substitute. The CHAIRMAN. If it be offered as an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Chair will recognize the gentleman hereafter.

Mr. CHAIMERS. I move an amendment as an additional section.

Mr. CHALMERS. I move an amendment as an additional section.
Mr. PRICE. I want to move an amendment to this section.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHAIMERS] that his amendment is scarcely in order at this time, the text of the fifth section not having yet been perfected.
Mr. PRICE. I move to amend by adding at the end of the fifth section the following:

Provided, That any national bank depositing the bonds provided for by this bill with the Secretary of the Treasury as security for its circulating notes shall be exempt from all tax on capital, deposits, and circulation by the Government.

Mr. MILLS. I make a point of order on that amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.
Mr. MILLS. My point is that the amendment is not germane to the bill under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa upon the question whether the amendment is germane.

Mr. PRICE. I had hoped that my good-natured friend from Texas [Mr. Mills] would allow this proposition to come in without raising any point of order. This bill provides that hereafter no circulating notes shall be issued to any national bank unless upon deposit of these 3 per cent. bonds. Now I propose to add to that section a provision that when the banks have complied with this requirement and deposited the bonds specified by the law, another thing shall follow. This amendment says nothing about stamps on bank-checks or anything of that kind. It is simply proposed as a continuation of the thing of that kind. It is simply proposed as a continuation of the fifth section, of which, if adopted, it will be a part, and certainly it is entirely legitimate as being germane to the question under consideration. It is simply a continuation of the provisions of this fifth section—nothing more or less, and if the Chair will rule the amendment in order, I will then undertake to give, to the satisfaction I hope even of my friend from Texas, a good reason why the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. MILLS. This is the third proposition that has been presented to exempt from taxation the capital, deposits, circulation or checks of national banks. The Chair has twice ruled that this subject is not akin to the subject embraced in the bill before the House; and I am astonished that gentlemen still persist in bringing such a question astonished that gentlemen still persist in bringing such a question before the House.

Mr. PRICE. Let me correct the gentleman from Texas. He does not mean to be wrong in this matter. My amendment in reference to which the previous ruling of the Chair was made had reference entirely to bank checks. This amendment says nothing at all upon that subject. I agree that that would not be in order as an amendment to this provision; but the amendment I now offer is entirely distinct. Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, we are trying to borrow money—

Mr. PRICE. And I want to help the Government to do so.

Mr. MILLS. We are making provision for putting bonds upon the market to obtain money to meet an emergency. Now, the gentleman comes in and claims that a proposition to reduce taxation, and to that extent put it out of the power of the Government to get money, that extent put it out of the power of the Government to get money, is germane to a bill to borrow money.

Mr. PRICE. My amendment is intended to facilitate the borrow-

Mr. PRICE. My amendment is intended to facilitate the borrowing of money by the Government.

Mr. MILLS. The Chair has repeatedly decided during the discussion of this bill that any measure looking to taxation, either imposing or restricting taxation, is not germanne to the bill.

My friend from Taynesses of the advention of the control of the contro

My friend from Tennessee offered a proposition the other day to impose an income tax for the purpose of meeting the payment of these bonds, but the Chair decided the amendment was not in order as it was not germane to the subject under consideration. Twice before propositions have been offered as amendments to the pending bill for the purpose of reducing taxation on the circulation and deposit of national banks and on checks, and those propositions have been ruled out of order. It has been decided over and over again that the whole question of taxation is foreign to the one we are now considering in the pending bill.

Beside that, Mr. Chairman, there are bills pending in the House to-day and upon the Calendar which provide for the very same objects embraced in this amendment. Therefore, sir, on both points the amendment must be ruled out of order.

Mr. PRICE. In reference to the bills pending before this House containing, as the gentleman says, exactly this provision, I know nothing, and I would have to have the bill presented showing that fact before I could be convinced. Certainly the Chair must have some such bill presented before he can rule the point of order to be well sustained.

I contend the object of my amendment simply is to help sell these bonds. When you issue bonds you must have the market for them. I propose my amendment to the fifth section to facilitate the object in view, to wit, to supply a market for these bonds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has had occasion twice substantially to decide the point at issue, and for reasons previously given for the action then taken the Chair sustains the point of order and rules the amendment out

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of limiting debate, I move the committee rise; and I give notice that when we get into the House I shall move to close all debate on the pending section in one minute.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I hope the gentleman will withhold that motion until I have had an opportunity to offer my amendment.

Mr. WEAVER. Is it the design of the gentleman to limit the debate on substitutes hereafter to be offered to one minute?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. It is.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I am opposed to it, and hope the House will vote it down

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Before the committee rises I desire to ask the privilege of the House to print some remarks. I do not wish to detain the House by submitting them at this time. They are in relation to the amendment I offered the other day against the payment of double interest. It has been urged here and elsewhere the effect was to cost a million of money to the Treasury of the United States. A recital of the laws of 1861 and 1863 will show that instead of that being the fact it will, on the contrary, save $2,000,000 to the Government Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) By the third section of the refunding act of July 14, 1870, it was provided that when the bonds which were to be issued under that act—that is, the five percents, the four-and-a-half percents, and the four-percents—should become redeemable at the pleasure of the Government, the particular bonds to be redeemed should cease to bear interest at the expiration of three months from the date of the notice or call of the Secretary of the Treasury. Under this provision, which constitutes a part of the conmonths from the date of the notice or call of the Secretary of the Treasury. Under this provision, which constitutes a part of the contract, Congress has no power to stop interest upon the outstanding 5 per cent. bonds within a less time than three months after the Secretary has designated them for redemption, and consequently no attempt was made in my amendment; but the 6 per cent. bonds which it is proposed to refund under this bill stand upon a different footing. The acts of 1861 and 1863 under which these sixes were issued contain no provision as to the time when interest shall cease upon these bonds after they become redeemable. The fourth section of the act of July 14, 1870, provides that the 6 per cent. bonds, to the amount of two hundred millions, then outstanding should continue to bear interest for three months after they were designated for redemption. This is the law under which the enormous amounts of double interest was paid in the late refunding operations, and is the law now in force. If the two hundred millions of the 6 per cent. bonds had been refunded under that act, as they might have been, and as one hundred and four millions may still be unless this bill is passed, three months' double interest would have been, or at least might have been, paid on that amount. My amendment to the first section of this bill absolutely prohibits the payment of interest on these sixes for a longer time than thirty days after they are called, instead of three months, as allowed by the act of 1870. This will save to the Government two million dollars interest on these bonds alone.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to print in the RECORD remarks on the refunding bill to Mr. Townshend of Illinois, Mr. Aken, Mr. Price, Mr. Updegraff of Ohio, Mr. Wright, Mr. Townsend of Ohio, Mr. Lapham, and Mr. Anderson. [See Appendix.]

Mr. FINLEY. I move Mr. Chairman, by unanimous consent that all gentlemen of the House who desire the privilege of printing remarks on the pending question may have that opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly. the law under which the enormous amounts of double interest was

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I now insist on the motion that the committee rise, so we may cut off debate on the pending proposition.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Coverr reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Inow move the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of further considering the refunding bill; and pending that motion I move that all debate on the pending section and on the substitute therefor, and on the sixth section and all amendments thereto, shall be closed in one minute. This is not intended to exclude any gentleman who may desire to offer an amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, announced the passage of a resolution for the printing of 10,000 additional copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1880, in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced the passage of joint resolution (H. R. No. 340) in reference to the distribution of the Congressional Record, with amendments; in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced the passage of joint resolution (S. R. No. 137) to create a commission for the performance of certain duties under the act of Congress providing for the erection of a monument at Yorktown and the proposed centennial celebration.

FUNDING BILL

Mr. WEAVER. Pending the motion of the gentleman from New York, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes not counted.

Mr. WEAVER demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

Tellers were not ordered.
So the House refused to adjourn.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I now renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the funding bill; and pending that motion I move that all debate upon the pending section and substitute thereto and the concluding section, which merely fixes the title, shall case in one minute.

tute thereto and the concluding section, which merely fixes the title, shall cease in one minute.

Mr. WEAVER. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. My point is that it is out of order for the gentleman to attempt to limit debate or to conclude us upon the final section of the bill, which has never yet been under consideration.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Then in order to meet the objection of the gentleman from Iowa I will withdraw that portion of the motion.

Mr. CHALMERS. I desire to state that I have also given notice that I will offer an additional section.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will not be precluded from offering an additional section.

ing an additional section.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from New York by making the time for debate two hours.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York, in view of the fact that I desire to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the whole bill, if this motion will cut off debate upon it.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I do not understand the motion which I have made as cutting off the right to offer amendments, but to limit

Mr. BLAND. I only wanted five minutes to explain it.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. My motion is that debate be limited to one minute

Mr. WEAVER. I will modify my motion, Mr. Speaker; in place of two hours to limit debate to thirty minutes.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. Fernando Wood was then agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the proposition of the gentleman from New York, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GILLETTE. Pending that I move that the House do now additions.

Journ.

The motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from New York, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, (Mr. Cover in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House resolves itself in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to further consider the funding bill. Under the order of the House all debate upon the pending section and amendments thereto and upon all amendments or substitutes to be offered as amendments is limited to one minute.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to make an inquiry. There seems to be

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to make an inquiry. There seems to be some misunderstanding whether general leave was given to gentlemen to print remarks upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The House by its action has given general consent to all members who desire to print remarks in connection with this subject

Mr. PRESCOTT. I desire to offer the following as a substitute for section 5.

Mr. CALKINS. Before that is presented I have an amendment to the section which I wish to offer. I suppose it is in order first to perfect the text of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be first in order.

Mr. CALKINS. Then I move to amend the section by inserting after the word "banks," in the fourth'line, as printed in the RECORD, what I send to the desk

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "banks" insert the following:
"Until the amount taken and deposited for the purpose aforesaid shall be equal to the amount thereby authorized."

So that if amended as proposed it will read:

From and after the 1st day of May, 1881, the 3 per cent. bonds authorized by the first section of this act shall be the only bonds receivable as security for national-bank circulation, or as security for the safe-keeping and proper payment of the public money deposited with such banks until the amount taken and deposited for the purpose aforesaid shall be equal to the amount thereby authorized.

Mr. CALKINS. The only purpose, Mr. Chairman, of this amendment is to allow the expansion of the currency beyond the amount authorized by the bill. As it now is, when the 3 per cent. bonds are exhausted, there can be no further expansion of the national-bank currency; and I think if the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky had been called to this fact he would have incorporated the amendment or accepted it as a part of the amendment he proposed.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman from Indiana is mistaken. This is provided for already in the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 61, noes 94.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I now offer as a substitute for the section the following:

From and after the 1st day of May, 1831, the 3 per cent. registered bonds and certificates authorized by the first section of this act shall be the only bonds receivable as security for national-bank circulation authorized by law to be issued thereafter, and all national-bank associations making deposit of the 3 per cent. bonds provided for by the first section of this act shall in the proportion such depositshall bear to their whole deposit of bonds required by law to be made be relieved from and not required to pay the duty "upon the average amount of its notes in circulation" and the duty "upon the average amount of its deposits" provided for by section 5214 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order upon that that it provides for new taxation.

Mr. WARNER. The same character of amendment has been decided already out of order on one or two occasions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New The CHAİRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York and to the committee after the substitute has been read that the question ought properly, in the opinion of the Chair, first to be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky amending the amendment of the gentleman from New York, after which a vote will be in order upon the substitute. The question is therefore first upon the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from New York as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from New York as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, which said amendment has been adopted by the committee.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. If I understand the attitude of this question, the gentleman from Kentucky offered his substitute for the fifth section of the bill, to which I moved some technical changes, after which it was accepted as a substitute for the fifth section.

Then the proposition I make in regard to the fifth section could not apply therefor, and the remaining question will be to test the sense

Then the proposition I make in regard to the fifth section could not apply therefor, and the remaining question will be to test the sense of the House upon the adoption of the fifth section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that there has been no formal adjustment of the matter. The gentleman introduced a formal amendment to the text of the bill, to which an amendment was offered by the gentleman's colleague, [Mr. HUTCHINS.] Subsequently an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, whereupon the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] withdrew his amendment. A vote was taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, and that amendment was adopted.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. It is a substitute for the whole section. The CHAIRMAN. If, therefore, the Chair hears no objection, it will be declared that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ken-be declared that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky and adopted by the committee stands as the fifth section of the bill.

Mr. HASKELL. I object to the adoption of that unless I can be heard upon an amendment to extend the time provided in the first proviso

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds further discussion on that out

Mr. HASKELL. Is it not in order to move to amend the fifth section ?

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments are still in order.
Mr. HASKELL. The Chair, I understand, rules that I am in order.
I move to strike out the word "thirty," in the first proviso, and insert "ninety." I have tried for almost an hour to get the floor and point out to the committee one trouble that I think the gentleman from out to the committee one trouble that I think the gentleman from Kentucky has overlooked.

Mr. CHALMERS. Debate is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that while under the order of the Hoase it is entirely competent for any member to suggest amendments, debate on those amendments is out of order.

Mr. HASKELL. If the House would indulge me for just one moment, I am of opinion the committee will agree to the amendment suggested.

Objection was made.

Mr. MILLS. What has become of the pending point of order? The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is still pending. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. PRESCOTT] on the point

Mr. PRESCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the point of order should have been interposed to this substitute, but I submit that by and under the United States Statutes, 2095, banks have been or-by and under the United States Statutes, 2095, banks have been organized and are now in operation having $193,008,100 of the fives and sixes provided for by this bill. There are now outstanding some $988,000,000 of the four percents and four-and-a-half percents. These banks are authorized by section 5159, United States Statutes, to deposit for organization and currency "any" United States registered bonds, and they have been organized on the basis of that provision. I claim that thereby those banks heretofore organized have a vested right to replace their $193,000,000 maturing fives and sixes with these fours and four-and-a-halfs; and that is also the basis of the plighted honor of this Government in their organization. I believe we have now reached a point where we should pause and consider whether it is best to now attempt to change a national-bank system we have been years in perfecting, and which should not be changed except upon maturer consideration of its effect than can be had here in the Committee of the Whole.

Again, there has been much doubt expressed here as to whether we can float a 3 per cent. loan. This substitute will replace the section

Again, there has been much doubt expressed here as to whether we can float a 3 per cent. loan. This substitute will replace the section as originally intended, excluding all the attempts to change our national-bank system, and offer an inducement for all national banks, by reason of thereby being relieved from the tax now provided by law upon circulation and the average of deposits, to buy the bonds and certificates provided for by this act.

Mr. FERNANDO WQOD. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. My colleague is not allowed when speaking to a point of order to discuss the merits of his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Prescott] that the discussion must be confined strictly to York [Mr. PRESCOTT] that the discussion must be confined strictly to the point of order. Mr. PRESCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I was endeavoring to elucidate to the Chair that this substitute is germane to the intent and object of this bill, and if not interrupted should, I trust, before this have succeeded. With the desire to make this funding bill a success, I offer succeeded. With the desire to make this funding offi a success, I offer this substitute for the present fifth section as now amended, and believe with the fifth section in this form we provide for all the vested rights and interests of the banks and for the certain floating of the bonds and certificates provided for. I therefore submit it is not the bonds and certificates provided for. I therefore submit it is not the subject of a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MILLS. I do not, except to say that the Chair has repeatedly ruled that anything pertaining to taxation is not germane to this bill. The CHAIRMAN. This question has been practically determined in the rulings heretofore given by the Chair; and for the reasons already stated the Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read the pert section read the next section.

The Clerk read section 6 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 6. That this act shall be known as "the funding act of 1880;" and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. CHALMERS. I desire to offer as an additional section what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. — That from and after the passage of this act, all notes of national banks which may be received by the Treasury Department, or by any officer thereof, shall be retained and forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury at Washington, who shall retain the same, and shall not pay them out again for any purpose whatever; but shall assort them, and whenever the notes of any one bank shall be received to the amount of $1,000, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury at to immediately notify the officers of such bank and require them to come forward and witness, if they see fit, the destruction of said notes, and thereupon the bonds of the United States pledged for the redemption of said notes, to an amount equal, after computing the interest thereon, to the said national bank notes so held, and the notes so held shall be immediately canceled and destroyed by the Secretary, in accordance with the provision of existing laws.

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, whenever the notes of any national bank to the amount of $1,000 or more shall be canceled and destroyed under the provisions of this act, to cause to be printed and made ready for use an amount of Treasury notes, under the form provided in the law of 1862 and subsequent acts authorizing the issue of Treasury notes, exactly equal to the amount of national-bank notes so canceled and destroyed; which said Treasury notes shall be issued and paid out, to all persons willing to receive the same, for any and all demands against the Government of the United States, as fast as may be by law authorized and permitted, and when so issued they shall not be held and directed to pur-

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to purchase, without limit, all silver bullion, trade-dollars, and foreign silver coins that may be offered for sale at the market value of silver, and such purchases shall be continued as long as 412½ grains of standard silver can be purchased for one dollar of Treasury notes. All such purchases shall be paid for with this new issue of Treasury notes. And all holders of any of the silver coins of the United States may present the same in any sum not less than $20 and receive therefor Treasury notes at par for the same. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to have the silver bullion, trade-dollars, and foreign silver pieces coined as fast as possible into American silver coins, and to apply all silver coins of the United States that may come into the Treasury to the payment of the interest and principal of the public debt.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amend-

Mr. CHALMERS. I have a right to be heard in support of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the House, discussion is not in order.

Mr. CHALMERS. The Chair, I think, is mistaken. The order limiting debate was only as to the section then pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I raise the point of order on this amendment. I hold it is not in order, in consequence of its being a repeal or modification of our entire currency system, both as regards the legal-tender and as regards the national-bank circulation.

While it substantially cancels the national-bank circulation and substitutes legal-tender potes it fails to make any provision repeal-

While it substantially cancels the national-bank circulation and substitutes legal-tender notes, it fails to make any provision repealing either the resumption act, the national-bank act, or other acts which must be substantially repealed by the adoption of the section. I hold further that the amendment is not germane to the object, spirit, letter, or meaning of the bill. This is simply a bill to enable the Government to borrow money to meet a maturing obligation. That is all there is of it. You may offer amendments; you may make speeches; you may utter soubjetry, and after all you must settle down That is all there is of it. You may offer amendments; you may make speeches; you may utter sophistry, and after all you must settle down substantially to the naked fact that this is a bill to provide means for paying off an obligation now maturing. Any attempt to introduce under the guise of an amendment a substitute which substantially changes the whole currency system of the country, especially when unaccompanied by the repealing clauses which would be required under legislative rules, I hold cannot be in order.

Mr. CHALMERS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] that the Chair feels disposed to hold that the amendment presented is germane. It seeks to provide a way (going into detail somewhat, it is true) by which this indebtedness may be met. The Chair rules that the amendment is in order, and will hear the gentleman from Mississippi upon the merits of the amendment.

amendment

amendment.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, this proposition does not in any way repeal any of the legislation in regard to the currency of the country. It is, in fact, a return to the old-fashioned legislation of our country, when Treasury notes which were not a legal tender were issued. The great objection to the issuance of Treasury notes, as made to-day by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. Hawley,] is that if they be made a legal tender Congress may issue them in unlimited amount. Mr. Calhoun years ago said that a Treasury note of the character provided in this amendment would always protect itself; for if every individual has the option of taking it or not taking it, the Government cannot put out more of such notes than the country needs. In other words, the demands of trade will limit the amount of such circulation. of such circulation.

Now, it is proposed to retire the national-bank notes gradually—not suddenly. It is proposed that as fast as the Government shall receive $1,000 of the notes of any particular bank that bank shall be notified, and this amount of its currency, together with the bonds upon which that currency has previously floated, shall be canceled, and to supply the place of this currency as a circulating medium the Secretary of the Treasury is to prepare these non-legal-tender Treasury notes, of the Treasury is to prepare these non-legal-tender Treasury notes, which are to be paid out in the purchase of silver bullion or to any person who may desire to receive them. It is not made obligatory upon any one to receive such paper. It will stand precisely as the silver certificates now stand. The fact that these silver certificates are purchased with gold is the best evidence that these notes will furnish a currency that will be acceptable to the country. As I have said before, there cannot be an overissne; there cannot be any such thing as too great an inflation of the currency, because no man is thing as too great an inflation of the currency, because no man is compelled to receive these notes unless he so chooses.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, it is useless to continue this discussion, but before the vote is taken I want to say I shall vote for the bill while I neither expect nor desire it to become a law. It is in my opinion wholly impracticable as a funding measure. By refunding the bonds payable this year at the higher rate of 3½ per cent. we may save more than fifty millions of dollars of interest. Hence the necessity for some law on the subject and I vote for the bill expects.

may save more than fifty millions of dollars of interest. Hence the necessity for some law on the subject, and I vote for the bill expecting it to be bettered at the other end of the Capitol.

I think of no public burden attended with greater danger to the people, and but one they should not prefer to a permanent public debt. That one is the burden of discredit which rests on any people repudiating their financial obligations having the ability to keep them.

Those who are giving shape to this measure provide by its terms for the lowest rate of interest and the shortest time. Gentlemen are mistaken if they believe they can secure both. In their anxiety to pass a 3 per cent. bill through the House of Representatives they have conceded conditions which make 3 per cent. impossible if the conditions and time of payment are retained. Again, those who want a short-bond, by which to retain the right to apply revenues as they come into the Treasury in payment of such bond, will find that in fixing the low rate of 3 per cent. interest they have given away such right of payment without purchasing it in the market as we have right of payment without purchasing it in the market as we have been doing at great cost.

In 1879 we sold 4 per cent. bonds at par. In 1880 we bought them back at 9 per cent. premium. In 1880 we paid in premiums $2,795,320 for the privilege of paying on the public debt the surplus money in the Treasury. In view of these facts it is wise to retain in this funding scheme the right to pay on our debt any money in the Treasury for that purpose. This is a right for which we must pay something in interest. Three per cent. is below the rate at which this right of payment can be retained. Those who may seek investments in United States bonds can buy 4 per cent. bonds at the market price and real-States bonds can buy 4 per cent. bonds at the market price and realize more than 3 per cent. interest. How important an element is time as affecting the rate of interest which a bond must bear may be seen in the relative value of our 4 and 4½ per cent. bonds. These two bonds are of equal value in the market because the 4 per cent. bond is payable in twenty-six years and the 4½ bond in ten—the sixteen years in time being equivalent in value to one-half of 1 per cent. higher rate of interest. Tested by this rule, if the five-year 3 per cent. bond proposed by this bill can be negotiated at par, then the twenty-year bond proposed by the bill as it came from the Committee of Ways and Means would be negotiable at par at the low gate of about 2½ per cent., a rate at which no one believes it possible to sell any bond. Nor do I believe that funding in 3 per cent. certificates as proposed by this bill will be much more successful. A hundred millions may be sold for such temporary purposes as call loans, but it will not be any such "popular loan" or "French loan" as we have heard described in this discussion.

The people in whose behalf so much is said here from day to day have no money to lend at 3 per cent, interest. The savings deposits of our people are but for temporary purposes. They might be reached of our people are but for temporary purposes. They might be reached and utilized by the Government directly through a system of postal savings, but that is not this scheme. In the absence of such a scheme savings, but that is not this scheme. In the absence of such a scheme these savings will only be made available for the purposes of this bill by those having enough of financial power and ability to utilize and capitalize these savings, a service for which they will be paid. This House may choose if it will whether it will pay for this service in a reasonable rate of interest on a short bond, or in an arbitrary while insisting upon the practicability of a 3 per cent. loan without regard to time, we are told that the Government is about to assert its "imperial power." In view of the financial practices of the Government I venture the suggestion that the power to borrow money on its own, not to say on reasonable terms, is yet one of its undeveloped "imperial powers." In the discussion of this measure we are advised of the necessity of establishing a credit for the Government as though it was to be in the future its chief business to borrow money. If this bill is made a practical funding scheme it will provide for the last borrowing and funding to be done in connection with the existing public debt. Make it such a measure and the public credit will take care of itself. Again, we are informed that we can borrow money at the rate of 3 per cent. with the option of paying it when we will, because our credit is so well established and because our resources are asserted to be ten to one as compared with any other country. Do gentlemen forget that if our resources are ten to one our opportunities for profitable investments may be twenty to one as compared with any other country?

If I may venture the suggestion, one great hinderance to our credit is to be found in the mutable character of our statesmanship, especially of our financial statesmanship. It will be remembered that the President-elect resisted the retention as part of the currency any portion of the United States or legal-tender notes, characterized them as a forced loan, and insisted that they be redeemed and destroyed. He assisted in demonetizing silver and opposed even its limited restoraernment I venture the suggestion that the power to borrow money on

He assisted in demonetizing silver and opposed even its limited restora-He assisted in demonetizing silver and opposed even its limited restora-tion as part of the money of the country; and yet we find him in his letter of acceptance commending the use of "our store" of silver, ap-proving the retention of the legal-tender notes as part of the currency, describing it "national as the flag," and committing himself against changes in this monetary system as a doubtful financial experiment. That portion of his constituents who were most efficient in securing his election will, in my judgment, be greatly surprised if he omits to recommend some such changes in his first official communication to Congress

Congress.

If I am not mistaken votes have been given and declarations made by those who have given shape to this bill pending its consideration which will not much add to our ability to borrow money at the lowest rate of interest. It had come to be very generally believed that the occurrences of the last few years and the blighting and curing November frosts had brought my own political friends back to their traditional and earlier financial faith. Now, it is not quite certain whether, after short crops or business reverses, many of them would not again be "tenting on the old camp-ground" with the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Weaver.]

Mr. Chairman, while insisting that this bill must be materially and

Mr. Chairman, while insisting that this bill must be materially and substantially changed if we would successfully fund at the lowest attainable rate of interest $637,000,000 payable this year, it may be that I am in error. The success of such a measure depends upon so many conditions that it cannot always be determined in advance exactly upon what terms as to time of payment and rate of interest so many millions of dollars may be borrowed or refunded. After ten years of experience in the large financial operations incident to the cost of war previous to 1870, a funding scheme was enacted in that year by which the public debt was to be funded in 5, 4½, and 4 per cent. bonds. The scheme was abandoned or changed in 1871 by increasing the amount to be funded at 4 per cent. Mr. Chairman, while insisting that this bill must be materially and

In 1876, when the 5 per cent. bonds had been taken, and the law of 1870-71 was to be executed by funding $300,000,000 of 4½ per cent. fifteen-year bonds or $700,000,000 of 4 per cent. thirty-year bonds, the then Secretary of the Treasury (Bristow) insisted it could not be done, and asked Congress for such further modification of the law of done, and asked Congress for such further modification of the law of 1870-71 as would authorize him to sell $500,000,000 of bonds payable in thirty years at 4½ per cent. The present Secretary of the Treasury, (Sherman,) then chairman of the Finance Committee in the Senate, supported the views of Secretary Bristow, and secured the passage of a bill in the Senate giving him the authority asked for. Among those supporting the views of Secretary Bristow and advocating the passage of the bill to fund $500,000,000 in 4½ per cent. thirty-year bonds were the President-elect, the now Director of the Mint, and the present chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. The and the present chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. The and the present chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. The recommendation of Secretary Bristow, thus supported by Secretary Sherman and others of much experience in the consideration of financial questions, was rejected because of what proved to be the more judicious action of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Tucker,] the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Kelley,] Mr. Hancock, of Texas, Mr. Thomas, of Maryland, and now Senator Hill, of Georgia, with such assistance as I was able to give them, all of these gentlemen being at the time members of the Ways and Means Committee. The Treasury Department was thus compelled to execute the law of 1870-71: by funding the 4 per cent. rather than a 44 per cent. thirty-vear bond: by funding the 4 per cent. rather than a 4½ per cent. thirty-year bond; and from then until now the republican party has continued to vaunt and boast of its alleged superior financial achievement.

Less than two years ago we authorized the ten-dollar-certificate funding scheme. Its authors claimed for it the same merit now claimed for the certificates authorized by this bill—that it furnished a convenient investment for the small savings of the people, and placed the Government loan in reach of the people rather than the capitalists. I did not so regard it but advised against it. The power of the organization of the House was invoked then, as it is now, in support of the bill, and it became a law. The ten-dollar certificates so authorized went into the hands of dealers in money and public securities, the Secretary reported at a loss to the Government of $2,000,000.

the Secretary reported at a loss to the Government of $2,000,000.

Added to what seems to me the other unwise provisions of the bill under consideration is the provision compelling payment in ten years. The 4½ per cent. bonds will be payable at the option of the Government in ten years. Under this bill the Government must apply its surplus revenue in payment of the lower rate of interest bond authorized by it, leaving unpaid the bond bearing the higher rate of 4½ per cent. As it is this bill may favorably affect the holders and add to the market value of outstanding 4 and 4½ per cent. United States bonds, but to secure the saving of interest by refunding a considerable portion of the public debt at a lower rate the bill must be substantially amended.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Mr. Chairman, I hope we may perfect this bill at this end of the Capitol, so as not to necessitate any amendment at the other end, and that we shall take time to do it. I rise to say a word in relation to the pending amendment. It seems to me that the gentleman who has proposed it does not mean what the amendment says. I ask the attention of the committee to one provision of this amendment. It provides that all notes of national banks received amendment. It provides that all notes of national banks received at the Treasury shall be retained by the Secretary of the Treasury; and such notes, whenever they reach the amount of $1,000, shall, in the presence of the owner of the notes, be destroyed. What more ? It further provides:

And thereupon the bonds of the United States pledged for the redemption of said notes, to an amount equal, after computing the interest thereon, to the said national-bank notes so held, and the notes so held shall be immediately canceled and destroyed.

Mr. PRICE. Certainly. The object is to get rid of the whole thing at once; to burn up both the bonds and the notes!

Mr. CHALMERS. We owe the banks, and they owe us; one debt cancels the other.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. WEAVER. I move to amend the amendment of the gentle-Mr. WEAVER. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi by striking out in the last line the word "not" and the words "be esteemed and held," so as to read, "shall be a legal tender." The section as offered by the gentleman from Mississippi provides for the issue of Treasury notes, and expressly says that they "shall not be esteemed and held a legal tender." My amendment provides that they shall be a legal tender.

Mr. ROBINSON. I would inquire whether the gentleman wants to change the language declaring that only those persons who want to take these notes will be obliged to take them.

Mr. WEAVER. I will cross that stream when I get to it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not myself think it necessary to make the change. I submit that the scheme will be entirely consistent through-change. I submit that the scheme will be entirely consistent throughout—making the notes a legal tender for every man who wants to take them.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WEAVER, it was

The question being taken on the amendment of the greed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi, by striking out in the first paragraph the clause beginning with the words, "and thereupon the bonds of the United States," &c., and ending with the words, "in accordance with the provisions of existing laws."

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to prevent bankers who return their notes from having their bonds destroyed at the same time the notes are destroyed. However much opposition may be made to the banks, I think all will concede it to be only fair that when they return the circulation for which they have deposited bonds they should at least have their bonds returned to them. This substitute contemplates their destruction at the same time with the

Mr. CHALMERS. If the gentleman will allow me, it does not provide that when they return their circulation then both the bonds and circulation shall be destroyed, but when the Government by due course of trade acquires these bonds by payment for them, they are then to

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. It says these bonds are then to be destroyed, and to prevent any such injustice I have moved the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the discussion of this subject with considerable interest for two weeks. Numerous amendments have been offered and most of them rejected, but the few adopted have, in my judgment, only served to make the bill more objectionable than it was when first reported to this House by the Committee on Ways and Means. It is now in such a shape that I am embarrassed to know whether to vote for or against it, and should I vote for it it will be with the hope that the Senate will so amend and improve its provis-with the hope that the Senate will so amend and improve its provisions as to make it more acceptable to me.

I can see nothing, Mr. Chairman, that is mysterious or intricate about this subject of refunding the bonds, and the application of plain business principles, I have no doubt, will solve what seems to be a difficult problem. The facts, as I understand them, are simply these:

The Government of the United States owes a large bonded debt, $671,207,050 of which is payable in May and June, 1831, and bearing interest at the rates of 6 and 5 per cent.; $250,000,000 more are due in September, 1891, with interest at the rate of 4½ per cent.; and $738,420,400 are due in July, 1907, bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent.

Now, the $671,207,050 in bonds, which are payable at the option of the Government in May and June next, bear a high rate of interest, and the Government has not the money to pay them. That being the case, what is the plain common-sense way of meeting this question? Manifestly to pay these bonds and replace them with others bearing a less rate of interest; and this can only be done by selling the new bonds to those who have money to loan, and who are willing to accept a much lower rate of interest. Congress should therefore authorize the issue of new bonds at a lower rate of interest, but not arbithe purposes of the bill under consideration. In the present temper of this House I believe there is great danger that such restrictions and conditions will be imposed that the bonds will not be a desirable investment, and will fail to find purchasers, and that the credit of the Government will receive a shock such as it has not known for many years, and such as will seriously affect its financial operations in the future. trarily fixed at so low a rate and under such restrictions as to defeat

Much has been said during this discussion about paying off the whole debt, and elaborate statements are introduced to show how whole debt, and elaborate statements are introduced to show how much would be saved to the Government in case this was accomplished. Now, this as a mere sentiment is good, sounds well, and looks well enough in the RECORD; but I have yet to learn how to pay a debt without the money. Micawber, it will be remembered, paid his creditors all off by simply giving them his due-bill, and was so well satisfied with this financial operation that he said it was the happiest moment of his life. But in our day that kind of payment is not regarded as satisfactory in financial circles.

I am not one of those who think a national debt a national bless-

I am not one of those who think a national debt a national blessing. We have a large national debt, and honestly owe it; but I do not believe it to be the part of wisdom or sound judgment to pay it all off in a few years. I think that for the interests of all it will be all off in a few years. I think that for the interests of all it will be best to pursue such a policy as will keep the credit of the nation up to the highest standard, and gradually reduce the debt every month and every year, floating the unpaid portion forward at the lowest rate of interest possible at which the bonds can be negotiated. The present generation has had heavy burdens imposed upon it; but as the country is largely increasing in population, and correspondingly increasing in wealth, resources, and the ability to pay, I see no reason why those who live after us and enjoy the rich inheritance should not liquidate a portion of this debt, made necessary in preserving the integrity of the Union and transmitting it unimpaired to future generations, especially as the rapidly augmenting revenues of the generations, especially as the rapidly augmenting revenues of the country will enable them to do so without serious inconvenience.

The $346,000,000 of legal-tenders is a debt always due and payable on demand. Now, make $300,000,000 in this bill payable at the option of the Government after one year and due in ten years, and $400,000,000 payable at the option of the Government in ten years and due in thirty years, all bearing 3½ per cent. interest, and you have, including the legal-tenders, $646,000,000 payable in ten years, $400,000,000 payable in ten and due in thirty years, and at the option after ten $250,000,000, bearing 4½ per cent. interest, payable in 1891, and $738,420,400 at 4 per cent. interest, payable in 1907.

It will be seen from this brief summary that the national debt will thus be funded at a low rate of interest, running through a period of about thirty years, maturing quite as fast as the Government will be able to pay it without unnecessarily oppressing the people, and will be in such shape as will afford good, fair investments for a certain class of capital. It will invite the investments of the laboring and middle classes throughout the country in small sums, as well as the middle classes throughout the country in small sums, as well as the larger blocks of capital held by savings-banks, trustee funds, and a variety of others, which I think would absorb the entire amount. I believe that the national banks would take some of these bonds, and this would exert a favorable influence on their sale. But it must not this would exert a favorable influence on their sale. But it must not be forgotten in this connection that the question of time has also much to do with the sale of these bonds and in making them a desirable investment for a certain class of capital. Should it be found that the revenues of the country would be more than enough to pay these matured bonds, there is nothing to prevent the Government from buying them in open market with the surplus. There is no probability that the 3 or 3½ per cent. bonds will ever be much, if any, above par bility that the 3 or 3½ per cent. bonds will ever be much, if any, above par.

Mr. Chairman, I am not disposed to go into the discussion of national banks. They are capable of taking care of themselves, and when the laws are too stringent they will close up and put their capital into something more profitable. I propose no legislation especially for their benefit; but as I regard the present banking system as the only one we have ever had that is really safe and satisfactory, and as banks are necessary to the commercial business of the country, it is not wise for this Congress to pass such laws as will force them out of existence, or make it necessary or for their interests that they should return their circulation, thus causing contraction, which would disturb the business of the country and result in great disaster. I may vote for this bill, and if I do it will be with the expectation that in the Senate, where I hope wiser counsels will prevail, it will be so amended as to meet the reasonable demands of the country and be put in a shape more in accord with well-settled financial principles. principles.

The amendment of Mr. Townsend, of Ohio, to the amendment was

The amendment of Mr. Townsend, of Ohio, to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. Chalmers.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I move to strike out the words "and when so paid they shall not be held and deemed a legal tender." I shall support the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi, but it appears to me that those words ought to be stricken out. After providing for the issuance of a large amount of Treasury notes, the amendment says they shall not be a legal tender. Why put that in it? Why not leave the question to the decision of the courts of the country, and let them stand on the footing of any other Treasury notes?

country, and let them stand on the footing of any other Treasury notes?

Now, I am in favor of his general proposition. It is not a new one. It will be remembered when the Warner silver bill was under discussion during the first session of the Forty-sixth Congress, a similar amendment was offered by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Mills,] authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to buy all the silver bullion he could and coin it into silver dollars of 412½ grains with which to pay off the bonded debt of the United States that was payable in coin. It was discussed, and sixty-odd democrats in this House voted for it, I among the number. If it was right then, it is right now; indeed it is much more appropriate now than it was then, for then it was an amendment to a coinage act. Now it is a proposition to raise money to pay off the present indebtedness of the country, instead of issuing bonds bearing interest, to come out of the pockets of the tax-payers of the country. Regarding it in that light, I shall vote for it, and hope it may be adopted. I shall not go back on my vote on the Mills amendment, for I am satisfied it was right; but I do not want the clause in it that the Treasury notes issued shall not be a legal tender, and I hope it may be stricken out, and let the Treasury notes provided for in the amendment rest upon the footing of other Treasury notes now in circulation, and abide the decision of the courts of the country. I voted for the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, and as it has been defeated, I now offer this amendment. I am in favor of raising money in any just way to pay off these bonds, instead of issuing new bonds bearing interest, and which will lead, I fear, to a waste of our large annual surplus and a continuation of this debt, if not a perpetuation of it. It is true we have greatly improved upon the bill as it came from the committee and as it stood when I opposed it the other day in my remarks.

The proposition was then, as reported by the Committee on Ways came from the committee and as it stood when I opposed it the other day in my remarks.

The proposition was then, as reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, who reported the bill, that the debt should be refunded in bonds redeemable after twenty years and payable in forty, bearing 3½ per cent.interest. We have now succeeded by amendments already adopted in defeating the provisions of the original bill offered, and now the bill stands authorizing the issuing of four hundred millions of bonds, redeemable in five years and payable in ten years, and three hundred million of certificates, redeemable after twelve months, both bearing 3 per cent. interest. This is a very different proposition and a much better one—more in the interest of the people and less in the interest of the national banks and capitalist. But, sir, I think it would be greatly improved by the proposition to buy silver bullion and coin it, and pay off the bonds as far as it will go; and it would have been a still greater improvement if the amendment had been adopted taxing all incomes over $5,000 and adding that fund to the annual surplus revenue to pay off these bonds; and if it had been adopted, instead of being ruled out of order, there would, in my judgment, have been not even a pretext of a necessity for even issuing the short bonds and certificates now proposed, for the annual surplus revenue, increased by the income tax, which would be at least fifty million annually, according to the estimates, would have paid off these bonds in five years or less; and with the proposition last embraced in the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Chalmers] would pay it off in still less time, and put the payment beyond all question, and be a saving of millions to the people.

I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi, with my amendment, will be adopted, though I fear from what I have seen here to-day that it will not be adopted. Still, I shall vote for it, because I am satisfied it is the true policy of the Government and for the interest of the tax-payers of the country.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. CHALMERS.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. CHALMERS. The committee divided, and there were ayes 22, noes not counted. So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. This act shall be known as the funding act of 1880, and all acts and arts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move to strike out "1880" and insert

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I move as a substitute that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall, for resumption purposes, maintain a reserve of coin in the Treasury squal to 25 per cent. of all legal-tender notes outstanding, and a further sum of coin sufficient to redeem all certificates issued thereon in pursuance of law. The residue of all standard gold and silver coin now in the Treasury, or that may hereafter accrue thereto, shall be paid out monthly in the redemption of the public debt on which interest has ceased, and upon the interest-bearing debt of the United States payable in the years 1850 and 1851. It is further provided that he shall pay out, in the manner and for the purposes aforesaid, all other surplus revenues not otherwise appropriated, and the amount of moneys shall cause to be coined monthly the maximum amount of silver bullion into standard silver dollars in the manner now authorized by law.

"Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine by lot, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, the particular bonds to be redeemed from time to time in pursuance of this act: Provided, That the bonds bearing the highest rate of interest shall be first paid.

"Sec. 3. That all laws and parts of laws, so far as the same may authorize the issuing of bonds for the purpose of refunding or redeeming the interest-bearing debt of the United States, be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the House as a funding debt of the United States, be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the House as a funding bill is one I shall vote for if I vote for any bill, but this amendment in the nature of a substitute proposes to pay this debt by the coinage of silver to the maximum amount required by law by appropriating all the coin except such as may be necessary for resumption purposes and all the surplus revenues to the payment of this debt. The debt will thus be reduced every month and every year. If the Secretary of the Treasury is to be believed, as well as gentlemen on this floor, we have from $70,000,000 to $100,000,000 of surplus revenues every year to be applied to the payment of this debt, and under this he will be compelled to coin the maximum amount of silver dollars, which at the present price of silver bullion will be $54,000,000 a year.

We provide a coin fund first for the payment of this debt, which is a coin debt. This debt, as proposed under the terms of that amendment, can be paid in five years at a less rate of interest than is proposed in the funding bill now before the House. Mr. Chairman, the ment, can be paid in five years at a less rate or interest than is proposed in the funding bill now before the House. Mr. Chairman, the people demand the payment of this debt while they are able to pay it. The revenues now coming into the Treasury are sufficient to pay the debt in five or six years, and should be applied to that end. Refund the debt now, and reduce the rate of interest, and then it will come on us hereafter as heavy, if not heavier. The revenues of the Government will be wasted in extravagant appropriations, and at the end of ten years we will still have a heavy debt without any revenues equivalent to its payment. This funding bill, as all bills of like nature, tends to perpetuate the national debt, which is a calamity. It is a calamity alike to the debtor and creditor, and the bondholder and the tax-payer. Every class and every branch of business is involved until, in the end, it goes on to a period when repudiation and disaster are reached, and possibly even revolution, with all its grave consequences, is inflicted on the country. I hope, sir, that we will provide now, when we have the means to pay the debt and avoid disaster, which is sure to follow delay.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, to set apart all surplus coin and paper money which may be in the Treasury, from time to time, as a sum for the payment of the said maturing bonds, and for the purchase of silver bullion for minting purposes. The said Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be coined at the mints of the United States standard silver coins to the full extent of the capacity of the mints; and he is hereby authorized to purchase the silver bullion for said purpose as provided in the act approved February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character."

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare Treasury notes to the amount of $340,000,000, with such additional amount as may be necessary to equal but not exceed the amount of national-bank notes in the United States as shown by the books of the Treasury on May 1, 1881. These notes shall be in denominatious of one, two, five, ten, twenty, fifty, and one hundred dollars, as most adapted to the convenience of business, and shall be receivable for all dues, and debts, and taxes of every kind due, or that shall become due, to the United States, and shall be receivable for all dues and debts of all kind due from, or that shall become due from, the United States, where not otherwise expressly stipulated by contract. These notes shall be paid for an equal amount of United States bonds, unless coin is demanded, in which case at least one-half the coin paid shall be silver coin; and to the extent of the demand for coin in excess of the supply in the Treasury, these notes shall be paid for an equal amount of

SEC. 5. That as a further means for raising the necessary funds for the payment of all outstanding Government bonds, it is hereby enacted that from and after May 1, 1881, there shall be imposed upon all net incomes exceeding $1,500 per annum of each and every citizen of the United States, taxes as follows, to wit: a tax of 3 per cent. upon all excess over $1,500; an additional tax of 2 per cent. upon all excess over $3,000; these taxes to be collected under the provisions of "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, and to pay interest on the public debt," approved July 1, 1862, as modified and in fore after the act of March 2, 1867, so far as they may be applicable, with such provisions and penalties as therein prescribed.

SEC. 6. That in case there should not be sufficient accumulations in the Treasury to fully meet all of the said bonds of the United States, only so many of them shall be called in as can be paid under the provisions of this act; but as fast as possible the Secretary of the Treasury shall call in, redeem, and cancel them.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I make the point of order upon that Mr. FRYE. Let us vote it down. We can do that in a little while.

A point of order may be discussed for an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will state his point of order.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. My point of order is that in the first place it is identical or substantially similar with bills which are now pending before this House, and consequently cannot be in order in the committee; secondly, it proposes to impose taxation, which has been ruled a half dozen times during the consideration of this bill to be out of order. Upon these two points I object to entertaining the proposed substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to discuss the point of order?

the point of order?

Mr. GILLETTE. I wish, Mr. Chairman, to question the proposition or statement that there is a similar bill pending before this House. I know of no such bill. I deny the statement that there is a bill pending before the House similar to this one. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] If there is I would like to have the gentleman produce it. There are now about seven thousand bills pending before the House, and probably they cover to a certain extent almost every subject in the universe; but that there is any bill upon which the point of order raised by the gentleman from New York can be made, I positively deny.

Again, with reference to the last point of order made, that this substitute is not germane to the original bill, that it imposes taxation, I would like to say that the object of the original bill is to provide ways and means for meeting certain maturing Government bonds. That is precisely the object sought to be attained by this substitute, and consequently it could not be more germane to the bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Does the gentleman wish this House to understand that they have no right to make a proposition here, or that any member of this House or any number of members have no right to make a proposition that is not absolutely similar and parallel to the one brought in by his committee? If the gentleman makes that assertion and the Chair sustains him, then I say that the majority of this House had better go home and let the Ways and Means Committee make laws. If we are to have no opportunity to open our mouths to suggest propositions to the House, except by the sovereign grace of the Committee on Ways and Means, then we are of very little service here, [cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] and had as well go home.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he does not understand the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa as denying that a bill in substance similar to this one—

Mr. GILLETTE. I do most emphatically deny it.

Mr. GILLETTE. I do most emphatically deny it.
The CHAIRMAN. In any event the Chair will hold that one of the sections of the proposed substitute, the Chair does not distinctly recall which—
Mr. GILLETTE. Section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. Which in substance prevents the carrying on of business by the national banks, is clearly not germane to the subject under consideration. The Chair understands the rule to be that when one section of a proposed bill or substitute is not germane to the original proposition it takes with it the entire substitute, and in that event it cannot be entertained on a point of order even if the remainder of it be strictly germane. For that reason the Chair sustains the point of order of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILLETTE. I am willing, if necessary, to withdraw the section to which the Chair objects. But I submit the point is not well taken for this reason.

taken, for this reason—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa that the Chair has ruled upon the point of order raised against the substitute.

Mr. GILLETTE. With all respect, I make an appeal to the committee for my rights as against the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the gentleman's right, to make an appeal.

peal.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to lay that appeal on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to lay on the table cannot be entertained in the committee. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. GILLETTE. I wish to say a word on that. In reference to the objection that my bill interferes with the business of national banks, if you will avaning the bill you will find that is a mistake for the if you will examine the bill you will find that is a mistake, for the simple reason that all it does in the world is to take from them the simple reason that all it does in the world is to take from them the right to issue national-bank notes and give it to the National Treasury. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is speaking in his own right, and is entitled to be heard.

Mr. GILLETTE. My substitute, therefore, does not interfere with the business of any national bank. It can carry on its business as any State bank does. We have more State banks than national banks to-day, and they have no right to issue their debts as money; therefore the ruling of the Chair that, because this interferes with the business of national banks, it is out of order, falls to the ground. business of national banks, it is out of order, falls to the ground. The Chair will excuse me for expressing my surprise at such a ruling. I never heard of such a point of order before. There is hardly a bill passed of importance that does not affect some business.

As regards the next objection, that the bill proposes a tax, if that point of order is sustained, I will withdraw that section from my bill, but I will add my protest against an arbitrary ruling which deprives the individual members of the House not fortunate enough to have been placed upon the sovereign Committee on Ways and Means of a right to even suggest practical legislation of importance. This House has voted by a large majority in favor of an income tax; but they not only have been unable to get a bill of that kind from the Ways and Means Committee, but when such a measure is modestly proposed as an amendment to a bill to which it is absolutely germane it is ruled out in the interest of the rich.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman cannot do that.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER rose.
The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I understand that under the rules of the House when an amendment is offered the gentleman offering it has the right to modify it before a vote is taken; and I understand the gentleman from Iowa desires to modify his substitute by withdraw-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is undoubtedly correct in laying down the rule as he has done. But the question is whether a modification of an amendment can be made after a point of order has been raised and decided. The question now to be submitted to the committee is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 143, noes 8. So the ruling of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. GILLETTE. I offer as a substitute for the bill what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WILBER. I move that the committee now rise. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] has been recognized.

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield for the motion that the committee rise.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I shall consent when the committee rises to report the bill to the House, and not before.
The question being taken on Mr. WILBER'S motion, there were—

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I shall consent when the committee rises to report the bill to the House, and not before.

The question being taken on Mr. Wilber's motion, there were—ayes 15, noes 142.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment is now pending, on which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Gillette] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GILLETTE. The object of my substitute for the funding bill before the House is to pay these bonds, not to renew them, not to reissue them. I do not provide in that substitute for increasing the circulating medium of this country one dollar. I simply take from the Treasury all surplus coin and Treasury notes, and I further take from the national banks the money which is printed by the Treasury, sustained by the credit of the people, and loaned to them for 1 per cent. tax, and give to the people what is really their own currency in order to enable them to pay this debt.

Mr. Chairman, under the provisions of my substitute, even as amended, these bonds would be paid within two short years, while under the provisions of the bill before the House it would take from five to ten years to pay them. My substitute would do no injustice to any man or to any company; none whatever. But it would do justice to the people of the United States.

This substitute has been before the House almost as long as the bill of the Ways and Means Committee. I have not seen in any speech but one a criticism upon it. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Phillps] obtained a few days ago by unanimous consent the privilege of printing some remarks in the Record. He used that privilege, Mr. Chairman, not to make any arguments against my substitute, but to abuse me and call in question my motives and reflect upon the party of which I have the honor to be a member. That gentleman may perhaps be excused for being somewhat nervous about the growth of my party in his State. But I submit that when a member obtains the unanimous consent of the House to print to say the least.

Not only that, but he even reflects upon his own successor, upon members elected to the next Congress, who are not here to defend themselves. This he does under the unanimous consent of the House themselves. This he does under the unanimous consent of the House that he might print certain remarks in the RECORD.

He says that my substitute is not according to the Weaver resolutions, for which he voted. I wish to deny that statement in toto. My bill is in absolute accord with those resolutions. Those resolutions, which were voted for by I believe seventy democrats on that side of the House, demand that these bonds shall not be refunded beyond the power of the people to call them in and pay them at any time, but shall be paid as rapidly as possible; and also that the mints should be operated to their fullest capacity, to provide the means of payment. My substitute is to carry out the Weaver resolutions, for which the gentleman voted.

payment. My substitute is to carry out the Weaver resolutions, for which the gentleman voted.

Thank God, the Wood refunding bill is not the same bill as originally introduced, which was to fund these bonds for fifty years at 3½ per cent. It has been so changed that its own father would not know it. When this House decided that the interest upon these bonds should be 3 per cent. it was telegraphed and published all over the land as the first defeat of the national banks. But when we voted that the time should be 5-10 rather than 20-40, a wail of distress was sent out by every bank organ in the land, and more than two thousand bank presidents, who until now had found no difficulty in running Congress and refunding the national debt into long bonds, saw in that vote the early doom of their pet system of spoils.

The Chicago Tribune put up in great head-lines:

SHORT TIME!

SECOND DEFEAT OF THE NATIONAL-BANK MEN IN THE HOUSE. THE BONDS TO BE REDEEMABLE IN FIVE YEARS.

How does it happen that a partial victory has been scored over the national banks? It is because there is a third party in the land and in this House that has cried day and night for the people against this robber system, and men dare not vote as they did. It is the "dead" party that saved the people from perpetual bondage. Yes, toilers, there is hope! The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hawley] and many others still ridicule the idea that the people are competent to control the currency question, and propose still that we shall have dictators over us; but they all begin to see that the day is not distant when the principles of the greenback party will triumph and Congress shall legislate for the people.

I cannot vote for the bill even though pleased with the improvements in it. It still falls far short of justice to the people, who have already paid more to bondholders for interest since the war than it cost to pay, feed, and clothe our armies during the late war. The bonds can and should be paid at once, as my bill provides. This Congress will not pass it; but the people will soon elect a Congress that will.

The first national-greenback governor ever elected in the United Will.

The first national-greenback governor ever elected in the United States has just qualified in Maine, and as Maine has gone so will go the whole Union. Let the people take courage and press on!

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. PHLLIPS rose.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I think that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHLLIPS] should be recognized as we are no longer able to recognize.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I think that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHILIPS] should be recognized, as we are no longer able to recognize Mr. Wood's bill. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHILIPS] is recognized by the Chair.

Mr. PHILIPS. It has taken the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] a long time to make up his mind to reply to some remarks which I submitted nearly two weeks ago. The late hour at which his reply comes should be gratifying to me in that it is evident that what I said "went home."

I am not aware that anything I submitted in those remarks was what I said "went home."

I am not aware that anything I submitted in those remarks was unparliamentary, or that I violated the privilege accorded to me by the House. I submit to the candid judgment of this House, and of those who have done me the honor to read my speech, that my strictures on the gentleman's bill were germane to the question under consideration and a legitimate criticism of the nonsense embraced in the gentleman's substitute. [Laughter.] It is true that after entering on the delivery of the speech alluded to I took permission to print the remainder of my remarks owing to the lateness of the hour, and in the act I simply showed a judgment and a discretion which it would be well for the gentleman himself to exercise, in not boring this House when it does not want to hear him. [Laughter.]

When the gentleman asserts that I took advantage of the liberty accorded me to reflect upon my successor, I simply desire to say to

When the gentleman intimates that I feel sore because I was beaten by a greenbacker, he assumes to himself and his party a credit that is not due to them. I was not beaten by a greenbacker. I was beaten by a republican in disguise and by republican votes, [laughter;] by a gentleman who lent himself as a subtle agent and supple instrument in the hands of the republican party to accomplish that which he could not do in a fair and open combat as a republican. He performed in the State of Missouri the same office that the gentleman and some of his associates are performing here, as adjuncts and allies and some of his associates are performing here, as adjuncts and allies of the republican party. Easy of virtue, they are pliant tools. [Laughter and applause.]

The question was taken upon the substitute moved by Mr. GIL-LETTE, and it was not agreed to upon a division—ayes 9, noes 160. Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I have an amendment to the title which I desire to have read. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to defeat refunding, increase the amount of interest on the public debt, contract the currency, injure the public credit, and to depress the business and industries of the country.

ontract the currency, injure the public credit, and to depress the business and industries of the country.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment to the title of this bill believing that it will furnish one in exact accordance with the facts. Every day it becomes more and more impossible to believe that this bill is, in good faith, intended to be a practical measure of financial legislation. This question is simply a business problem. The Government has falling due on the 1st of May next $469,651,050 in bonds bearing 5 per cent. interest, and $204,285,550 bearing 6 per cent. interest. What are the best terms on which the Government can refund it? This bill as now amended authorizes $400,000,000 of five-year bonds and $300,000,000 of one-year certificates, fixing the rate of interest absolutely at 3 per cent. for both. Have we any reasonable grounds for belief that it can be done? It is true that the wise financial legislation of recent years has placed the credit of the Government higher than it ever stood. It is true that we are now obtaining money at one-half what it has mostly cost our Government. But is it wise now to injure or cripple this growth of our public credit? No government on earth is to-day able to fund its debt at the rate fixed by this bill. The British consols, which have been so often alluded to, are in reality a perpetual loan, and yet with accrued interest deducted have only touched par once in twenty-seven years. Besides, the law of England compels the investment of vast amounts of trust funds in these securities. In 1853 British consols were forced to their highest point when the chancellor of the exchequer proposed to float a 2½ per cent. consol. The holders of our 5 and 6 per cent. bonds know well that the same effect will follow the passage of this bill, and hence comes much of the so-called testimony that a 3 per cent long is non practicable.

passage of this bill, and hence comes much of the so-called testimony that a 3 per cent. loan is now practicable.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to-day alluded to the rapid sale of the French loan. That loan for $1,400,000,000 at 5 per cent. sold below par, costing really 6 per cent., and the French 3 per cent. loan averaged 61\frac{1}{2}, equaling 5 per cent. interest.

The rapid sale of our four percents has been frequently alluded to in this debate. At that time business was stagnant both in this country and in Europe. Now on every hand capital is finding more profitable investment in new enterprises. Within the last year $150,000,000 have gone into new railroads and larger sums into man-$150,000,000 have gone into new railroads and larger sums into manufacturing and business enterprises, yielding remunerative profits.

Now, if this bill passes fixing the rate at 3 per cent., and giving no discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury, and refunding shall fail, as I believe it will, the blunder will be a costly one to the country. I believe the whole loan could be made at 3½ per cent., which would save $13,000,000 interest alone, besides fortifying the public credit. It is certainly unwise to hazard the failure of this great measure by fixing a rate at which no public loan was ever made.

Some gentlemen have affected great dread of "syndicates" and "money power." Do they forget that in endangering the success of refunding they are doing just what the "money power," which now holds $673,936,600 of our 5 and 6 per cent. bonds, desires them to do? With the assistance of Congress, that "money power" may be able to defeat refunding at 3 per cent., and it will thereby gain $15,000,000 interest in a single year. For one I will not vote to give it the opportunity.

It seems to be supposed that the national banks can be forced to take the new 3 per cent. bonds. Like individuals they will invest capital in whatever is remunerative. Now, while the lowest rate of interest of bonds held for security of their circulation is 4 per cent., the national banks have out $70,000,000 less than they might have under the law. Already three hundred and fourteen of them have gone into the law. Already three hundred and fourteen of them have gone into voluntary liquidation, and eighty-six have been placed in the hands of receivers. The national banks now hold $211,000,000 of five and six percents on deposit for circulation, and if suddenly forced to choose between a taxed circulation based on 3 per cent. bonds and no circulation, it would doubtless result in a contraction of the currency of millions of dollars within the next year, injurious alike to the business, the industries, and the public credit of the country.

I trust the bill in its present form will not pass, but such a measure as may insure refunding at a low rate of interest in bonds and certifications.

as may insure refunding at a low rate of interest in bonds and certifias may insure refunding at a low rate of interest in bonds and certificates of small amounts which may come into the hands of the people, and to the payment of which the Government, by a wise economy, may be able to apply each year in the future, as it has so successfully done in the past, a large amount of its surplus revenue.

The question was taken upon the proposed amendment by a viva voce vote, and the Chair announced that the amendment appeared to be rejected.

be rejected.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, called for a division.

Mr. CONVERSE. I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order. Mr. WILBER.

Mr. WILBER. That is too late; the committee is now dividing. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is constrained to hold that the point of order comes too late.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 111.
So the amendment of Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, was not agreed to.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments made by the Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to.
The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Coverr reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt, and had instructed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I now call the previous question on the bill and pending amendments.

Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] and of the House to the fact that in the bill as printed in the RECORD the words "and notes" still appear in one place. Those words should be stricken out so as to make the bill conform to the action of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. That can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. GILLETTE. I object.
Mr. CARLISLE. Then I ask the gentleman to withdraw his call for the previous question that I may submit the amendment which I

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I will do so.
Mr. CARLISLE. I now move that the words "and notes" where they occur in the bill just reported from the Committee of the Whole

The SPEAKER. That amendment will be regarded as pending.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I now move the previous question upon the bill and pending amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask that an order of the House be made that the bill as amended by the Committee of the Whole be printed in the RECORD for the use of members, and also printed in bill form.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered. The bill, as amended, is as follows:

A bill to facilitate the refunding of the national debt.

The bill, as amended, is as follows:

A bill to facilitate the refunding of the national debt.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Comprese assembled. That all existing provisions of law authorizing the refunding of the national debt shall apply to any bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than 41 per cent. per annum which may hereafter become redeemable: Provided, That in lieu of the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and the acts amendatory thereto, and the certificates authorized by the act of February 26, 1873, entitled "An act to authorize the issue of certificates of deposit in aid of the refunding of the public debt," the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds in the amount of not exceeding $400,000,000, which shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable, at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, after five years and payable ten years from the date of issue. And also certificates in the amount of $300,000,000 in demoninations of $10, $20, and $50, either registered or coupon, bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, after one year, and payable in ten years from the date of issue. The bonds and certificates shall be, in all other respects, of like character and subject to the same provisions as the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and acts amendatory thereto: Provided, further, That before any of the bonds or certificates authorized by this act are issued it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay on the bonds accruing during the year 1821 all the silver dollars of 4123 grains, and all the gold over and above $50,000,000 now held in the Treasury for redemption.

purchased or redeemed shall constitute no part of the sinking fund, but shall be canceled.

SEC. 5. From and after the 1st day of May, 1881, the 3 per cent bonds authorized by the first section of this act shall be the only bonds receivable as security for national-bank circulation or as security for the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the public money deposited with such banks; but when any such bonds deposited for the purposes aforesaid shall be designated for purchase or redemption by the Secretary of the Treasury, the banking association depositing the same shall have the right to substitute other issues of the bonds of the United States in lieu thereof: Provided, That no bond upon which interest has ceased shall be accepted or shall be continued on deposit as security for circulation or for the safe-keeping of the public money; and in case bonds so deposited shall not be withdrawn as provided by law within thirty days after interest has ceased thereon the banking association depositing the same shall be subject to the liabilities and proceedings on the part of the Comptroller provided for in section 5234 of the Revised Statutes of the United States: And provided further, That section 4 of the act of June 20, 1874, entitled "An act fixing the amount of United States notes, providing for a redistribution of the national bank currency, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and sections 5159 and 5160 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same are hereby, re-enacted.

SEC. 6. That this act shall be known as "The funding act of 1881;" and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

PUBLIC LANDS.

PUBLIC LANDS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying documents, was, on motion of Mr. Converse, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives :

I have the honor to submit herewith the report of the public lands commission, embracing the history and a codification of the public land laws; and I desire earnestly to invite the attention of Congress to this important subject.

R. B. HAYES,

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 18, 1881.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA 3.65 BONDS.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6970) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for interest on the 3.65 loan of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

RICHARD FATHERLY.

Mr. GARLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of Richard Fatherly, of Arkansas, praying to be relieved from his political disabilities, have had the same under consideration, and have authorized me to report a bill in accordance with the prayer of the petition; and I am directed to ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The bill (S. No. 2054) to remove the political disabilities of Richard Fatherly, of Arkansas, was read the first time by its title.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States on Richard Fatherly, of Arkansas, be, and the same are hereby, removed.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the bill read. I apologize

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the bill read. I apologize for not having heard it before.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What committee reported the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GARLAND. I was instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to make a report upon the petition of Richard Fatherly. There is a letter from the Department showing that he is not indebted to the Government

Mr. EDMUNDS. That took place after I went out of the commit-

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Vermont was absent. It is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the petition read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives:

On the 22d of April, 1861, I resigned my position as military storekeeper of ord-nance in the United States Army, which resignation was accepted on the 6th May,

I am not indebted to the United States on any account whatever, and I now ask for a release from whatever disabilities may attach to the above record, in accordance with the amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for ance with the ametric such cases. I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

RICHARD FATHERLY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report as to his accounts?

Mr. GARLAND. There is a report from the Department that his accounts are all right, and that he is not indebted a cent.

Mr. HOAR. Let the petition be read again.

The petition was again read.

Mr. HOAR. That is no application for release from disabilities incurred for the reasons enumerated in the Constitution.

Mr. INGALLS. There was a resignation.
Mr. HOAR. He does not say what he resigned for, or whether he committed any act of hostility against the Government, or gave aid or comfort to its enemies.

Mr. GARLAND. The fact is, so far as the petitioner is concerned, he does not believe he is laboring under any disability, but he was prohibited from voting for some reason or other, and he asks to be relieved from any disabilities if they exist. He was a military storekeeper at the time of the beginning of the rebellion, and the stores and supplies were seized in his hands. He sent in his resignation, and he has settled his accounts with the Government. He asks now that he has settled his accounts with the Government. He asks now that if there be any disabilities upon him they be removed.

Mr. HOAR. If it is the policy of Congress, as I understand it is, that persons shall be relieved from their disabilities only upon their own request, I submit that here is no request whatever to be relieved from any disability. The petitioner says, not "I desire to be relieved from any disability which I may have incurred by any act of hostility to the Government or aid and comfort to its enemies," but "I resigned once a certain office;" not admitting at all that it was for the purpose of taking part in the rebellion, or had anything to do with the rebellion. He says, "I desire that whatever disabilities I incurred by resigning an office simply"—not any other disability—"may be relieved."

The petitioner ought either to set forth what disability he has incurred, or that he has incurred some, or else he ought to say, "having in my judgment incurred none, but it being claimed that I have in-The my judgment incurred none, but to being claimed that I have incurred disability, I ask for an act of Congress relieving it if it exists."

But there is nothing of that kind. He does not petition for the bill which is reported. He distinctly confines his petition to semething else. For one I shall object to passing an act of Congress on such a

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was so unfortunate as not to hear well the petition when it was read even at my request, and I thought it was in the usual form until the Senator from Massachusetts called attention to it; as he says, it is simply that-

On the 22d of April, 1861, I resigned my position as military storekeeper of ord-nance in the United States Army, which resignation was accepted on the 6th of May, 1861.

I am not indebted to the United States on any account whatever, and I now ask for a release from whatever disabilities may attach to the above record, in accord-ance with the amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for

If you take this petitioner at his word, it is a sheer scandal on Congress, if not intended as a joke, to ask Congress to pass an act to relieve him from disabilities attached "to the above record." General lieve him from disabilities attached "to the above record." General Sherman, General Grant, and a thousand men whom I could name if I chose to take the time, have done in principle precisely that thing. They have been connected with the military service; they have resigned, their accounts have been honorably settled, and they owe the United States nothing. On that statement this man comes. Whether it is intended as a slight to the ideas that have prevailed in Congress as to the propriety of any one who gets this relief saying what he has done, and asking to be relieved from its consequences, or not, I do not know. On this petition, certainly the bill ought not to pass unless we wish to make ourselves ridiculous, and I am sure we do not. I move that the bill be recommitted to the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Senator from Vermont, to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Vermont ought to know, if he knows anything, that the bill is not brought here for the purpose of a joke upon Congress, or for the purpose of scandalizing Congress. He should know very well that I would not undertake anything of that sort. If he has not found out that up to this time, I will inform him of it now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope my friend from Arkansas did not suppose that he was in my mind when I referred to the character of the peti-

Mr. GARLAND. It is very difficult to tell what was in the Senator's mind really.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not suppose that he was the father of it.

Mr. GARLAND. I want the Senate to vote on this proposition. It is as respectful a petition as has ever been presented since I have been on the Committee on the Judiciary, and a number of them have passed the scrutiny of that committee, and a number of them have been reported back here by myself.

The petitioner states simply the facts in the case. He does not state that he killed any Union soldier, because he did not, I presume; he does not state that he ever robbed the Government, because, I suppose, he never did; he does not state any other offense, because in the mind of the petitioner he has never committed any against the the mind of the petitioner he has never committed any against the Government; but that he was a storekeeper and he resigned. The stores were seized in his hands at the arsenal at Little Rock. He was stores were seized in his hands at the arsenal at Little Rock. He was prohibited from voting there for some cause; he never knew why, under the delectable board that was put upon the country by the hell-broth of reconstruction, and now the man comes and asks in his seventieth year for relief against this supposed political disability, whatever it may be. If the petition is not respectful, I defy the Senator from Vermont to draw one that is respectful, as he seems to be the censor over this body. the censor over this body.

Mr. INGALLS. May I ask the Senator whether as an actual fact this gentleman subsequently to his resignation engaged in the rebell-

Mr. GARLAND. He never did as a matter of fact. The man could not state that he did what he had not done. He said he was a store-keeper and resigned. He has been disfranchised for some cause or other, he knows not what, and he asks to be restored to his political rights. If you send the petition back to him, what can he do with it, for he has done nothing? That is the very point. Not twelve months ago, upon almost exactly a petition of that sort from North Carolina—the name I have forgotten, probably the Senator from North Carolina can tell me—a bill was passed to relieve a man when he stated simply that he kad gone out of office, but if he did anything as against the United States he was not aware of it. I believe he was a master in chancery before the war, and they so applied that to chancery before the war.

him that he was distranchised simply because he was a master in chancery before the war.

It is not worth while to quibble about this matter. This is as good a petition as Mr. Fatherly can make. It is in his own writing; it is not intended as a scandal or joke upon this body, and I sak the Senate to come to a vote upon the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, in the first place, if I have said anything to offend the sensibilities of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, whom I respect very highly, I wish to apologize, and to add that I did not know it when I said it. I did not suppose, and I do not now suppose, that the Senator from Arkansas is responsible

add that I did not know it when I said it. I did not suppose, and I do not now suppose, that the Senator from Arkansas is responsible either for the origin or the form of the petition, and I supposed that its peculiarities had escaped his attention as they did mine when it was first read. I think that will square accounts between my friend from Arkansas and myself as to any personal feeling about this business. Now, I will come to the case itself, which is the only matter that the Senate has probably a great interest in.

The Constitution of the United States provides that any person who has been engaged in making war upon the United States, or giving aid and comfort to its enemies, shall not be entitled to hold office under the United States afterward, provided that he had been an officer of the United States before; I do not go into the qualifications and exceptions, because it takes time; that states it in round terms. Congress has adopted the practice, and I think wisely, of requiring in a case of legislation, that the person who is to have an act passed for the removal of his disabilities by a two-thirds vote must fall within the scope of the constitutional prohibition. Otherwise it would be nonsense to pass laws, and the Committee on the Judiciary have not infrequently reported adversely to petitions for the removal of disabilities, because upon an inquiry into the facts we were satisfied that the disabilities did not exist. Here is a gentleman, as I dare say he is from what the Senator from Arkansas states, who says that the only thing that he had a military office under the United States had a military office under the United States after the United States are the United States and the supplementary of the the had a military office under the United States are the United States are the supplementary of the tenth and the supplementary is the the had a military office under the United States are the supplementary and the supplementary and the supplementary that the supplementary to the supplementary that t that the only thing that he has done upon which he asks congressional intervention is that he held a military office under the United States and resigned it under such circumstances that the military states and resigned it under such circumstances that the military authorities of the United States accepted his resignation, and he settled his accounts, and went his ways in peace. Now he says, "I wish whatever disability may arise out of that circumstance removed by an act of Congress." If that is not trifling with the Constitution and with the dignity of Congress in its effect, then I am quite incapable of understanding what law could be passed that was perfectly useless and nugatory and nonsense that would make a stronger case than that. That is just all there is to it.

I had supposed when I moved the recommitment that this person had been engaged in adding in the rehellion, and that by accident or had been engaged in aiding in the rebellion, and that by accident or from some cause it had not been stated, and that it could be sup-plied; but now my friend from Arkansas, if he will allow me to call him so, says that the fact is the man never did engage in the rebellhim so, says that the fact is the man never did engage in the rebellion. Therefore we are left, upon the fact as well as the petition, to the simple circumstance that he held an office under the United States, resigned it, his resignation was accepted, his accounts were settled, and Congress is to be called upon to pass a bill as if he had incurred the condemnation against holding office under the four-teenth amendment. I withdraw the motion to recommit, and will ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, and we shall see what the Senate will do with it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill be engrossed for a third reading? Does the Senator from Vermont wish the yeas and nays on that question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We may just as well have the yeas and nays on the third reading.

DISEASES OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Some days since I introduced a bill, which was laid on the table subject to my call, so that I might submit some remarks on it. I desire to have that bill now taken up that I may remarks on it. I desire to have that bill now taken up that I may submit my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky asks leave to call up the bill (S. No. 1908) to prevent the introduction and dissemination of epizootics or communicable diseases of domestic animals in the United States. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, about the time I took my seat in this body, a retiring Senator said to me that he did not look back with much pleasure over his six years' service here; that the time of Congress had been chiefly consumed in President, making and next.

with much pleasure over his six years' service here; that the time of Congress had been chiefly consumed in President-making and party wrangling; and that he could not recall a single measure passed in the interest of the producing classes during all that time.

The presidential election is now over, and there is a lull in party strife and a hopeful indication that all parties are disposed to devote the remainder of the session to a business-like consideration of the wants of the people. This disposition, manifest in both Houses of Congress, encourages me to hope that the bill called up will meet the prompt and thoughtful consideration its importance demands. The purpose of the bill is to eradicate from our domestic herds and flocks all malignant and infectious diseases now known to exist, and to protect them in the future against such plagues, whether they are to tect them in the future against such plagues, whether they are to come from foreign countries or are to spread from State to State.

I ask, for the information of the Senate, that the bill itself be read, accompanying my remarks, as it is very short.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Beitenacted, &c., That it shall be unlawful to import or introduce into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State, Territory, or district from another, any animal affected with a communicable, infectious, or contagious disease, or any animal conveying in its system the poison of splenic or Texas cattle fover, except in accordance with the provisions of this act and all rules and regulations adopted by the National Board of Health, or any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, made in pursuance of this act; nor shall any person, company, or corporation offer for sale or sell any domestic animal affected with an infectious or contagions disease, such as the lung plague or contagions pleuro pneumonia of cattle, the splenic or Texas cattle fever, foot and mouth disease, hog-cholera, trichinesis, farcy and glanders, &c., in violation of the provisions of this act.

SRC. 2. That the National Board of Health, or in the interval of its sessions its executive committee, shall report to the President of the United States whenever any place in the United States is considered by it to be dangerously infected with communicable diseases of domestic animals; and that upon the official publication by the President of such report its removal or transportation therefrom of our transportation space into enother State shall be unlawful, unless such removal by the National Board of Health and approved by the President.

SRC. 3. That any person, company, or corporation having control over such live animals who shall violate the provisions of sections I and 2 of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than 35,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SRC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the several United States district attorneys by presecret and the same shall be heard before any district or circuit court of the United States district amough the heard before any district or circuit court of the United States.

SRC. 5. That the National Board of Health shall, and is hereby authorized to, investigate, record, and report on the diseases of animals prevailing in the United States, or in countries from which the United States may import domestic animals for breeding or other purposes, and also draught such rules and a same shall deem of the such as the such ury, who shall report the same to Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it will be seen that this bill prohibits, under heavy penalties, the introduction or exportation of infected or diseased animals from foreign countries, or from State to State. It authorizes an absolute embargo against the exportation of animals from States known to be infected to States free from disease, except under precautionary regulations, to be prescribed by the National Board of Health. It enlarges the powers of that board so as to embrace the whole subject of animal as well as human sanitation, and authorizes it to make all proper rules and regulations to carry out the purposes of the bill. It provides the board with a competent veterinary staff to aid in investigation.

It gives jurisdiction to the Federal courts, and makes it the duty of United States district attorneys to prosecute for violations of the law. The bill further provides that the States and Territories may adopt the regulations prescribed by the national board, and that said board shall act in concert with commissioners appointed by local authority; and whenever it becomes necessary to slaughter diseased or infected animals, the owners are to be reimbursed out of the national Treasury.

Treasury.

Now, these are the general provisions of the bill, which I have endeavored to make as comprehensive as possible, leaving all matters of detail to the enlightened and competent board to which the sub-of detail to the enlightened and competent board to which the subject is referred, believing that no amount of zeal and energy can successfully deal with this difficult and complicated problem without the aid of the highest scientific skill. I have therefore thought it best to intrust it to the highest scientific tribunal of the country.

I am not, however, wedded to this bill, but am ready to adopt any other plan that may appear to the Senate to be better adapted to the accomplishment of the desired end. Of one thing I am certain, that exotic and indigenous animal diseases highly contagious or communicable in character do exist in certain sections of our country, which, unless promptly arrested, must continue to spread until our herds are ravaged annually to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars.

We have one indigenous disease called splenic or Texas fever, which is known to have destroyed countless thousands of valuable cattle. Science has already demonstrated the nature of this distemper and science has already demonstrated the nature of this distemper and shown how it may be rendered harmless by restricting trade in Texas cattle to certain seasons of the year. Sheep diseases have been found to be easy of control. In swine contagion investigation has not yet pointed out the way of any certain riddance of hog cholera or that still more frightful disease, trichinosis. These are probably indigenous to the country, and science will in time discover effectual means for their eradication.

But we have now among our cattle in certain sections a dreadful exotic disease, highly contagious, insidious in its advances, slow in its incubation, ranging from ten to a hundred and twelve days, and capable of infection even from convalescent animals; and everywhere found to be practically incurable. It is really a pestilence that walketh in darkness. Veterinary surgeons here and in Europe despair of curing it and recommend isolation and slaughter as the only mode of

As yet this disease is confined to the Atlantic seaboard; but while unrestricted cattle traffic is allowed between infected and uninfected States the cattle interest of the whole country is menaced by a terri-

This disease has been known to exist in some of the Eastern States for more than thirty years. Some of them have taken measures to stamp it out, and have effectually done so; others have been less successful, being assailed by constant and new invasions.

Pleuro-pneumonia or lung plague and rinderpest, the two great destroyers of modern herds, are believed to have had their origin in Central Asia, whence have come nearly all the contagions which have scourged our own race.

They are said to have been brought with the herds of those barbarian hordes who overran all Europe upon the decline of the Roman power, and to have become fixed and chronic in all those vast unfenced grazing grounds in Eastern Europe, where it is impossible to isolate and crush it, because there the herds roam at large and spread the infection on every side.

This must be the case with us if the lung plague once gets a firm foothold upon the great cattle ranges of the West. And this is inevitable, as I will presently show, unless repressive measures are promptly adopted by Congress.

England, from her insular position and the firm closure of her ports against foreign live stock, was comparatively free from the plagues which desolated the herds of continental Europe until the free-trade which desolated the herds of continental Europe until the free-trade measures of Cobden and Gladstone opened her ports to the cattle of the world. Seventy years of exemption had lulled the apprehensions of British stock raisers. They had forgotten the pestilential invasions of the reigns of George II and George III. European wars had kept up the plagues on the continent, where large herds followed great armies for their supply, and Eugland was only saved by her restrictive measures. restrictive measures.

When Sir Robert Peel and his associates in 1841 opened the ports of England to foreign cattle, all the disastrous experiences of the eighteenth century seem to have been forgotten, and England soon became the seat of mouth and foot disease and of lung plague. In 1843 the lung plague reached the lowlands of Scotland, and in 1844 it was brought by some Dutch cows into the port of Cork, and in it was brought by some Dutch cows into the port of Cork, and in two years spread over the whole of Ireland.

An interesting fact may be gleaned from Dutch experience. Prior to the opening of British ports to this trade, Dutch cattle were sent for sale to the center of Europe, principally to the Rhine provinces. So long as Holland exported only her own cattle and imported none, she was free from disease, but the opening of the English market turned the current of the cattle trade through the Netherlands and propagated the disease, which in the Old World has always traveled from east to west and along the most direct lines of active compartial intercourse. mercial intercourse.

In our own country as early as 1843 a Brooklyn dairy was infected by a cow imported from Holland, which continues to be the seat of this disease upon the continent of Europe.

this disease upon the continent of Europe.

For many years after the establishment of the free-trade policy of England the farmers of the United Kingdom, and more especially the town purveyors of milk, continued to lose their animals, and, as is usual in such cases, both professional and unprofessional men sought for domestic causes and erroneously contended that the malady was indigenous and had no connection with traffic in foreign cattle.

This delusion continued until 1862, when Professor John Gamgee, who is now in Washington devoting so much attention to yellow fever and its prevention, was employed by the privy council to inquire into and report on the diseases of animals in connection with the supply of meat and milk.

of meat and milk.

His luminous and exhaustive report clearly establishes the fact that the disease is purely exotic, and that the meat supply had not been increased or cheapened by the importation of foreign cattle, for the disease they brought with them had infected and killed more native cattle than they added to the beef supply.

The wholesale destruction of animals by the rinderpest, introduced from Russia in 1865, compelled the British-Government to enact stringent laws for the protection of native cattle. As late as 1878 a most comprehensive act was passed by Parliament, which bears heavily upon our meat trade and was the consequence of the shipment of some infected cattle to Liverpool from our eastern cities. The restriction requires all animals imported to be kept in separate pounds upon the wharfs where landed and slaughtered in public abattoirs within fourteen days after landing. Our beef is greatly deteriorated by this necessity of slaughter so soon after arrival, and its distribution is limited to the immediately surrounding markets, for there is no ice in England to preserve it in shipment to the interior; so that it is often England to preserve it in shipment to the interior; so that it is often sold in glutted markets at a ruinous sacrifice.

Now some have erroneously supposed that these restrictions were imposed in the interest of English cattle raisers. It is a wise and salutary measure, adopted by the English to protect their native herds against new infection from abroad while they are stamping it out at home. As proof that this act was passed in no illiberal spirit toward our cattle trade, the act itself, which I hold in my hand, provides that when the sanitary condition of animals in any country is such as to give reasonable security that their introduction will not bring contagion such animals may be introduced without being subjected to margatine and slanghter. quarantine and slaughter.

The English butchers, graziers, and consumers are as anxious to get our live cattle as we are to sell them.

I have a most sensible letter from Mr. T. C. Anderson, one of the most intelligent Short-horn breeders in America, who says that within the last year we have shipped to England 150,000 high-grade fat steers, worth $100 each, and that these beeves would have brought $40 more per head than they did if they could have been taken to the green pastures of the interior and allowed to recover from the bruises and fever incident to the long youage by rail and by see and fever incident to the long voyage by rail and by sea.

It is not only our prime beeves that British butchers and graziers want; they also want an unlimited number of our best-shaped immature short-horned steers to finish for the shambles upon their own rich pastures.

I noticed not long since that a meeting of Scottish graziers had petitioned the privy council for a relaxation of the restrictions on the importation of American cattle.

When this trade in half-matured cattle is successfully established there can be no limit to the number we shall export. But I have digressed somewhat and will return.

Since the Brooklyn importation of the Dutch cow we have suffered continuously, and, heedless of the mortality in the dairies of our eastern cities, we have permitted a purely foreign and contagious distemper to spread almost unchecked. Some of the eastern States have taken measures to arrest it. It appeared in Massachusetts as early as 1860, and by a heroic practice worthy of national imitation that State stamped it out by the only practical mode of treatment, isolation and slaughter, and was pronounced free from disease as far back as 1867. Some other States have partially eradicated the disease by similar modes of treatment.

The cattle trade of our country has hitherto been almost exclusively from west to east, which prevented plague extension toward the great cattle-raising centers of the West.

No case of lung plague has yet occurred west of the Alleghany Mountains. But history repeats itself. In the British Isles a constant transmission of contagion has attended the collection of calves from the town cow-sheds and their shipment to the pastures of Ireland and Scotland. Infected immediately after birth in pestilential cow-sheds, these animals carried disease wherever they went. A similar trade has recently sprung up in our country. It is stated upon good authority that within the last year forty thousand calves have been shipped from the Eastern States to the cattle-yards of Chicago, and thence distributed among the farmers of Illinois and adjoining States; a goodly number of them is said to have gone to Nebraska; and it is only a question of time when we shall have an outbreak of the lung plague among the great herds of our western prairies, to the total destruction of one of the largest industries now in course of active and preserves growth. the town cow-sheds and their shipment to the pastures of Ireland and destruction of one of the largest industries now in course of active and prosperous growth.

If we can eradicate this pestilence from our midst, and give clean bills of health to the stock we send abroad, our meat exports to Europe will in a short time exceed the exports of cotton. We can spare all the cattle that the growing crowds of Western Europe demand, and within a single decade we shall be shipping a million instead of a hundred and of the thousand appeals. The stock-rejects of the West are within a single decade we shall be shipping a million instead of a hundred and fifty thousand annually. The stock-raisers of the West are fully aroused on this subject, and the Eastern States are doubtless desirous of clearing their farms and dairies of disease, if they can be shown how to do so and are adequately aided. In invoking the national authority I am but expressing the wishes of a great power behind me—the entire agricultural and stock-raising interests of the

I have proposed to refer this subject to the National Board of Health as the most competent tribunal to protect our stock-raisers against quackery and imposture. A proposal has been made to refer this entire subject to a commission of three, including one veterinary surgeon, to look after the whole continent and its foreign trade. Such a commission will be powerless for any practical good.

If we lack an adequate force of veterinarians in this country we do not lack plague investigators who can guide, assist, and direct the few able members of the veterinary profession among us. We have already in full operation a medical council composed of the most eminent men, and that council will know, as we cannot here know, how to frame rules and regulations to unearth the mysteries of fatal yellow fever, and that board can and will see that we farmers are

The investigation of epidemics and epizootics is one and the same thing, for animal and human pathology are almost identical.

Our numerous States and Territories demand far more medical assistance than can be given by one ubiquitous veterinarian. In accordance with my proposal, several experts may be under the co-or-dinating intelligence of some such man as Professor James Law, of dinating intelligence of some such man as Professor James Law, of Cornell University, and by order of the President the temporary assistance of the medical staff of the Army and Navy may be secured.

No crude sanitary measures discussed in the Halls of Congress can prove sufficiently comprehensive and specific; they must be matured by experts in medical and veterinary science; and therefore I propose the appointment of a veterinary supervisor, who shall be a member of the National Board of Health, with power to select a competent

I expect these gentlemen to proceed deliberately to the consideration of the two most urgent questions: First, clearing this District and the eastern States of the lung plague in cattle; and, secondly, regulating the cattle-drovers' course and trade from Texas, so as to protect Kansas, Missouri, and other States from the virulent poisoning of their pastures and the wholesale destruction of their native cattle.

We Kentucky breeders cannot expect a free outlet for our Short-horn bulls to improve the native herds of the West if these are assailed by malignant pestilence or by poisons insidiously introduced by apparently healthy animals. Under this act the States and Territories will find it immediately to their interest to adopt preventive measures against cattle plagues. The appropriation asked is small compared to the magnitude of the object.

The stamping out of pleuro-pneumonia may cost many millions of dollars in compensating owners of infected herds which it may become necessary to slaughter for the public good; but whatever sums may be necessary should be promptly and freely given, and they will, in the end, prove to be economical and profitable expenditures. I ask no more now than will enable the scientific men, whom we have so no more now than will enable the scientific men, whom we have so wisely trusted in the past, to do their best until experience teaches us how we may wisely attempt more.

In framing this general law, my expectation was that, under just and proper limitations, the following points might be attended to: First, the segregation and isolation of infected stock included under the general head of quarantine, which the national board, after consultation with veterinarians, stock raisers and dealers, may find adesultation with veterinarians, stock raisers and dealers, may find adequate and expedient. Second, the prompt extinction of infectious or communicable diseases by radical measures, including the slaughter of entire herds when found necessary. Third, that the Secretary of the Treasury shall overlook the estimates and outlays of the board, so as to avoid extravagant demands or violent recriminations against our sanitary council. Fourth, that competent inspectors may watch animals in transit, and determine before shipment and after crossing the ocean, whether American "live stock is a source of danger to our customers in Europe" and what measures may be adopted to prevent customers in Europe," and what measures may be adopted to prevent acts of cruelty and sources of contamination. Fifth, and most important, I desire, in the interests of the whole country, that the esteem and respect in which the National Board of Health is held in Europe may sustain our position by a fair and considerate interchange of information, as also by constant assurance that the utmost is being done on our side to deal liberally and honestly in our attempts to prevent the dissemination of cattle plagues.

The western farmer cannot afford to have a suspicion arise as to the health of the animals he is selling, and demands that the value of his property shall not be destroyed by the evil practices or lack of prudent measures on the part of States or transportation companies beyond his home. Deficiencies of this kind are now robbing him of thirty or forty dollars on every bullock he fattens for the European market, and losing millions annually to the enterprising men west of the Alleghany Mountains.

The history of this disease proves clearly its foreign origin. There has never been an outbreak either here or in England that may not be traced to infection brought from the continent of Europe. The buffaloes of the plains are as liable to it as domestic cattle, and yet they have roamed across this oldest of continents for countless ages they have roamed across this oldest of continents for countless ages free from contagion. It was brought from Holland to Cork in 1839, and in two years spread through the whole of Ireland. By the opening of British ports to foreign cattle in 1840, by the free-trade act, England was deluged by an influx of infected cattle from France, Belgium, and Holland. From that time she has been continually ravaged by diseases, except in the highlands of Scotland, which breed their own black cattle and never admit foreign stock. The annual loss of Great Britain by death alone from pleuro-pneumonia has exceeded ten millions of dollars. Holland sent this plague to the Cape of Good Hope in 1854 in the body of a bull, and to Massachusetts in 1859 in four cows. It was carried to Brooklyn in 1843 in a Dutch cow, imported in an English ship. From Brooklyn it was allowed to spread through Long Island and into New York and New Jersey. Subsequent importations into New Jersey brought additional infection, which has gradually extended over that State and into Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, and the District of Columbia, where it still prevails, menacing the herds of the whole country. The disease, however, is still confined within manageable limits. Experience has shown that extermination is possible in countries where the cattle are grazed upon inclosed pastures, but wholly tries where the cattle are grazed upon inclosed pastures, but wholly ineradicable where they roam upon common pastures.

The Dutch bull imported into Cape Town died in about three and a half months after leaving Holland; but he lived long enough to plant the disease firmly in that remote colony. The Cape of Good Hope is a prairie country 2,500 miles broad without navigable rivers or railroads, having ox-teams as the only means of transportation. These ox-teams carried the infection into the remote interior and fixed it permanently among the countless herds which constitute the chief wealth of the colonists.

The rapid spread of the disease in Australia furnishes another proof of the impossibility of its arrest in countries where the cattle run at large. The single Short-horn cow imported in 1858 upon arrival was large. The single Short-horn cow imported in 1858 upon arrival was turned upon a paddock near Melbourne, and was soon discovered to be sick with pleuro-pneumonia and removed to a stable, where she died, and it was hoped without leaving infection behind her. It, however, began to spread upon the commons, when it was discovered that a dishonest teamster had been in the habit of turning his oxen at night into this paddock. These oxen soon sickened and died, but scattered the disease far and wide until it covered the whole of this island continent to the utter destruction of many of the largest herds in Australia, compelling the ranchmen to substitute sheep in the place of cattle.

No outbreak has as yet occurred among our western herds. But suppose we allow this plague to cross the Alleghanies and spread over the valley of the Ohio among the Short-horn and Hereford herds of Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri, how long will it be before the thousands of young blooded bulls these States annually send to the far west will have spread the pestilence among all the herds upon the plains?

Unless the Government adopts, promptly, vigorous measures of repression, this impending calamity must break with overwhelming force upon our great cattle ranches of the West, just as it has done at the Cape of Good Hope and in Australia, and upon the steppes of Russia for a thousand years. The loss will fall first and heaviest upon the cattle breeders, but all must feel it who consume beef, milk, butter, or leather.

Within the space of forty was Great Pritain with its side.

Within the space of forty years Great Britain, with six millions of cattle, has lost by death alone from this plague, more than five hundred millions of dollars. In the same ratio we, with our forty-five millions of cattle, will lose nearly four billions of money if this contagion is allowed to prevail and spread as it has done in England. Pleuro-pneumonia is the most insidious of all cattle plagues. Its poison is of the most subtle and persistent vitality. It usually kills from 40 to 70 per cent., and often every individual of the herd attacked; it is worse in summer than in winter, and more destructive in warm than in cold climates, but dreadful everywhere. Such animals as appear to have recovered are so enfeebled as to be worthless. mals as appear to have recovered are so enfeebled as to be worthless for work, breeding, or beef.

The other great animal plagues, such as mouth and foot disease, rinderpest, and Texas fever show themselves in four or five days, desolate a herd, but leave the survivors healthy and no poisonous taint behind them. Not so with pleuro-pneumonia; its poison lurks in the system in spite of rain and frost, and is often most fatal when least expected.

As I have before remarked, our western herds have enjoyed immunity from disease from the direction of the current of the cattle trade, which has been constantly from the west to east, but the new trade which has been constantly from the west to east, but the new trade in calves from east to west threatens to precipitate pestilence upon our western herds unless repressed by the strong arm of the national authority. This traffic should be stopped at once, or placed under such restrictions as would render it harmless.

Another threatening source of danger is the importation of Short-

Another threatening source of danger is the importation of Shorthorn, Hereford, Holstein, and Alderney cows from Europe. The respectability of these aristocratic breeds has procured for them easy passports into our country. It is true that great pains have been taken to protect these valuable races of cattle against exposure to infection, but we know that some of the largest and most valuable herds of England have been utterly destroyed by this plague. The great herds of Mr. Booth and other English breeders fell victims to this fatal malady.

This disease is now in almost every country in England, and even if

This disease is now in almost every county in England, and even if we are sure that selected animals are perfectly healthy when purchased, we cannot be certain that they may not be poisoned in their chased, we cannot be certain that they may not be poisoned in their transit to this country in stables, cars, or steamships in which diseased cattle have been transported. This trade had better be suspended altogether until we can have satisfactory assurance that it can be conducted with absolute security. We have already as fine and as highly-bred cattle as there are to be found in England, and a great many more of them, and the value of a few more Booths and Bates is as nothing compared to the security of our own herds. My advice to American breeders is to go slow in regard to importing until they can feel perfectly sure that they may not be introducing pestilence as well as cattle.

The number of live stock in our country is estimated at 45,000,000.

The number of live stock in our country is estimated at 45,000,000 of cattle, 18,000,000 of mules and horses, 50,000,000 of sheep, and 60,000,000 of swine, worth in the aggregate $3,000,000,000, far exceeding in value any other industry.

We have the most active and unrestricted stock trade between the States and with foreign countries, without any sanitary system to protect this vast interest against the ravages of contagious diseases, indigenous or exotic. The States in their separate capacities are wholly unequal to this great task. They may make ample provision for stamping out disease within their own borders but are exposed to constant new invasions from adjacent territory, as has been the case three times with the State of Connecticut. No, sir, this is a national work, and the power of the national authority only can grapple with this great emergency. If ever there was a national question before Congress this is certainly one in which all our people are interested.

Interested.

Ample powers are given to the board over its work, and to avoid even the appearance of interfering with State rights, it is provided that the States may adopt the regulations of the board, appoint commissioners of their own to act in concert with it, and with its concurrence, kill sick and infected animals and receive pay for the owners out of the National Treasury. It would be impolitic and unjust to allow the loss of cattle, slaughtered for the public good, to fall on the owners, and equally so to require the States to pay for them.

It will be found necessary to compensate the owners in order to induce them to report disease among their cattle; otherwise they will hide them in out-of-the-way places or run them off and sell them to innocent purchasers, and thus establish new centers of infection. The percentage of loss to be paid is left to regulation. If it is too large the owners of unsalable cattle might be tempted to introduce the disease in order to get the Government allowance; if it is too small they will be sure to hide their infected cattle from the inspectors. A liberal compensation will be more efficacious in discovering ors. A liberal compensation will be more efficacious in discovering disease than the severest penalties. I am sure that the States and people will gladly and promptly accept the propositions of this bill, people will gladly and promptly accept the propositions of this bill, and with their full and hearty concurrence it is absolutely certain that this plague can be speedily eradicated. There are many other regulations left to the board, such as the disinfection of cars, cattle-yards, boats, and ships, and the protection of healthy animals in transit from contact with infected ones. The whole subject of animal sanitation is intrusted to the National Board of Health, assisted by competent veterinary experts, practical business men, and such Government officials as the President may temporarily assign to that data. We have two principal objects in view, one to eradicate discated in duty. We have two principal objects in view, one to eradicate disease from our midst, and the other to foster our growing meat-trade with Europe. Our National Council of Health is composed of men of the highest character and scientific attainments, whose opinions will have the weight of authority at home and abroad, and when they state in their bulletins that our cattle may be introduced into England without danger of infection, all restrictions will be removed, and the ports of Great Britain thrown open to this trade, and we shall then ship to that country in unlimited numbers our prime and half-matured beeves.

If we can once free our own country of pleuro-pneumonia, splenic fever, hog-cholera, and trichinosis, our exports of meat supplies will at no distant day exceed all our other exports combined.

The demand for meats does not fluctuate with the harvests like the demand for grain; it rests upon a more fixed and constant basis. A bushel of wheat will make fifteen pounds of pork, so that when there is abundant harvest and no foreign demand it may be profitably converted into meat.

No measure has ever been before Congress of more vital importance to our farmers and stock-raisers than this. All our national pros-perity is based upon agricultural success, and the arrest of fatal dis-eases among domestic animals is next in importance to the suppression of epidemics among men, just as the national wealth is second only to the national health.

The injuries inflicted by vicious systems of finance, currency, or taxation may easily be remedied by wise legislation, but failure to protect in time these vast interests may result in irreparable injury, and will be held by the people as a criminal neglect of a plain duty.

Mr. T. C. Eastman, the enterprising trader and originator of the dead-meat trade between this country and Europe, writes to a friend of mine, under yesterday's date, that the steamship companies are all making extensive preparations to carry live cattle next summer. He says: "I think the freight on live cattle will be very low next season, which will shut out the dressed beef during all the summer. season, which will shut out the dressed beef during all the summer and fall months."

In view of this statement is it not most urgent that we should provide, by stringent sanitary precautions, for the utmost freedom in handling American cattle in the British Islands?

This is no local demand, and the cattle raisers of the West may fairly demand and command the most anxious solicitude for their interests on the part of Congress

Our present prosperity springs from the success of the farmers. Nine-tenths of our enormous exports are the products of their toil. They have asked but little and have received next to nothing. They are the men who fill our armies in time of war and support the Government in time of peace. Their industry, patriotism, and virtue are the bed-rock of the Republic. They are generally patient and ask only to be let alone, but when thoroughly aroused they are irresistible, and will not down until their demands are met.

Mr. President, I ask that the bill be referred to the Select Committee to investigate and report the best means of preventing the intro-duction and spread of Epidemic Diseases.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Does the motion of the Senator from Kentucky carry with it the substitute offered by myself this morning to one of the bills named and that was ordered to be printed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa, the Chair is informed, lies on the table. If the Senator desires, the substitute can be referred, with the original bill, to the committee.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should be glad to have it referred to that committee if there is a reasonable prospect of an early report from it. The session is drawing so near to a close that unless speedy action is had, no action at all can be had. I move that the substitute offered by myself this morning go, with the original bill, to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases. on Epidemic Disease

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I desire to say a word or two in reference to the remark of the Senator from Iowa. The Committee on Agriculture has had a great many bills in regard to this very subject before it. Of course the Senate knows very well how important this subject is. It involves constitutional questions and legal questions, and also questions of detail and fact. The Committee on Agriculture was questions of detail and fact. The Committee on Agriculture was questions of detail and fact. unable to come to any conclusion, and it was suggested to me, in view of the difficulties surrounding the subject, that it would be well enough perhaps to have a select committee to consider this particular class of bills. The select committee enght to be allowed particular class of bills. The select committee eight to be allowed during this session to consider simply the diseases of domestic animals. I am, for one, very well content that that shall be done if it is the pleasure of the Senate, and in making up that committee, those Senators who understand the subject and whose States are interested mainly in the cattle trade should be put upon it. Let it be a select committee of five, to consider this particular subject; and in the expectation that that might be agreeable to the Senate, I prepared a resolution for that purpose, which I will ask now, inasmuch as the subject is up, to have read and considered if there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Several SENATORS. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the President, to which shall be referred the bills now on the Calendar on the subject of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious and infectious diseases of cattle and other domestic animals, and leave is given to the committee to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The resolution ought to be amended so as to read, "bills now on the Calendar or hereafter introduced." I hope it will meet the pleasure of the Senate to adopt the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? It will be modified as suggested by Mr. JOHNSTON. It will cost nothing; no clerk is asked for, and the committee can sit in the room of the Committee on Agriculture, and not incur expense. Then we shall be enabled, perhaps, to secure action on this subject.

action on this subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not object; I think it a very good resolution; only I suggest to the Senator frem Virginia not to put in that there shall be referred all future bills, because that seems to tie up the Senate rather unusually strong. Undoubtedly all future bills would be referred to that committee; I think if we leave it a resolution referring all pending bills, then if a new bill is introduced it will naturally go to that committee.

Mr. JOHNSTON. There were some bills introduced to-day that ought to be embraced in the resolution, the bill of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the bill of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Kirkwood.]

[Mr. Kirkwood.] Mr. EDMUNDS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make no objection to that; but as to future bills, I think it would be rather unusual to provide in advance that they should be referred to a particular committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course my desire is merely to have a complete and effective bill reported at as early a day as possible; and so far as I am concerned, I am indifferent what committee shall consider the subject. I selected the Committee on Epidemic Diseases because they have had under consideration for a year and a half the cognate questions as pertaining to the human family; and as the pathology of animals and human beings is almost identical, I thought that committee was the best one to which to refer it, because their attention has been called for many months, indeed for a year and a half, to the consideration of questions of this character.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I would state to the Senator from Kentucky that if he wants the subject considered the best way to accomplish it is to adopt the resolution. subject. I selected the Committee on Epidemic Diseases because they adopt the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well; but I wish some member of that committee to be put on this select committee.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Now I want the substitute offered by myself this morning to go to this special committee.

Messrs. Johnston, Williams, Rollins, Kirkwood, and Coke were appointed the special committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the order referring the bill of the Senator from Kentucky and the substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases will be reconsidered, and those bills will be referred to the select committee just announced.

EXPENSES OF TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. CONKLING submitted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate respecting the execution of the law for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses, in the following particulars:

First. The number of clerks appointed under section 3, specifying the number of males and females respectively, and the number under each rate of compensa-cond. The number of supervisors appointed under section 4, with the rates of Second. The number of supervisors appears their compensation.

Third. The number of enumerators under sections 5, 10, 11, respectively, and the average allowance of compensation by States and Territories.

Fourth. In what States were clerks allowed to supervisors under section 6; the number and compensation of such clerks, and whether any compensation was made to supervisors or is claimed by them beyond the actual outlay for clerical assist-

Fifth. What number of "special agents" have been employed (under section 8) to enumerate the Indians, and what other appointments have been made in that connection; with the compensation promised or allowed, and whether compensation has been allowed to persons otherwise in the service of the United States, in this or any other employment.

Sixth. What number of persons are at present employed under section 17, not including the clerical force of the Census Office.

Seventh. What number of "experts and special agents" are employed under section 18, and what their average rate of compensation, and whether the number will be hereafter increased or diminished.

Eighth. What number of messengers and laborers are employed.

Ninth. What buildings are rented by or for the use of the Census Office, and the rental respectively.

Tenth. What have been the expenses of stationery, blanks, and printing to January 1, 1881.

mary 1, 1881.

Eleventh. The entire number of persons at present drawing pay from the Census Office for services of every grade in connection with the office at Washington, with the aggregate monthly outlay for such services.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask that that resolution be printed and lie over under the rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

SETTLEMENT OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President—
Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Texas to allow the private land claims bill which is of large public importance to the Territories near the State of Texas and which is almost concluded, to be taken up before he proceeds with his Indian affair, concluded, to be taken up before he proceeds with his Indian affair, which I admit is a matter of importance also.

Mr. COKE. If the bill I seek to get up shall be taken up and read, I will then yield informally.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know but that somebody would object to that; but as the Senator is entitled to the floor, I cannot help it. However, as his constituents are, perhaps, largely interested in the land bill to which I refer, I make the appeal to him, as it is so near finished, to allow it to be disposed of.

Mr. COKE. I yield to the Senator from Vermont in the expectation that as soon as his bill is concluded the one I have in charge will be taken up.

be taken up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bill No. 818 that was under consideration yesterday

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. SIS) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. Teller, in section 12, to strike out the following words:

Third. No allowance or confirmation of any claim shall confer any right or title to any gold, silver, or quicksilver mines or minerals, unless the grant claimed effected the donation or sale of such mines or minerals to the grantee, or unless such grantee has become otherwise entitled thereto in law or in equity; but all such mines and minerals shall remain the property of the United States, with the right of working the same, which fact shall be stated in any patents issued under this act.

Mr. TELLER. When the morning hour expired yesterday, I was endeavoring to show to the Senate that this bill was unfair in some of its provisions; that it was creating a new principle with reference to the rights of the Government over mines never recognized in this country before. I find on looking at the Record that the Sen-ator who has this bill in charge stated yesterday:

ator who has this bill in charge stated yesterday:

The object of the committee in putting in this third limitation and the general effect of the proposed act, was to give to the grantee whose claim should be confirmed precisely what his original grant entitled him to, and no more. That was the object of the committee, for that would carry out the treaty between the United States and France in respect of that part of the country covered by this bill that was derived from Spain to France and from France under the Louisiana purchase. So the committee provided that these confirmations should not carry the precious metals unless the grant claimed effected the donation or sale of those metals; that is, unless that was the legal effect of the grant. If it was the legal effect of the grant, then it should carry it; if it was not, it should not; and it was stated in that way in order to preserve precisely the real and equitable as well as legal rights of every grantee who claimed a confirmation.

In some part of the territory covered by this bill as in some part of Arizona, which I believe was anciently a part of the independent state of Sonora under the Mexican constitution, the legislature of that State, if I may call it such, it was alleged had made some grants in absolute fee which did carry under their laws the right to the precious metals that lay within the ground.

If that is the object of this committee, and I have no doubt it is,

If that is the object of this committee, and I have no doubt it is, then the bill goes too far, because, as I stated yesterday, they not only reserve to the Government of the United States all the gold and all the silver and all the quicksilver, but they reserve also all the lead, all the iron, all the coal, all the marble, and all the other mineral substances that are technically known as minerals. Technically they reserve everything that can be mined or quarried from the soil. The bill goes far beyond anything that was ever known in the history of the Spanish rule over these leads.

of the Spanish rule over these lands.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate, and especially of the honorable Senator who reported this bill, if that is the purpose of the committee, to the fact that if we are to rely upon the usual meaning of the words he has gone much beyond what the Spanish Government claimed or the Mexican Government claimed as its successor. Bainbridge on the Law of Mines and Minerals says:

A mineral has been defined, in the narrow sense of the word, to be a fossil, or what is dug out of the earth, and which is of a predominantly metalliferous character. The term may, however, in the most enlarged sense, be described as comprising all the substances which now form, or which once formed, part of the solid body of the earth, both external and internal, and which are now destitute of, and incapable of supporting, animal or vegetable life. In this view it will embrace as well the bare granite of the high mountain as the deepest hidden diamonds and metallic ores. metallic ores

I find that this author, who is regarded as a reputable one, cites several cases where the courts have passed upon the question and decided what the term "mineral" meant. Freestone has been held in the English courts to fall within the term "mineral," and I find on page 4 of the same work the following:

page 4 of the same work the following:

Besides coal, iron, lead, tin, and copper, (and besides also gold and silver, of which hereafter.) the following substances have been successively held to be minerals, namely: Stratum of stone, Earl of Rosse vs. Wainman; stone in quarry, Micklethwait vs. Winter; freestone, Bell vs. Wilson; slate, Cleveland (Duchess) vs. Meyrick; China clay, Hext vs. Gill; coprolites. Attorney-General vs. Tomline. But these particular instances do not exhaust the list of minerals, as has already appeared from the dictum of James, L. J., in the case of Hext vs. Gill, and as also appears from the case of Midland Railway Company vs. Checkley, where it was held that the reservation of mines and minerals within and under the land included everything below the surface a wailable for agricultural purposes which could be made useful for any purpose, and included the right of quarrying as well as underground mining.

Under this reservation, then, it is proposed, as I said before, to reserve not simply what the Government of Mexico reserved when it parted with its title to the land, but to reserve that which no gov-ernment on the face of the earth ever did reserve when it parted with its title to land. No government, I will venture to say, has ever asserted the right at any time to mine for copper and to mine for coal and to mine for stone and marble of different kinds in its land. The right to the gold and the silver was a personal kingly prerogative. It had nothing to do with the nation. The King of Spain owned them had nothing to do with the nation. The King of Spain owned them as absolutely as as he owned the diamonds in his crown; he owned them exactly in the same way, to be used for his benefit while he lived, and to be transmitted to his successor when he died, for the same purpose and for that only.

same purpose and for that only.

In these lands are large copper mines that have been opened at great expense by some of these people. These copper mines were never at any time the property of the Spanish Crown, nor were they ever at any time the property of the Mexican Government that succeeded to these titles; and yet the Senator from Vermont says that the proposition of the bill is to give to these people just exactly what the Government of Mexico gave them, and no more. If that were so there might be some reason for not quarreling with the finding of the committee, but if that were true this bill introduces an entirely new system, a system of proprietorship in the precious metals foreign. new system, a system of proprietorship in the precious metals foreign to the nature and character of our Government, as I stated yesterday. Now, I want to call the attention of the Senate to what the royal metals are, because I believe that with the exception of quicksilver, under the Spanish Government, the rule has been universally the same. The English law reserved to the Crown the right to the gold and the silver, and the right to lead mines, provided they were more valuable for the gold and silver in them than for the lead, and not otherwise. Tin mines did not belong to the Crown, copper mines did not belong to the Crown, coal mines did not belong to the Crown; neither did they under the Spanish Government.

Bainbridge says again, on page 117:

Firstly, in respect of the so-called royal mines, (being mines of gold and silver, and no other mines,) these mines are the exclusive property of the Crown, as well legally as beneficially, in the same manner and to the same extent, at least in England, as were the like mines in Roman law; that is to say, free from any right or rights of the subject therein. But, secondly, in respect of all othermines, (being mines of the so-called baser metals, or, speaking more correctly, baser substances,) these mines (which must at one time have been the property of the Crown in posse, if not in esse) have been conceded (with the exceptions hereinafter mentioned) to the subject, to be held by him in full legal and beneficial owership, in the same manner and to the same extent that the surface of the lands has been conceded to him. And so nearly universal has that concession been that (subject to the exceptions hereinafter mentioned) the ownership of the surface is the best prima facie title to the ownership also of the mines.

When this rule first prevailed in the Spanish countries is not at all important to the discussion of this question. It was before the discovery of America. When the Spanish colonists went into that region of country occupied by them on the American continent, they carried with them this rule of law; but in 1783, while Mexico was a part of the Spanish dominions, it was declared by the king as follows:

SEC. 1. The mines are property of my royal Crown, as well by their nature and origin, as by their reunion, declared by the fourth law of the thirteenth litle of the sixth book of the new compilation (of Laws and Statutes.)

SEC. 2. Without separating them from my royal patrimony, I grant them tomy subjects in property and possession, in such manner that they may sell, exchange, (pass by will, either in the way of inheritance or legacy,) or in any other manner, dispose of all their property in them, upon the terms on which they themselves possess it, and to other persons legally capable of acquiring it.

SEC. 3. Be it understood that this grant is made upon two conditions: First, that they (my subjects) shall pay to my royal treasury the proportion of metal reserved thereto; and, secondly, that they shall carry on their operations in the mines subject to the provisions of these ordinances, on failure of which, at any time, the mines of persons so making default shall be considered as forfeited, and may be granted to any person who shall denounce them accordingly.—Rockwell's Spanish and Mexican Law, volume 1, page 49.

Whote was the law of Capin in 1722. There was the in in Section 1920.

That was the law of Spain in 1783. There was a time in Spain when the precious metals were not held by the Crown, but in the when the precious metals were not held by the Crown, but in the fourteenth century the Crown declared by a proclamation or ordinance of this character that all the precious metals in the kingdom belonged to him, but provided also for making compensation to the owners of the lands where they had held them theretofore. It was provided in that same ordinance, or in one of the ordinances passed at the same time, that any person might work any mine in the public domain, and also in the private domain, provided that he made proper compensation to the parties having the surface right; and that has been the law of Spain ever since, and of Mexico since the settlement of the country. It was provided how the mines might be taken. I find in Rockwell on Mines, section 14, an ordinance in these words:

Any one may discover and denounce a vein, not only on common land but also on the property of any individual, provided he pays for the extent of surface above the same and the damage which immediately ensues therefrom, according to the valuation of surveyors on both sides, and arbitration in case of disagreement; the same is to be understood with segard to denouncing convenient places for erecting establishments, and also waters for moving the machines employed for the reduction of ores, commonly called reducing establishments, thactendas, provided in each case that no more of the water be used than is necessary for such purposes.

I say that was the law in Mexico; so that when the Government of the United States reserves to itself the right to occupy this ground and have it mined by any person without any provision for compensation, it does not give to the people who own these grants that which they got from the Mexican Government. I say with all respect to this committee, that in very many cases that would be an absolute confiscation of the ground. They might just as well assert that the Government of the United States is the absolute owner, not of the minerals only but of the surface.

I find everywhere through the mining laws of Spain and Mexico.

I find everywhere through the mining laws of Spain and Mexico that wherever the question is one of mining on private property, there is always a reservation, that the owners of the land are to be paid for is always a reservation, that the owners of the land are to be paid for the damage they sustain. I do not believe a single case can be found where the Spanish Crown, with all its disregard for the rights of its subject, ever attempted to mine upon any man's property without making him just compensation. At one time the provision was that when others worked such a mine they should pay to the owner of the land one-tenth of the produce and to the Crown one-tenth, in addition to the damage which they must next year for the occurrent of the tion to the damages which they must pay for the occupation of the surface. Subsequently the Crown thought that was not enough and assumed the whole, and one-fifth was from that time paid to the

In a work entitled "Leading Cases on Mines, Minerals, and Mining Water Rights," I find the following taken from Halleck's Collection, and Gamboa's Commentaries, speaking of the Spanish and Mexican

In order that the owner of one interest may exercise his rights of ownership witkout interfering with the rights of ownership of the other interest in the same land, the Spanish law contains numerous provisions for regulating the exercise of these respective rights of property. Thus, there is the reserved right of entering upon land, granted for agricultural or domestic purposes, to search and dig for minerals, and if any are found, and a concession of them made, a reserved right to use a certain portion of the surface for the purpose of extracting and working the ores. But, in making such search for minerals in the ground of another, the searcher is bound to avoid doing any injury to the vines, crops, fruit trees, &c., of the surface owner; or, if injury be unavoidable, to repair it; and again, if, for the working of mines discovered and granted, a certain portion of the surface is to be taken by the mine-owner or mine-worker, or damages result from such working, an indemnity must be paid to the surface-owner, the amount of this indemnity being assessed in the manner prescribed by ordinance. In other words, all grants of land for agricultural, pastoral, or domestic purposes are subject to the reserved right of the government to the mines in such land, and to such portions of the surface appurtenant as may, in the discretion of the government, be necessary to their possession and working; and all grants of mines, however made, carry with them only so much of the surface of the land as, under the regulations of the government, is made an appurtenance thereto. But the mine-owner is bound to indemnify the land-owner for the damage which the latter sustains by the loss of so much of the surface as the law makes appurtenant to the property which is granted in the mine.

That was the law in Mexico. I have heard it said by those who are perhaps qualified to know—and it may go for what it is worth—that there is not a single instance in the history of Mexico of the condemnation of private lands in this way. Whether there is, or whether there is not, I believe that no private land could be taken for mining purposes in Mexico unless compensation was thus made.

When California was settled the Government of the United States When California was settled the Government of the United States made no attempt to interfere with workers of the precious metals. They passed no law authorizing it, they passed no law prohibiting it, and the people of California as near as they could adopted the Mexican laws. They became a part and a parcel of the laws of that land. When Colorado was settled much later we did virtually the same thing, not adopting them en masse, but adopting the principle, dividing up the territory, and giving to each man so much, recognizing the priority of occupation. Yet if under a ranch, or a farm, or a building lot in a mining district there were minerals, we recognized when the miner went on to work that he was under obligation to compensate the occupier of the land who was there before him, before he was allowed to work. Mining laws were inaugurated there by the people themselves; before there was a territorial government, by the people themselves; before there was a territorial government, before there was any legal authority, they met and exercising their rights as citizens of the United States organized themselves into a sort of government in what they called miners' districts, establishing courts and providing for the due government of the people. They provided among the very first things for the recognition of this right, and that if anybody wanted to work a mine in the soil he must condemn it, he must go before an officer and pay the damage that the occupier suffered, or give bonds that he would do so within a reasonable time. When the Legislature of Colorado met for the first time it provided that it provided that-

No person shall have the right to mine under any building or other improvement, unless he shall first secure the parties owning the same against all damages, except by priority of right.

I say that has prevailed in every mining country everywhere, and it is now for the first time proposed that the rights of a man occupying the surface (whether he occupy it by first possession or whether he occupy it by a grant of the Government is immaterial) shall be subordinate to the right of the searcher of the precious metals, and not only of the precious metals but of all other minerals of every kind and observator. and character.

I called the attention of the Senate yesterday to some cases that were decided in California by Judge Field, and I presented Judge were decided in California by Judge Field, and I presented Judge Field's opinion upon these questions because he was an early settler in California, because he was not only learned in the law but he was learned in the customs and learned in the usages of that country, and he passed upon this question in early times. In the first place, immediately after California became a State the courts of that State assumed that the title to the minerals had passed to the State. They said the State was the sovereign and had succeeded to the rights of the Spanish Crown, or the Mexican Government more properly speaking. For some considerable time, it was held by the courts that the For some considerable time it was held by the courts that the State had the minerals, and not the United States. Subsequently, when Judge Field went onto the bench, in a case that he decided, that doctrine was overruled, and after that the right was recognized to exist in the Government of the United States. I want to read a little more of Judge Field's opinion. The court said:

In the great case of The Queen vs. The Earl of Northumberland, (I Plowden, 318,) which was argued before the barons of the exchequer and all the justices of England, it was held by their unanimous judgment, "that by the law all mines of gold and silver within the realm, whether they be in the lands of the queen or of subjects, belong to the queen by prerogative, with liberty to dig and carry away the ores thereof, and with other such incidents thereto as are necessary to be used for the getting of the ore; "and also, "that a mine royal, either of base metal containing gold or silver, or of pure gold and silver only, may, by the grant of the king, be severed from the Crown, but may be severed from it by any and precise words." This case was decided in 1563, during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and continues unto this day an authoritative exposition of the doctrine of the common law. It is conclusive to the point that the right to the mines was not regarded by that law as an incident of sovereignty, but was regarded as a personal prerogative of the king, which could be alienated at his pleasure.

What I specially want to call the attention of the Senate to is that I doubt whether it can be said with propriety that the United States hold this right in any manner as it was held by the Spanish Crown or by the Mexican Government afterward:

or by the Mexican Government afterward:

No reasons in support of the prerogative are stated in the resolution of the judges, and those advanced in argument by the queen's counsel would be without force at the present time. Onslow, the queen's solicitor, says Plowden, "alleged three reasons why the king shall have mines and ores of gold and silver within the realm in whatsoever land they are found. The first was in respect to the excellency of the thing, for of all things which the soil within this realm produces or yields, gold and silver is the most excellent, and of all persons in the realm the king is, in the eye of the law, most excellent. And the common law, which is founded upon reason, appropriates everything to the person whom it best suits, as common and trivial things to the common people, things of more worth to persons in a higher and superior class, and things most excellent to those persons who excel all other; and because gold and silver are the most excellent things which the soil contains, the law has appointed them (as in reason it ought) to the person who is most excellent, and that is the king. * * * The second reason was, in respect of the necessity of the thing. For the king is the head of the weal-public, and the subjects are his members; and the office of the king, to which the law has appointed him, is to preserve his subjects; and their preservation consisted in two things, namely, in an army to defend them against hostilities, and in good laws."

I submit that none of these reasons exists in this country why the

I submit that none of these reasons exists in this country why the Government should take these mines and hold them. The court goes

An army cannot be had and maintained without treasure, for which reason some authors, in their books, call treasure the sinews of war; and, therefore, inasmuch as God has created mines within this realm, as a natural provision of treasure for the defense of the realm, it is reasonable that he who has the government and care of the people, whom he cannot defend without treasure, should have the treasure wherewith to defend them. * * * The third reason was in respect of its convenience to the subjects in the way of mutual commerce and traffic. For the subjects of the realm must, of necessity, have intercourse or dealing with one another, for no individual is furnished with all necessary commodities, but one has need of the things which another has, and they cannot sell or buy together without coin. * * * And if the subject should have it, (the ore of gold or silver), the law would not permit him to coin it, nor put a print or value upon it, for it belongs to the king only to fix the value of coin and to ascertain the price of the quantity, and to put the print upon it, which being done the coin becomes current for so much as the king has limited. But if the subject have the ore of gold and silver which is found in his land, he could not convert it into coin, nor put any print or value on it.

I believe he could do that in this country if it happened to be gold; that is he could take it to the Government mint and pay the price of getting it done. If it should happen to be silver I believe he would not be quite so fortunate:

not be quite so fortunate:

For if he makes coin it was high treason by the common law, before the statute of twenty-fifth Ed. 3, cap. 2, as it appears by twenty-third Ass., where a woman was burnt for forging or counterfeiting money; and it was high treason to the king, because he has the sole power to make money. So that body of the realm would receive no benefit or advantage if the subject should have the gold and silver found in mines in his land; but on the other hand, by appropriating it to the king, it tends to the universal benefit of all the subjects in making their king able to defend them with an army against all hostilities, and when he has put the print and value upon it, and has disbursed it among his subjects, they are thereby enabled to carry on matual commerce with one another, and to buy and sell as they have occasion, and to traffic at their pleasure. Therefore, for these reasons, namely, for the excellency of the thing, and for the necessity of it and the convenience that will accrue to the subjects, the common law, which is no other than pure and tried reason, has appropriated the ore of gold and silver to the king in whatever land it be found.

Further the count saws.

Further the court says:

It would be a waste of time to show that none of the reasons thus advanced in support of the right of the Crown to the mines can avail to sustain any claim of the state to them. The state takes no property by reason of "the excellency of the thing," and taxation furnishes all the requisite means for the expenses of government. The convenience of citizens in commercial transactions is undoubtedly promoted by a supply of coin, and the right of coinage appertains to sovereignty. But the exercise of this right does not require the ownership of the precious metals by the State or by the Federal Government, where this right is lodged under our system, as the experience of every day demonstrates.

The right of the Crown, whatever may be the reasons assigned for its maintenance, had in truth its origin in an arbitrary exercise of power by the king, which was at the time justified on the ground that the mines were required as a source of revenue.

It follows, from the views we have thus expressed, that the first position advanced by the defendants cannot be sustained; that the gold and silver which passed by the cession from Mexico were not held by the United States in trust for the future State; that the ownership of them is not an incident of any right of sovereignty; that the minerals were held by the United States in the same manner as they held any other public property—

The court is speaking of the public domain and not of private which they acquired from Mexico, and that their ownership from them was not lost, or in any respect impaired by the admission of California as a State.

The second position of the defendants is, that if the minerals did not vest in the State by her admission into the Union, they remained the property of the United States, notwithstanding their patents to the Fernandez and to Frémont. This position is not based upon any language of the patents, for it is admitted that their terms of grant would operate, in case of a conveyance of an individual, to pass all the interest which the grantor could possess in the land.

I call the attention of the Senate to that, because when this bill was under discussion at a former session the honorable Senator from Vermont took exception to my statement that the patent always carried with it everything beneath the surface, and cited a case in 1 McAllister where it was stated that the Government had not dedicated the minerals in the public lands to the prospectors, which was a fact the converse of which nobody asserted. The court say that this position—

Is based upon the supposition that, as the act of March 3, 1851, provides for the recognition and confirmation of the rights acquired by the grants from Mexico, the patents were only intended as evidence on the part of the United States of such recognition and confirmation. By those grants, as we have seen, no interest in the minerals of gold and silver passed to the grantees, and if the patents amount only to an acknowledgment of the rights derived from the former government, that interest still remains in the United States. This view of the patents is not justified by any provisions of the act. The object of the act is "to ascertain and settle" private land claims in California. This object is declared in the first section. It is not merely to ascertain, but "to settle" the claims; that is, to establish them—to perfect them—by placing them, so far as the Government is concerned, beyond controversy. This ascertainment is intrusted by the act to a board of commissioners and to the courts. By proceedings before them the validity of the claims is determined; yet little benefit would result to the claimats from such determination if the act required or authorized nothing further. Many of the claims held in this State fall far short, even when confirmed, of being available titles; some are mere inchoate titles; some are equitable titles; and some are to specific quantities of land situated within boundaries embracing a much larger extent. The act, therefore, provides for proceedings to be taken after the claims have been subjected to the investigation of the board and the courts. The lands claimed are to be surveyed and segregated from the public domain by the officers of the Government, and patents are to issue to the claimants. The issuance of the patents does not depend upon the character of the claims—whether they be legal or merely equitable, or whether they be of specific

That decision was made in 1861, and that has been the law in this country recognized everywhere ever since. Every man who to-day owns a Mexican title that he did not receive himself from the Mexican Government since that decision was made has bought with the can Government since that decision was made has bought with the implied understanding that that was the law. I know, of course, that there is no estoppel against the Government. I know that while we may have recognized rights that the Government might have asserted in 1848, yet if the Government sees fit to-day it can assert those rights. I understand that fully; but I say equity, fair dealing, and justice to these people should prevent the Government from doing it unless the failure to so assert its rights would work a great injury to the people of the United States, or unless there should be a pressing necessity and a great advantage to be derived to the Government

In the Louisiana purchase from France, we took land containing mines, and mines of the very character now proposed to be reserved. There were mines in Missouri, there were mines in Arkansas, there were mines in Iowa, and there were mines in other sections of the country; yet we commenced immediately to confirm the titles to those lands either by special act or by a general act, and this is the first time that it ever was attempted to reserve to the Government first time that it ever was attempted to reserve to the Government this right to the precious metals. I say that more than a hundred claims have been confirmed, by special or general enactments, and yet there was no exception. Hundreds of claims were confirmed under a general act that applied to the State of California, and to the New Mexico and Arizona regions; hundreds of claims have been confirmed by the commissioners and by the courts, and yet no reservation has ever been made. After the great mass of such claims have been confirmed, after the people of the United States have day by day been led to suppose that when they bought the lands they by day been led to suppose that when they bought the lands they bought a fee-simple title, absolute, then comes the Committee on Private Land Claims and says that the General Government has been heretofore parting with that which belonged to it, and now the public good requires that it should interfere and provide that the precions metals and other metals not recognized as belonging to the Crown shall be reserved to the United States.

As I said before, it would be the absolute confiscation of a portion of this country. I can name grants to-day in New Mexico that are confirmed, and if this rule had been applied they would have been absolutely worthless. They were mineral grants; not made as mineral grants, but yet that was their only value. They have been worked by the owners, and they will always be worked by the owners. There is not any danger that a man who has a league of land or ten leagues of land will sit down and prevent a prospector from mining on it. He is anxious to have him go on and mine on it. In a majority of cases the prospector is anxious to mine upon ground where he can obtain a perfect and complete title to the land when he has made his

In 1849, the honorable Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Thomas Ewing, submitted in his report some suggestions with reference to these mines, and inquired what was to be the policy of the Government; did the Government intend now to follow the rule that had been adopted by the Mexican Government, or did the Government intend to pursue some other policy? Speaking of the Mexican law

Any individual might enter upon the lands of another to search for ores of the precious metals; and, having discovered a mine, he might register and thus acquire the right to work it on paying to the owner the damage done to the surface, and to the Crown whose property it was a fifth or tenth, according to the quality of the mine. If the finder neglect to work, or worked it imperfectly, it might be denounced by any other person, whereby he would become entitled.

This right to the mines of precious metals, which by the laws of Spain remained in the Crown, is believed to have been also retained by Mexico while she was sovereign of the territory, and to have passed by her transfer to the United States. It is a right of the sovereign in the soil as perfect as if it had been expressly reserved in the body of the grant; and it will rest with Congress to determine whether in those cases where lands duly granted contain gold this right shall be asserted or relinquished. If relinquished, it will require an express law to effect the object; and if retained, legislation will be necessary to provide a mode by which it shall be exercised.

commend that to the committee and submit that if this part of the bill is to be retained, then there should be in this bill some provision, bill is to be retained, then there should be in this bill some provision, some protection for the land-owner, and I say that there is none.

Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate any longer upon this question. I know that it is very difficult when you meet a committee composed of learned Senators who have given careful attention to a bill of this kind, and when it does not involve the payment of any money out of the public Treasury, to overcome their report. I know it comes to the Senate with weight back of it, and I know more than that, that the people who are to be affected by this legislation (because it does not affect anybody in Colorado) have no representative on this floor. They have nobody to stand here to protect them in their interests; and I know that under the bill the grossest injustice is about to be done, if it becomes a law, to the people who have justice is about to be done, if it becomes a law, to the people who have gone out into that country and have put in their money under the acquiescence of the Government that the law of the land was what I have stated, after almost fifty years, or forty years; it is thirty-odd years at all events, since the courts have begun to pass upon this question, or nearly that length of time.

I said before that there was not any estoppel upon the Government; and yet the Supreme Court declared in substance that there had grown up in this country a common law of mines which the Supreme Court would recognize independent of any statute. They said that in 3 Wallace years and years ago, and that was with reference to the value of the mines. They said they recognized the fact that to the value of the mines. They said they recognized the fact that Congress had not passed any law authorizing the occupation of the mineral lands; but they said, "We are not insensible to the fact that the people have gone on and occupied these lands for many years with the acquiescence of the Government; and we will hold that such a right is a valid right of property that may be litigated in our courts." That was the common law of mines; and these men have gone on and bought this property under the common law, under the sanction of the Government, on the supposition that they would be allowed to maintain rights that we had recognized in all others when we had confirmed their grants. For almost a hundred years we have been recognizing the right of every man who owned the soil to every-thing beneath it, no matter whether he took his title from a government that did or did not so recognize it; and now we are asked to throw around it the odious and objectionable features of the Spanish and the Mexican law without any of the redeeming, modifying or saving features of that law. We are asked to say that every prospector may invade every orchard and every vineyard and dig under every house and every building that has been built in those great Territories without any compensation, and such men may run right over that country if they see fit. over that country if they see fit.

Mr. President, those people hold their lands by what they consider a just and right tenure, and I assure the Senator that if he expects that peace and prosperity will follow such a law as this he misunderstands the temper of the people who have lived upon these lands so many years. This bill ought to be entitled differently from what it is. Out of respect to the committee I will not say what I proposed to say; but I anticipate that if it does become a law it will be the means of creating bloodshed and riot and disorder in that section of country. You cannot take these rights from the people who the means of creating bloodshed and riot and disorder in that section of country. You cannot take these rights from the people who have been there so many years, and who believe under the sanction of the Government that the rights are theirs, without some contention and some trouble. And especially you cannot do it when you extend it to the copper mines, and when you extend it to the coal mines and to the marble beds, which neither the King of Spain nor the government of Mexico at any time thought they had any right or claimed any right to. When that is attempted there will be trouble in that section. If the Government desires to retain to itself that which the Spanish King or the Mexican Government did, then let it retain it under the same circumstances, protecting the occupier of retain it under the same circumstances, protecting the occupier of the land. Let it be said that if a mine is discovered under a man's the land. Let it be said that if a mine is discovered under a man's house, he shall be paid. Let it be said that if a man desires to work a mine in a vineyard or in an orchard or in a grain field, the owner of the land shall be paid. That is what the Mexican Government said, that is what the Spanish King said, and that is what the committee do not propose to say. Yet they tell us that they are here to give to these people just exactly what the Government of Mexico and the Spanish Crown granted to them.

What benefit is it to the Government to retain these metals? What will the Government go unt of them? Not the revealty that the King

What benefit is it to the Government to retain these metals? What will the Government get out of them? Not the royalty that the King of Spain got; not the royalty that the Mexican Government got. The people of the United States never would pay royalty. In 1862 it was proposed by the other House of Congress that the miners on the public lands should pay 5 per cent. of the outcome of their mines to the Government of the United States, but the measure was unpopular with the people and unpopular with the Legislature, and it never became a law. The Government reserves to itself a barren right. It reserves to itself simply the right to say to every lawless man: "Invade any other man's possession that you choose, and put it upon the ground that you are hunting for the precious metals or that you are hunting for coal, or copper, or iron, or marble, or anything else."

I submit, with all respect, that the bill will be an outrage upon the respect, that it will breed confusion and work hardship to the people; that it will breed confusion and work hardship to the people in whose interest it is professedly passed. Because I believe this, I have felt moved to speak; not that I have expected so much to influence this Senate, but—as the Senator from Vermont frequently says—to wash my hands of it and to be rid of any further responsibility in the matter. I believe what we want is to settle these land titles, and to settle them once for all, so that every man who goes there and takes a piece of land will know that he is converted it believed and takes a piece of land will know that he is owner of it absolutely and in fee. Any other title in this country is inconsistent with American ideas and with a republican government. It is inconsistent that the Government should hold the right to a mine while some man holds the surface; property in the Government with individuals is inconsistent with our form of government and can work no advantage to sistent with our form of government and can work no advantage to the Government nor to any member of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think I shall only ask the attention of the Senate for five minutes in replying to the very able and ingenious argument of my friend from Colorado.

In the first place, speaking of the question at large, I think I can say for the Committee on Private Land Claims that it has very good say for the Committee on Private Land Claims that it has very good reason to believe from its researches in the last three or four years, while this matter has been before it, beginning with the time when my respected friend from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] was its chairman, that the great body of the intelligent and reputable people of the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona (which is really the substance of this bill, although it takes in, in order to make it complete, a little part of Colorado, but as my friend says that State is not practically affected) are in favor of these very provisions in this bill. The lands in those Territories are peculiar. The grants are enormous in size. The number of forgeries and false claims, some of which have been already discovered, is prodigious in comparison to the ordinary cases of grants in other parts of the country, where the land is really valuable for agriculture and is not valuable for mines. That is the general state of the case.

Therefore, I think we are justified, from our information, in saying that the provision to which my friend from Colorado objects is thought by the large body of intelligent and responsible citizens of those Territories to be a wholesome and desirable one as a matter of policy. As a matter of right certainly these claimants can ask the United States to do no more than to give them what they got by the grants of the Government of Spain or of Mexico. My friend confesses that under those grants they did not get the precious metals; and he is mistaken in supposing that this bill covers anything else than the precious metals. It does not cover coal or iron by the language of the bill; I rather wish it did, and I do not know but that we right do it; but it does not do!!

In that general state of the case, the policy of the United States, just as in reference to its mining and mineral lands that it owns itself just as in reference to its mining and mineral lands that it owns itself and which appears in chapter 6 of the Revised Statutes, it is thought for the benefit of the people of those Territories, should be to adopt the same principle; and that is not to give away under color of these enormous grants to parties who have made combinations to control such a vast extent of territory these mines, but to hold them subject to the future disposition of the United States.

Now I come to the point that my friend makes, that this is an invasion of private rights, differing from the Mexican and the Spanish law. By no means. This bill, if it become a law, will not authorize me, or my friend from Colorado, or any other citizen of the United States, to set his foot upon any confirmed grant, whether under color or really for the purpose of hunting for the precious metals or working a mine. It simply says that these minerals which do not belong to the confirmee shall remain the property of the United States with the right of working the same; that is, the right of the United States to the confirmee shall remain the property of the United States with the right of working the same; that is, the right of the United States as a government to work them. In order to work them properly, of course, if there shall be occasion for it, the United States will proceed, not on a confirming-land bill, but on a mining-law bill to provide for such cases of working. It creates no right in anybody, not even in the Secretary of the Interior, without some further provision of Congress, to invade the possession of anybody who has had an accommand the secretary of the Interior, without some further provision of Congress, to invade the possession of anybody who has had an accommand the secretary of the Interior, without some further provision of Congress, to invade the possession of anybody who has had an of Congress, to invade the possession of anybody who has had an agricultural grant.

The case from which my friend read yesterday, decided I believe by Judge Field, certainly by some judge who understood the law, is precisely in point on this subject. There it was held, that the right of a party to search for precious metals, &c., did not entitle him to go upon land in the ownership of anybody else, in his mere character as a citizen; he must be under the authority of law, under proper regulations. Therefore this bill does not set loose upon anybody's vineyard, are none anybody's crebard or anybody's resture, any citizen of the or upon anybody's orchard or anybody's pasture, any citizen of the United States whatever; but the question of regulating the working of these mines, for which chiefly vast quantities of these lands are only valuable, is a matter which belongs to a separate consideration and to a different committee.

The sole object and the sole effect of this bill is to provide for giving to the Spanish and the Mexican grantees precisely what they are entitled to in law and in equity by force of those grants, and to stop there. That is the whole scope of this bill. It is merely to give to these incomplete titles under the Mexican and the Spanish laws the confirmation which the grantees desire, and to separate them from the public lands of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. If it will not disturb the Senator from Vermont, I should like to make an inquiry of him. In what respect does the present bill under consideration change the law as it now stands in present bill under consideration change the law as it now stands in reference to these grants?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does not change the present law a particle; it is designed not to change it; but only to enable the people who have incomplete grants which under the treaties we are bound to recognize, equitable rights to a confirmation, if the territorial sovereignty had not passed, to perfect their titles to precisely what they had undertaken to get. Where they had undertaken to get a mine they get that; and there are cases of that kind. Where they had undertaken to get land for military service they get that; and in that case by the right as it now stands they are not entitled to precious metals. Where they got an agricultural grant for a little pueblo with varas setting off a few acres to each, and a common right of pasturage reserved to be given to still further settlers when it is claimed, they get that, leaving them to stand precisely where they were before, only confirming to them, so as to separate it as to boundaries from other public land and give them a good title, what they are entitled to get.

Ing to them, so as to separate it as to boundaries from other public land and give them a good title, what they are entitled to get.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont a question, if he will yield.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With pleasure.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that I understand exactly the force of the question asked by the Senator. I want to ask him if there has been any act of confirmation, either a general act or a private act, that has made a regulation of this kind?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know whether there has a post; but ay that has made a regulation of this kind?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know whether there has or not; but excepting the instance of California, which stood upon special grounds and which probably was not much attended to at the time, for the reason I assume that everybody supposed that a confirmation there would not carry the precious metals, and it certainly would not, as everybody agrees, but for a full patent by the United States which may have been granted, a case of this kind has never arisen before, for, as I stated a few moments ago, these two Territories are peculiar in the circumstance that for the purposes of settlement, agricultural cultivation, and commerce, the nature of the climate is such as to put them upon entirely different grounds of policy from California and Colorado, and the other States.

Mr. TELLER. If it would not lead the Senator into a geographical discussion of this question, I should like to ask him why Arizona and New Mexico present features different from California and a portion of Colorado?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The reason I was trying to give, as it struck my mind, was that we have generally been taught respecting the meteorological geography, if I may use such a phrase, of those two Territories, that they are in general extremely arid, and in general are not largely susceptible of cultivation, and building up a large population with the pursuits which make the real substance and progress of a State, as most other parts of the country are; but that is a mere matter of policy.

Mr. TELLER. It is not different from California, or a portion of Mr. TELLER. It is not different from California, or a portion of California at any rate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is very different from California, but I will not spend any time about that. The simple proposition in this bill is to give to these people precisely what both legally and equitably they are by their grants, if they have them, entitled to have, and bly they are by their grants, if they have them, entitled to have, and to separate their grants from the other lands which still belong to the United States, in order that the chief business of these Territories mining and grazing in these arid pastures, may be carried on without difficulty. That is the whole of it; and when it comes to the question of this reserved mining right, I repeat, as my friend read yesterday from a law book, which I should have said was quite unnecessary, that there was nothing in this bill which gives any citizen, or anybody else, a right to trespass upon whatever may be confirmed. That will be a subject, if the United States choose to provide for taking up a mine in any one of these confirmed claims, for the future regulation of Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I have no purpose to enter into a discussion of the legal questions involved, but I desire to call the attencussion of the legal questions involved, but I desire to call the attention of the Senate to some matters of fact in connection with these confirmations heretofore. There have been over sixty, I think, confirmations by Congress of grants in the Territory of New Mexico. No one of them contains any such exception as is provided for in this bill. All the grants that have been specially confirmed by Congress have conveyed to the grantee the entire estate, not only the surface of the lands, but all the mines and all the minerals. It does not seem that there would be any necessity now for creating a distinction. The grants were originally derived from the same source; they came The grants were originally derived from the same source; they came to us with the same obligation to respect them; we have confirmed many of them, as I have said, by special act, and have given to all those persons in whose names they were confirmed an absolute right to the estate. Now we propose to set up a different rule with those who have not been so diligent, who have not been thoughtful enough to come to Congress and ask to have their grants confirmed.

We have done a great deal more than that. I hold in my hand a list of fourteen grants, each one of which exceeds in amount the ut-most limit provided by the law of Mexico. Eleven leagues is the maximum limit under the law of Mexico of a grant. Congress in conmaximum limit under the law of Mexico of a grant. Congress in confirming these grants confirmed them by boundaries which gave to the grantees a great deal more than eleven leagues. In one case, the Maxwell grant, they gave nearly one million acres of land. In the Craig grant, and in many others which might be named and which have been more or less prominently mentioned in the discussion of these questions heretofore, a large addition was made to the maximum number of acres to which grantees were entitled. It was done, perhaps, by reason of error on the part of the Government or on the part of Congress, but with undoubted design by the parties who secured the confirmation. We have therefore heretofore given many persons a great deal more than they were entitled to under the treaty sons a great deal more than they were entitled to under the treaty with Mexico, and we have given to them besides, as I said, the control of all minerals and mines within the limits of their respective grants. We now propose to make an exception.

I know a little something about that country to which this bill relates. There are great regions of that country that are mineral in one sense, and yet not mineral in the sense that the mineral could now be profitably worked. It is safe to say that there are millions of acres be profitably worked. It is safe to say that there are millions or acres of land in New Mexico which contain some mineral, perceptible mineral, but mineral which, by reason of the difficult methods of extracting it, by reason of the lack of water and other difficulties, cannot be worked profitably; but if this bill shall pass every man who owns one of these grants of land will be occupying it and owning it under a perpetual dread that some one ingenious enough to apply some more economical process will be able to take up the dirt on the land (which is now fit only for grazing) and work it successfully for mining puroses, and so he may be deprived of his entire surface-right as well as the right to what there is below.

As the Senator from Colorado has said, the reservation on the part of the Government will be construed as giving to every one who seeks a mine the right to enter on any of these grants. Take the case of Oklahoma. The Attorney-General of the United States says that is not public land, and the record who seek to go in there say it is not public land. Oklahoma. The Attorney-General of the United States says that is not public land, and the people who seek to go in there say it is public land, and justify themselves in going there because it is public land notwithstanding permission never has been given by any law of the United States. Wherever there is a bit of public land within the limits of the United States every citizen of the United States feels that that is a piece of land he has a perfect privilege and right to go upon; and if the United States has a mining claim, placer or otherwise, within the limits of a grant of land a mile, or ten miles or twenty miles from the nearest point on its circumference there will be hundreds and thousands and tens of thousands of miners or would-be hundreds and thousands and tens of thousands of miners or wouldbe miners who will cross that intervening space at all hazards for the purpose of working that mine.

What good does it do to reserve the right to the minerals to the Government of the United States? The Government of the United States is not going into mining; it does not want to sell for the paltry pittance of $5 an acre which it gets now for the mines it does sell.

That is no object to the Government of the United States. Is the Government going into the mining business? The Government should have no right to the use of a mine on one of these grants any more than a private individual should have such a right over adjoining land to that for which title has been confirmed. It cannot authorize its condemnation in any way because the use of it for mining our its condemnation in any way because the use of it for mining purposes would not be a public use. We are simply providing, therefore, a means whereby the occupants and owners of these grants may be subject to the constant harassing trespasses which inevitably would ensue and that do ensue wherever minerals are to be found; and intended of content titles it had better the content to the content stead of quieting titles it had better a great deal be entitled a bill to make lawlessness, anarchy, and trouble, and disturbance all over that Territory.

I do not say that this third subdivision of the twelfth section, which is the subject of this debate, may not be a fair construction of the laws of Mexico, but I do say that it would be a great deal wiser to leave all these questions to the tribunal before which they are to come and let those courts decide in each individual case what the right of the owner is, rather than attempt to fix it by legislative interpretation.

Having regard to the course of legislation heretofore, and in view of all these facts, it seems to me exceedingly unwise for the Government to make this assertion. More than that, it will be taken as an assertion in regard to grants heretofore confirmed and they will be made the subject of like trespasses. I therefore feel that, so far as that part of the bill is concerned, it should be stricken out. There should be no assertion by the Government of this right to any of the min-

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] to strike out the third subdivision of section 12 as the same has been amended.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I do not propose to debate this bill in detail; I only wish to say a word or two as to the necessity of passing a bill on this subject.

ing a bill on this subject.

I was, as the Senate knows, for years chairman of the Committee on Private Land Claims, and that committee during my chairmanship reported a bill which was substantially the same as this bill, except this mining section. This mining section was not in the bill that was reported by me by direction of the committee. In other respects it is very much the same. It is necessary to pass some measure of this kind, but let me say to the Senate that the right of persons to hold the property conceded to them by the Mexican Government is secured by the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo and the treaty of the city of Mexico, and there would be no necessity for any legislation at all but for two reasons. One reason is that some legislation is necessary in order to segregate the concessions made by the Mexican Government, and even before that by the Spanish Government, from the public domain even before that by the Spanish Government, from the public domain even before that by the Spanish Government, from the public domain that surrounds them; and therefore a survey and a perfect ascertainment of the boundaries and extent of these grants becomes an absolute necessity; otherwise the Government of the United States cannot sell its public land. Congress has usually provided upon ascertainment of the boundaries for the granting of a patent, although again and again Congress has passed an act simply confirming the grant, as it was called, which the Supreme Court has held was equivalent to a patent; but really a patent was not processed to recessed the constant of the confirming the grant, as it was called, which the Supreme Court has held was equivalent to a patent; but really a patent was not processed. alent to a patent; but really a patent was not necessary nor an act of confirmation, except as settling the boundaries, for the right of the owner of the land to his land is absolutely secured by the treaties with Mexico.

But here are a great number of claims. Ithink there were referred, first and last, to the Committee on Private Land Claims eighty or ninety of these grants which had received the approbation of the surveyor-general of the Territory of New Mexico and of the surveyor-general of the Territory of Arizona, most of them in New Mexico. Upon examining them the committee did not find one that they could report a bill to confirm, and why? Some of them contained more land than the Mexican laws allowed to be conceded to a single individual; but the chief difficulty and that to which every single individual; but the chief difficulty, and that to which every one of them was obnoxious, was that there was no such definition of the boundaries as would enable us to say whether they contained too much land or not; or if they did not contain too much land, no such definition of the boundaries as would segregate the tract completely from the public domain. Therefore a bill of this kind is in my judgfrom the public domain. Therefore a bill of this kind is in my judgment absolutely necessary, and the only question about it is whether it is policy to put in this clause declaring that the minerals shall remain the property of the United States.

With respect to that I have only a word to say. The bill gives to the owners of the land all that the Mexican law gives. If the Territory had never been ceded to the United States and these persons had proceeded to perfect their concessions and obtain title from Mexico, they would not have obtained title to the minerals.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think the word "minerals" will carry more than was reserved?

Mr. THURMAN. I mean the precious metals. Mr. TELLER. The bill provides:

No allowance or confirmation of any claim shall confer any right or title to any gold, silver, or quicksilver mines or minerals, unless the grant claimed effected the donation or sale of such mines or minerals to the grantee; but all such mines and minerals shall remain the property of the United States, &c.

Mr. THURMAN. I cannot answer without referring to the Mexican laws. I was familiar with them when I was chairman of that committee. I was speaking simply of gold, silver, and quicksilver; I was not speaking of coal or iron or copper. I said that under the old Spanish law, and under the Mexican law the precious metals, gold, silver, and quicksilver, remained the property of the State, unless the concession was expressly a mining concession, and then the limits of it were much less than for an agricultural concession. This happened, were much less than for an agricultural concession. This happened, however, when California was settled; when there was that great rush to California after the discovery of gold there, the miners took possession of everything, courts, mines, and everything else, and hence it got to be law recognized by the courts in California that the minerals passed to the owner of the concession belonged to him. That was certainly not the law of Mexico, and how the courts ever came was certainly not the law of Mexico, and how the courts ever came to decide it I do not know, unless, indeed, the acts of Congress on that subject by some kind of side-wind gave color to that pretension.

Mr. McDONALD. The act of Congress of 1851 authorized commissioners in California to examine the claims and confirm them.

Mr. THURMAN. That is what I never understood, but somehow or other that came into the California practice and into the California decisions; and now it is objected by the New Mexicans and the Arizonians that we ought not to adopt a rule in regard to those Ter-Arizonians that we ought not to adopt a rule in regard to those Territories that we did not adopt in regard to California, and they say it is not just to them. That is a question for the Senate to decide. I do not know what may be the effect of this reservation. As I said before, it was not in the bill which was originally reported; but I for one am willing, if the committee insist on it after having carefully considered it, that the experiment may be tried. At all events, one thing is certain, that those who obtain a confirmation of their title will get all that the laws of Mexico entitled them to get.

I ought to have said that there is another reason for passing the bill and for legislation on the subject, and that is that some of these concessions when the territory was granted to the United States were inchoate; the conditions had not been fully complied with; our courts have decided that notwithstanding the transfer of jurisdiction to the United States, persons holding concessions had a right to go on and perfect them as they would have had under the Mexican law. The Supreme Court has held, and the courts in California have univer-Supreme Court has held, and the courts in California have universally held, that these concessions might be perfected after the cession to the United States. This, therefore, is a necessary law. I hope that it may be passed either with or without this clause in regard to minerals, as the Senate in its wisdom may determine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] to strike out.

Mr. Teller. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to hear the clause read as it now is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

out will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Third. No allowance or confirmation of any claim shall confer any right or title to any gold, silver, or quicksilver mines or minerals, unless the grant claimed effected the donation or sale of such mines or minerals to the grantee; or unless such grantee has become otherwise entitled thereto in law or in equity; but all such mines and minerals shall remain the property of the United States, with the right of working the same, which fact shall be stated in any patents issued under this act.

Mr. President, I should like to ask of any one interested in the bill or in the proposed amendment what would be the effect upon the bill and upon the rights of parties, and, as a matter of justice, of allowing the section to remain as it is and adding at the close of it these words:

But the right to such property so reserved in the United States shall not exist in any land inclosed within the limits of the grant which shall be in open, visible occupation and actual improvement by the confirmee or his assignee for any purpose whatever at the time final decree of confirmation shall be made.

I have listened to the discussion with a great deal of interest and have been impressed with the views expressed by gentlemen on the opposing sides of the question at issue; and it does seem to me that the passing of the bill in the form in which it now stands may be attended with a great deal of hardship and of uncertainty. An amendment of the kind which I have suggested would certainly leave the land open to improvement during the pendency of legal proceedings, if title and rights should be obtained from the party to whom ultimately a decree of confirmation shall be made. There are many suggestions that occur to my mind which lead me to suppose that if this language which I suggest is carefully studied many objections to the bill as it now is will be obviated. I do not want to interfere in this matter, because I do not understand it very well. I can see, however, plainly that it is an extremely important bill, and it has much to do with the future development of these great mining Territories; and it is very desirable that the law to be enacted should be so far per-I have listened to the discussion with a great deal of interest and it is very desirable that the law to be enacted should be so far perfected as possible. Mr. EDMUNDS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The effect of such an amendment as the Senator from New Hampshire suggests would be in ninety-five cases in one hundred exactly the same as striking out the whole subdivision; that is to say, it would give to the confirmee the gold, silver, and quicksilver in the land, for all of the speculators and other people who have bought up so many of these old titles, good or bad, would be in possession and operating on the ground at the time of the final decree. That would be the effect of it.

Now that Len up I will add that the committee having assuined.

decree. That would be the effect of it.

Now that I am up, I will add that the committee having examined this subject so long and so carefully and having heard all interests, those of the people as well as those of the claimants under these grants, are satisfied, from the testimony and statements of a large number of persons all in one direction that the interest and welfare of the people of the two Territories chiefly affected by this bill depend largely upon retaining this third subdivision in the bill, and with the information the committee had I should be quite unwilling to yote for the bill with that stricken out.

to vote for the bill with that stricken out.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont if the effect of the bill as it now stands would not be to tie up these lands from the present date until a decision may be obtained in the courts from the present date until a decision may be obtained in the courts upon these grants, which may occupy two years, ten years, or possibly twenty years, for the titles can be litigated judicially all the way from the commencement to the final decree in the Supreme Court of the United States? The language which I suggest would only confirm the right as against the United States to work these minerals in a party holding under the confirmee, the man who should ultimately be decided to have the ownership of the land, or his assignee. The Senator from Vermont suggests that the result of it would be to confirm the right to minerals to speculators and others who are now interesting themselves in the mineral rights vested in this land. That may be so; but the question which I raise is whether the bill as it now stands is not an absolute blockade to all mineral improvement within the limits of these grants until such time as final decision may be obtained limits of these grants until such time as final decision may be obtained from the Supreme Court. It is not to be supposed that these immense and valuable rights are to be decided judicially until the lapse of long periods of time. And is the public good to be conserved by the prevention of these mineral developments even by speculators, for most mining men are speculators? I think a miner is naturally a speculator. The mining business is a speculation. A man has got to have much of the speculative element in him in order that he may indulge himself in that luxury at all, if it proves to be a luxury. And yet the mining interest itself, resulting from these efforts in the direction of speculation, is of vast importance to the country; and it would be a great calamity if the mines which are to be found in these grants in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and Wyoming (for I think Wyoming is also covered, and, perhaps, one or two other Territories, by the terms of the bill) are not to be worked, if mining operations are to be brought to a stand-still until the termination of this protracted litigation in the courts of the country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend from New Hampshire were correct in his fears there would be some force in what he says; but this bill in his fears there would be some force in what he says; but this bill if it should become a law leaves the question of mines precisely where the law confessedly leaves it now. If the confirmee or the claimant in possession chooses to work the mine that is within his land, or hunt for it, he has the same right that anybody else has on the public lands which the general mining laws of the United States provide for. If it is not within the grant, then the ordinary mineral laws of the United States explice.

the United States apply.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will excuse me. I understand him to say that the force of the bill is to reserve the right of working the mine in the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.
Mr. BLAIR. I do not understand him to say that this right of working in the United States and so reserved in the United States working in the United States and so reserved in the United States is subordinated to the general mineral laws of the country, so that any one can take that right of working from the United States. I understood him to indicate that it was a right reserved to be exercised by the United States if by anybody, and that no man could take advantage of the ordinary mineral laws of the country to prospect upon these grants at all, because he says the right reserved is not liable to the objection which is suggested by the Senator from Colorado that every man may go upon these grants and prospect and disturb the onietude and possession of the occupant.

every man may go upon these grants and prospect and disturb the quietude and possession of the occupant.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend from New Hampshire, I think, with great respect, has confounded two different things. What I was speaking of before was the right of a stranger to invade the possession of the claimant, being entitled I will say to a confirmation of his agricultural grant, for the purpose of hunting for mineral. It does stop that until the United States make further provision, and it ought to do so in the very line of the argument that my friend from ought to do so in the very line of the argument that my friend from Colorado made, that you have no right without compensation and regulation to authorize anybody else to invade his rightful possession. When you come to himself, he has a right to authorize anybody or himself to proceed to prospect, of course, as any other possessor has. So that when you put the private right of possession together with the general mineral laws of the United States, you leave the thing exactly where it is now: within the limits of the claim the claimant exactly where it is now: within the limits of the claim the claimant has a right to prospect, and the general public has not a right to prospect, on the very ground that my friend from Colorado put it, that it would be an injustice to do it without compensation. When you get outside of this, then the general laws of the United States apply, and this bill does not.

Mr. BLAIR. I would like to ask the Senator upon what he bases the right of the occupant any more than any one else to trespass upon this reserved right of the United States and get the mineral? Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not base it on the right to trespass. The United States has still the mineral; but a man does not trespass on United States has still the mineral; but a man does not trespass on his own land in respect of going upon it. Then there being mines that belong to the United States, as all the mines do under the general land laws they being reserved in the land system always, he has the same right to work a mine that anybody else has upon public land. Nobody else would have a right to work it on his land, and the fact that it was on his land although it belongs to the United States and was subject to the mineral laws would not prevent his working it, and nobody else could get his possession. It leaves everybody where he stands.

Mr. BLAIR. Then, if I understand the Senator, if this bill becomes a law the confirmee has the right to work the land covered by the grant for minerals, he has the right to prospect, he has the right to work the land for that purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what I think the law is. I think it meets the Senator's view entirely.

Mr. PLUMB. The term "speculator" that the Senator from Ver-

Mr. PLUMB. The term "speculator" that the Senator from vermont uses in connection with those who work mineral claims might be fairly illustrated by saying that speculators have had their claims confirmed. The people who chiefly own this land now are Mexicans, who were in possession of the land at the time of the treaty, and remain in possession. The people who were bright enough to buy the land for speculative purposes were also bright enough to come to Congress and get their titles confirmed. The people who own these lands to-day are chiefly a class of men who are not able to protect themselves; they are not speculators in the ordinary sense of the

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend from Kansas, I think is mistaken in respect of the only people being interested now being the Mexicans, the ancient, original, agricultural people. There are now on the files of the Senate, as my friend from Ohio reminds me, that came to our knowledge while he was chairman of this committee, more than sixty claims for these enormous grants, by persons who call themselves the assignees and successors of the agricultural population; and my information is from the Land Office, and from the surveyor-general of New Mexico, whom I have had the pleasure of seeing to-day, that the New Mexico, whom I have had the pleasure of seeing to-day, that the number of similar claims asserted under ancient Mexican rights of people who are making pretty large claims, some of which have been already discovered by the surveyor-general to be forgeries, is very considerable.

While I am up, in order to guard the bill against any possibility of misconstruction, after the suggestion of my friend from Colorado, I move to amend the text before it is stricken out, by inserting after the word "mineral" in line 18 the words " of the same" so as to confine it to the minerals of the precious metals. My friend from Colorado was afraid it would cover coal and iron.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

offered by the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Colorado, to strike out the clause as amended.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say only a word in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, as to the amendment he proposed. That amendment of course would do away with one objection, that is, that the prospector might invade a cultivated field and mine under a house. In that regard undoubtedly it would be a great improvement. great improvement.

Now, I want to say another word about this section. The honorable Senator from Vermont who reperts the bill says that it is not intended that the prospector shall go upon this ground at all; that we are to wait for some future legislation; that it is not the thing to put this legislation in this bill. Now, when shall we get the legislation? It may be fifty years, and if they are not to go on there all this land is withheld from occupation, for if the owner goes on and when the protection is the land he are given by the converted.

this land is withheld from occupation, for if the owner goes on and mines he gets no title to the land, he can give no title to any other miner who may see fit to go on, and as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, practically for a great number of years all this country is to be taken out of the mining region. None of it is to be mined. The trouble with the Senator from Vermont is that he sees the hardship of allowing men to roam over this ground prospecting it and working it as they choose without reference to surface rights; he thinks that ought not to be done, and yet his bill will allow that. If it does not allow that it takes it out of the mining land of the country for an uncertain period, perhaps forever, and the owner cannot have a title. He will not go on and sink a shaft, he will not do anything with it because he can make no title to it. The result will be that every prospector in that country will say "that is public land," practically, and immediately he will go on it, and all the evils I predicted will result. If it is desirable to the United States to reserve this there ought to be a provision with it such as the Spanish ordithis there ought to be a provision with it such as the Spanish ordinances contained. When they said "we reserve the right for any subject of ours to go upon that land" they added "he must make compensation to the owner." Why cannot our Government do that in this bill? Why can they not say "we reserve the right to work it ourselves or allow it to be worked, but proper compensation must be made to the owner," and then provide how that shall be determined?

I do not want to criticise the bill. I believe the bill ought to pass aside from this feature. I am not objecting to the bill generally; but I know the bill ought not to pass with that third subdivision in. The honorable Senator says that all over that country they are crying for this bill. Why, Mr. President, I do know something about that region. I have had no letters in favor of the bill. I do not believe a newspaper in those Territories has indorsed this bill; I do not lieve a newspaper in those Territories has indorsed this bill; I do not believe a public meeting has indorsed it; I do not believe any considerable portion of the people have indorsed it. On the other hand, I have every reason to think, from the communications I have had and from the newspaper condemnations of it, that the people do not want it, that it will do either one of two things, and they know it. It will either open up all that country to be overrun, and create riot and confusion, or it will, as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, withdraw it practically from prospecting and working. That is not what they want. Every man who owns a concession of this kind wants every other man to go on it and work it because if he works. wants every other man to go on it and work it, because if he works it the owner will either sell him the mine, or he will get a percentage of the gold and silver extracted. If it lies there unmined, he gets nothing. This is either to open it to general prospecting by the people, independent of the right of the owner, or it is to tie it up for an indeterminate period.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, the old Spanish law reserved mines as the property of the Crown, but at the same time granted the right to work them, paying a royalty to the Crown. It was in these words:

SECTION 1. The mines are the property of my royal crown, as well by their nature and origin as by their re-union, declared by the fourth law of the thirteenth title of the sixth book of the new compilation, (of laws and statutes.)

SECTION 2. Without separating them from my royal patrimony, I grant them to my subjects in property and possession, in such manner that they may sell, exchange, (pass by will, either in the way of inheritance or legacy,) or in any other manner, dispose of all their property in them, upon the terms on which they themselves possess it, and to persons legally capable of acquiring it.

SECTION 3. Be it understood that this grant is made upon two conditions: first, that they (my subjects) shall pay to my royal treasury the proportion of metal reserved thereto:—

That was reserved by another ordinance. That was the royaltyand, secondly, that they shall carry on their operations in the mines subject to the provisions of these ordinances, on failure of which, at any time, the mines of persons so making default shall be considered as forfeited, and may be granted to any person who shall denounce them accordingly.

Then section 14 of the ordinance provided that not only the person to whom a concession of land is made, but that any other person, might denounce a mine. It was in these words:

Any one may discover and denounce a vein, not only on common land-

That is, on the land that belongs to the Crown-but also on the property of any individual, provided he pays for the extent of surface above the same and the damage which immediately ensues therefrom, according to the valuation of surveyors on both sides, and arbitration in case of disagreement; the same is to be understood with regard to denouncing convenient places for erecting establishments, and also waters for moving the machines employed for the reduction of ores, commonly called reducing establishments, (haciendes.) provided in each case that no more of the water be used than is necessary for such purposes.

That was the Spanish law, and substantially the Mexican law. When this bill says the property in these mines and minerals is reserved to the United States, it says no more than the first clause of the decree of the King of Spain which I have just read, which says:

The mines are the property of my royal crown.

But at the same time that the king declared that the mines belonged to the Crown and were the property of the Crown, he provided by ordinance that they might be denounced, as the Spanish phrase was; as we would say, a claim might be filed to them by any discoverer who might by paying royalty to the Crown work them if they were on public land. If they were on the lands of an individual then he was obliged to come to an understanding with that individual or by arbitration to ascertain what he was to pay the individual for the surface that overlay the mine. Now, I imagine that the United States Government cannot very well carry out these ordinances. They were ordinances so far as the mines were concerned; that is after a decree ordinances so far as the mines were concerned; that is after a decree declaring that they were the property of the State, licenses to work the mines, were revocable at any moment by the supreme power, the king while the territory belonged to Spain, or the Mexican Republic while it belonged to Mexico. It is sufficient, therefore, for the present purpose to simply say that this bill reserves the property in the United States, and that the United States has the same right that the King of Spain or that the Republic of Mexico had to provide by legislation how persons may acquire the right to these mines. That is a matter for further consideration; that is a matter which will require a good deal of consideration when the time comes. It is sufficient for present purposes that the right of the United States to the mines is declared; purposes that the right of the United States to the mines is declared; and how these mines may be acquired by individuals either substantially in the way they were denounced by subjects of Spain, or citizens of the Mexican Government, or in some better way to be devised by the Congress of the United States, or under our general law, if that is sufficient, and is made applicable to them, are matters for after consideration. I think, considering that there may be a multitude of mines discovered in that territory, possibly it is not wise at this time without further consideration and further knowledge to religing the our rights to these mines and minerals, and I shall therefore linquish our rights to these mines and minerals, and I shall therefore vote to retain the section.

Ma BLAIR. I wish to move to amend the clause which has just been retained, and to retain which I voted, by adding after the word "act," in the twenty-third line, the following:

But the right to such mineral property so reserved in the United States shall not exist in any land inclosed within the limits of the grant which shall be in open, visible occupation and actual improvement by the confirme, or his assignee, for any purpose whatever at the time final decree of confirmation shall be made.

So that the whole clause will read:

Third. No allowance or confirmation of any claim shall confer any right or title to any gold, silver, or quicksilver mines or minerals of the same, unless the grant claimed effected the donation or sale of such mines or minerals to the grantee, or unless such grantee has become otherwise entitled thereto in law or in equity, but all such mines and minerals shall remain the property of the United States, with the right of working the same, which fact shall be stated in any patents issued under this act; but the right to such mineral property so reserved in the United States shall not exist in any land inclosed within the limits of the grant which shall be in open, visible occupation and actual improvement by the confirmee, or his assignee, for any purpose whatever at the time final decree of confirmation shall be made.

It seems to be agreed, Mr. President, that this right reserved in the United States may be trespassed upon, or it may be practically exercised by the confirmee or the person in whose favor final decree shall be made. He may do that from the present time all the way through to the close of the litigation. He will have that right by virtue of his occupation, as declared by the Senator from Vermont. No one else will have any such opportunity of going upon the lands or of else will have any such opportunity of going upon the lands or of exercising any right as a prospector searching for minerals, developing these lands in the direction of their mines and their minerals whatever. If that is to be so, and it is not desirable for the Government to work these mines itself, then practically the absolute ownership and control of these minerals will be in the confirmee or his assignee until the close of the protracted litigation which finally shall vest a title in him beyond dispute. If that is to be so, this amendment simply says so, and will remove all questions of doubt; and in the end whoever has derived title from the confirmee, the man who shall be declared to be the real owner of the land under the grant will have precisely the same rights as the confirmee himself. So if the language of the act is made explicit, the development of the mines the language of the act is made explicit, the development of the mines and minerals in these extended grants can go on during the process of litigation; but unless language of this kind is inserted, and unless the force and effect of the bill as it now stands is changed, no man excepting the man who is the occupant and the confirmee, and is to be ultimately the owner by the decree of the court, can develop these lands. The result will be that unless the confirmee does develop them they will not be developed at all, the Government not undertaking it, and if he is to be permitted to develop the mines, why not say so explicitly in the bill itself?

It seems to me that the construction which the Senator from Vermont himself says he places on the bill is only carried out in express terms by the adoption of this amendment. If, on the other hand, as there appears to be some ground to think from the present language of the bill and the course of the debate, neither the confirmee, the real owner, nor any one else can touch these mineral lands without further legislation by the United States, that whole country is effectually blockaded, as I said before, in reference to the development of the minerals on these lands; and nobody knows how long litigation may last. To say that these mines shall not be developed or these grants last. To say that these mines shall not be developed or these grants worked until the termination of the lawsuits which may arise in reference to the construction of the grants themselves, is to exclude these Territories from a degree of prosperity to which they are justly entitled and to a participation in the benefits of which the country at large is entitled. I think that this language simply makes explicit what the Senator from Vermont says is the proper construction of the bill already, and in the interest of peace and the development of the Territories it ought to be adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will only take a single moment to say that the effect of this amendment, if adopted, will be to reverse the vote which the Senate has just taken and considerably more, and to make an affirmative grant of the gold, silver, and quicksilver in all these lands to the party who can get a fence around them, a wire fence or a sheeppasture at the time of the final hearing. That is all I wish to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. Blair.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to add to the third subdivision just what the Senator from Vermont says the law will be. I desire to do that because I think unless there is something of this character put on the bill it will be taken by everybody as a permission to swarm over the bill it will be taken by everybody as a permission to swarm over the ground. Therefore I offer the following, to come just after the third subdivision of the twelfth section, after the word "act," in the twenty-third line:

But nothing in this act shall authorize the working of any mines therein by any person except the confirmee or his assigns, until Congress shall provide for compensation to the owner of the land for any damage he may sustain by reason of the working thereof.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not the least objection to what my friend from Colorado says and what he means; but to put in a limitation as to exactly the kind of legislation that Congress may hereafter adopt, I think is unwise for his purpose and mine; and therefore if he will modify his amendment so as to provide merely that nothing shall authorize the working of the mines by anybody but the owner until Congress shall make provision by law concerning the same, I shall not take any time to object to it, because that is the law as it stands

Mr. TELLER. I will modify it in that way, because what I want is a declaration to these people to keep off this land.

Nothing in this act shall authorize the working of any mines therein by any person except the confirmee or his assigns, until Congress shall provide by law therefor. Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to that. It is exactly what the bill means now.

Mr. TELLER. It is as well to have it put in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN. I wish to offer an amendment in the third line of the first section of the bill, which I think the chairman of the committee will accept. After the word "person," at the end of the third line, I move to insert "or corporation." Possibly the bill now may cover this; but a criticism may be made that it does not. I move, therefore, to insert after the word "person" the words "or corporation."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the legal effect of the bill now, but as the amendment leaves it just as it is, I make no objection because there may be some religious or other corporations as "pueblos" that the committee supposed were covered by the word "persons;" but if there is any doubt about it, I know of no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of this bill whether in case any legal grants have been made by the Spanish or Mexican Governments exceeding the limitation this bill invalidates them ?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, Mr. President, it does not invalidate them; but it does not allow the territorial courts to confirm them beyond eleven leagues; they will be obliged to come to Congress as they would if the bill did not act, to get, if they can make out a case, what they are entitled to.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then it gives them no remedy and takes from them no remedy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the way I understand it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENTS. The SPEAKER announced the following appointments for committee service:

Mr. McKinley, (in place of Mr. Garfield, resigned,) as a member of the joint committee of two members of the Finance Committee of the Senate and three members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House to inquire into the alleged loss in the collection of internal

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. PRICE. I rise to a personal explanation.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the question involved in his personal explanation.
Mr. PRICE. I shall not occupy more than fifteen minutes, probably not one-third of fifteen minutes.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks fifteen minutes to make a personal explanation. Is there objection? The Chair hears

Mr. PRICE. In the discussion of the so-called funding bill yester-day—I want the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Car-

LISLE] on this point—

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. As is my practice invariably when any gentleman rises to a personal explanation, I must express the hope that the gentleman from Iowa will confine himself to that which is purely personal, and not bring in any outside questions connected with the discussion of the bill which has been before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether the remarks he desires to make are a personal explanation, or whether they are in furtherance of a controversy in relation to the funding bill?

Mr. PRICE. Well, Mr. Speaker, an assertion was made yesterday by the gentleman from Kentucky which I controverted, or which I contradicted, if you like that word any better.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did that yesterday?

Mr. PRICE. That was done yesterday. The gentleman from Kentucky

I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PRICE. I believe I am entitled to fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] not to object to a personal explana-

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I object to any remarks of the gentle-man outside of what is purely personal.

Mr. PRICE. That came after the Chair said there was no objec-

The SPEAKER. At any rate any member could check the gentleman from Iowa at any time when he might fail to confine himself to remarks of a personal character.

Mr. STEELE. I thought I was recognized for a parliamentary in-

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear it.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to know whether it requires unanimous consent before the gentleman from Iowa can proceed with his personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. It does.
Mr. STEELE. Because if it does—
The SPEAKER. A statement touching the funding bill would, the Chair thinks, be in the nature of debate on that bill.

Mr. PRICE. I am speaking about a controversy, a question of veracity between the gentleman from Kentucky and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will confine himself to the questions.

tion of veracity

Mr. CARLISLE. I did not understand that there was any question of veracity between the gentleman from Iowa and myself.

Mr. PRICE. If I contradict a gentleman, I think I am calling in question the correctness of his statement—

Mr. CARLISLE. That may be.
Mr. PRICE. And if another gentleman contradicts me, I think he is calling in question the correctness of my statement. Somebody on yesterday, when this bill was under discussion, made a statement that was not true.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I wanted simply to say that if this required unanimous consent I should reserve to myself the right to ask unanimous consent of the House to give reasons in extenso why I intend either to vote for this bill or against it, just as I see proper.

[Laughter.]
Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman from Iowa is going to re-debate any questions connected with the funding bill, I must object.
Mr. PRICE. More time is being taken by this discussion than I would have occupied if I had not been interrupted. If the gentleman from New York had allowed me to go on, I should have been about through by this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read Rule IX.

The Clerk read as follows:

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the intregrity of the proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions, except motions to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, and for a recess.

The SPEAKER. There is a distinction between a question of privilege and a personal explanation. The former a member has the right to bring to the attention of the House; but the latter is by unani-

Mr. PRICE. I thought I had consent to proceed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was perfectly willing; but the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STEELE] stated, as the Chair understood, that if the opportunity had been presented he would have objected.

Mr. PRICE. I had entered on my discussion. I stated that on yesterday, in discussion, &c., and after that the gentleman interposed his objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would have a right to interrupt the gentleman for the purpose of confining his remarks to the personal explanation.

Mr. PRICE. Certainly; and I had not got out of the line of personal explanation.

Mr. REED. Let the gentleman from Iowa go far enough to de-termine exactly the character of his statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has allowed the gentleman to be heard The SPEAKER. The Chair has allowed the gentleman to be heard far enough to indicate to the Chair the subject on which he wishes to address the House is a controversy which arose yesterday in the debate on the refunding bill. The Chair, however, has no objection to the gentleman being allowed to proceed with his statement.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, if it is to be a continuation of the debate had yesterday on the refunding bill, I must object.

Mr. PRICE. I have not said anything about the refunding bill or the merits of it. I said that, in the discussion which took place yesterday, a question of yearchy occurred between the gentleman from the merits of it. I said that, in the discussion which took place yesterday, a question of veracity occurred between the gentleman from Kentucky and myself. Now, sir, I have labored industriously for the last ten days to get the floor for five minutes on this question, and now when finally I have succeeded in getting the floor by unanimous consent for the purpose of explaining a matter which occurred yesterday between the gentleman from Kentucky and myself, then that side of the House arrays itself in solid, Macedonian phalanx against me. [Laughter.] Are you afraid of anything I have got to say on that subject? [Renewed laughter.] I am not so dangerous that you need be afraid of me. You can keep at a respectful distance, anyway. [Laughter.]

way. [Laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. I do not object to a personal explanation, but I do object to entering again into the debate of the refunding bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman got leave to print

Mr. PRICE. I do not propose to print what I do not say on the floor of the House.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order of business.
Mr. PRICE. I have the floor, sir, by consent of the House, and I intend to keep it, if I can.
Mr. CARLISLE. If I have made any assertion which can be construed as questioning the gentleman's veracity, I withdraw it very cheerfully

Mr. PRICE. No; I do not allow the gentleman to withdraw it.
[Laughter.] It is too late for him to withdraw it. I want the record to show who is right in this matter.

Mr. CARLISLE. If the gentleman has made any assertion which can be construed as questioning my veracity, I forgive him for it.

[Laughter.

Mr. PRICE, In other words, if I have done anything that is wrong you are ready to be forgiven. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, a good deal more time has been consumed in objecting to my proceeding with my personal explanation than I would have consumed if I had been permitted to make it without interruption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed with his remarks and confine himself to his personal explanation.

Mr. PRICE. I will try to do that, and I would have been through by this time if I had been permitted to proceed without interruption. Now, Mr. Speaker, on yesterday this language was used; and I must repeat the language which was used to show how the question arose. I repeat the language from the gentleman's own speech as published in the RECORD of this morning:

Whereas if the law is left to stand as it is now these national banks may take currency into the Treasury Department, deposit it there, and demand that the United States shall redeem their notes for them at its expense.

There I interrupted the gentleman and said, and I will quote the language I used:

I know the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] means to be right.

I have a very high opinion of his ability and of his integrity, and I thought he wanted to be right on this question.

He has made that statement twice, and he is in error about it-

The gentleman from Kentucky then asked, "To what extent?" I replied, "In regard to that point—" and there I was interrupted by the Chair, who stated that debate upon the pending amendment had been exhausted. I quote from the RECORD:

Mr. PRICE. Cannot I ask the gentleman a question? Mr. Carlislæ. Let him ask it. Mr. PRICE. With reference to this one point. The CHAIRMAN. Only by consent.

Of course I can do nothing here except by consent. I never had any rights here.

Mr. PRICE. I hope I will have that consent. There was no objection.

There was no objection, for a wonder, and then I proceeded, and I want gentlemen to attend to this, because it is a matter of a great deal of importance; for, if the gentleman from Kentucky was right, it goes very far toward sustaining the votes of certain gentlemen on the funding bill, and if he was wrong and I was right, it puts a different aspect on the whole affair.

Mr. PRICE. I hope I will have that consent.

There was no objection.

Mr. PRICE. The redemptions made by the Government for the national banks are of made at the expense of the Government.

Mr. Carlisle. It certainly is, except, &c.

Mr. CARLISLE. Read the whole of it.

Mr. PRICE. Certainly, I will read the whole of it, and it is as

Mr. Carlisle. It certainly is, except that the Government does not pay the notes with its own money. The Government furnishes all the clerical labor and pays all the other incidental expenses of the redemption.

To that I replied:

Allow me to say right there that every gentleman who knows anything about the internal workings of national banks will indorse what I say when I make the statement that bills or currency are sent—

It is not reported correctly. I did not use the word "currency"bills are sent in to the national banks to pay for the expense of that redemption.

Mr. Carlisle. The largest bill for expense sent to any national bank is $6.28, I believe.

The gentleman from Kentucky had said before, although I did not mean to refer to that, that the Government paid all the expenses; and here he admits a national bank had paid $6.28.

I said in reference to that statement-

Excuse me; I have myself seen a bill sent to one bank for over $38. Mr. Carlisle. Here is the report of the Treasurer—Mr. Price. Very well; I say I saw that bill myself.

Then the Chair kindly allowed me to stop. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have this letter from the Comptroller of the Currency read, which bears upon this point, if the gentleman will allow me that liberty, and I will then be through in a very few moments.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, January 19, 1881.

Washington, January 19, 1881.

Sir: In reply to your verbal request, you are referred to section 3 of the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, which provides that "each of said associations (national banks) shall reimburse to the Treasurer the charges for transportation, and the costs for assorting such notes, * * * and the amount assessed upon each association shall be in proportion to the circulation redeemed, and be charged to the fund on deposit with the Treasurer."

In compliance with this provision of law the national banks have been annually assessed in proportion to the circulation redeemed, and the banks in operation have not only paid the expense of redeeming their own notes, but also for the redemption of the notes of associations which are reducing their circulation, which have gone into voluntary liquidation, and which have become insolvent.

By reference to page 19 of the Treasurer's report for 1880 it will be found that the annual cost to the national banks has been at the rate, on an average, of $37,69 for banks having a circulation of $90,000, or $188.45 annually for a bank having a capital of $500,000, with the amount of circulation authorized by law.

The whole expenses for redemption during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1880, were $143,728.39, all of which was paid by an assessment upon the national banks.

Very respectfully,

JOHN J. KNOX, Comptroller.

JOHN J. KNOX, Comptroller.

Hon. HIRAM PRICE, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PRICE. Now, Mr. Speaker, it will be seen that I was entirely correct in my statement yesterday; and when I stated, as I did from recollection, and a recollection running through a period of some three or four months, that I had seen a bill presented to a national bank amounting to $38, I say that I was within a few cents of the average that is paid by the national banks for this purpose, as shown by the letter of the Comptroller just read; and the Comptroller states in the letter which I have just had read that the entire expenses for redemption during the year 1880 were one hundred and forty-three thousand and some hundred dollars, all of which was paid by assessments upon the national banks. The section of the law which the Comptroller refers to will no doubt be very familiar to the gentleman from Kentucky when I read it; probably it is familiar to him now. That section provides—I read the latter part of section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874—as follows:

And when such redemptions have been so reimbursed, the circulating notes so redeemed shall be forwarded to the respective associations by which they were issued; but if any of such notes are worn, mutilated, defaced, or rendered otherwise unfit for use, they shall be forwarded to the Comptroller of the Currency and destroyed and replaced as now provided by law: Provided, That each of said associations shall reimburse to the Treasury the charges for transportation, and the costs for assorting such notes; and the associations hereafter organized shall also severally reimburse to the Treasury the cost of engraving such plates as shall be ordered by each association respectively; and the amount assessed upon each association shall be in proportion to the circulation redeemed, and be charged to the fund on deposit with the Treasurer, &c.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order.
Mr. CARLISLE. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will permit the gentleman from Iowa to proceed until he has concluded.
Mr. BLAND. I make, Mr. Speaker, my point of order in the shape of a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to ask if the bill is open for

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Iowa is going entirely beyond what he should ask of the House under the circumstances in discussing the bill in place of making a personal circumstances in discussing the bill in place of making a personal explanation.

Mr. PRICE. Does not what I am saying bear directly on the question? Is not that the question absolutely in controversy between the gentleman from Kentucky and myself?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa will take notice that the House has closed the debate on the bill.

Mr. PRICE. This is a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman is getting in a speech on the funding bill under the guise of a personal explanation.

Mr. PRICE. The only difference is that I am getting in a speech in regular order, while other gentlemen get the floor by a rush to the front at all times.

The SPEAKER. What the gentleman refers to is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PRICE. The only difference is that one man, it seems, has the right to take the floor and make a speech and another one has not.

right to take the floor and make a speech and another one has not. That is the substance of it.

Now, sir, if gentlemen are unwilling to hear the facts of this case, of course they can cut me off. If they object to a statement of this matter, it is in their power of course to prevent it. If this is to go to the country as a refunding bill, then I for one wish to say that I most sincerely protest against the statements which have been made in reference to it, and to which no opportunity has been given for reply. I have desired ever since it commenced and have attempted to get the floor for fifteen minutes to make statements that cannot be controverted, but I have been prevented and excluded continually; and I say now that I shall vote against it if I am entirely alone in doing so.

Mr. CARLISLE. I hope as the House has given the gentleman from Iowa fifteen minutes, it will allow me just two minutes to respond.

Mr. PRICE. The House did not give me fifteen minutes, thank you.

[Laughter.]
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? The Chair hears no objection. [Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!" from the republican side.]
Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Speaker, the redemption of the circulating

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Speaker, the redemption of the circulating notes, to which the gentleman from Iowa refers, was had under the third section of the act of July 20, 1874, and was made with the 5 per cent. reserve which is provided for by that section. The redemption of the circulating notes, to which I was alluding, was under the fourth section of the act of 1874, out of money deposited by national banks from time to time for that express purpose. And while the national banks did pay the costs of redemption under the third section of the act referred to out of the 5 per cent. reserve fund, I repeat that my statement had reference to the fourth section of the act of 1874, under which the United States Treasury bears the expense of redeeming these notes, using, of course, for that redemption the money deposited for that purpose by the banks, the Government, however, paying for all clerical labor and other expenses.

Mr. PRICE. Of course by the banks. The banks had it to pay.

Mr. CARLISLE. But I will read the report of the Treasurer on this point, as it is only four or five lines. After having stated the process resorted to by the national banks under the fourth section of the cess resorted to by the national banks under the fourth section of the act, and the cost of the clerical labor and other expenses connected with the subject of the redemption of these notes, he says:

From January 13, 1875, to the date of this report $778,275 of its notes have been redeemed, of which only $40,700 were redeemed at the expense of the bank, although during more than one-third of that period it had outstanding and was deriving the benefit from the full amount of circulation which its capital authorized. The only assessments which have been made on the bank for the expenses of redeeming its notes were $24.74 in 1875 and $4.39 in 1878.

All this was done under the clause of the law of 1874, which my amendment proposed to repeal; and my amendment did not have any relation to the section of the law about which the gentleman from Iowa has been talking this morning.

Mr. PRICE. Let me correct the gentleman just there. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I wish to answer the gentleman from Kentucky and place him and myself right on the record. If you dare not hear it, it is an evidence you are guilty. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Is there consent to the gentleman from Iowa proceeding?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa that he thinks this is not really a personal explanation, but is in the nature of debate on the bill; and there is now objection to the gentleman proceeding.

Mr. PRICE. Let me ask the Chair this question: the gentleman from Kentucky makes a statement here that is controverted by this letter from the Comptroller. Can I not read a passage from that let-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is not in order. The Chair has decided the gentleman has transcended his right.

Mr. PRICE. I differ from the Chair as to that.
Mr. THOMAS TURNER. I wish to know if the gentleman from Iowa is bound by the rules of this House and the decision of the Chair like other members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa stated he rose to a personal explanation. The Chair is compelled to say to the gentleman from Iowa that he does not think he has confined himself to a man from Iowa that he does not think he has confined himself to a personal explanation. On the contrary, he has gone into a discussion of some of the amendments to the funding bill and some of the debate which occurred yesterday. The Chair must ask that the gentleman from Iowa shall conform to the rules,

Mr. PRICE. Will the Chair allow one paragraph to be read?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no objection if the House has

Mr. ATHERTON. I object.

Mr. PRICE. This clause of the Comptroller's letter, which I desire to read, would effectually settle the question between me and the gentleman from Kentucky.

The gentleman from Kentucky refers to a bank which had only paid part of the expense incurred by it before it failed, but it must be remembered that when a bank fails to pay all the expense which properly belongs to it, the national banks which have not failed are assessed and must pay the balance, as the following paragraph of the Comptroller's letter fully demonstrates:

In compliance with this provision of law, the national banks have been annually assessed in proportion to the circulation redeemed; and the banks in operation have not only paid the expense of redeeming their own notes, but also for the redemption of the notes of associations which are reducing their circulation, which have gone into voluntary liquidation, and which have become insolvent.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben. Holladay.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted on its first amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 6613) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. EATON, Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia, and Mr. WINDOM to be conferees on the part of the

FUNDING BILL.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. If the main question had not been ordered the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt would come up as unfinished business after the call of committees. But as the bill has the main question ordered on it the vote will now be taken on the bill and amendments. If there be separate votes asked gentlemen will be kind enough to indicate the amendments on which they desire separate votes.

Mr. BURROWS. What has become of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The previous question is prevailing on the funding bill and brings it up immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BURROWS. I thought it would come up as unfinished business after the call of committees.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business would come up after the call of committees, but this bill has the previous question prevailing call of committees, but this bill has the previous question prevailing on it, which brings it up after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. GILLETTE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GILLETTE. It is with reference to the right of a member of this House to vote upon the refunding bill. Before I proceed I desire to have read the first section of the eighth rule of this House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Every member shall be present within the Hall of the House during its sittings, unless excused or necessarily prevented; and shall vote on each question put, unless, on motion made before division or the commencement of the roll-call and decided without debate, he shall be excused, or unless he has a direct personal or pecuniary interest in the event of such question.

Mr. GILLETTE. I now desire to have read two or three lines on page 489 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—words used by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Newberry] while discussing this bill, as afterward given by him and read to the House at his request.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Newberry. I ask the Clerk to read the writing of the reporter.
The Clerk read as follows:
"Wait a moment. This is a practical question. I say what the bank of which I am a director authorized me to say. I went to them to say how I should vote on that question:"

Mr. GILLETTE. I desire to make the point of order that under the eighth rule of this House the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] has no right to vote upon this question. I do not raise this question or make this point of order from any ill-will to any gentleman upon this floor, but simply as a duty I owe to my constituents and to my country.

If there has been anything developed by this debate and by the reports of it in the papers of the country, it is the fact that this bill is so closely allied with the national-bank interests of this country that it might with propriety be called a national-bank act. Nearly all the discussion upon this floor has been with reference to the bearing of this bill upon those institutions; and many gentlemen have taken sides in favor of long bonds and opposed to long bonds, according to their feelings toward this one institution. We have been ing to their feelings toward this one institution. We have been treated to all sorts of warnings and threats during the debate as to what the national banks would or would not do, if we should pass the bill in this or that shape. One gentleman even warned us that if we passed one section or clause of the bill the national banks would contract the currency $200,000,000, and produce a greater panic than this country has ever seen.

I know that a similar question has at least once before arisen in the House with reference to the right of members holding stock in national banks to vote upon bills in relation to national banks or upon amendments to such bills; but here is a gentleman who comes be-fore this House and states that he is a director in one of these banks, and is under instructions from that bank how to vote. Practically he is interested in this question, solely because of his position as a national-bank director and stockholder, and not as a representative of the people of his district. In other words, he represents his individual interests and the interests of his bank, which are at war with his duties as a Representative.

In a case somewhat similar to this, which was argued April 11, 1874, the present Speaker of this House evidently sympathized with the point of order then raised, which was very parallel to the one I now make, although I believe no case was ever presented before which make, although I believe no case was ever presented before which was so plain, where such facts were so openly admitted. We are today to receive your opinion, Mr. Speaker, upon a new rule and not upon the old one. I hope that the Speaker will not be governed by rulings given in the past, but by what he thinks will be for the best interests of the country under our new rule. I therefore appeal to the Chair for his decision upon my point of order.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I am very glad, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman has raised this point of order, because it is far more sweeping than the gentleman has anyidea of. It goes far beyond the question he has raised, i. e., the construction of the rule as referring to me personally; that is the mere surface froth of the question, but probably it is as far as gentlemen who raise such frivolous questions ably it is as far as gentlemen who raise such frivolous questions usually can go.

The question raised here is one that involves the right of every The question raised here is one that involves the right of every member of this House to vote; not only in respect to this question but in respect to almost every question that comes before the House for its decision. Let me illustrate: A bill is introduced here to put a duty on or take a duty off matches. Every gentleman upon this floor is probably interested in that question, and in the words of this rule has "a direct pecuniary interest" in such a bill. If that is so, then under the affirmative ruling which is asked he would be debarred from voting on it.

If a bill is introduced here to levy a tax upon or take a tax off to-If a bill is introduced here to levy a tax upon or take a tax off to-bacco, every member who uses tobacco in any shape or form is de-barred from voting upon that bill under this point of order raised by the gentleman from Iowa, if it shall be held to be good. Every mem-ber of this body who drinks a glass of whisky or uses it in any way has "a direct pecuniary interest" in the question of a tax put upon or taken off whisky. Therefore any such person would be debarred from voting upon such a bill, if this point of order is held to be well taken.

I might go through the whole series of legislative measures that could be brought before this House, and in almost every one, of gen-eral application, each member of the House would be interested, not only as a member of the House, but as a citizen of the United States or of the State in which he resides.

The gentleman from Iowa is not satisfied with having made a few days ago a garbled extract from my speech. He misquoted me then, as he makes a misquotation and misrepresentation now. I said then, and I say now to him and to every member upon this floor, that when any question involving the rights of our constituents is presented here it behooves each one of us to go to our constituents and nsk them what in their opinion is the best thing for us to do. And I say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] that if he would do that oftener we would have less political gymnastics and gimeracks from oftener we would have less political gymnastics and gimcracks from those of his party in this House.

But beyond that, to come down to the more immediate gist of this question, I hold that in the case of any legislation brought before this House, which refers to a class of persons, which refers to all the citizens of the United States, or to any number of citizens as a class, although a member may have a pecuniary interest in the question under consideration, he has not only the right to vote upon such questions, but it is his bounden duty to vote upon them. In relation to every subject involving in its effects the people generally, such as the question of a tax or a tariff, affecting citizens of all the States, or the citizens of one State only, if you please, members have not only the right to vote, but it is their bounden duty to vote upon such questions. I speak not now of the right under the rules. In a moment I will have a few words to say about the rule itself. If a measure is brought have a few words to say about the rule itself. If a measure is brought forward here affecting a particular corporation, if you please, of which a member upon this floor says he is a stockholder or a director, probably under a strict construction of the rule, the legislation referring to that one corporation only, he might be held not to have the right to vote upon that question.

But the answer to this point of order goes far deeper than that even. Every member of this House holds his right to vote not by any rule of the House of Representatives, but from his constituents standing behind him, and this right to vote is given him by the Constitution of the United States. That is the basis of our right to vote here, and hold that no rule of this House can debar any member from his Thord that no rule of this riouse can debar any member from his right to vote.

There lies the foundation of our right to vote, and it lies nowhere else. It rests, therefore, with a man's own conscience whether he shall vote upon a question involving even his own direct pecuniary interest; even if it be a bill for a pension to himself, or to any one of his friends, or to his constituents, or to all of the people of the United States.

United States.

That I may not be mistaken, Mr. Speaker, I wish briefly to state exactly the positions I take. I hold that when the law under debate relates to any general interest which a member may have in common with other citizens, in any common pecuniary interest held under laws applicable to all alike, then under the rule he may vote—yea, not only may vote, but his duty requires him to vote; and whether he votes for or against his interest makes no difference.

I might have asked the gentleman from Iowa whether his point of order was that I was debarred from voting because I had a direct pecuniary interest. His point of order is that I am a director in a national bank. I assume that he meant to make the point as above suggested because that is the wording of the rule. I further hold if the legislation applies to a class, is general by its provisions as distinct from something single or individual, the member may vote. On the other hand, if the bill relates to one corporation in which the member has an interest as a stockholder, then he has such interest that his right to vote comes under the provisions of the rule. I say member has an interest as a stockholder, then he has such interest that his right to vote comes under the provisions of the rule. I say "comes under the rule;" I do not say he cannot vote even then.

But, Mr. Speaker, the answer to this objection lies much deeper than I have indicated. I utterly deny the right of this House to deprive any member of his right to vote. That right is given by the Constitution. And, Mr. Speaker, a very notable case in connection with this question occurred in 1807, I think it was, when the distinguished Mr. Macon, of North Carolina, was the Speaker of this House. A constitutional amendment was then before the House and its adoption required a two-thirds you. The vote as taken without the Speaker's vote stood 83 to 42, lacking one vote of the necessary two-thirds majority. The rule at that time specifically provided that the Speaker should not vote except in case of a tie. Yet directly in opposition to that rule Speaker Macon announced not only his determination to vote, but his right to vote, notwithstanding the rule; and by his vote in the affirmative that amendment to the Constitution was adopted by the House for submission to the States, and stands to-day a part of the Constitution. It so stands upon that vote given in direct opposition to a rule of this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as this is a question of a good deal of moment, I will ask the Clerk to read from pages 3016, 3019, 3020, and 3021 of the Congressional Record for the first session of the Forty-third Congress, being proceedings of April 11, 1874.

Mr. FRYE. It appears to me that this is consuming time for nothing. The point cannot by any possibility be raised until some genadopted by the House for submission to the States, and stands to-day

Mr. FRIE. It appears to me that this is consuming time for notating. The point cannot by any possibility be raised until some gentleman supposed to be interested offers to vote; and then all that the Speaker will do, undoubtedly, will be to say that the gentleman's own conscience must control him.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair in doing so would only repeat language formerly used by him, that language having been addressed by him to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] himself when the bill to extend the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad was before the House.

Mr. FRYE. I remember it perfectly well.
Mr. NEWBERRY. I have the floor, and I ask that the RECORD be

Mr. WEAVER. I desire to reply to the gentleman from Michigan, but I do not want to take much time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that he might have these proceedings of a former Congress printed in the RECORD. If they are intended to affect the judgment of the Chair, he is perfectly familiar with them.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I am entirely willing that the parts I have marked shall be printed in the RECORD instead of being read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

The proceedings referred to by Mr. NEWBERRY are as follows:

Mr. Randall. I recollect the decision of the Chair made in the last Congress in relation to bank stock, and members holding that stock. I also recollect a decision which was made subsequently by the Chair in relation to Pacific Railroad stock, and the right of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Hooper] to vote upon a question affecting that stock.

The Speaker, (Mr. Blanke.) The Chair made this distinction at the time, based upon a decision made by Mr. Speaker Winthrop in the house of representatives in the State of Massachusetts, in which decision the doctrine is somewhat fully set forth, and which the Chair does nothing more than cencur in. The point was made in the Legislature of Massachusetts, about 1833 or 1834, if the Chair remembers correctly, that a member who owned some manufacturing stock in that State could not vote on a question of general law regulating manufactures in that State. The point of order was overruled upon the ground that that was a general interest permeating the whole people of the State, and was not a distinct and personal interest separate and distinct from the public weal. Now, in the case of a specific single corporation by name, coming in here and having legislation to affect its rights, and a member representing in his own person the interest of that corporation, the Chair presumes that that member would be regarded as very differently situated from one owning shares of national-bank stock, that stock being diffused throughout the whole country, interlaced with all the business of the country, and upon which the currency and business of the country are based. That is not a distinct, personal, peculiar, private interest separate and apart from public interest. The Chair thinks the distinction is perfectly obvious, and it is one upon which he will stand.

public interest. The Chair thinks the distinction is perfectly obvious, and it is one upon which he will stand.

Before the result of the vote was announced,
Mr. Speer said: Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand the report of the Comptroller of the Currency, which shows that the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. Poland,] who has voted in the negative, is the president of a national bank. I further shows that the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. Hamilton,] on this side of the House, who has also voted in the negative, is the president of a national bank. I hold in my hand the Congressional Directory, which shows that Mr. Phelps, of New Jersey, is the director of several national banks. These gentlemen have all voted in the negative. The bill or amendment on which they have voted provides in the eighth section that in lieu of the tax of 1 per cent, per annum now imposed by law on the outstanding circulation of national banks, a tax of 3 per cent, per annum, payable semi-annually in gold, shall be collected upon the circulation which has been issued to each national bank which has not been returned for cancellation. I raise the point of order that these gentleman, belonging to both political parties, Mr. Poland of Vermont, Mr. Hamilton of New Jersey, and Mr. Phelps of New Jersey, have not the right to vote, being personally interested; and upon that point I ask the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Cox. I desire to make a statement to the House on this subject, and I wish to be frank and explicit about it. I suppose that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, when he had the rule read, did not know that I had bank stock, and meant nothing personally. But the matter has been before the House formely. The gentleman from Missouri some time since offered a resolution here asking for a list of bank stockholders and officers. I voted for it. I have uniformly, as a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, and as a member of this House, voted to tax the stock of banks, and always at the making for the lill of the notes. We have had several con

Mr. CREAMER. I rise to a question of order. The Chair has already ruled on this question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not really ruled on it. The Chair may have fore-shadowed his opinion, but he did not rule.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The point of order may be briefly discussed.

Mr. SPEER. I desire to state in justice to the gentlemen whose names I have taken the liberty to use that I have selected them not from any personal hostility, but as representatives of a class. I believe there are eighty or a hundred gentlemen in this House who are similarly situated. I have selected these gentlemen because there is authentic evidence here of their interest.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to say a single word. It seems to me that this is a point which it is of a good deal of consequence should be decided once for all. Therefore I desire to make a single observation.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. This is in order. The Chair has the right to hear discussion upon a point of order, and on one of this magnitude the Chair has no desire to abridge discussion.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The point of order raises a question which ought

The SPEAKER. This is in order. The Chair has the right to hear discussion upon a point of order, and on one of this magnitude the Chair has no desire to abridge discussion.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The point of order raises a question which ought to be decided, and decided finally by the House, if anybody doubts the ruling of the Chair. In the case of any one of these gentlemen who have been named it is not a reproach to him that he owns bank stock. The question is this, does this holding of bank stock come within the ruling of the House, and the vote on this particular bill raises the question sharply.

This amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky proposes to tax this individual property of the member 3 per cent. on the circulation of the bank, and raises the tax upon that distinct from any other property in the United States. This brings up the question whether there can be a class of property in the United States, which is not possessed by all the people of the United States, such that a member owning it can be said, within the rule, not to be interested more than the general public. Without indicating any opinion on that subject, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that it comes directly to that; and if the rule is not operative there, where is it to be operative? Is it only to be operative when there is only one member of the House, or two members of the House, or three members of the House interested in a particular question? Does the extent of the number interested operate to take the individual out of the rule?

Mr. E. R. Hoar. I would like to ask how this differs from the tax on gold watches and silver plate?

Mr. DAWES. Is this the line of distinction, that when a member of the House belongs to a class of the community that may be affected one way or the other by the legislation, he is permitted to vote; but if he be an individual, to whom, as an individual, the question of interest applies, aside from a class, then he will be within the rule? The holder of bank stock would rule.

When a very distinguished predecessor in this chair, Mr. Macon, of North Carolina, occupied it, as is familiar to the House, a question arose upon the amendment to the Constitution changing the mode of counting the votes for the election of President and Vice-President. The rule at that time was peremptory that the Speaker should not vote except in the case of a tie. It has been since changed. The vote, if the Chair remembers correctly, as handed up to Mr. Macon, was 83 in favor of the amendment and 42 opposed to it. The amendment did not have the necessary two-thirds, and the rule absolutely forbade the Speaker to vote, and yet he did vote, and the amendment became ingrafted in the Constitution of the United States upon that vote; and he voted upon the distinct declaration that the House had no right to adopt any rule abridging the right of a member to vote; that he voted upon his responsibility to his conscience and to his constituents; that, although that rule was positive and peremptory, it did not have any effect upon his right. He voted, and, if the Chair remembers correctly, it was aftempted to context afterward, by some judicial process, whether the amendment was legally adopted. Button. Now the context is the state of the context of the conte ment.

Mr. Speer. I do not desire to argue with the Chair after he has decided the question. It would have been at least courteous to have heard me before he dement.

Mr. Speer. I do not desire to argue with the Chair after he has decided the question. It would have been at least courteous to have heard me before he decided it.

Mr. MAINARD. Is it proposed to appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. Speer. Certainly, it is.

Mr. Holman. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL. The Speaker has made a very interesting statement of what he termed a principle involved "back of the rule." How does the Chair reconcile what he has now stated with his decision in reference to the right of the gentleman from Massachusetts | Mr. Hooper| to vote upon the Pacific Railroad bill?

The Speaker. The Chair thinks that was a single corporation, holding a different relation from the general system of banking throughout the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. But that gentleman was here, and had his conscience and his duty to his constituents which he must consider.

The Speaker. The Chair is not put here to say what the rules should be, but to construe what they are.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair stated that the member was responsible to his own conscience and the constituency which he represented.

The Speaker. The Chair did not say that; the Chair stated that Mr. Macon so stated, which is a higher authority than that of the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know that it is any better.

The Speaker. An appeal has been taken from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of this House?

Mr. PARSONS. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. Speer. And on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered; there being only 13 in the affirmative.

The Speaker. The Chair desires that this vote shall be taken by tellers, so that it may go upon the record. The gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Holman, who appealed from the decision of the Chair, and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Parsons, who moved to lay that appeal on the table, will act as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers repor

Mr. WEAVER. If I can have the attention of the House, I wish

Mr. WLAYER. I rean have the attention of the House, I wish to submit a few remarks.

Mr. WILBER. I object. I think this has gone on far enough.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] rises to speak to the question of order which has been raised, and he has stated he desires to speak but a few moments. The Chair thinks that the business of the House might possibly be facilitated by hearing him.

Mr. WILBER. I withdraw the objection. Let him go on.

Mr. WEAVER. I hope the gentleman will not object, inasmuch

A MEMBER. The objection is withdrawn. Mr. WEAVER. All right. Possibly somebody may challenge the gentleman's vote when he comes to vote.

Mr. Speaker, the language of Rule VIII is that every member shall vote "unless he has a direct personal or pecuniary interest in the event of such question." Now, I wish to call attention to section 5 of the bill as it stands before the House. The very first provision is to the effect that "the 3 per cent. bonds authorized by the first section of this act shall be the only bonds receivable as security for national-bank circulation." The next provision in it is to the effect that no bonds upon which the interest has ceased shall be received as deposits to secure circulation, or shall remain on deposit for such purpose. And the last provision is that section 4 of the act of June 20, 1874, shall be repealed. Now, each of these provisions affects directly the pecuniary interest of every stockholder in a national

The point of order made by my colleague was not personal alone to the gentleman from Michigan—was not intended to apply to him alone, I suppose; but if it does, I extend it so as to make it apply to any and every member of the House who is a shareholder in a national bank. It may, and very likely will, deprive this House of a quorum—I do not know; but of course each gentleman will vote on his own conscience when his name is called.

First. By the law as it now stands national banks may use any and all kinds of Government bonds to secure their circulation.

Second. They may deposit in pledge bonds upon which all interest has ceased.

Third. These banks may, whenever and as often as they see proper retire and in turn increase their circulation, by depositing lawful money with the Secretary of the Treasury. Now, all three of these privileges are taken away by the provisions of this bill. How can it then be said that a stockholder in a national bank has not a pecuniary interest in the matters contained in this measure? If they have not interest in the matters contained in this measure? If they have not, then it is impossible to imagine an instance where a member could have such an interest. The object of the rule is to preserve and protect the purity of legislation—to protect the people against the greed and avarice of rings and legislative jobs.

The gentleman's [Mr. Newberry] argument that this is similar to a proposition to repeal a stamp tax on matches, or proprietary medicines, or to a bill to levy a tax upon distilled spirits, is without force. If the gentleman was a manufacturer of matches, or had a large quantity of liquor in bonded warehouse upon which a tax was about to be imposed or released, then the circumstances would be very nearly parimposed or released, then the circumstances would be very nearly par-allel, for in this instance these gentlemen are engaged personally in the banking business, and it is a question of dollars and cents with them. They have a pecuniary interest, which is wholly different and distinct from the great body of the people of the United States. Nothing can be plainer than that. It is not necessary that this pecuniary interest should be peculiar to the member or members challenged. They may belong to a large class of persons some of whom are in Congress and some of them out of Congress. If it is a pecuniary interest it is sufficient under the rule to exclude them from the right to vote on this measure. If members of this House belong to class of men interested in procuring certain legislation not in a class of men interested in procuring certain legislation not in harmony with the general interests of the country, then for a greater reason the rule should be enforced.

Now, one word in regard to the "garbled extract" as claimed by the gentleman from Michigan. There is nothing garbled in the extract read by my colleague. It is taken from the gentleman's own language when he was replying to the question of personal privilege raised by my colleague. Not one word is left out of it. The point of order is not made because the gentleman stated on the floor of this House he went to the officers of a bank of which he was a director and asked them how to vote; that is not the reason this challenge is made to-day, but because he states in his own language upon the floor of the House that he is a director of a bank, and that makes him pecuniarily interested in the passage of this bill.

And that is all. I extend the point of order so it shall apply to every gentleman on the floor of the House who owns stock in a national bank, and call in question the right of any member of the House to bank, and call in question the right of any member of the House to vote on the passage of this bill if he is interested in national banks.

The SPEAKER. You will have necessarily to name them.

Mr. WEAVER. And we can do that on the roll-call if the point of order made by my colleague [Mr. GILLETTE] is sustained.

Mr. HASKELL. I wish to detain the House but a single moment.

It may be true that indirectly stockholders and directly national banks would be involved by the passage of a certain bill of this character to the extent of a dollar on one side of the ledger or the other. If this ruling is to hold, then I take it that every greenback Congres man on this floor is involved to a greater degree, for then their entire business would be swept from under them, if it were not for exactly just such legislation and agitation as we have here in this bill. Their entire salaries of $5,000 a year each are at stake in such agitation as this. I insist without it they would retire to their homes bankrupt in purse, bankrupt in reputation, and void of any office under the Government but for just such propositions being brought forward as the one now pending. Therefore they should be included in the point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETTE. I should like to ask the gentleman from Kansas what would become of him and his colleagues if the "bloody shirt" were eliminated from politics?

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to have read a single passage from May's Parliamentary Practice, which seems to me to be decisive.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

In 1796 a general resolution was proposed in the Lords "that no peers shall vote who are interested in a question;" but it was not adopted. It is presumed, however, that such a resolution was deemed unnecessary; and that it was held that the personal honor of a peer will prevent him from forwarding his own pecuniary interest by his votes in Parliament. By standing order No. 178 lords are "exempted from serving on the committee on any private bill wherein they shall have any interest."

In the Commons it is a distinct rule that no member who has a direct pecuniary interest in a question shall be allowed to vote upon it; but in order to operate as a disqualification, this interest must be immediate and personal, and not merely of a general or remote description.

On the 17th July, 1811, the rule was thus explained by Mr. Speaker Abbot: "This interest must be a direct pecuniary interest, and separately belonging to the persons whose votes were questioned, and not in common with the rest of His Majesty's subjects, or on a matter of state policy." This opinion was given upon a motion for disallowing the votes of the bank directors upon the gold-coin bill, which was afterward negatived without a division.

No instance is to be found in the journals in which the vote of a member has been disallowed upon questions of public policy.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with the conclusions

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with the conclusions of the gentleman from Iowa or the position which he has taken in reference to this point of order. It seems to me that the rule does reference to this point of order. It seems to me that the rule does not apply to the case which the gentleman has cited. The rule, in my judgment, ismanifestly different. It provides that a member shall have a direct, personal, or pecuniary interest in the event of such question before he can be excluded from the privilege of voting. The word "direct" was evidently put in to distinguish between a case in which a member was interested in common with other members and a case which was peculiar to himself.

There have been many decisions in England and this country upon

There have been many decisions in England and this country upon the subject, and all of them have drawn a clear distinction between the subject, and all of them have drawn a clear distinction between cases where the interest was in common with others or where it applied personally to the individual member; in other words, whether the bill under consideration was a general or a private law. If this House should undertake to approve an act for the benefit of the bank in which the gentleman from Michigan or any other gentleman had a direct personal and pecuniary interest, then such member would properly be excluded from voting. If a general law affecting all banks alike be under consideration, then he is not disqualified by reason of his interest in that bank. It seems to me that the question is settled in that respect by citing the fact that members vote upon questions of their own pay. There can be no doubt of the right of members in this House and the Senate to vote upon questions of raising or lowering their salaries. That is a matter of necessity; it is a question in which all are interested, and yet it is a question which must be settled by the votes of the members themselves.

There have been frequent decisions covering this point, notably must be settled by the votes of the members themselves.

There have been frequent decisions covering this point, notably one by Speaker Winthrop in the house of representatives of Massachusetts in 1840, in the case of the Boston and Sandwich Glass Company, where certain stockholders of that corporation were members of the Legislature, and their right to vote upon a certain subject in which said company was interested was questioned. In an elaborate opinion upon the point raised in that case, Speaker Winthrop held that such stockholders could not be excluded from voting, which decision was sustained by the house on appeal.

I ask the Clerk to read in this connection section 1846 of Cushing's Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, which is a summary of Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, which is a summary of cases upon this question, and which settles the right, in my judgment, of members to vote.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

It seems from the foregoing and other cases, first, that when a question is pending the right or duty of a member to vote on that question may be brought forward by himself or any other member, and settled by the House before that question is taken; secondly, that if any question of this kind is made after a division has commenced, and before the decision of the House is announced, the Speaker is to decide it peremptorily as a question of order subject to the future revision of the House; third, that parties named in the bill either individually or collectively are excluded from voting thereon, whatever their interest may be; fourth, that members who are not named as parties must be shown to have a direct pecuniary interest in a bill in order to preclude them from voting upon it; fifth, if this interest is one which can be disclaimed it is sufficient to do so either before or after a division in order to justify voting on the question; and sixth, that the interest of a member which will exclude him from voting must be separate and distinct, and not merely enjoyed by him in common with his fellow-citizens.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to decide this question, but

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to decide this question, but the gentleman from Mississippi has indicated a desire to be heard.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the House but a few minutes. I desire to say on this point of order that this rule, to which reference has been made here, which prescribes the duties of members, will be found to show that it is made the duty of a member to vote ou each particular question which is brought before the House for consideration, unless he shall be excused by a motion, before a division is taken upon the question, or "unless he has a direct fore a division is taken upon the question, or "unless he has a direct personal or pecuniary interest in the event of such question," and that pecuniary interest must be direct and positive. The same principle that applies to the admission or exclusion of the testimony of interested parties in courts of justice ought to apply in this case, and I take it for granted that such will be the construction which the Chair will place upon the rule. Every lawyer knows that in a court of justice the rule is held to exclude the testimony of a witness only in the event that his interest in the result of the case is direct and immediate. The same rule and the same principle of law ought certainly to early hope.

mediate. The same rule and the same principle of law ought certainly to apply here.

It might be contended, Mr. Speaker, that few questions can everarise in this House in which some members perhaps more than others, and in many cases in which all of them, are not directly interested in the result. Upon the proposition which was presented here last year to appropriate the sum of $5,000 to investigate the insects that destroyed the cotton plant, it might be held, under the construction which has been claimed here to be placed upon this rule, that not a single member from the Southern States or from a State engaged in cotton planting could yet a upon that question, because he was interested in the ing could vote upon that question, because he was interested in the result of the increase of this product. And so with reference to every proposition which is intended to benefit the agricultural interests of the country. It might be said that no member should vote upon such the country. It might be said that no member should vote upon such a proposition, because in general every member on this floor is in some way or other interested in developing the agricultural resources of the country; and if this be shown to be true, as it can be in the majority of cases, all such members would be inhibited from voting on such bills. I presume, Mr. Speaker, that such a result as that would hardly be held to be within the scope of this rule. The interest which would exclude a member from voting must be a personal interest, such an interest as would exclude a party from testifying in a court of justice; in other words, an interest which is direct, personal, and immediate.

and immediate.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, if the argument of the gentleman is correct this rule ought to be wiped out. It is an utter nullity. There can be no direct interest possible in the House of Representatives to affect any man's vote.

Now I admit, Mr. Speaker, the current of authority from the beginning of the Government down to the present time has been in favor of setting aside this rule and allowing members to vote. The case of Mr. Macon, referred to by Speaker Blaine in the Forty-third Congress, is in point. Other cases may be cited.

I recollect of one case which has not yet been referred to, which was decided by Mr. Speaker Blaine. A member from Pennsylvania was about to vote on a tariff bill affecting the Bessemer steel process.

was about to vote on a tariff bill alrecting the Bessemer steel process. I challenged his vote. He was an owner of one of the Bessemer steel works in this country. He had a patent connected with the process and was directly interested. And yet the Speaker then, following the line of precedents, allowed him to vote, but when he went home to Pennsylvania the people never allowed him to vote any more.

I contend now, as I contended then, that this rule must have some substantial practical meaning. What is it? It says that—

Every member shall vote on each question put, unless-unless he has a direct personal or pecuniary interest in the event of such question.

Unless what ?-

If the member has a direct personal or pecuniary interest in the event of the question he shall be excluded from voting. And where can there be a more direct pecuniary interest than when the question can there be a more direct pecuniary interest than when the question is in regard to putting a tax on or taking a tax off the assets of a bank, the effect of which is clearly to affect the dividends to the stockholders? This rule was adopted to protect the people against the greed and the selfishness of members. It was intended as a popular guard against members who come here having their own special interests, your railroad men, your bank men, your Bessemer steel process men. It was intended to guard not against a man voting a pension to himself, but his voting directly against the popular interest and for his own interest; and I wish the decisions which have been made heretofore may be reversed in the interest of the people and of good legislation. good legislation.

Mr. REED. Though I am aware the Chair has undoubtedly made up his mind on this subject, yet I think time is not lost in getting from members of the House an expression of their ideas as to the meaning of this rule.

This rule is intended to be founded, like all other rules for governing a body of this kind, upon common sense and reason. Now, it is common sense and reason that a member who has a direct, pecuniary, or personal interest in the result of a bill should be excluded from voting on it; but not so where his interest is only the interest of a large class of his fellow-citizens; because although our Government is theoretically a representation of individuals it is also necessarily a representation of interests. Men are sent here because they repreint interests as well as individuals; and a man may be sent here sent interests as well as individuals; and a man may be sent here-like the Bessemer steel manufacturer, whom my friend from New York has talked about, because his constituents are deeply interested in the Bessemer steel process, and in the factories which are estab-lished for the purpose of making it; and the result of excluding from voting such a man and men of that kind would be to strike at the vote of every practical business man in either House of Congress. Men are selected and sent here for the reason very often that they are business men, men who know and understand the pecuniary wants are business men, men who know and understand the pecuniary wants of their constituents, and because they are interested in like manner with their constituents. The ruling which is suggested by my friend from New York, and contended for by him, would practically exclude the men who know best and who can best represent the interests of their constituents. Take, for instance, a town like Steubenville, in Ohio, or any town which is interested in manufactures of various kinds. What man can represent the interests of not only the manufacturers there, but of every workman who is busied in the mills of that town, better than the man who is himself interested in them? Men are selected to be sent to Congress with reference to considerations of that kind, and it is impossible for any law of Congress to be passed which does not affect the members of this House pecuniarily in connection with a whole mass of their fellow-citizens. it is the best safeguard we can have that men should act with reference to matters that they comprehend and understand. It appears to me, therefore, this matter has been decided not only upon correct principle but upon reason and sound sense as well.

Mr. GILLETTE rose.

Mr. BUCKNER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to know what is the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state what is the question before the House. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] rises to a point of order, and questions the right of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Newberry] to vote in view of the fact that he has stated, as appears in the Congressional Record, that he was interested in a national bank. That is the substance of it.

Mr. BUCKNER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Newberry] has not yet offered to vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this point may as well be made now. It could not be brought up to interrupt the roll-call.

Mr. COX. I would ask the gentleman from Missouri when else can we raise the question? It cannot be done while the roll-call is pro-we raise the question? It cannot be done while the roll-call is proceeding. I was put down once when making such a point because it was too late to make it during the roll-call.

Mr. GILLETTE. Just one word. Nearly all who have spoken against my point of order have endeavored to reduce it to an absurdity by extending the rule indefinitely into thin air. You can make anything ridiculous by the same course. The rule is specific and refers to a pecuniary interest; and I say a man could not have a more direct pecuniary interest in a question pending before the House than the gentleman from Michigan has in this question.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

tion?

Mr. GILLETTE. Certainly.
Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I would ask the gentleman whether it is not a personal privilege to be pleaded by the member himself as an excuse for not voting, that he has a pecuniary interest in the question, and he thereby excuses himself without any vote of the House? The House may excuse him, but the member may excuse himself by pleading his pecuniary interest.

Mr. GILLETTE. He certainly can excuse himself, but the House can excuse him, too, and will if it enforces the eighth rule. We do not generally rely upon individual members to enforce the laws, but the House does so as a body. We have been listening here to authorities away back in the dim past. The decisions of the English House of Lords, an aristocratic body that holds its authority for life, and is not amenable to the people, have been cited as an authority upon this question. I want to call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that we live in a new country, in a new era; that we are living under a new Government, a Republic, and under new rules, and we do not want to go back to the dark ages to decide whether corporations can, want to go back to the dark ages to decide whether corporations can, by manipulating caucuses and conventions, get their officers, their tools, in here to legislate in their interests solely, and against the people. I venture to say that not 1 per cent. of the gentleman's constituents are represented by him when he votes upon this important measure, as instructed by his bank directors.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must be governed by the rules of the House, and by the interpretations which have been placed on those rules in the past by the House. The old rule, Rule 29, does not differ in substance from the paragraph of the present Rule VIII bearing ment this particular subject.

This is not a new question. It was brought to the attention of the country in a remarkable manner in the Seventh Congress, when Mr. Macon, then Speaker of the House, claimed his right as a representative of a constituency to vote upon a pending question, notwith-standing there was a rule of the House to the contrary. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read the record in that case.

The Clerk read as follows:

On a very important question, taken December 9, 1803, on an amendment to the Constitution, so as to change the form of voting for President and Vice-President, which required a vote of two-thirds, there appeared 83 in the affirmative, and 42 in the negative; it wanted 1 vote in the affirmative to make the constitutional majority. The Speaker, (Macon,) notwithstanding a prohibition in the rule as it then existed, claimed and obtained his right to vote, and voted in the affirmative; and it was by that vote that the amendment to the Constitution was carried. The right of the Speaker, as a member of the House, to vote on all questions is secured by the Constitution. No act of the House can take it from him when he chooses to exercise it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware that the House of Representatives has ever deprived a Representative of the right to represent his constituency. A decision of the Chair to that extent would be an act, the Chair thinks, altogether beyond the range of his authority.

The Chair doubts whether the House itself should exercise or has the power to deprive a Representative of the people of his right to represent his constituency. The history of the country does not show any instance in which a Representative has been so deprived of that right.

There have been various decisions from time to time upon this point, notably the one to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] has alluded; the one where the right of Mr. Morrell, a Repre-COX] has alluded; the one where the right of Mr. Morrell, a Representative from Pennsylvania, to vote was questioned because he was interested in a patent for the manufacture of Bessemer steel, the question under consideration being the rate of tariff on such imported steel. Yet the House upon that occasion decided that the Representative had the right to vote, and he did vote.

Again, notably in another instance, where another member from Pennsylvania, Mr. Speer, raised the question against two members of this House as to their right to vote upon a subject relating to banks, they being officers of national banks. The Chair will direct to be read the decisions in that case made by the then Speaker, Mr. BLAINE. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

APRIL 11, 1874.

Mr. Speer made the point of order that certain members holding stock in national banks were not entitled to vote, being personally interested in the pending quesbanks were not entraced to took, years per tion.

The SPZAKER overruled the point of order on the ground that where proposed legislation, as in the present instance, affected a class as distinct from individuals it had always been held that a member had a right to vote.

From this decision of the Chair Mr. Holman appealed.

Pending which.

On motion of Mr. Parsons, the appeal was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. There was no yea-and-nay vote; but the Chair thinks he is correct in stating that it was because there was not enough who differed with the Chair in that opinion to order the yeas and nays. The Chair thinks there were but nine who differed with

The present occupant of the chair himself decided a collateral point bearing somewhat on this question. The Clerk will read from the RECORD

The Clerk read as follows:

MARCH 2, 1877.

Mr. Lamar. I move to suspend the rules so as to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 14) to extend the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

During the call of the roll the following occurred:

Mr. Frye. Lwould like to vote on this bill, but I am an unfortunate stockholder in this road, and do not feel at liberty to vote until the Chair has ruled upon my right to do so.

Mr. CLYMER. What will you take for your stock? [Laughter.]

Mr. LANE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to vote.

The SPEAKER. Rule 29 reads:

"No member shall vote on any question in the event of which he is immediately or particularly interested."

Having read this rule, it is for the gentleman himself to determine whether he shall vote, not for the Chair.

Mr. FRYE. I decline to vote.

The SPEAKER. In view of these decisions and because of the reasons given in this debate, the Chair overrules the point of order. Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. Speaker

Many Members. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Gillette] has a right to be heard, as the Chair supposes he intends to appeal from his decision.

Mr. GILLETTE. With all respect for the decision of the Chair, inasmuch as I believe this is a question of great importance, and this decision under the new rule will probably be quoted for a great many decision under the new rule will probably be quoted for a great many years as a precedent, I will appeal from the decision of the Chair. Upon this appeal it is for the House to decide whether or not this rule shall be a dead letter or whether the representatives of rich corporations, acting in this House under instructions, shall be curbed and bridled by it. It has been said the criminal code was never designed for rich men. How rarely are they punished for their crimes, while poor men almost invariably suffer the extreme penalty of the

I desire to find out whether the rules of this House have any binding force when applied to the agents of wealthy corporations upon this floor. I know how strictly they are enforced against small minorities here; but when they strike at "game," we are told they are unconstitutional, null, and void.

This rule now under consideration was reported to this House and passed at its last session. The honorable Speaker, Hon. J. A. Garfield, President-elect; Hon. J. C. S. BLACKBURN, and Hon. W. P. FRYE composed the committee that reported it, and now the first time it is applied to the test to restrain an interested voter it is all at once discovered to be unconstitutional by the chairman of the committee that reported it, the honorable Speaker, who holds that it is a dead letter. This is the law; let us enforce it to the letter or repeal it at

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that the paragraph of Rule VIII relating to this subject is in substance the same as Rule 29 of the old rules.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, there were—ayes 185, noes 9.

Mr. O'NEILL. I think it would be well to have the yeas and nays on this question. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. WEAVER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are asked. As many as are in favor of taking this question by yeas and nays will rise and stand till counted. [After a pause.] Twenty gentlemen voting in the affirmative, the Chair thinks it would not be amiss to have this question that the by the counter of the in taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. O'NEILL. That was my impression.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask the Chair to put the affirmative again. I think the yeas and nays will be ordered.

The question being again put, there were ayes 53; more than onefifth of the last vote.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 221, nays 32, not voting 39; as follows:

So the appeal from the decision of the Chair was laid on the table. Before the result of the vote was announced,
Mr. SIMONTON said: Mr. Speaker, my attention was momentarily diverted when my name was called. I would like to have my vote recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the right to have his vote recorded if he did not answer on one of the two roll-calls.

Mr. SIMONTON. I was on the floor during the roll-call, but my attention was diverted at the time my name was called.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am in the same situation.

Mr. PAGE and Mr. MORTON. Cannot members vote now by unanimous consent

The SPEAKER. The rule forbids the Chair to entertain such a request.

The following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:
Mr. BRIGHT with Mr. OSMER.
Mr. RAY with Mr. LADD, on political questions.
Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, with Mr. HOUK.
Mr. MYERS with Mr. ORTH.

Mr. James with Mr. O'Brien, until further notice.

Mr. Simonton with Mr. Morton.

Mr. McKenzie. I am paired with Mr. Robeson on political questions, but not regarding this as of that character, I have voted.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will be read, and gentlemen will indicate, as they are read for information, on what amendments separate votes are desired.

The amendments were read.

Mr. DEUSTER. I desire to have a separate vote of the House on the proviso adopted on motion of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr.

the provise adopted on motion of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. SAMFORD.]

Mr. HUTCHINS. And I wish to have a separate vote on the first amendment, making the rate of interest 3 instead of 3½ per cent. I would like to have a separate vote also upon the amendment making the bonds five and ten instead of twenty and forty years. I ask also for a separate vote on the last section but one, being the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE.]

Mr. CLAFLIN. I ask, Mr. Speaker, for a separate vote on all substantive amendments to the first section.

The SPEAKER. Notice has been given already that reaches almost

The SPEAKER. Notice has been given already that reaches almost all of the amendments.

Mr. SAMFORD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAMFORD. It is whether the amendments reported to a single section are divisible?

The SPEAKER. Amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union as single amendments are not divisible.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I suggest to the House that, although these amendments are put down separately and distinctly and numerically by the Clerk, yet where they relate to the same thing and a vote is taken upon the first one, that there need be no separate vote on subsequent amendments exactly the same in substance.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be reported in their order, and on the first amendment the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] demands a separate vote.

Mr. SAMFORD. My question is, can you take a separate vote on the amendments to a section or must they all be voted on together?

The SPEAKER. No; each amendment is voted on separately, but a single amendment cannot be divided but must be voted on as it came from the committee.

came from the committee.

The first amendment is, to strike out "five" in the sixteenth line of the printed bill, and insert "four."

Mr. HUTCHINS. I find the amendment I have referred to is not the first amendment.

Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to withdraw an amendment proposed by me yesterday afternoon. The bill as printed in the Record the other day contained the words "and notes," which were ordered by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to be stricken out; but on examination of the bill itself as sent to the House by the Public Printer, I find it is correct, and my amendment therefore the Public Printer, I find it is correct, and my amendment therefore is unnecessary.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent, but the Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

Mr. HUTCHINS. My demand for a separate vote was on striking out "3½" and substituting "3" per cent.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the first amendment of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union striking out "five" and inserting "four;" so it will read "the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds to an amount not exceeding four hundred million dollars," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The next amendment is on striking out "3½" and in lieu thereof inserting "3;" so it will read "which shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum."

Mr. HUTCHINS. I demanded a separate vote on that amendment. Mr. KEIFER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and decided in the affirmative—yeas 149, nays 104, not voting 39; as follows:

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's deak :

desk:

Mr. Bragg and Mr. James are paired upon all political questions, each reserving the right to vote at any time to preserve a quorum; and Mr. Bragg reserves the right to vote upon all questions arising out of or pertaining to House bill No. 3764 and Senate bill No. 1139.

Mr. Browne and Mr. Cobb, for this day.

Mr. Young, of Ohio, and Mr. Hurd are paired on the funding bill. If Mr. Young were present, he would vote "no" and Mr. Hurd

Mr. STARIN and Mr. HERNDON, for this day. Mr. FORT. My colleague, Mr. HAWK, is detained from the House by illness

Mr. WAIT. I wish to announce, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. JOYCE is detained by illness and is not able to come to the House.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 18 and '19 strike out the words "twenty years" and insert "five years," and strike out the word "forty" and insert "ten," so that it will read if adopted "redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after five years, and payable ten years from the date of issue."

The SPEAKER. This amendment applies to the bonds, and runs to the time and option. Originally it was fixed in the bill at twenty years, and payable at forty, but the amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole proposes to make the bonds redeemable after five and payable in ten years from the date of issue.

Mr. WARNER. The second branch of the amendment, fixing ten years in place of forty, comes in as a separate amendment.

The SPEAKER. It comes from the Committee of the Whole as a single amendment.

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

In line 20 strike out the word "notes" and insert "certificates."

The amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk read the next amendment:

In line 20 strike out "two" and insert "three," so as to make it read if adopted "$300,000,000."

The SPEAKER. That would make the amount of certificates, if adopted, three hundred millions in place of two hundred millions as originally fixed in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

After the word "dollar," in line 21, insert the words "in denominations of ten, twenty, and fifty dollars either registered or coupon."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 23 strike out the words "and one-half," making it read "at the rate of 3 per cent, per annum."

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

In line 25 strike out "two years" and insert "one year."

The SPEAKER. The original bill read "redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after two years and payable in ten years." This amendment makes it redeemable after one year and payable in ten.

The amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out from lines 25 to 30, after the word "issue," the words "but not more than forty million dollars of said notes shall be redeemed in any one fiscal year, and the particular notes to be redeemed from time to time shall be determined by lot, under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows: In lines 30 and 31 strike out the word "notes" and insert the word "certificates," so that it will read "the bonds and certificates shall be in all other respects," &c.

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 1 add the following words:

"Provided further, That before any of the bonds or certificates authorized by this act are issued it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay on the bonds accraing during the year 1881 all the silver dollars of 412½ grains, and all the gold over and above $50,000,000, now held in the Treasury for redemption purposes."

Mr. FRYE. I call for the yeas and nays on that. The yeas and nays were ordered. Mr. DUNNELL. Let the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 140, not voting 41; as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In section 3, line 1, strike out the word "notes" and insert the word "certificates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Add to section 3 the following:

"And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to make suitable rules and regulations to carry this act into effect: Provided, That the expense of preparing, issuing, advertising, and disposing of the bonds and certificates authorized to be issued shall not exceed one-quarter of 1 per cent."

Mr. FRYE. I ask that the amendment may be divided. Mr. CALKINS. It will be remembered that there are in fact two distinct amendments in what has just been read.

The SPEAKER. It was all reported as one amendment.

Mr. WARNER. It was adopted by one vote in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not himself recollect the fact, but The SPEAKER. The Chair does not himself recollect the fact, but he is advised that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LOUNSBERY] offered an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] which was accepted by that gentleman and became part of his amendment.

Mr. CARLISLE. That is the fact.

The SPEAKER. It comes, therefore, into the House from the committee as a single amendment.

mittee as a single amendment.

Mr. CARLISLE. It was inserted before my amendment was

Mr. FRYE. But even if it does come from the committee to the House as a single amendment, has not a member the right to ask the division of the amendment if it be divisible?

The SPEAKER. Not under the ruling of the Chair heretofore, and during this very session, that an amendment coming from the Committee of the Whole as a single amendment is not susceptible of division. That ruling is in accordance with what has been the practice

Mr. FRYE. Does the Chair state it as a fact that the Committee of the Whole reported this as one amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not state it of his own knowledge, but he is informed by the Clerk that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LOUNSBERY] offered an amendment to the amendment which was accepted by the gentleman from Kentucky and made part of the original amendment before it was voted on by the committee.

Mr. FRYE. Then I think this amendment is important enough to require the yeas and nays, and I call for them.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

So the amendment was agreed to.
After the second roll-call,
Mr. FINLEY said: I wish to inquire how I am recorded.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman's vote is not recorded.
Mr. FINLEY. I vote "ay."
The SPEAKER. As the gentleman did not vote when his name was called his vote cannot be now received. His statement will go into the RECORD.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated Mr. McCOOK. I desire to state that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WILLIAMS] and myself were called out of the House before the vote on the amendment to substitute the rate of 3 for 3½ per cent. was taken. We left word to have a messenger come after us when the vote was being taken. He failed to do so. I ask unanimous consent that my vote may now be recorded in the negative.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done. The gentleman, however, will accomplish his object by stating how he would have voted.

Mr. McCOOK. I would have voted in the negative.
Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I desire to state that on that vote
I should also have voted "no."
Mr. GILLETTE. I desire to state under the same circumstances that my vote would have been in the affirmative.

Mr. DICK. I wish to state that I was accidentally absent when the vote was taken on the proviso to the first section in reference to the payment of silver on the bonds. If I had been present, I would have voted "no."

COMMITTEES OF CONFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces as the members on the part of the House of the committee of conference asked by the Senate on the bill (H. R. No. 6613) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, Mr. SINGLETON of Mississippi, Mr. WELLS, and Mr. MONROE.

The Chair also announces as managers on the part of the House of the conference on the bill (H. R. No. 1327) granting lands to Dakota, Montana, Arizona, Idaho, and Wyoming, for university purposes, Mr. CONVERSE, Mr. DUNN, and Mr. SAPP.

FUNDING BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the funding bill reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The next amendment will now be read. The next amendment was to strike out section 4, as follows:

The next amendment was to strike out section 4, as follows:
SEC. 4. The act approved February 26, 1879, authorizing the issue of certificates of deposit, is hereby amended so as to continue and limit the amount of certificates to be issued to $50,000,000 to be outstanding at any one time, and fixing the rate of interest to be allowed thereon at three and one-half of 1 per cent. per annum for one year, after which interest shall cease; and the said certificates shall be convertible, at the option of the holders, when presented in sums of $50 or multiples thereof, into the coupon or registered bonds authorized by this act; and whenever any of the said certificates shall be converted into bonds the same shall be canceled and destroyed; but the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, issue new certificates in place of those so converted up to the limit of $50,000,000, until the aggregate amount of the bonds authorized by this act and of the said certificates combined then outstanding shall equal the amount of bonds hereby authorized. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to form combinations by which to procure said certificates of deposit authorized under this act for purposes of sale to others, or for acting as agents of others, and any person so offending shall be liable, on conviction, to be fined $1,000 or imprisoned not to exceed one year. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make suitable regulations in compliance with this act, providing that the expense for the disposing of the certificates and bonds authorized to be issued shall not exceed one-quarter of 1 per cents: Provided, That said certificates shall not be sold or converted at less than par;

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, if in his opinion it shall become necessary, to use not exceeding $50,000,000 of the standard gold and silver coin in the Treasury in the redemption of the 5 and 6 per cent. bonds of the United States authorized to be refunded by the provisions of this act, and he may at any time apply the surplus money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds or certificates: Provided, That the bonds and certificates so purchased or redemed shall constitute no part of the sinking fund, but shall be canceled.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I call for the yeas and nays upon agreeing to that amendment.

Many Members. Ob, no! Mr. FRYE. It is left in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury

Mr. CLAFLIN. Very well; I will withdraw the call.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 5, as follows:

Sec. 5. From and after the 1st day of July, 1830, the $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, bonds authorized by the first section of this act shall be the only bonds receivable as security for national-bank circulation;

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

From and after the 1st day of May, 1881, the 3 per cent, bonds authorized by the first section of this act shall be the only bonds receivable as security for national-bank circulation, or as security for the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the public money deposited with such banks; but when any such bonds deposited for the purposes aforesaid shall be designated for purchase or redemption by the Secretary of the Treasury, the banking association depositing the same shall have the right to substitute other issues of the bonds of the United States in lieu thereof: Provided, That no bond upon which interest has ceased shall be accepted or shall be continued on deposit as security for circulation or for the safe-keeping of the public money; and in case bonds so deposited shall not be withdrawn as provided by law, within thirty days after interest has ceased thereon, the banking association depositing the same shall be subject to the liabilities and proceedings on the part of the Comptroller provided for in section 5234 of the Revised Statutes of the United States: And provided further, That section 4 of the act of June 20, 1874, entitled "An act fixing the amount of United States notes, providing for a redistribution of the national-bank currency, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and sections 5159 and 5160 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same are hereby, re-enacted.

Mr. DUNNELLL. I call for the yeas and navs upon agreeing to that Mr. DUNNELL. I call for the yeas and nays upon agreeing to that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 137, nays 119, not voting 36; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.
At the conclusion of the second roll-call,
Mr. FRYE said: I desire to withdraw my vote. I am paired on this question with the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] who, had he been present, would have voted "ay," and I should have voted "no."

Mr. ACKLEN. I move that the reading of the names be dispensed

Mr. FRYE. I think the names had better be read, and I object to dispensing with the reading.

The names of those voting were then read; and the result was annonneed as above stated.

The last amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole was, in section 6, to strike out "1880" and to insert in lieu thereof "1881;" so that the section will read as follows:

SEC. 6. That this act shall be known as "The funding act of 1881;" and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move to reconsider the votes taken on the several amendments to this bill; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The later motion was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move to reconsider the vote ordering the main question; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the passage of the bill, upon which the main question has been ordered.

Mr. FRYE. I call for the yeas and nays on that question.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALKINS. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to call up at this time the contested-election case of Boynton vs. Loring, upon which the report of the committee was made before the holiday

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes that as a question of privilege; but the gentleman will be kind enough to give way for a moment, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] desires to have taken from the Speaker's table, for concurrence in an amendment of the Senate, a joint resolution in reference to the distribution of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (H. R. No. 340) in relation to the distribution of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The object is simply to concur in an amendment of the Senate giving the judges of the Supreme Court copies of the RECORD.

Mr. REAGAN. I object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to make a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana

[Mr. CALKINS] on a question of the highest privilege touching the right of a member to his seat.

Mr. CALKINS. I will state to the House that by direction of the Committee on Elections I shall call for the previous question after two hours and a half of debate.

Mr. STONE. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. REAGAN. I understood we were to have an understanding for the limitation of debate upon the contested-election case. If not, for the limitation of debate upon the contested-election case. If not, I must raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. Inasmuch as the gentleman in whose favor the Committee on Elections has reported is already occupying his seat, the Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Calkins] whether it is necessary to have this question come up as against the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Speaker, if I could yield I would do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the right of the gentleman from Indiana to bring up the question.

Mr. CALKINS. If, upon consultation, gentlemen interested desire me to yield, I will do so willingly. I am now only acting under instructions.

structions

Mr. BLOUNT. As the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. Atkins,] who has charge of the naval appropriation bill, is not now in his seat, I desire to state that I know his purpose is to bring up that bill to-morrow morning; and in order that the bill may not be displaced, I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That would not interfere with the precedence of the election case, which could not be displaced except by raising the question of consideration. But the Chair thinks the gentleman from Indiana will come to an understanding touching the naval appropriation bill

Mr. CALKINS. I yield for the motion to adjourn. In the morning the matter can be arranged.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to adjourn, the Chair, if there be no objection, will lay before the House several executive communications.

There was no objection.

JAMES B. JONES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to the Indian depredation claim of James B. Jones; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to the Indian depredation claim of Hank Brown; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

FRANKLIN COLLECTION OF MANUSCRIPTS, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a communication from Benjamin F. Stevens, offering for sale Henry Stevens's Franklin collection of manuscripts and books; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. Stone, that the House adjourn, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By Mr. ATHERTON: The petition of John Coad, John P. Koontz, and 125 others, citizens of Ohio, for legislation to protect innocent, purchasers of patented articles—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, the petition of John Coad, Hon. James W. Owens, and 100 others, citizens of Licking County, Ohio, for the passage of an interstate-commerce bill—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of A. B. Cofman and 140 others, citizens of Licking County, Ohio, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. BALLOU: The petition of Emil E. Carl, for a reduction of the duty on vinegar—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BOWMAN: The petition of Michael Niland, for the removal of the charge of desertion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRAGG: The petition of citizens of Sheboygan, Wisconsin, that a duty be imposed upon fresh fish—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BRIGGS: The petition of J. B. Fay and 16 others, soldiers of Amherst and vicinity, New Hampshire, for the passage of Senate bill No. 496 as amended, providing for a commission for the settlement of pension claims—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CALKINS: The petition of Margaret Waldruff, for a pension—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CASWELL: The petition of F. W. C. Boelsing and Sothers.

By Mr. CASWELL: The petition of E.W. C. Boelsing and 8 others, citizens of Wisconsin, for a reduction of the tax on cigars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DAGGETT: The petition of citizens of Nevada, for legislation for the prevention of the spread of cattle diseases—to the Committee on A rejection.

mittee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GEORGE R. DAVIS: Resolutions of the Chicago Union Veteran Club, indorsing the Keifer bill, pensioning Union prisoners of the late war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DEUSTER: The petition of vinegar manufacturers and others, against the repeal of the present vinegar law—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DUNNELL: The petition of G. D. Post and 300 others, citizens of Minnesota, for the repeal of the tax on banks—to the same committee

By Mr. FELTON: Two petitions of citizens of Georgia, for post-routes from Hammond's Mills to Fouche's Mills, Floyd County, and from Ringgold to Crawfish Spring, Georgia—to the Committee on the routes from Hammond's Mills to Fouche's Mills, Floyd County, and from Ringgold to Crawfish Spring, Georgia—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. FINLEY: The petition of citizens of Ohio, for a reduction of the tax on cigars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HALL: The petition of Jonathan Sawyer, treasurer of Sawyer's Woolen Mills, for the passage of a bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HARMER: The petition of manufacturers and merchants of Philadelphia, relative to increase of pensions to honorably discharged soldiers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAWK: The petition of George W. Girdon, J. Fawcett, T. W. Burns, Hon. R. H. McClellan, and 100 others, citizens of Jo Daviess County, Illinois, for an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi River from Saint Paul to the mouth of the Illinois River—to the Committee on Commerce.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 20, 1881.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Bullock, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. TELLER. In listening to the Journal, it seems to me there was an amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the bill (S. No. 818) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories that is not noticed, and I do not find it in the RECORD. After the word "minerals," in the third subdivision of section 12, on page 11, the Senator from Vermont moved to insert the words "of quicksilver." I do not find that in the RECORD. find that in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is in the Journal, the Chair is informed.

The CHIEF CLERK. The words inserted were "of the same," in line 18, after the word "mineral."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair calls the attention of the Senate to the fact that in the bill which passed yesterday there are one or two clerical errors, which will be corrected by the Secretary. In the amendment suggested by the Senator from Vermont occur the words "shall be provided." That will be changed so as to read "shall provide;" and in the printed part of the bill occur the words "surveyor-general," which will be changed to "surveyor-general."

Mr. TELLER. I suppose those corrections will be made, then, without any motion.

out any motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Those changes will be made before the bill is engrossed.

The Journal was approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a communication from Benjamin F. Stevens, dispatch agent of the United States at London, relative to the purchase for the Department of State of Henry Stevens's Franklin collection of manuscripts and books; which was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT FOR 1880.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, transmitting the annual report of the operations, expenditures, and condition of the institution for the year 1880; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WITHERS submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senats, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That 15,500 copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1880 be printed; 2,500 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate; 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,000 copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, in favor of an appropriation of land by Congress to aid in the construction of a railway from Saint Mary's Falls to the Marquette and Mackinaw Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Resolved. That the President is hereby requested to forthwith transmit to the Senate, if in his opinion it be not incompatible with the public interest, copies of any and all correspondence which since 1869 may have passed between the Secretary of State and any diplomatic or consular agent of the United States, either in Switzerland or in any other foreign country, in relation to the sending to the United States, by any foreign state, canton, or municipality, of criminals, paupers, or insane persons.

INAUGURAL DECORATIONS.

Mr. PENDLETON. I submit a concurrent resolution which I send to the desk, and I think after it shall be read there will be no objection to its immediate consideration. It is offered after consultation with the Department to which it refers.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized and empowered to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies the flags and bunting in the Government depots for use in decorating the city of Washington on the 4th of March next: Provided, That the said committee shall indemnify the Departments against any loss or damage resulting from the use of said flags and bunting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a simple Senate resolution? The VICE-PRESIDNT. It is a concurrent resolution. Mr. EDMUNDS. It ought to be a joint resolution, I suggest to my friend.

Mr. PENDLETON. It is a joint resolution, I think.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it ought to be read three times.
Mr. PENDLETON. I thought it would cover the whole thing in this form.

EXPENSES OF TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to take up and ask the adoption of a resolution to which I think there will be no further objection. It was laid over yesterday under the rules, and is a resolution calling for certain information.

The resolution submitted by Mr. Conkling on the 19th instant was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate respecting the execution of the law for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses, in the following particulars:

First. The number of clerks appointed under section 3, specifying the number of males and females respectively, and the number under each rate of compensation.

Second. The number of supervisors appointed under section 4, with the rates of

COMMITTEE ON RIGHTS OF WOMEN CITIZENS.

Mr. McDonald. On the 16th of February last I submitted a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee of nine Senators, whose duty it shall be to receive, consider, and report upon all petitions, memorials, resolutions, and bills relating to the rights of women citizens of the United States, said committee to be called "Committee on the Rights of Women Citizens." It is on the Calendar, and I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana calls up for consideration a resolution on the Calendar, which will be reported. The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of nine Senators be appointed by the Senate, whose duty it shall be to receive, consider, and report upon all petitions, memorials, resolutions, and bills relating to the rights of women citizens of the United States, said committee to be called the Committee on the Rights of Women Citizens.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate agree

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. MCDONALD. Mr. President, it seems to me that the time has arrived when the rights of the class of citizens named in the resolution should have some hearing in the National Legislature. We have standing committees upon almost every other subject, but none to which this class of citizens can resort. When their memorials come in they are sometimes sent to the Committee on the Judiciary, sometimes to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and sometimes to other committees. The consequence is that they pass around from committee to committee and never receive any consideration. In the organization and growth of the Senate a number of standing committees have been from time to time created and continued from Congress to Congress, until many of them have but very little duty now to perform. It seems to me to be very appropriate to take up and consider this question now, and provide some place in the Capitol, some room of the Senate, some branch of the Government, where this class of applicants can have a full and a fair hearing, and have such measures as may be desired to secure to them such rights as may be accorded to them brought fairly and properly before the country. I hope there will be no opposition to the resolution, but that it will be adopted by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator from Indiana wish to raise a

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator from Indiana wish to raise a

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator from Indiana wish to raise a permanent committee on this subject to take its place and remain on the list of permanent committees?

Mr. McDONALD. That is precisely what I propose to do.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I was in hopes that the honorable Senator from Indiana, knowing how sincere and earnest he is in this regard, intended that an end should be made soon of this subject; that the prayer of these petitioners should be granted and the whole right established; but now it seems that he wishes to create a perpetual committee, so that it is to go on interminably, from which I infer that he intends that never shall these prayers be granted. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that, if he be in earnest, if he wishes to crown with success this great and beneficent movement, be wishes to crown with success this great and beneficent movement, he should raise a special committee, which committee would understand that it was to achieve and conclude its purpose, and that presently; and not postpone indefinitely in the vast forever the realization of this hope.

I trust, therefore, that the Senator from Indiana will make this a special committee, and will let that special committee understand that before the sun goes down on the last day of this session it is to take final, serious, intelligent action for which it is to be responsible, whether that action be one way or the other.

Mr. McDONALD. The Senator from New York misapprehends one purpose of this committee. I certainly have no desire that the rights of this class of our citizens should be deferred to that far-distant future to which he has made reference, nor would this committee so place them. If it be authorized by the Senate, it will be the duty of the committee to receive all petitions, memorials, resolutions, and bills relating to the rights of the women citizens, not merely presented now but those presented at any future time. It is simply to provide a place where one-half the people of the United States may have an organ in this body, a tribunal before which they can have their cases considered. I apprehend that these rights are never to be ended. I do not suppose that the time will ever come in the history of the human race when there will not be rights of women to be considered and passed upon, as long as the human family lasts upon this sidered and passed upon, as long as the human family lasts upon this globe.

Therefore, to make this merely a special committee would not accomplish the purpose that I had in view. While it would of course give a committee that would receive and hear such petitions as are now presented and consider such bills as should now be brought forward, it would be better to have a committee from term to term, where these same plaints could be heard, the same petitions presented, the same bills considered, and where new rights, whatever they might be, can be discussed and acted upon. Therefore I cannot accept the suggestion of the Senator from New York to make this a special committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think it a bad idea to raise an extra committee. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules. I think it ought to go there. That is where the rules generally require all such resolutions to be referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. McDONALD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Upon principle, during this entire Congress, I have opposed special committees, as my friend from Indiana knows.

Mr. McDONALD. This is not to be a special committee, but a standing committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then it is still worse to make a standing committee near the end of a Congress. The subject ought to be properly considered; it is one worthy of consideration. I hope the Senate will go slowly in increasing its committees. The adoption of the resolution would of course carry with it a committee. The adoption of the resolution would of course carry with it a committee-room, a clerk, &c., and it is a subject that ought to go to the Committee on Rules and be properly considered, and let it come back to the Senate in proper form. I hope the Senate will take that course.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 23, as follows:

	YE	AS-26.
Beck, Booth, Brown, Coke, Davis of W. Va., Eaton, Edmunds,	Farley, Garland, Groome, Harris, Hill of Georgia, Ingalls, Kernan,	Lamar, Morgan, Morrill, Pendleton, Platt, Pugh, Ransom,	Saulsbury, Slater, Vance, Vest, Withers.

So the motion to refer was agreed to.

ELECTIONS OF SENATORS.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 404) to amend section 14, chapter 1 of title 2 of the Revised Statutes, and if the bill is taken up I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate while I submit a very brief statement, not occupying more than ten minutes, in regard to the matter.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection that the bill be taken up for the purpose of allowing the Senator to submit his remarks, but to its further consideration I shall object. Let the Calendar be called in mr. COCKRELL. It is on the Calendar and can be reached in its regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, do., That chapter 1 of title 2 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by inserting, in section 14, immediately after the word "chosen," the words "and organized," so that the said section shall read as follows:

"SEC. 14. The Legislature of each State which is chosen and organized next preceding the expiration of the time for which any Senator was elected to represent such State in Congress, shall, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof, proceed to elect a Senator in Congress."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration sate in Congress, shall, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof, proceed to elect a Senator in Congress."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill at this time?

Mr. COCKRELL. Istated that I would consent to allowing the Senator from New Hampshire to submit his remarks; but I cannot consent that the bill be taken up out of its order and considered when we shall probably reach it during the morning hour.

Mr. ROLLINS. Mr. President, by the new constitution of New Hampshire, the Legislature is elected biennially in November, and the Legislature so elected meets in June following. The first Legislature elected under the new constitution was chosen in November, 1878, and met in June, 1879, and their term of office expires in May, 1881. In November, 1880, a new Legislature was elected, whose term of office commences in June, 1881, and expires the last Wednesday of May, 1883. In November, 1882, a new Legislature will be elected; but their term of office will not commence until the first Wednesday of June, 1883. My term as Senator expires with the session of the Senate, March 3, 1883, and the question is whether the Legislature elected in November, 1880, which is to meet and organize in June next, 1881, or that which shall be elected in November, 1882, which does not meet and organize until June, 1883, three months after my term of office expires, has the power to elect my successor? If the first, then no vacancy will occur in the representation of the State in this body. If the last, then a vacancy will occur on the 4th of March, 1883, which cannot be filled by the Legislature until the June following. This question is not a new one. It arose in anticipation of the expiration of the term of my former colleague, Senator Wadleigh, in March, 1879, and the report (No. 485) of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, second session Forty-fifth Congress, of this body was to the effect that the power to elect lay in the Legislature elected in November, 1878, which they were referred to the committee, who divided upon the question, the majority reporting against the right of the governor to appoint and the minority sustaining the right. After a somewhat long and protracted discussion the report of the minority was adopted by the Senate and Mr. Bell was admitted. That discussion, which was participated in by many of the prominent lawyers on both sides of this Chamber, tended to throw great doubt upon the soundness of the first report of the committee to which I have already referred. The same question will again come up at the commencement of the Forty-eighth Congress, and it is important for the interests of my State that some definite decision should be made upon the question. The statute of the United States, July 25, 1866, re-enacted Revised Statutes, section 814, provides that "the Legislature of each State which is chosen next preceding the expiration of the term for which any Senator was elected to represent such State in Congress, shall on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof proceed to elect a Senator in Congress." As has been said the term for which I was elected expires March, 1883. According to the letter of the statute the Legislature chosen next preceding that time is the Legislature to be elected in November, 1882, but which by the constitution of the State does not succeed to the office and meet and organize until the first Wednesday of June, 1883, and cannot elect until the second Tuesday after that date, some three months after the expiration of the term. same question will again come up at the commencement of the Forty-the second Tuesday after that date, some three months after the expiration of the term.

This is a question upon which men learned in the law have differed materially, some holding that under the Constitution of the United States the State is entitled to continuous representation, that though the person may change the office does not, and that any law which by its operation creates a vacancy in the representation is invalid. The discussion in the Bell case shows marked differences of opinion among leading Senators, and while the Senate substantially decided in favor of the right of the governor to appoint in that case there was little unanimity among the majority in the reasoning upon which that conclusion was founded, and the opposition to that conclusion was so able that it has left the question in an exceedingly doubtful state.

was so able that it has left the question in the desired in the state.

The question is one which arises at the end of every term of a Senator from New Hampshire, and it is, it seems to me, due to the Senate and to the State that the question should be definitely determined. The State should not be deprived of representation for three months at the commencement of every term, nor should there be a discussion of the right of the governor to appoint such as was with discussion of the right of the governor to appoint such as was witnessed at the commencement of the present Congress.

Not being a lawyer, trained to give opinions upon doubtful constitutional questions, I do not undertake to discuss the question of the legal construction of the statute, but I do think that I am not asking too much when I urge upon the Senate a definite settlement of the section which severe the secti this question which appears now encompassed with doubts. It is not desirable that the State should be but half represented, nor that desirable that the State should be but half represented, nor that the governor should be called upon to exercise powers which may be denied in order to prevent that non-representation.

Mr. President, the Senate will see at a glance that if anything is to be done with reference to this matter, early action is absolutely necessary. If the bill which has been reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I understand with perfect unanimity, shall pass, it will enable the State of New Hampshire to elect a Senator in Congress, and the question will be settled; but at this late hour, although the bill may pass the Senate, there is, perhaps, some doubt of its passage in the House, unless it be sent there promptly. At any rate, there is no probability of its passage there unless early action is taken here, and I ask the Senate, if they will not consider this bill to-day, to indicate some early day, perhaps to-morrow in the morning hour, when it may be taken up and disposed of.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Let us act now.

Mr. ROLLINS. I have called up the bill, but the Senator from Missouri says he will object to its consideration at the present time. I will inquire whether the Senator from Missouri persists in his objection to the consideration of this bill. It is unanimously reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I believe.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have an order which has been established because more business can be done under that order than in any other way. Now we are at No. 566 in the order of business, and we shall soon reach the case of the Senator from New Hampshire and dispose of it. If there is any danger that it will not be reached I shall with-draw my objection but there is no danger.

soon reach the case of the Senator from New Hampshire and dispose of it. If there is any danger that it will not be reached I shall withdraw my objection, but there is no danger.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from Misssouri can readily see that while there may be no danger of this bill not being reached in the Senate, there is great danger that it may not be reached in the House of Representatives in time to be there considered. That is the difficulty; and I appeal to the Senator from Missouri under the circumstances to withdraw his objection to the bill, and if it is not allowed to be considered to-day, let to-morrow during the morning hour be assigned for it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I should like to appeal to the Senator from Missouri to withdraw his objection to this bill. It is a matter that will not provoke any discussion, I apprehend. It is a matter of peculiar interest to the State of New Hampshire. I hope, therefore, the Senator from Missouri will withdraw his objection and will allow the bill to be considered and acted upon, so that it may go to the House of Representatives and be acted upon there; it will certainly not consume much time.

not consume much time.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will make this statement, that if we do not reach it to-day it can be taken up to-morrow so far as I am concerned. I will make no objection to considering it to-morrow. We shall then have an opportunity of examining the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire. I intend to insist on proceeding with the consideration of cases on the Calendar in their order, in justice to all States and all parties. I do not know that I have any objection to this bill, and I do not know that I shall interpose any further objection after I shall have had an exportantly of reading the remarks made by this bill, and I do not know that I shall interpose any further objection after I shall have had an opportunity of reading the remarks made by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire. We can read them tomorrow morning and then the bill can be called up.

Mr. ROLLINS. With the understanding that the bill shall come up during the morning hour to-morrow, I will let it go for the present. Several SENATORS. Regular order!

Mr. COCKRELL. This bill has been on the Calendar since last May, and there is no very great emergency about it at this moment. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. It is the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under the regular order of the day.

I should have been very glad to have had it called up at an earlier day and passed. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the first bill on the Calendar at the point reached when it was last considered.

CURTIS E. PRICE.

The first bill on the Calendar was announced to be the bill (S. No. 943) to authorize Dr. Curtis E. Price, of the United States Army, to receive the pay allowed by law for discharging the duties of physician to the Hoopa Valley Indian reservation.

Mr. INGALLS. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) The Secretary informs the Chair that there is no report.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill appears to have been reported by my colleague, who is temporarily absent; and I suggest that it be passed over retaining its place on the Calendar until he returns to the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be the order, if there be no objection.

BENJAMIN C. BAMPTON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 542) for the relief of Benjamin C. Bampton; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, in settling the account of Benjamin C. Bampton, passed assistant engineer United States Navy, (retired,) to remove any checkages or suspensions made against him on account of his pay; and that thereafter his pay shall be 50 per cent. only of the sea pay of the grade or rank held by him at the time of retirement; and for the purpose of paying him the amount of the checkages or suspensions so made against him, the sum of $456.58 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in that case? If there is, let

The Committee on Naval Affairs to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 542) for the relief of Benjamin C. Bampton, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

A bill for the relief of Mr. Bampton received the favorable consideration of the House Committee on Naval Affairs at the last session of Congress, and was reported to the House on the last day of the session, but did not receive action by that body on account of the closing hours of the session. "The Secretary of the Navy writes of the case of Engineer Bampton, in a communication dated January 23, 1879, to the sub-committee to whom this bill was referred, as follows, viz:

"His only trouble was his failure to pass for promotion to the grade of chief engineer. As he was not retired for disability incurred in the line of duty, nor from exposure or sickness in the service, he does not come within the class of officers entitled, under section 1589 of the Revised Statutes, to 75 per cent. of their sea pay. But inasmuch as he was allowed 75 per cent, under an authorization of the Secretary of the Navy, and approved of by the accounting officers, and was paid at that rate for several years, it would seem but just to allow him the sum paid under such authority and approval, and not check against him, under any new decision or ruling, the difference between 50 and 75 per cent, as appears to have been done. The only recommendation that I can consistently make in the case is that the accounting officers be authorized to remove any checkages or suspensions against him, and permit him to retain the pay already received; and that he should be entitled to receive 50 per cent. only of his sea pay thereafter.

QUARTERMASTER'S SUPPLIES.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 529) to provide for the care and protection of quartermaster supplies; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It empowers the Secretary of War to select from the enlisted men of the Army who shall have faithfully served therein eight years, five years of which in the grade of non-commissioned officer, as many quartermaster-sergeants as the service may require, not to exceed one for each military post or place of deposit of quartermaster's supplies, whose duty it shall be to receive and preserve the quartermaster's supplies at the posts, under the direction of the proper officers of the Quartermaster's Department, and under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War. The quartermaster-sergeants thus authorized are to be subject to the Rules and Articles of War, and to receive for their services the same pay and allowances as ordnance-sergeants.

being created under this bill of quartermaster-sergeants is not prescribed. It authorizes the appointment of one quartermaster-sergeant at each of the military posts. There may be military posts where there is no occasion for the appointment of a quartermaster-sergeant.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I think the bill covers that point. It only authorizes the appointment of these sergeants where they are required, and it is limited by the number of military posts. The number never can be greater than the number of military posts and quartermaster depots; and the quartermaster depots are very few in number—only at large cities. I am satisfied that this policy will be a most economical one in the saving and proper care of quartermaster stores; and

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator have any objection to limiting for the present the number to not exceed twenty?

Mr. BURNSIDE. I would say "not to exceed forty;" I do not want to put it at a larger number.

Mr. BURNSIDE. We are getting along without them but at great loss to the Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are many posts where there will be no necessity for a quartermaster-sergeant, or an increase of the expense in that way, and twenty will be quite a large number to place in the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I shall make no objection to the amendment.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to give notice that in the early part of next week, probably on Monday, or perhaps I had better say Tuesday, I shall ask the Senate to take up the joint resolution (H. R. No. 116) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriet in a sum of the act entitled. An act making approprations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," on which I propose to submit some remarks. I also understand that one or two other gentlemen wish to submit remarks upon it. I only give the notice.

UNIVERSITY LANDS TO TERRITORIES.

The Senate proceeded to consider the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1327) to grant lands to Dakota, Montana, Arizona, Idaho, and Wyoming for university purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. McDONALD, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. McDonald, Mr. Hill of Colorado, and Mr. Walker as the conferees.

WAR IN SOUTH AMERICA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of State, with the accompanying papers, in relation to the recent effort of the Government of the United States to bring about peace between Chili and Peru and Bolivia; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

LANDS IN SEVERALTY TO INDIANS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1773) to provide for the allotment of lands in sever-alty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protec-tion of the laws of the States and Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, the pending bill needs but little explanation. It confides to the discretion of the President of the United States, whenever a reservation of land upon which Indians are located shall be fit for agricultural purposes in his judgment, with the consent of two-thirds of the males of the tribe twenty-one years old consent or two-thirds of the males of the tribe twenty-one years of and upward, to have it surveyed or resurveyed, as the case may be, and allotted individually to the Indians for whose use it was set apart as a tribe—to the head of a family one-quarter of a section; to each single person of eighteen years of age one-eighth of a section; to each orphan child under eighteen years of age one-eighth of a section; to each other person under eighteen years now living or who may be born prior to the date of the order of the President directing the allottment of land emphased in our recoveration one sixteenth of may be born prior to the date of the order of the Fresident directing the allotment of land embraced in any reservation, one-sixteenth of a section. The excess of land in the reservation above what may be thus allotted to individuals, the bill provides shall be negotiated for by the Secretary of the Interior on such terms and conditions as may be just both to the Indians and to the Government, but that no money shall be paid until the negotiation or agreement shall have been rati-fied by Congress.

The bill further provides that when the Indians have consented and the President has made the order and the lands have been allotted, the laws of descent and distribution and of alienation, where not conflicting with this act, of the States and Territories where the land may be situated, shall govern and control the land and the Indians. The bill provides that the lands shall not be alienated within twenty-

The bill provides that the lands shall not be alrelated within twelly five years from the date of the patent.

These are the principal provisions of the bill. It will be observed that the bill has no force, if it is enacted as a law, until the President of the United States in the exercise of the sound discretion vested in him shall believe it to be for the interest of the Indians that the land shall be divided and allotted to them individually. He must believe that the lands are fit for agricultural purposes, and that the Indians are in such a condition of civilization as to make it right and proper that they should have land in severalty, and that they will be able to live under the laws of the States or Territories where they are

I can see no possible objection to this bill. It is not, if it passes, to I can see no possible objection to this bill. It is not, if it passes, to be executed except in the exercise of the wise discretion of the President of the United States. If, in his judgment, the lands are such as are fit for agricultural and pastoral purposes, and the Indians have advanced to that state of civilization when they may be relied upon to pursue the occupations that will support them; when these things occur, and the Indians consent, then the law is that the land shall be expressed and allotted. surveyed and allotted.

The provisions of the bill are almost identical with those embraced in the bill so much discussed at the last session, and I believe are generally understood by the Senate, a bill that has been in force and executed or is being executed among the Ute Indians now, and as I am told by the Secretary of the Interior, satisfactory to the Indians and to the Government. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] I understood the other evening to say that he had been informed by some of the commissioners that quite a number of the Ute Indians would not have signed the agreement but for assurances that that portion of the nave signed the agreement but for assurances that that portion of the agreement providing for lands in severalty would be abrogated.

Mr. TELLER. I would say that I did so state. I had it from two of the commissioners, my recollection is; one certainly, Mr. Meacham; and I think the report that is to come from the commission will show it to be a fact that the Ute Indians declined to sign that treaty with that clause in. I am told that by not only a member of the commission, but by a number of people connected with the commission. There cannot be any doubt about it, no matter what may be said here or elsewhere. I am prepared to make an issue on that.

Mr. COKE. I have not seen the commissioners, but in reply to what is said by the Senator from Colorado, I send to the desk, and ask the Clerk to read, a letter from the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) The letter will be read.

letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Department of the Interior,
Washington, January 19, 1881.

Deae Sir: In reply to your inquiry whether there has been any understanding or stipulation with the Utes before they signed the agreement made with them in Washington in 1880, that the clause referring to their settlement in severalty should be abandoned or superseded by another arrangement, or in any way modified, and that the Ute commission had reported or were going to report to me to that effect, I beg leave to say that the reports so far received from the Ute commission show that the agreement was signed without any condition or stipulation whatever.

When I saw the Congressional Record this morning and found therein a statement to the contrary, I sought an interview with Mr. Manypenny, the chairman of the Ute commission, to learn whether anything of the kind above mentioned had happened without being reported to me, and he assured me again that, while several Indians expressed dislike of the severalty clause, the agreement was signed, after full explanation and discussion of the subject with the Indians, without any condition or stipulation, and that all rumors to the contrary were unfounded. I have seen, in the mean time, the other members of the commission, who all corroborate the above.

Very respectfully,

C. SCHURZ, Secretary.

C. SCHURZ, Secretary.

Hon. RICHARD COKE,
Chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I asked the Senator the other day to wait until this report came in. I took the occasion last season to go to the Indian agency for the express purpose of making myself familiar with some facts in this case. I went from the agency to Ouray, a distance of twenty-odd miles, in company with Mr. Meacham and the agent. Mr. Meacham in the presence of the agent made the statement that Mr. Meacham in the presence of the agent made the statement that I made to the Senate; and while they said to the Indians that they could not guarantee that this change would be made, yet they would try to have the change made. He said to me that he would recommend that the change be made. I have no idea Mr. Meacham will deny that; it is not possible that he can deny it. It was a matter of public and common rumor in that country that such was the fact, among those who were about the agency and knew about it. And I de not much dealy that when the do not much doubt that when the report comes in it will show what I have stated. If it does not, it will be another instance of the absurdity of making treaties with Indians. But I propose to say something of the bill, and I will not interrupt the Senator from Texas further.

Mr. COKE. I have but little more to say at this time, as I do not wish to anticipate objection to the bill. The bill has the sanction of the Interior Department and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and as far as I am informed—and I believe I am fully informed—of all the officials concerned in the administration of Indian affairs. It is not an experiment. Many years since Indians were allotted lands in severalty, and their progress in the arts of peace and in the processes and methods of taking care of themselves by labor has been so marked and so satisfactory that the process of individualizing them has commended itself to all who are acquainted with them who are in official life now under this administration. It has the assent, I believe unanimously, of the Committee on Indian Affairs—such is my lieve unanimously, of the Committee on Indian Affairs—such is my understanding—and I believe it is such a bill as should be passed.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I move to amend the bill in section 7 by striking out in line 2 the words "Indian Territory," and inserting "reservations of the Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, Choctaws, and Chickasaws in the Indian Territory."

As might be inferred from what I said at the last session on the Indian question, with the leading idea of this bill I am in full accord. I am perfectly convinced, after much reflection upon this great subject, that the way to dispose of the Indian question in this Government is by giving the Indians land in severalty and citizenship of the United States. Whether they are citizens now or not is an open question. The present occupant of the chair, [Mr. Garland,] I believe the gentleman who offered this bill, and other distinguished lawyers are of the opinion that the fourteenth amendment makes all lawyers are of the opinion that the fourteenth amendment makes all Indians citizens of this country. I do not agree with that opinion; but, whether it be one way or the other, until the nomadic element is eliminated from the Indian system in the United States there can be no peace, no safety, and no stability. The idea of a home is the germ of civilization; and until that idea is implanted in the Indians, as in all other recess on this continent there can be no each. as in all other races on this continent, there can be no safety and no stability and no prospect of civilization for them by the Government.

Whatever is done on this question should be by a broad and general system. The difficulty with the Indian policy has been that we have made it up of shreds and patches; one Secretary of the Interior has one policy, another another, until finally the country when the Indian question is mentioned turns away, except a few sentimentalists, in simple disgust. What is done by one Congress is revoked or rescinded by another. If anything is to be done which shall solve the problem, it must be a broad and general systematic work in regard to all the Indians of the United States, excepting in so far as we are to all the Indians of the United States, excepting in so far as we are trammeled by treaties. I concur in that.

It has been charged that I proposed to attack the treaties made with the five civilized tribes in the Indian Territory. I simply content myself with branding that as a willful misrepresentation. Never in any public act of my life have I sought to attack any treaty or the plighted faith of the people of the United States toward any tribe, and whatever I say here to-day must be with the distinct understanding that I propose to observe every treaty both in letter and in spirit ng that I propose to observe every treaty both in letter and in spirit to the last extremity.

But this section 7 of the bill eliminates from its operation all the tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory, comprising an area of 41,098,398 acres of land, including not only the five civilized tribes but the thirty tribes or fragments of tribes that have been put there by the Government of the United States under treaty with those Indians.

Mr. President, I approach this question with a full understanding that a speck of war already rests upon our southwestern horizon, caused by the attempt of persons to enter the Indian Territory and settle upon what are known as "the ceded lands" west of the ninety-seventh meridian of longitude. I know that with the coming spring seventh meridian or longitude. I know that with the coming spring invasion or adventure or whatever it may be termed will be reopened and again undertaken. The Government of the United States must meet it; the Congress of the United States cannot ignore it. Senators here to-day may invoke the plighted faith of the nation; but if by armed force the Territory is invaded, upon them will rest the responsibility of the consequences, whatever they may be. I for one propose that we take up this question now and determine it in some form.

What are the facts in regard to these lands? They should be known what are the facts in regard to these lands? They should be known for public opinion and public information. During the late war between the United States and the Confederate States the five civilized tribes had unfortunately, like the people of the Western States, divided upon the issues involved in that unfortunate strife. Some took the side of the North, and some took the side of the South. The result side of the North, and some took the side of the South. The result was that on the downfall of the confederacy the Indian nations or tribes were by the Government of the United States forced to accept terms prescribed to them in new treaties. The old treaties were treated as abrogated by reason of a majority of the Indian nations having joined the confederacy in that struggle. One condition prescribed by the Government of the United States was that they should cede to the Government at a certain price a certain number of acres of land in what was known as the Indian country, to be used by the United States. in what was known as the Indian country, to be used by the United States for the settlement thereon of friendly Indians and freedmen. That was the language of the treaty. The Secretary of the Interior now holds that this limitation passes with those lands for all time to come; that, although the Indians of the civilized tribes have received the purchase-money for these lands; although they have ceded their title to the United States, yet that the title is a limited one; that it is affected by this condition, and that the lands must go into the hands of all purchasers with the condition that the lands are only to be used for the settlement of friendly Indians and freedmen, whether they come from the Southern States or from the Territory. With that concome from the Southern States or from the Territory. With that construction many distinguished lawyers entirely disagree. I do not propose to discuss to-day whether the Secretary of the Interior is right or wrong. I think there is grave question on that point; but I do say that as to the lands given to the thirty Indian tribes or remnants of tribes that have been put there on lands bought by the Government from the five civilized tribes, there is no question that we can by legislation give them to the Indians in severalty if we see proper to

Why does this committee except from the operation of this bill thirty Indian tribes, almost one-half of the number of tribes now in the United States? Why is it that to-day this question is left open and these thirty tribes or remnants of tribes in the Indian Territory are not put under this system but are left under the old reservation system which has so long obtained? They should have their homes in severalty. If this bill applies to any Indians in the United States, it ought to apply to them. They are there within the shadow of civilization. On the north is the State of Kansas; on the east the five ization. On the north is the state of Kansas; on the east the live civilized tribes are standing monuments to the fact that the Indian can become the equal of his white brother in the arts of peace and civilization. Why should these Indians be left to hold their land in common, to remain nomads, as they have been for generations past?

common, to remain nomads, as they have been for generations past? If we propose to take up and solve this question, let us adopt the system. Let us say that as to these thirty tribes brought there as the Government said in order to profit by the example of the five civilized tribes. They are already more than half civilized. Why is it that after bringing them there we to-day in this bill declare that they shall not have homes, but shall be nomads and wanderers upon the reservation given them by the Government.

I propose to attack no treaties; I propose to cast no shadow upon the plighted faith of the Government. I do interpose the great principle which this bill seeks to establish, and I say as to these thirty Indian tribes brought there by the United States the tenure in severalty should be extended to them to the largest extent. That is why I want the amendment adopted.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not desire to particularly discuss the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, but I want to say a word or two about the general policy of the bill. I do not propose to say very much about it. I know how useless it is to discuss the Indian question in the present condition of the public mind; I know what the impression is all over the country; I know what the public sentiment is; I know that any man who stands in the Senate and proposes to discuss this question in a practical, sensible, business way, having an eye to the interest of the Indian and the white man alike, will be charged, as the Senator from Missouri says he has been charged with an attempt to yielded faith of the Governand proposes to discuss this question in a practical, sensible, business way, having an eye to the interest of the Indian and the white man alike, will be charged, as the Senator from Missouri says he has been charged, with an attempt to violate the plighted faith of the Government; I know there is a sentiment that every man who comes from the extreme West, whether he occupies a seat upon this floor or whether he does not have that fortune, is in favor of despoiling the Indians and appropriating their lands and treating them harshly and unjustly. There is a sentimental feeling which has grown up in the country which if it was allowed to prevail in the legislation here would in a very few years utterly annihilate these so-called wards of the nation. I am willing to admit that very many outrages have been perpetrated on the Indians, and I know that they have been perpetrated by the very friends of the Indians; I know that acts have been passed through this body that were not in the interest of the Indians by those who believed that they were serving the Indians when they voted for the passage of such bills.

Since this bill came before the Senate I find laid upon my table, just brought in, a memorial. It is addressed "to the honorable the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and to the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled;" and it purports to be the memorial of a "committee of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, appointed at its meeting in May last in the city of Madigor, Wigensian, to represent to you their west extrest desires.

in the United States, appointed at its meeting in May last in the city of Madison, Wisconsin, to represent to you their most earnest desires on the questions of Indian rights and Indian civilization." I find that I find that after they have made some suggestions they sum everything up in the following language:

We therefore earnestly press the prayer of our memorial on your attention with the sincere belief that the best way to elevate the Indian is to—First. Give him a home with a perfect title in fee-simple; Second. Protect him by the laws of the land and make him amenable to the same; Third. Give him the advantage of a good education; and Fourth. Grant him full religious liberty.

The men who signed that memorial are undoubtedly acting in perfect good faith, and yet they lay down a rule to be applied to every tribe of Indians and every individual Indian alike. The civilized Indian, the semi-civilized Indian, the savage Indian, and the more than savage Indian are all to be treated alike. What I have complained of since I have been a member of the Senate is that the legislation. An Indian is regarded by the second lation all went in that direction. An Indian is regarded by the people of the country as an Indian, and all Indians are regarded alike. The Indians differ as much one from another as the civilized and enlightened nations of the earth differ from the uncivilized and unenlightened nations of the earth. Legislation that is proper and just for one class of Indians will fail to perform the great object that its friends have, to civilize them, if applied to another.

At the last session of Congress the Senate passed a bill called the Ute bill. I presented my objections to that bill. I came from the ground and I knew whereof I spoke. I spoke in the interest of the white man and in the interest of the Indian, because I have never imbibed the sentiment that has been prevalent in some sections, that there were no good Indians, and that nothing could be done with the Indian. I believe that with proper intelligent effort the Indian might be in time civilized and become an intelligent and valuable citizen. I say I spoke in the interest of the Indians. I spoke here for three days, at different times. I had the committee to contend with; I had the Secretary of the Interior to contend with; I had public sentiment to contend with, upon a subject on which I ought to have been informed. contend with, upon a subject on which I ought to have been informed. If I had had no character when I came to the Senate, I at least ought to have been entitled to be considered a credible witness upon the subject; yet when the vote was polled sixteen Senators only were found voting to sustain my view of the bill. We were told that there was not time to examine it; we were told that there was not time for discussion; we were told that we must make haste; that these people wanted to be settled upon their farms; that they were crying and begging for places upon which they could build permanent abodes and establish themselves in agriculture; they were to commence their spring crops. We passed the bill, and it went over to the House and it was passed there. The commission, with great flourish of trumpets, went to that country; and they have come back, and have not allotted an acre of the land; they are no nearer allotting the land to-day than they were when we were discussing that question in the Senate in April last. Why? They found insurmountable obstacles, and I will venture to say that when their report comes in it will sustain everything that I stated upon this floor as the friend of the Indians. They thing that I stated upon this floor as the friend of the Indians. They found that the place where it was proposed to put the Indians was unsuitable; they found that there was not sufficient land; they found that there was not grass, that there was not feed, and I believe they will unanimously agree (I think so from what I can understand from some members of the commission) that it was a mistake.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will ask him at

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will ask him at what time he expects their report to be made?

Mr. TELLER. I understand that the report will be made to-day. I asked the other day that this bill might be postponed until the report should be made. I made an effort to find whether the report had been made this morning, and I was told that it would be made to-day. Of course I do not know what the report will show; I only know what it has been said in general that the report would show, but I do know that when the commissioners went to the Ute Indians the Indians did inst what I said from my long acquaint acquire with the Indians did just what I said, from my long acquaintance with them, they would do—they declined to sign the treaty, they declined to accept land in severalty, and why? I attempted to explain to the Senate last spring why they would not take land in severalty. It is not worth while for me to go over it again. The Indian's objection to land in severalty is inhomost.

not worth while for me to go over it again. The Indian's objection to land in severalty is inherent.

Since this bill has been called up, a few minutes since, there has been placed on my table a protest signed by seven Indians, representative Indians of the Cherokee, Creek, and Chootaw Indians, protesting against accepting lands in severalty. I find also another protest entitled "A summary of the census of the Cherokee Nation."

Mr. COKE. If the Senator will yield to me a moment, I will state to him that the Indians who protest are excluded expressly from the operation of the bill

operation of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that. I am not speaking of that. I am speaking of the inherent objection in the Indian mind against land in severalty. I say you cannot compel an Indian, though he may be semi-civilized, to take land in severalty; he will not do it until he has become more than semi-civilized. I said when I was until he has become more than semi-civilized. I said when I was discussing this question before that the Indians of New York, with all their advantages of coming in contact with people holding land in severalty, steadily adhered to the old Indian idea that the land in severalty, steadily adhered to the old Indian idea that the land belongs in common; that when one Indian took up his tent and left it another might put his down. I say to-day that you cannot make any Indian on this continent, I do not care where he is, while he remains anything like an Indian in sentiment and feeling, take land in severalty. The bill proposes to do it—when? The redeeming clause, perhaps, is that it is to be done when two-thirds of the Indians say they will take it. We have made treaties with these Indians; they consented to go upon reservations and they did go; and I should like consented to go upon reservations, and they did go; and I should like to know what right you have to say that two-thirds of them shall release the Government from the obligation that it owes to the other third. It ought to be done by the unanimous consent of these Indians, third. It ought to be done by the unanimous consent of these Indians, if they are to take land in severalty at all.

This bill will never be of any practical effect. It will never be carried out. You never will get two-thirds of any of these Indian tribes to take land in this way. I suppose it is a waste of time for me to stand here, because, perhaps, if the bill is passed it will accomplish no great harm; it certainly will not do any good; but the friends of this movement, who have an idea that all that is necessary to be done is to give an Indian a piece of land and settle him down, ought to be convinced of their error. They ought to understand that if they educate the Indians and civilize them they cannot do it in that way and in that way dians and civilize them they cannot do it in that way and in that way alone; they must do something else; they must commence and make some other effort.

I want, so that it may go in the RECORD and be preserved in this debate to be examined hereafter, to have the protest read to which I referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the paper sent up by the Senator from Colorado.

The Secretary read as follows:

PROTEST OF THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

To the Congress of the United States:

As representatives of the leading nations of the Indian Territory we desire to call your attention to several measures pending before you, the purpose of which is to change the condition and compromise the safety of the Indian people. We refer to the bills for sectionizing and allotting in severalty the lands of the Indians. We have understood that such bills were not intended to apply to the Indian Territory, as there is no provision for white settlement in that country, and the treaties define that this allotment in severalty can only be done on the request of the Indian rations.

have understood that such bills were not intended to apply to the Indian Territory, as there is no provision for white settlement in that country, and the treaties define that this allotment in severalty can only be done on the request of the Indian nations.

We therefore appeal to you not to violate your pledges to us in treaties. Doing this for a single tribe in the Indian Territory, as would be the case in passing H. R. No. 6022 for allotting lands of Peorias, Weas, Miamis, Piankeshaws, and Kaskaskias, would lead to local disturbance and produce great mischief.

Our people have not asked for or authorized this, for the reason that they believe it could do no good and would only result in mischief in their present condition. Our own laws regulate a system of land tenure suited to our condition, and much safer than that which is proposed to be established for it.

Improvements can be and frequently are sold, but the land itself is not a chattel. Its occupancy and possession are indispensable to holding it, and its abandonment for two years makes it revert to the public domain. In this way every one of our citizens is sure of a home.

The change to individual title would throw the whole of our domain in a few years into the hands of a few persons. In your treaties with us you have agreed that this shall not be done without our consent; we have not asked for it, and we call on you not to violate your pledges with us.

There are other reasons, involving our prosperity and safety, why the limitations of sectionizing should not be throat over us. A large portion of our country, and at least two-thirds of the Indian Territory, are only suitable for grazing purposes. No man can afford to live by stock raising and herding who is restricted to one hundred and sixty or even three hundred and twenty acres, especially on lands away from water. The herds must be sufficiently large to justify the care of them. The pasture country of the United States is fast being reduced. It is necessary for your prosperity, as well as our

Mr. VEST. As I understand, that is a remonstrance or statement from the representatives of the civilized tribes. I desire to state what I omitted before, and with the permission of the Senator from Colorado I will state now, that I have petitions or statements from the Peorins, the Confederated Miami tribes in that Territory, and other tribes, the names of which I have forgotten, asking for legislation permitting them to hold their lands in severalty. The tribes of which I speak are outside of the five civilized tribes.

Ispeak are outside of the five civilized tribes.

Mr. TELLER. I have not the slightest doubt that I could go out in the Ute Nation and with a little finesse and a few presents get the whole Ute Nation to sign away for a mere bagatelle every acre of land they have got; I could get them to sign a petition to the Senate and to the other body, and to all the officials, asking that this legislation may take place. It is a mere question of a little influence on them. I will guarantee to get any kind of a treaty signed that this Government wants to make, by pursuing just the course that this Government has pursued, and that is to corrupt a few of the men who make the treaties. There are Senators upon this floor who know that so far as a treaty made with Indians expresses the will and the sentiment of the masses of the Indians it is a mere nullity, it amounts to nothing at all. Who supposes that the Ute Indians knew anything about the contents of that treaty when they signed it, except a few of the headmen? As I have said before, I am credibly informed that they objected to that feature in the bill most strenuously.

It was said at the last session, speaking extravagantly, that the they objected to that feature in the bill most strennously.

It was said at the last session, speaking extravagantly, that the Indians were crying for lands in severalty. It was said that there was a delegation here from somewhere, I do not know where, saying that they wanted individual lands; saying that they wanted a patent; asking that we should give them a fee-simple. There is not a wild Indian living who knows what a fee-simple is. There are a good many white men who do not know what it is, and there are certainly very few Indians, civilized or uncivilized, who understand it. I said last spring that it was not the panacea for all the evils that afflict the Indians. I said then that in 1646 such a policy was attempted, and it has been attempted since. When you have once got an Indian to take land in severalty, you have got him; I will admit it. He is a civilized Indian, however, before he takes your land, before he settles himself down. I speak now of the western wandering Indian, and I say before he settles down he is a civilized man.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment with an inquiry?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. 1 should like to ask the Senator if there has not been some experience in this Government upon that subject? In other words, have not lands been divided in severalty, and have not the Indians prospered under that system of land tenure? It seems to me that I have some information of that kind, but not very accurate.

Mr. TELLER. I will state that in the last thirty-six years we have made sixty-odd treaties with Indians, and all of them provided that they might take land in severalty, and in a majority of them that the Indians should take land in severalty, and in a majority or them that the Indians should take lands in severalty. There are now in the United States perhaps three or four places where the Indians to a limited extent have accepted land in severalty and are working their land. There are more instances, a good many more, where they have taken the land in severalty, attempted to live on it, and have subsequently abandoned it, and resumed their nomadic habits. Therefore it cannot be said with any truth that the land-in-severalty system tried for more than two hundred years has been successful, or that tried earnestly and effectually for the last thirty years it has been successful. Why? For the reason that I before stated. It is a part of the Indian's religion not to divide his land. When the Nez Percé Indians were complaining of their treatment at the hands of white men, and when complaining of their treatment at the hands of white men, and when they were justifying their course in commencing a war, said one of the chiefs, "They asked us to divide the land, to divide our mother upon whose bosom we had been born, upon whose lap we had been reared." To that Indian it was a crime equal to the homicide of his own mother. Do you suppose when the Indians have those religious ideas that you can violate their moral sentiments and compel them to live on land and own it in severalty? You may put them upon the land, you may set them down there, and they will hold it and occupy it perhaps for years, and it may be forever, but they will occupy it without the knowledge that it belongs to them, and the segregation of it and putting the title in them is, according to their religious ideas, a violation of the moral law.

Mr. BUTLER. According to the report of the Secretary of the In-

Mr. BUTLER. According to the report of the Secretary of the Interior quite a number of these Indians are producing corn, wheat, and cattle.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.
Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Senator how they produce cereals unless they have some idea of a title to land? It seems to me that if they have made so much progress as to produce the quantity of corn and wheat and oats and cattle that they are reported to of corn and wheat and cats and cattle that they are reported to have produced, they certainly have reached a point where they can appreciate land in severalty. It strikes me so.

Mr. TELLER. I will answer the Senator, for it is a subject that I have examined. I do not profess to any greater knowledge than other Senators except upon a subject to which my attention has been specially called and that I have studied more than they. When John Smith landed not very many miles from this Capitol with his English colony, he found the Indians raising corn and tobacco. He did not find any such idea as that one Indian owned the land any more than another. They upliyed at their fields in common, this year they took another. They cultivated their fields in common; this year they took one piece of ground, the next year they took another. When the first white settlers went into Georgia they found large cultivated fields of corn and tobacco. When we sent an expedition through there about the time of the Revolutionary War, our troops took thousands of bushels of Indian corn. The first English settlers all over this coun-try, especially in the southern regions of the United States, depended largely upon the corn raised by the Indians, and yet there was no such hargely upon the corn raised by the Indians, and yet there was no such thing then known among the Indians as land in severalty; and so it has been ever since. I will answer the Senator more fully now by calling his attention to the document submitted by Mr. Bushyhead, Mr. Blackstone, and Mr. Sanders, of the Cherokee delegation. See what they say:

Our cattle, as you will see, number 67,400; hogs, 108,552, and horses, 13,643. During the war our great herds of cattle were stolen or destroyed, and we are but recovering from the effects of it. In a very few years our live stock will be fully up to the grazing capacity of those portions of our reserved lands not in cultivation. The occupations of all our people are given, and it will be seen that only sixteen are hunters and five fishermen, the farmers being 3,543 in a population of 5,169 males over eighteen. This year a single district (Ganadian) exported twelve hundred bales of cotton, the cotton crop having only been introduced the past few years.

These very men say they hold their land in common and not in These very men say they hold their land in common and not in severalty, and they close their petition with a prayer that we shall not compel them to hold their lands in severalty. The committee introduce a bill to divide up the lands of all the tribes except the civilized tribes. Why do they not propose to divide up their lands? They are powerful tribes; they have treaties, and they would make themselves heard. They have friends to come here and protest against it. But when they come to the weak and the wild tribes who have not anybody to represent them, they propose to divide up their lands, whether they will or not, and then they say that those who are opposed to doing so are in favor of a violation of the plighted faith of the Government.

Mr. COKE. The Senator asks why the committee did not include the civilized tribes were known to the committee not to desire it, and the bill provides for only those Indians who desire to hold their lands in severalty. Besides, the civilized tribes are protected by specific treaties against any interference in any manner, shape, or form with their territory, which treaties, the committee think, ought to be respected.

Mr. TELLER. Does it not stand to reason that if these semi-civilized tribes and civilized tribes have not yet overcome the Indian repugnance to holding land in severalty, so as to be willing to have their lands divided, there will be some little difficulty in dividing up the land of other Indians? The Indians may be cultivators of the soil just as well and have the land in common; they have always been so. To-day there are no successful farmers among the Indians who amount to anything who do not so own their land. That is a fact which cannot be denied. I will say why I think they did not do it. Because they surrendered their convictions to the Secretary of the Interior, and he surrendered his, probaby, to a sentiment that had gone out that this was the great panacea for all the ills that afflict the Indians; just give them lands in severalty and the thing is done. The same that this was the great panacea for all the ills that afflict the Indians; just give them lands in severalty and the thing is done. The same way at the last session the committee—speaking with all respect of the committee—surrendered their judgment to the Secretary of the Interior upon the Ute question. They would listen to nothing, they would hear nothing; they outraged the Indians by the act when they supposed they were doing them a favor. They provided that the Indians should go to the La Plata River. I said in my place in the Senate, standing where I do now, that, to my almost certain knowledge, not having been there, but from evidence that to me was entirely satisfactory, it was no place to put them. I recollect I said that white men of the most energetic character would find it difficult to make a living upon that soil. During the last season I made a trip to that region. I did not propose that anybody should inquire whether I spoke from personal knowledge or hearsay on the question, and I went there with witnesses. They proposed to put a thousand Indians upon the La Plata River, at an elevation of more than eight thousand feet above the sea, more than two thousand feet higher than thousand feet above the sea, more than two thousand feet higher than thousand feet above the sea, more than two thousand feet higher than Mount Washington, and expected them to become cultivators of the soil, and to allot to them this arid and worthless land. Said one of the witnesses who went with me, "Every month of the year there is a frost." When we went over the place provided for a thousand Indians, we found about five hundred acres of land that might, by active, energetic European or American citizens, be made a home, possibly, and there were five hundred inches of water in the stream. Five hundred inches would not irrigate the five hundred acres, and, said the people who live in the neighborhood, "Every year or two the whole creek goes dry." the whole creek goes dry."

I know that not a single member of the commission who went out there will advise the putting of the Indians upon that ground, and yet, when I protested against it last year, it was said that I protested in the interest of white men and not in the interest of Indians. The committee ignored me, and the Senate, as they always do, or at least in a majority of cases, surrendered to the committee to an extent that I think has rendered legislation in this country in many cases a simple farce. I think when the public complain that legislation is given to committees to the extent that I have is no fair legislation, they have farce. I think when the public complain that legislation is given to committees to the extent that there is no fair legislation, they have a reasonable cause of complaint. I say, thus surrendering, the Senate following the lead of the committee, the committee following the lead of the Secretary of the Interior, we were preparing to outrage beyond all reason these wild men of the forest. It will not be done. Why? Because when the commissioners stood upon the arid and dry ground upon which the frost every month fell, and over which there could be water spread only semi-occasionally, they said, "This will not do; we must go back, and we must recommend the purchase of land in New Mexico," and that is what the report, I venture to say, will recommend when it comes to the Senate.

I do not feel very much interested in this bill. That is to say, if it will recommend when it comes to the Senate.

I do not feel very much interested in this bill. That is to say, if it passes, if we have a President who has as much ability as certainly the President always will have, no matter of what political faith he may be, he will hardly allot this land to the Indians; but I wanted to say to the Senate, and through the Senate to the country, that the sentimentalists who suppose that they are solving the great problem of the civilization of the Indians are reckoning without their host when they think that a bill of this character will do it. I do not propose to find time on this floor to say what I think ought to be the course of the Government of the United States with these Indians. I said my say on that question once, and when some bill of sufficient character comes here I may say it again. I think the bill is simply nonsensical in character, accomplishing nothing, and that it may possibly be the means of doing much harm. I do not propose myself to vote for the bill; for if it passes it can do no good, and it may possibly do some harm.

vote for the bill; for if it passes it can do no good, and it may possibly do some harm.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] will be voted down. The bill as presented by the committee excludes the Indian Territory from its operations. One reason among others for this exclusion is, the bill provides that after the amount of land is allotted to the individual Indian, the Sections of the Interior shall contract for the reminded for the Committee of the Interior shall contract for the reminded for the Committee of the Interior shall contract for the reminded for the Committee of the Interior shall contract for the reminded for the Committee of the Interior shall contract for the reminded for the Committee of the Interior shall contract for the reminded for the Committee of the Interior shall contract for the reminded for the Committee of the Interior shall contract for the reminded for the Interior shall be contract for the Interior shall be contract for the Interior shall be contracted for the Interior shall be contacted for the Interior shall be contracted retary of the Interior shall contract for the remainder for the Government, and invest the purchase-money for the Indians. If the United States Government acquires in the Indian Territory any more land it will be another bone of contention in that Territory in addition to that which the honorable Senator from Missouri says is about producing a war there, because the white men are claiming the right to go upon it and occupy it as public land. Not desiring to complicate the Indian Territory any further than it is already complicated, we therefore excluded it entirely from the operation of the bill. Whatever remedy the Indians of the Indian Territory may desire on this subject can be given them by a separate bill. This is a general bill, applicable to all Indians except those in the Indian Territory. As I remarked to the Senator from Missouri this morning, when he told me of this amendment, if it were presented in a separate bill I would give it a consideration that I cannot give it when offered as an amendment to this measure. I could perhaps propose an amendan amendment to this measure. I could, perhaps, propose an amendment to it that would make it acceptable to me if offered as a separate bill, but I cannot consent, if I can avoid it, that it shall be engrafted upon this bill.

With reference to the remarks of the honorable Senator from Col-With reference to the remarks of the honorable Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Teller,] he seems to complain that in his ideas of Indian policy he is at war with the President, he is at war with the Secretary of the Interior, he is at war with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, he is at war with the peace commissioners, he is at war with the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, and although he did not say it, I will say that he is at war with his own colleague, the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Hill,] upon the same questions. He says that he has been thwarted by all these personal and official agencies in the enforcement of his views upon the Indian question. He is like the juror who was thwarted by eleven contumacious jurors. That I regret. I would like for the honorable Senator from Colorado to agree with the Committee on Indian Affairs and with other gento agree with the Committee on Indian Affairs and with other gentlemen who are specially charged with the administration of Indian affairs. As he unfortunately does not agree with us, all that we have left to us is to do the best we can in the absence of the Senator from concurrence in our counsels.

With reference to this bill, it confides a sound discretion in the President of the United States to order a survey of Indian reservations and an allotment of lands to individual Indians whenever the President believes that the lands are such that the Indians can make a living believes that the lands are such that the Indians can make a living upon them and the Indians desire to make the effort and to take the land in severalty. When these conditions concur, when the Indians desire the lands allotted and desire to work for their living on land of their own, and the lands are capable of yielding them a support, the President is authorized to have the land surveyed and allotted to them in severalty. That is all there is in the bill. The rest is simply an arrangement of detail, providing how much shall be given to each head of a family and how much shall be given to others not heads of families, providing for the issuance of patents, providing for surveys of the land, all, however, depending upon the two great precedent conditions, that the Indians are willing and that the President believes in his discretion that they ought to be given these lands in severalty and allowed to work for their own living. That is all there is of it.

The bill is asked for by the Secretary of the Interior, it is asked for by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, it is asked for by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, it is asked for by the peace commissioners, and it is asked for by the public sentiment of the country which understands the Indian question.

There was a memorial laid upon my table this morning from a number of gentlemen of great intelligence, who visited the committee in person to urge the passage of this bill, representative men of one of the leading Christian denominations. They urge, as the honorable Senator from Missouri has so eloquently done on more occasions than to-day, that these Indians be given homes; that they be placed upon their own resources; that the benefits of education be granted them, and that an honest effort he made to place their feet in the path that and that an honest effort be made to place their feet in the path that leads to American citizenship. This bill is a commencement in that direction.

As I remarked a few minutes ago, this bill is not an experiment. Allotments have been successfully made before. As a result of the experience of the Indian Department, it is urging a general law under which, as fast as it may be done, it can put all the Indians in the country on the same road to civilization and prosperity that is now enjoyed by some of the Indians who have received allotments in sevenjoyed by some of the Indians who have received anotherits in severalty heretofore.

While I am up, I will take occasion to say that, although I have differed with the Secretary of the Interior in his administration of the Indian Department in some respects, in my judgment that official has produced a most beneficent change in the affairs and in the condition of the Indians. A great change, and a beneficent one, has been made—a change the extent of which is developing daily; and if a liberal policy is pursued, such as may be pursued under the pending bill, will show in the future much greater benefits than have already occurred.

I hope, Mr. President, that the bill will pass. I hope that the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Missouri will not be adopted, because it will complicate the bill; it will introduce questions into this discussion which I for one do not wish to discuss in the consideration of this measure.

Mr. TELLER. It is true, sir, that upon this legislation I have not agreed perhaps with the President. I do not know whether I have agreed with him or not. I have not agreed with the committee, or at least I did not last spring; I have not agreed with the Secretary of the Interior; and I did not agree with my colleague also. I found after that disagreement I was very much in the condition that old Stephenson, of England, the great railway engineer, said the cow would be when it met the train. When he was first putting out the project of an engine for a railroad some one said, "Suppose a cow should get on the track and meet the train." He said it would be should get on the track and meet the train." He said it would be disastrous to the cow. It was disastrous to me, I admit, that I did not agree with them; that is, I lost the amendments that I offered here; but that does not discourage me very much. I do not govern myself upon questions of this kind by my success or want of success. I said that that was no fit place to put the Indians. The Secretary said it was a desirable place, the committee said it was desirable, my colleague said it was desirable; and yet I find upon the files of the Senate a bill introduced by my colleague to send these Indians to the Uintah reservation. If I disagreed with my colleague then, I am agreeing with him now and he is agreeing with me. He has got around to my position, and I have no doubt in due time the committee will get to my position and the Secretary will get to my position. All they need to do is to find out the facts, because I admit that they are trying to do what is right. I am not complaining that the commissioners or the Secretary or anybody else is trying to do an improper thing, but I say they are proceeding without a knowledge of the facts.

while I am up I want to say another thing about this bill. You propose to divide all this land and to give each Indian his quarter-section, or whatever he may have, and for twenty-five years he is not to sell it, mortgage it, or dispose of it in any shape, and at the end of that time he may sell it. It is safe to predict that when that shall have been done, in thirty years thereafter there will not be an Indian on the continent, or there will be very few at least, that will have any land. That has been the experience wherever we have given land to Indians and guarded it as well as we might and as well as we could; they have eventually got rid of the land and the land has been of no particular benefit to them. I know it will be said, "Why, in twenty-five years they will be allcivilized; these people will be churchgoing farmers, having schools and all the appliances of civilized life in twenty-five years." Mr. President, the other day I went into the Library and I took up the report of old Jedediah Morse, made in 1818 or 1822—I do not remember which—on Indian affairs when Indian affairs were under the control of the War Department. No man can read that report and not come to the conclusion that ten or fifteen read that report and not come to the conclusion that ten or fifteen years at the furthest would see a solution of all these difficulties, years at the furthest would see a solution of all these difficulties, because in that length of time the Indians were to be civilized. Mr. Morse told what progress they were making; he told about the prayer-meetings that the female Indians were holding, and he told about the religious zeal among the Indians all over the country and what strides they were making in civilization. That has been the cry every year since. You may go back fifteen years ago—and I have done it and examined them—and take the reports of the agents for these very Ute Indians, and you would suppose each year that the next year there would be very little use of an agent and the year after none at all. Every agent who goes out, who is sent out, is desirous of making good reports. He goes to the Indians, and he probably does his best, at least many of the agents do, to civilize them, and if he is a man who does not he is more sure to report to his superior, the Commissioner, that his Indians are making great progress and that in a little while they will all be civilized and enlightened Indians.

Now, divide up this land and you will in a few years deprive the Indians of a resting-place on the face of this continent; and no man who has studied this question intelligently, and who has the Indian interest at heart, can talk about dividing this land and giving them tracts in severalty till they shall have made such progress in civilization that they know the benefits and the advantages of land in severalty, and of a fee-simple absolute title; and the whole Presbyterian Church and all other churches all over this country cannot convince me, with an observation of twenty years, and, I believe, a heart that beats as warmly for the Indians as that of any other man living, that that is in the interest of the Indians. It is in the interest of speculators; it is in the interest of the Indians at all: and there is because in that length of time the Indians were to be civilized. Mr.

speculators; it is in the interest of the men who are clutching up this land, but not in the interest of the Indians at all; and there is the baneful feature of it that when you have allotted the Indians land on which they cannot make a living the Secretary of the Interior may then proceed to purchase their land, and Congress will, as a matter of course, ratify the purchase, and the Indians will become the owners in a few years in fee, and away goes their title, and, as I said before, they are wanderers over the face of this continent, withsaid before, they are wanderers over the face of this continent, without a place whereon to lay their heads. And yet every man who raises his voice against a bill of this kind is charged with not looking to the interest of the Indians, and I am met by the astonishing argument that because the Secretary of the Interior, and because the Committee on Indian Affairs, (for whose opinion I have due and proper respect,) and because public sentiment say that they should have land in severalty, I am running a muck against all the intelligence and all the virtue of the country, and therefore I must be

Mr. President, what I complain of in connection with this Indian business is that practical common sense is not applied to it. Sentiment does not do the Indians any good. It does not educate them and feed them for us to pass high-sounding resolutions and to put upon the statute-book enactments that declare they shall be protected in

Furthermore, it does not accomplish the great purposes of civilization to send a few wild Indians down to Hampton and a few up to Carlisle. The Indians cannot be educated by such methods. We must put the schools in the Indian community; we must bring the influences where a whole Indian tribe or a whole band will be affected and influences where a whole Indian tribe or a whole band will be affected and ences where a whole Indian tribe or a whole band will be affected and influenced by them. It is folly to suppose that this will civilize them. If I stand alone in the Senate, I want to put upon the record my prophecy in this matter, that when thirty or forty years shall have passed and these Indians shall have parted with their title, they will curse the hand that was raised professedly in their defense to secure this kind of legislation, and if the people who are clamoring for it understood Indian character, and Indian laws, and Indian morals, and Indian religion, they would not be here clamoring for this at all.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. President, I think that I can agree in part with the Senator from Colorado; that is, I believe that educating a few Indians, and sending them out of their country to receive an education, will probably not amount to a great deal in the way of educating the Indians; but if I understand the principle of this bill, it will change the order of things and give an opportunity to have schools change the order of things and give an opportunity to have schools where they are not at present, and this is one of the considerations that have moved me to favor a bill of this kind.

that have moved me to favor a bill of this kind.

A little over two years ago a joint commission was appointed on the part of the Senate and the House to visit the tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory and other places, with a view to ascertaining whether it would not be proper to change the management of affairs, and turn the control of the Indians over to the War Department instead of the Interior or civil Department. After spending some time and visiting some thirty different tribes—visiting the Indian Territory, and visiting the Indians in Kansas, and the Indians in Nebraska, in Wyoming, and in California—the commission could not fully agree on a report, and therefore two reports were allowed to be made. The one to which I attached my name, and which met with my favor, took the position that the Indian business should not be turned over to the War Department, but that some course should be pursued that to the War Department, but that some course should be pursued that would look to making them citizens of the United States, to giving them proper rights, and requiring of them all that is required of the white people; in other words, to extend the laws over them, to punish them the same as white people are punished, and to protect them the same as white people are protected.

In the report made by me as a member of that commission, after going on and giving a general history of all that we had seen and heard, and of what we had learned after examining in committee some fifty-eight Army officers, I think, as well as a large number of civilians, and talking with the chiefs and head men of the Indian tribes that were visited, this conclusion was reached:

The Indian should have his land-

That is the land on which he was living on the reservations-

The Indian should have his land allotted and the permanent title thereto given, with the precaution provided that he is not despoiled of his rights; and in addition to this, a law should be enacted which will virtually prevent the Indians from selling or disposing of their lands and houses to sharp and designing persons for not less than twenty-five years.

The very same principle laid down in that report is embodied in this bill, and as a matter of course having been a party to that report, I am favorable to a bill of this kind. I look upon it as being the first step in the direction of making citizens of the Indians, and requiring of them all that we require of other people, and granting no more to them than we do to others under similar circumstances.

I do not know exactly what the amendment is that has been offered, and I am speaking now more generally to the bill. I should like to have the pending amendment read, if the Chair pleases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. Vest.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That amendment, if I understand it, means nothing more nor less than this: it protects the rights of the original Indians who settled in the Indian Territory, but those who have been sent there since will not come under that exception. If that should be the fact, I do not see that it ought to be adopted, because whatever is granted to one should be granted to the others, for the others have gone there under treaty stipulations and have settled upon lands that they call their own just as much as the original inhabitants there, the Creeks, Seminoles, and others.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator a question, whether the Indians not included in the tribes named by the Senator from Missouri have any treaty stipulation that they shall not take land in

Mr. SAUNDERS. No, I think not. I do not think there is anything of the kind, because this dividing out the lands in severalty is a new subject, or rather a new feature of the subject of Indian affairs. Heretofore we have recognized the tribal relation. In all our treaties, I believe up to 1871, when the law was changed in relation to the making of treaties with Indians, they were recognized as tribes, and we treated with their headmen, their chiefs, and others that might be named on the part of the Indians to treat with the Government. At that time we did not look to what we are now doing. We ment. At that time we did not look to what we are now doing. We did not look forward to giving them lands and having them hold them in severalty as we hold them. We expected at that time that they would be held by them in common because that was their way of doing business, and we recognized that way because we treated with them as tribes. But now a new order of things is about to be established, as I understand. The people of this country are in favor largely, in my opinion, of giving the Indians the rights of citizenship, of making them citizens, and requiring of them all that is required of others. This bill is short, but it is comprehensive, because it introduces the subject in a direct form; and if this bill passes others will be passed probably that will finally settle this whole question.

I have happened to live the most of my life on the border, as we term it, and have been more or less acquainted with Indians. I know that they themselves have changed their minds on this subject.

that they themselves have changed their minds on this subject. When we visited Indians in my own State two years ago last fall, and when we put the question to them as to whether they thought it would be better to have the management of affairs turned over to the War Department, I was answered by one of the chiefs of the Winnebagoes, "No, sir; we do not want to have our affairs turned over to the War Department nor to any other Department; if we can get bages, "No, sir; we do not want to have our affairs turned over to the War Department nor to any other Department; if we can get our money that the Government owes us we will take care of ourselves." That was the substance of what he said and almost the exact language, "we will take care of ourselves." That tribe of Indians less than twenty years ago were at war with our country, and now they are cultivating the soil. They are selling wheat and corn and pork and cattle the same as the people around them. All they need really to-day is to give them their money, and I believe they would take care of themselves just as well as the same number of persons that surround them probably would. But if we do not give them the land in severalty they feel that there is something wrong on our part. They are a very jealous people, they are a very suspicious people to say the least, and they are suspicious that we do not mean to deal fairly by them, and why? As one of the Omahas in the same neighborhood said: "My neighbor, the white man, gets a deed to his property and we learn that nobody can take that from him; but when you give us paper you do not give us a deed, you give us a little paper saying that we have a right to stay here, but we have got no right but what can be taken from us by law; we ask of you that you give us the same title to our property that you give to the white man." Why not do it? We may say what we will about the Indians not being laborers, about their not being valuable citizens, about their being savage in their nature; but until we give them a trial, until we come forward and do our part and give them land and require of them than we are getting at this time.

I did not rise to make any lengthy remarks on this bill. I only them the same as we require of others, we ought not to expect more of them than we are getting at this time.

I did not rise to make any lengthy remarks on this bill. I only wanted to say that I favor the principle of the bill, that I wish it to be known that I am in favor of dividing the lands up into severalty to these people, and in favor of the earliest possible breaking up of the tribal relation and making them citizens in every sense of the the tribal relation and making them citizens in every sense of the word. This bill, as I believe, contains principles that will lead to that. If it does not contain all that it ought to, as far as it goes it is in that direction, and therefore I am in favor of the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I think, Mr. President, that this bill ought not to be urged by the committee until the report referred to by the Senator from Colorado has come before the Senate. Last session, in very great haste, under a supposed exigency, we resorted to a policy which has been experimented upon from that time to this, and we are informed by the Senator from Colorado that that experiment has been a dead by the Senator from Colorado that that experiment has been a dead failure. That bill contained the principles of this bill in many particulars. It contained the broad principle which is asserted in this bill of the right of the Government of the United States to locate bill of the right of the Government of the United States to locate the Indians in severalty on lands to which they may be removed. There were various provisions in that bill of a very important and very interesting nature. It was stated at that time that that bill onght to pass, because war was imminent with the Utes; that if we did not pass the bill at the last session of Congress we should certainly be involved in a bloody war with the Utes, having just escaped from very severe encounters with them. It was stated also, as the Senator from Colorado has said, that it was necessary to remove the Utes speedily in order that they might have the benefit of swift operations during the present year in planting their groups on such operations during the present year in planting their crops on such locations as should be found for them in countries to which they had been assigned. That law was passed upon the further idea that the consent of the Indian was necessary to the legislation of Congress on

A protest of a very earnest nature was made against the principles involved in that bill at the time and against the policy of undertak-ing to deal with the majority of an Indian tribe for the purpose of the disposal of the rights of property secured under treaties to the entire tribe. The Senator from Colorado informs us, and that is all the information I have on the subject, that this enactment of ours has really gone by the board in virtue of the fact that the Ute Indians have not agreed to it according to the terms of the stipulations of that particular act.

Mr. COKE. The Secretary of the Interior informs us that the agreement has been executed.

Mr. MORGAN. Then there is an issue of fact between the Secretary of the Interior and the Senator from Colorado on that question, a broad and distinct issue, as I understand; and I should like very much to know which is correct before we further venture upon the adoption of such an act, or anything like it, in regard to the whole Indian tribes of the United States. What we have done or what we have failed to accomplish in our efforts to legislate for the Ute Indians and to negotiate with them in reference to the effectual carrying out of our legislation at the last session of Congress, ought to be considered as a safe precedent for our guide on this occasion; and I insist that the committee ought to give to the Senate the indulgence of hearing that report and knowing how far the Government has been able to effectuate an agreement with the Ute Indians before we are led to the adoption, as a universal matter, of the principles on which that bill was based.

We have been, since the foundation of this Government, yes, and before that time, during our colonial existence, engaged in an earnest, and I hope an honest and a patriotic effort for the purpose of devising some system by which we could bring the Indians within the reach of civilization. As the Senator from Colorado observed, we have entered into a great many treaties with Indians, in almost all of which we have given to them the option of taking lands in severalty; and yet, either because of the antagonism of that principle to a traditional policy of the Indian tribes, or because of the want of some activity or good faith on the part of our Government in carrying them into effect, we find that the question is to-day as fresh and as debatable as it ever was. We can scarcely point in all the history of this country to a single precedent where the policy which has so long obtained has had a satisfactory exposition in good and beneficial results to the Indians or to the people of the United States.

So, then, I am not very much wedded to the idea that even this committee, who I know have devoted great attention to this subject, have discovered a universal solvent for all Indian difficulties. On We have been, since the foundation of this Government, yes, and have discovered a universal solvent for all Indian difficulties. On the contrary, I am profoundly impressed by the history of the past with reference to the Indian tribes, with the fact that whatever boast may be made of the success of our policy it has been mainly a dead failure with reference to our Indian affairs. I do not profess to be able to account for the reason of this failure, nor do I profess to be able to lay down a line or rule of policy applicable alike to all Indian tribes which would lead the Government of the United States Indian tribes which would lead the Government of the United States out of the difficulties which have been so embarrassing for so many years. It is enough for me to know that that which has been so long experimented upon and which has yielded so little of good fruit is not to be regarded now as a precedent perfectly well established upon which we can base action in the Senate reaching to every Indian tribe in the United States.

Let us look at the comprehensive nature of this bill. With the exception of the Indian tribes within what is called the Indian Territory this bill includes every Indian in the domain of the United exception of the Indian tribes within what is called the Indian Perritory this bill includes every Indian in the domain of the United States. It reaches to the Indians in Alaska and the Indians in all the organized Territories and in all the States. It reaches to the Indians in New York and in North Carolina and in Arkansas, and where dians in New York and in North Carolina and in Arkansas, and wherever else they may be found upon their little reservations, some of which have been reserved to them more than a century. It is universal in its sweep, and by reason of its universality it is bound to work mischief or else it is bound to result in a dead failure.

The Government of the United States includes people who speak five hundred different languages. The statement is not inaccurately or thoughtlessly made. Five hundred different dialects are spoken to-day by the people who occupy the United States. We have more than one hundred and fifty known and organized governments in the United States, each one of which deals with life, liberty, and property, for the judgment of an Indian tribe in reference to the life, liberty, or property of a member of that tribe is as effectual as the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States in the disposal of my rights of life, liberty, or property. By the recognition of the ment of the Supreme Court of the United States in the disposal of my rights of life, liberty, or property. By the recognition of the Government of the United States we are, therefore, conducting government over more than fifty millions of people and under more than one hundred and fifty different systems of government, each one in itself effectual for the purpose of disposing of the rights which belong to individual men. Whoever shall rise in this country and succeed in applying one common principle and one universal rule of action to all this vast aggregation of governments, a principle which shall operate justly and beneficially with reference to them and their institutions, will be a greater man than even the greatest who have lived in this country during all the existence of this Government. The truth is that we shall not find any such universal solvent for the difficulties of government in this country; we shall not find ourselves in the next half or perhaps the next entire century able to administer justice and equity according to law, in the midst of all these various and numerous tribes, clans, and governments of people. We had better take this subject and come to it; ernments of all these various and numerous tribes, clans, and governments of people. We had better take this subject and come to it we had better meet the difficulties as they arise; we had better take up the condition of this Indian tribe, that Indian tribe, and the other Indian tribe where difficulties are being suggested and regulate our legislation in accordance with what we now recognize to be their rights—the right of government according to their own institutions and their own traditions. I would not to-day pass a law for the purpose of repealing every statute that was enacted by an Indian tribe of the United States, and undertake to put the laws of the United States in uniform operation in lieu of those statutes over the Indian states in uniform operation in field of those statutes over the finant tribes of this country. I do not know how government could be employed to do a more mischievous thing than to undertake to substitute in place of the traditional and simple and ancient form of government obtaining among these various tribes the proud and magnificent system which has been built up to accommodate itself to the most enterprising and enlightened nation of the world. This bill makes too broad a sweep; it encompasses too much, in its effort to lay down to these people one universal law, which will be found in its operation to be a law of destruction instead of a law of benefaction.

There are some of the tribes in the United States located on agri-There are some of the tribes in the United States located on agricultural lands, strictly so called; others of them are located upon lands abounding in mineral wealth; others of them are located upon arid deserts, where they congregate in villages, in pueblos, and where they graze their flocks and their herds out upon the mesus and the other places productive of grain, and where, by means of this, they have sustained themselves and never asked the Government of the United States for one shilling. There are others upon the plains that have the opportunity of grazing large herds of cattle, and yet the water is so scarce there that the place is almost unfit for agricultural nurroses.

purposes. Now we undertake to run lines of survey under a system belonging alone to a strictly agricultural people, the people living east of the Mississippi River and upon the great plains that border on the west of that stream, lines of survey that belong to a strictly agricultural and highly civilized people. We undertake to run surveys by this system through the domain occupied by the Indians in reservations under treaties, and to say to them that they shall occupy according to the selections they make, or, if they do not make selections, according as the President may compel them to accept, square bodies of land from a forty-acre tract up to a quarter-section, and upon these square bodies of land, without reference to irrigation, without reference to mineral wealth or anything of the kind, they shall undertake to make a living hereafter.

without reference to mineral wealth or anything of the kind, they shall undertake to make a living hereafter.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator allow me a word there?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. COKE. The President must be satisfied that the lands are fit for agricultural purposes before he orders them to be surveyed.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not speaking about the question whether the President is satisfied that the lands are fit for agricultural purposes; but I am speaking about the character of the survey. The Spaniards, who were the first to occupy the great plain to the southwest of us, understood this question from experience, and they acted like sensible but I am speaking about the character of the survey. The Spaniards, who were the first to occupy the great plain to the southwest of us, understood this question from experience, and they acted like sensible men. When they came to lay off the land in that country, they laid it off into leagues and labores. The labore is agricultural land, and the league, the larger body, attached to these labores for the purposes of grazing. They understood that people, they knew what was necessary in order to enable a stock-grower to live and support his family on the productions of the earth while he enriched himself in grazing his herds on the plains. They never thought about laying off land in quarter-sections and-forty acre tracts without reference to their being upon streams or away from streams. They resorted to a system which was adapted to the country and which in that community among those people produced good results. We propose here to apply our land-survey system to all the Indian tribes within the United States without reference to where they are located. A boy can get forty acres of land if under eighteen years of age; a little more if he is older; a man a little more if he is the head of a family—a quarter-section, I believe, is all he can get. Well, Mr. President, we might take these Indians and scatter them along the banks of the streams in that country and let them occupy the lands, and they would occupy nearly the whole of them. If they took up simply the arable lands, they would occupy nearly the whole of them, and you would have the most effectual bar to civilization that was ever erected in this country. The Indians would have nothing to do but to settle down on the land and prevent the white man who was an agriculturist from going there, and they would hold the grazing plains besides.

The system will not work, Mr. President. The committee are undertaking too much. They are undertaking to apply a general and universal rule where they ought to march very slowly and take up tribe after tribe, section after with reference to that.

Mr. BUTLER. Will my friend permit me to make a remark?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask him if under this bill the President has not discretion to do exactly what he proposes, to proceed carefully and cautiously in the allotment of this land? It seems to me there is discretion left with the President to do that, and this law will not be put into operation at once by one sweeping motion of the

Mr. MORGAN. My difficulty is not as to the time when it shall go into operation, or as to the fact that the President is vested with disinto operation, or as to the fact that the President is vested with discretion; but my difficulty is that you apply a system of surveys which is totally inapplicable to that country. That subject has not been considered, and it is a subject of immense importance as connected with the disposal of the land. Whoever undertakes to apply your present system of surveys to those broad plains in the West and undertakes to plant a colony of Indians there with the expectation that under that system of surveys and with lands allotted under that system they can cultivate enough to support themselves, will sadly fail in his effort. The Indians understand this thing better than we do, wise as we suppose ourselves to be. Those Indians who occupy the western plains have always lived in common. They are like the people of the interior of Russia, living upon the great steppes, where there is some agricultural land and a great deal of grazing land. The communal institution there, as it is in all analogous regions, is almost communal institution there, as it is in all analogous regions, is almost indistinguishable from the system of the Indians. These people understand from experience what is better for them than we understand with all our knowledge. We know what is better for ourselves. I would take the Indian's experience in reference to the support of his family out of the land or by herd grazing or by hunting before I would take the experience of any white man who does not understand the sphiest.

It will be found that when you come to execute this law you will violate the settled policy of this country, and you will of necessity drive the Indian and ultimately overturn the whole system of government obtaining among the Indians. It will be a matter of necessity that you shall overturn it.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a few of our statutory rovisions that indicate the settled policy of this Government on this subject for a great many years. The first is in regard to the incorporation of Indian tribes within any organized Territory. Section 1839 of the Revised Statutes provides:

Nothing in this title shall be construed to impair the rights of person or property pertaining to the Indians in any Territory, so long as such rights remain unextinguished by treaty between the United States and such Indians, or to include any Territory which, by treaty with any Indian tribe, is not, without the consent of such tribe, embraced within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory; but all such territory shall be excepted out of the boundaries, and constitute no part of any Territory now or hereafter organized until such tribe signifies its assent to the President to be embraced within a particular Territory.

That shows that in the exclusion of the Indians within the limits of territorial governments we expressly reserved to them their right of tribal organization and tribal government, and that reservation has worked no injury, so far as I can discern, to the people of the United States thus far. After a while the question of making treaties with Indians became a very important matter, and we expressly enacted that-

No Indian nation or tribe within the territory of the United States shall be acknowledged or recognized as an independent nation, tribe, or power with whom the United States may contract by treaty; but no obligation of any treaty lawfully made and ratified with any such Indian nation or tribe prior to March 3, 1871, shall be hereby invalidated or impaired.

be hereby invalidated or impaired.

That is section 2079. There we reserve again to the Indians their tribal rights and all other rights under treaties. We say that we shall not treat them as so much a foreign government as to make a treaty with them; the treaty-making power shall not have any application to the Indian tribes, and that is as far as we went toward the destruction of the tribal relations. As to all the rest of their rights, whether of property or of person, guaranteed under treaties, or guaranteed under the laws of the United States, they were not only reserved, but they were actually preserved by the declaration of the statute. The statute in regard to surveys has been for a great many years in existence in this Government. Section 2115 provides:

Whenever it becomes necessary to survey any Indian or other reservations, or Whenever it becomes necessary to survey any Indian or other reservations, or any lands, the same shall be surveyed under the direction and control of the General Land Office, and as nearly as may be in conformity to the rules and regulations under which other public lands are surveyed.

eral Land Office, and as nearly as may be in conformity to the rules and regulations under which other public lands are surveyed.

The Government has seen the inutility of extending the general system of land surveys to the Indian Territory, because, as I remarked before, they are not fitted and adapted to it; and here is a statute that has been on the books since April, 1864, and while we have gone on to make surveys in certain cases, they have not been made with reference to the location of Indian settlement or lands in severalty.

Now, Mr. President, I am not objecting to the policy of settling Indians upon lands in severalty. I wish, however, to maintain the right of the Indian to take his land in severalty, as the light of civilization dawns upon him and the experience of other men is read by him in his daily contact and association with them, so that he will become sufficiently informed of his own interests to seek land in severalty. So I would make it permissive that he should have land set apart to him in severalty. This bill does not propose to do that; this bill proposes, at the discretion of the President of the United States, that the Indians shall be compelled to take their lands in severalty, notwithstanding that we have guaranteed the right of a tribe to occupy the lands at large with a mere permission to take them in severalty.

Mr. COKE. Allow me to call attention to the last section of the

Mr. COKE. Allow me to call attention to the last section of the bill:

SEC. 9. That the provisions of this act shall not extend to any tribe of Indians until the consent of two-thirds of the male members twenty-one years of age shall be first had and obtained.

Mr. MORGAN. I have not neglected to notice that provision of the bill and I was just about to come to it. I was preparing by the remarks I have made to make the point a little clearer in opposition to that feature of the bill than I should otherwise perhaps have been enabled to do.

enabled to do.

When the enactment we are now considering becomes a law, it invests the President of the United States, as I repeat, with the power to compel the Indians to select their lands in severalty, and with the power also to the agents in certain cases who are there to select for minors who are not in condition to select for themselves; and after this law shall go into operation, then it is within the discretion of the President of the United States to compel every Indian in every tribe in the United States included within the purview of the bill, excepting those in the Indian Territory as the bill now stands, to take lands in severalty according to the Government surveys. Is that a violation of treaty obligation, or not? Undoubtedly there are Indians in the United States within our domain where this provision of law would violate a treaty obligation, for there are some of the Indian tribes who hold their land in common under their treaties and while they have the option to take their lands in severalty you cannot comthey have the option to take their lands in severalty you cannot compel them to do it. So much respect has been paid to the communal idea, the tribal government of these Indians in our treaty relations with them and in our statutory enactments heretofore, that we have not seen proper to disturb anything of that kind; and I venture to say that plenty of instances can be found of treaties solemnly entered into between us and the Indian tribes which will be plainly violated if this law is put in force. Therefore, whether we have the power or not we should not do it in a broad and sweeping enactment of this kind but we should take up the particular case of a particular. of this kind, but we should take up the particular case of a particular tribe and adapt our legislation to them. If we do not pause in our movement, if we are not a little more circumspect in our treatment of the Indians, a little less heroic in our treatment of this subject, of the Indians, a little less heroic in our treatment of this subject, we shall have ample leisure to repent either that we have done ourselves gross injustice in the violation or abuse of our treaty obligation, or that we have compelled a poor people who have suffered enough to suffer more or else fight in defense of their rights. We shall have leisure to repent of this law after we have passed it. We shall have leisure to understand that this committee, able as it is, had not the power, as no living set of men to-day have the power, to grasp this great and magnificent problem and to solve it in the form of a bill of such dimensions as this.

The Senator from Texas says that the pinth section of this bill pro-

The Senator from Texas says that the ninth section of this bill provides that this law shall not be effectual until it has the consent of two-thirds of the male members twenty-one years of age of each of these tribes. Mr. President, there we do either to ourselves or to the Indians a very gross injustice. The Senator from Missouri said he did not concur with some Senators in this body in reference to their views of the effect of the fourteenth amendment upon the Indians, whether it conferred upon them the rights of citizenship or not. is not the very question that is presented here. It is a question dif-ferent from that which is now presented. The question we are deal-ing with is this, shall we, notwithstanding the declaration we have solemnly made and acted upon, that hereafter the tribal relations of the Indians would not justify us treating the tribe in any sense as a foreign people, maintain that tribal relation by statute so far that it shall become necessary that two-thirds of the male members of an Inshall become necessary that two-thirds of the male members of an Indian tribe shall give its assent to a law of Congress before it becomes a law. I do not know of any body of men in this country, in any State or any Territory, or elsewhere, who by our statutes have here-tofore been dignified with this peculiar power of interposing the voice of one-third of the members of a community for the purpose of giving effect to an act of Congress, or else for the purpose of preventing it from going into effect. One-third of an Indian tribe can veto an act of Congress! It requires the assent of two-thirds of the male members—shutting out the women from all participation in it, though they should be widows and the heads of families—the assent of two-thirds of the male members of every tribe of Indians, now numbering two hundred, I believe in the United States, before this act of Congress can have any effect with regard to them!

I set out with the declaration that I thought this act of Congress was based on false principles. Unquestionably it is. We should do was based on false principles. Unquestionably it is. We should do one of two things: we should either exercise the ordinary treaty-making power, in which the Senate participates, in dealing with Indian tribes, or we should legislate with regard to them just as we do with regard to all the other people of the United States. There is no dian tribes, or we should legislate with regard to them just as we do with regard to all the other people of the United States. There is no middle ground that can be taken, unless we assert that the Indian tribes, owing to their peculiar circumstances, have the right to intercept the action of Congress and prevent its having validity after the President has signed the bill until it shall get the consent of two-thirds of the male members of the tribe. This is very extraordinary legislation, that we should leave standing on the statute-book a law which prohibits us from recognizing the tribal relation so as to treat with them, and yet that we should put into the body of this enactment a provision that the law itself shall not become effectual as a statute until the consent of two-thirds of the Indians of each tribe is obtained.

the United States, enacts a law for the disposal of a vast territory of rich land—it may be richer than any opened in the great Golconda of the West—yet the moment that is done, the moment the law is applicable, the President is appealed to by the border settlers who are camped upon the border for the purpose of going in, and he forces the location of the lands. The Indians are located in a large domain which is held in common; it may be the very best mining land in all the territory of the reservation, or it may be the best agricultural land. Here is a vast domain that is excluded from the right of private ownership because every man, woman, and child in the Indian nation has received its modicum of land, got its title to it, and the balance is common domain. How are you going to dispose of that? You have dissolved the tribal relation. Then the President, with the assent of Congress, can buy all the balance. At what price? And who are to be the beneficiaries? Where is the trust fund to go after it is realized by a sale of the land? it is realized by a sale of the land?

Mr. President, we understand from the history of the past that it is a mere sacrifice of a fund sacredly set apart for the Indians in perpetuity under the treaties. We are now by compulsion of law undertaking to force the Indians off their lands and to open them to settle-

There is another feature of it that strikes my attention with great orce. While this is supposed to be a good and necessary law in egard to the Indians, reaching up into the northern boundaries of regard to the Indians, reaching up into the northern boundaries of Alaska, where to-day we have no form of government except a ship with its guns bearing on the coast; while this law has this broad extent to the north, and will open up the whole country there to the access of the white man, when you come to the south, to the Indian Territory, it locks it up and seals it. The Indians in the Indian Territory, many of whom we have carried there by compulsion, like the Cheyennes and the Arapahoes and the Poncas and the Wyandottes, and many others, are not to be allowed to participate in this great beneficial measure for the relief of the Indians and for the restoration of them to the light of civilization. But there is a reason for that. I of them to the light of civilization. But there is a reason for that. I suppose they see that there is a band of white men hanging along the borders there that want to go in. How is it in Dakota, in Washington Territory, in Idaho, in Oregon, in all that northern country? Are not the white men pushing in there? This bill is intended to make a road for them so that no man can obstruct their entrance and immigration in that country; but when you come to the southern territory of the Indian Nation, this bill is intended to lock it up so that no man can enter in. There is a crying and a gross injustice against a certain section of this country. The honorable Senator from Texas may think that the interests of his State require that from Texas may think that the interests of his State require that white immigration should be shut out of the Indian Territory; I do not know what he may think about that; but if he does he makes a great mistake. I could not give my consent to the bill without the amendment of the honorable Senator from Missouri. This bill affects in its operations the white people as well as the Indians, and if there is any benefit or advantage to be derived from it in favor of the Indians, I can see no reason why the Indians in the Indian Territory should be excluded from it.

Of course I do not include in this remark the five civilized notions.

Of course I do not include in this remark the five civilized nations, because they hold our land patents to their lands. As I understand, the patent reads that their title shall continue while water runs and grass grows. That title is irrevocable until we shall gain that period in our infamous conduct with our Indians, if you will allow me to characterize it as it has been heretofore, where we shall rob them of this title that we have conveyed to them by parchment. I therefore do not include them in my remarks. They are excluded by the amend-ment of the honorable Senator from Missouri.

But, Mr. President, I cannot subscribe to a policy which excludes the benefit of this enactment from the Indian Territory entirely, for the purpose of continuing the exclusion of white people who are hanging around there it is supposed for the purpose of getting in.

Now, I believe this with regard to the Indian: his hunting ground in the large of the purpose of getting in the large of the large of the purpose of getting in the large of the la which prohibits us from recognizing the tribal relation so as to treat with them, and yet that we should put into the body of this enactment a provision that the law itself shall not become effectual as a statute until the consent of two-thirds of the Indians of each tribe is obtained.

I confess, Mr. President, that I do not see the principle upon which such a law operates. I cannot understand the logic of the system. It does not address itself to my reason and judgment as a sound and judgicious principle of legislation on which the Senate of the United States is anthorized to act. On the contrary, I can see mischief in the principle of legislation thus advanced, and I can see a great deal more of mischief in the application of this doctrine to these Indians and to the white people. What do you do? You assemble these bucks in council, you go and make great speeches to them, and you allow them to get up and orate extensively. They talk about the Great Father, and the head of the bureau, and the Indian agents, and the man who sells the goods around there. They perhaps do not mentie in the principal men when they go into council have got a little extracash in their pockets, put there for the purpose of putting them in a good humor. They are recognized by this great Government as being a government, so that one-third of the men there can prevent the operation of the law at all.

But suppose you have the law going into effect by the consent of two-thirds of the tribe; you have got your enactment perfect; the law is in operation. What use are you going to make of it? The moment this Indian council, uniting its power with the Congress of Indians and pass them into tillers of the soil.

until such time as they become satisfied that it is to their interest to

There is one thing that I think I am justified in saying from my reading of history as well as from personal observation, that I have never known an Indian yet who was not willing to work—I do not mean to toil with his hands—but I have never known one yet who was so indolent in his nature as that he would not go out and participate in the activities of the chase, and take upon himself more labor and more hardship then always a superior the real for the selection of mining his likely. ties of the chase, and take upon himself more labor and more narusally than almost any man in the world, for the sake of gaining his livelihood. These people, when they are brought in contact with a true civilization and are taught agricultural pursuits, as I hope they very soon will be, will not be found to be an inefficient or a lazy people. They will proceed in the cultivation of the soil with such success as has been mentioned in the letter read here to-day, until they will has been mentioned in the letter read here to-day, until they will after a while become entirely self-sustaining.

Now, take the twenty-seven pueblo tribes down in the Arizona desert. You may pass over that desert and find corn-fields, and when you are approaching you see the tassels of the corn, when in full tassel, not more than a foot above the ground. You will find the Indian has scooped out a basin of two or three feet, in which he has planted the seed for the purpose of continuous productions were approached. the seed for the purpose of getting moisture by capillary attraction, there being no rains in that country and no chance for irrigation; and there they raise a hard corn of excellent character, corn that will there they raise a hard corn of excellent character, corn that will keep better than any we have in our country, and not corn merely, but wheat, and an abundance of it; and there is not one of those published that has not a year's supply for every man, woman, and child laid up in advance. Those Indians have cost the people of the United laid up in advance. Those Indians have cost the people of the United States not one penny. They have lost a great deal by depredations of roving bands of cow-boys and other white men; they have been disturbed frequently, and yet they have gone on living in villages, as they do, and have hoarded up the treasures of agricultural production, so that a man cannot find a pueblo without a year's supply of food for everybody garnered in their store-houses.

What does all this mean? It means that they are a more industrious people than we are, because you may take the liveliest Yankee that ever left Connectiont and you cannot not him on those plains and that ever left Connecticut and you cannot put him on those plains and cause him to make a living under those circumstances. Of course he would not stay there and undertake it. The Indians have been compelled to do it; they have done it, and they have proved by that fact that they are capable of sustaining themselves by their own labor, and that we have nothing to do but to give them ordinary encouragement in this direction. The compulsory process has gone on long enough; and above all things, Mr. President, I do not want to leave these Indian tribes exposed again to the hardship and the wrong that will be inflicted on them by selecting out what are called their councilors and their chiefs for the purpose of disposing absolutely of the rights of private individuals. That is not the theory of our laws; it is not in accordance with our treaties or laws. One man has no right in this country to dispose of the property of another. Let him have his rights under the treaty, but do not put in this bill any compulsory enactment; and above all things, if you pass this law, adopt the amendment of the honorable Senator from Missouri, and let the law have its application to all the Indian tribes alike.

But I claim that the basis and principle of this bill is wrong. These are people of the United States. Whether they are citizens or not, they are people subject to our legislative action. We can repeal the they are people subject to our legislative action. We can repeal the treaties if we choose; but we cannot take away vested rights that have vested under those treaties without the violation of our own Constitution, because our Constitution when it prohibits us from divesting vested rights does not stop to inquire whether the man in whose favor a right is vested is an Indian, a negro, or a white man. The vested right must be protected. If you will not recognize the tribal relation sufficiently to treat with them, still you have the legislative power, and there is but one restriction upon it, and that is vested rights.

I claim that by this bill you put it in the power of two-thirds of an Indian tribe absolutely to break down and destroy the vested rights of the balance of the tribe, and that is a false principle of leg-islation. If you find yourselves able under the Constitution of the United States and the guardianship of your own conscience to take from the Indians their own property, march up like men and take it away; do not go to an Indian council and persuade two-thirds of the away; do not go to an Indian council and persuade two-thirds of the male Indians who may be there to barter away the rights of the balance of the tribe. That sort of bickering with Indian tribes is disgraceful to the country; and while the policy of the Secretary of the Interior has been lauded here to-day, I undertake to say that in reference to that particular, as well as many others, the dignity and honor of the United States have been absolutely sacrificed in these conventions with Indians to say whether or not our laws should go into effect in reference to certain tribes. Here it is proposed to take the minority of an Indian tribe and strip them of their rights, and, not daring to do it by open act of Congress, it is proposed to do it with daring to do it by open act of Congress, it is proposed to do it with the consent of two-thirds of the male Indians of the tribe. It is this feature of the proposed law that I specially object to. I cannot vote for a bill that has that principle in it. Legislate for your Indian directly or do not legislate at all.

There are other provisions of this bill to which I object. Further on as the bill is being considered and passed on I shall state them.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss the general principles of this bill. It seems to me plain upon the face of it that it is a wise and just and beneficent measure, and I am in favor of it because I believe it is such. I desire simply to reply to a few statements that have been made upon this floor in the discussion of this bill.

It has been stated here over and over again, it has been eloquently proclaimed time after time on this floor, that the Indians as a whole were opposed to the policy of settlement on their lands in severalty. It has been argued against this bill that for that reason it must be a failure; that the principle never can be successfully carried out. Mr. President, I have taken a great deal of pains to ascertain as far as in my power lies the truth in this matter. I have sought the best sources of information that I believed could be had to ascertain whether the opposition of the Indians to this policy exists to the extent that has been assigned. I have gone, in the first place, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. During the discussion of the Ute Indian bill at the last session I applied to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Trowbridge, for the best and fullest information he could give me upon the subject. I hold in my hand a letter written by him. I do not propose to read the letter, but merely to refer to a few of the statements contained therein. He says:

The Red Cloud and Spotted Tail Sioux, who were removed two years ago to their present locations, have been for a year past demanding a several allotment of their lands in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of 1868. Owing to the fact that the survey of their land has not been completed the Department has been able to comply with their request only to a limited degree; but the agents have been directed to make the allotments as fast as the surveys are completed. The agent at Pine Ridge (Red Cloud) agency reports that by the 1st of July next there will be at least seven hundred families located upon their selections and occupying comfortable houses, constructed mainly by their own labor, the Government furnishing the lumber for the roofs and floors and the doors and windows. The same is true of the Spotted Tail Indians at the Rosebud agency, the two tribes numbering in all about fifteen thousand souls.

The Umatilla Indians of Oregon, who were here a year ago, and were given the option, at their request, of settling in severalty on their present reservations or of removing elsewhere, have signified almost unanimously their desire to be located in severalty. Requests of a similar character come from nearly all of the coast Indians in Oregon and Washington Territory.

The Sisseton and Devil's Lake Sioux in Dakota are also making the same request, which is being complied with by the Department, and the Santee Sioux of Nebraska, who already have allotments, are clamoring for the issuance of patents for the same.

The Chipnewa Indians of Wisconsin are now in this city at their request and who already have allotments, are clamoring for the issuance or patents for the same.

The Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin are now in this city, at their request, and aside from the question of the payment of arrears their principal demand has been to have patents issued to them for their lands in severalty as provided by the treaty. It is a fact known to this office that out of the 9,000 Indians residing on the Bad River and Lac Courte d'Oreilles reservations, to which these Chippewas belong, not over a dozen Indians are opposed to allotments in severalty. On the contrary, the Indians demand that such patents shall be issued to them in order that they may have as good a title as the whites before they commence to make improvements on their lands. The same call for patents to lands in severalty comes from the Chippewas on the White Earth reservation in Minnesota.

Numerous other tribes have made the same request of the Department, and it may truthfully be said that there are at this time but few tribes of Indians, outside of the five civilized tribes in the Indian Territory, who are not ready for this movement.

In going further into this subject I applied recently to the Com-

In going further into this subject I applied recently to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to ascertain what information has been received at the office up to this time. In the annual report of this officer for the year 1880, I find this language:

The demand for title to lands in severalty by the reservation Indians is almost

I do not know whether that means anything or not; it is possible that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is trying to deceive Congress and to put off upon the country a lie; but it certainly is strangely in conflict with the statements made by my colleague and others, that the Indians are almost unanimously opposed to it, and that they never can be brought to submit to it. The broad, unequivocal statement is made by the Commissioner that "the demand for title to lands in severalty by the reservation Indians is almost universal." He says, fur-

It is a measure correspondent with the progressive age in which we live, and is indorsed by all true friends of the Indian, as is evidenced by the numerous petitions to this effect presented to Congress from citizens of various States. Following the issue of patents comes disintegration of tribal relations, and if his land is secured for a wholesome period against alienation and is protected against the rapacity of speculators, the Indian acquires a sense of ownership, and, learning to appreciate the results and advantages of labor, insensibly prepares himself for the duties of a citizen. I therefore earnestly recommend the speedy passage of such legislation as may best effect the desired object.

I am also informed that there is hardly a tribe of Indians which has not up to this time been represented, directly or indirectly, by some persons seeking to secure this very result. I have a large number of the reports made by the several agents. I shall briefly allude to the leading points of a few of them. The agent of the Oneidas in Wisconsin states that—

Wisconsin states that—

The Oneidas are well advanced in agriculture, a large portion of their reservation being with propriety called the garden of Brown County. The main settlement, extending nearly the whole length of the reserve north and south, is one continuous line of large, beautiful farms, with many good, substantial dwellings, barns, granaries, and tool-houses. By their industry they harvest large and profitable crops and raise (considering the climate and latitude) a good proportion of horses, cattle, hogs, and some sheep. Not having a farmer on this reserve, it is impossible for me to give an accurate account of all their productions. Interest in agriculture is steadily and yearly increasing. Many new farms are being cleared and cultivated, while many of the old are enlarged and improved. Their continuous cry to the Government is for the allotment of their lands to each individual without being subjected to taxation, sale, or judgment of any court. This would be an incentive to further industry among them.

The agent of the Grand Ronde Indians of Oregon states that-

When first brought upon the agency contentions, mistrust, and jealousies existed among them, which for many years baffled the agents and superintendents to reconcile and conciliate, and so long as the tribal relations existed and were adhered to among them no permanent and harmonious advancement among them could be secured, but by the allotment of land to them in severalty, and the extinction of all tribal relations among them some four or five years ago, and the removal of the different families to their individual tracts of land, the bitterness of feeling and jealousies among them have almost altogether disappeared, and they are now, as a rule, industriously engaged in agricultural pursuits, and under the circumstances are making very remarkable progress.

The great majority of the Indians of this agency are now earning their own support by farming and stock raising, the Department furnishing, in some instances, seed and agricultural implements.

The agent of the Peorias and Miamis state that-

The greater portion of their land is agricultural, and their reservation is equal in value to that of the Quapaws. The head men visited Washington last winter in the interest of their people, who are unanimously in favor of allotment of their lands. It is to be hoped that the Department will aid them in this matter, as a large majority are certainly advanced sufficiently for the change, and a delay will only retard and discourage them. only retard and discourage them.

Here is what is stated by the agent of the Cheyenne River Indians:

Here is what is stated by the agent of the Cheyenne River Indians:

There has been no particular change in the location of the principal Indian camps or villages during the past year. Seventy-five allotments were made to individual Indians, of which twenty-four are of one hundred and sixty acres of lande each, at Peoria Bottom, and fifty-one, of about ten acres each, at various locations on the reservation. A number of families have followed my advice and moved from the villages on the west side of the Missouri River, below the agency, to the more fertile valley of the Cheyenne River, where they are trying to establish separate and independent homes for themselves.

It is the policy of the present agent to impress upon the Indians the fact that their subsistence must soon be wholly the product of their own labor, and to disabuse their minds of the idea that the Government owes them a living so long as they may see fit to ask for it. The Cheyenne River Sioux Indians especially are sufficiently advanced to have their lands allotted to them in severality, granting them a title thereto inalienable for a number of years. This would be a new incentive to exertion, as they would then have some assurance that whatever improvements they made would be their individual gain.

There could be a volume of testimony of this kind presented. I have

There could be a volume of testimony of this kind presented. I have many other reports of agents and requests made by the Indians themselves with which I do not propose to detain the Senate. Those which I have now presented seem to be so clear and full that there can be

I have now presented seem to be so clear and full that there can be no question as to the desire on the part of a great many Indians at least, if not all, to acquire lands in this way.

I wish to say a word in regard to the Ute Indian bill which was passed at the last session. It has been represented here to-day that that measure has proved a failure, and that no good results are coming from it. I do not so understand it. I understand that everything connected with that measure so far has been carried out successfully to the point of allotting to the Indians their lands. That has not been done; and why? Because that bill did not get through Congress and was not approved by the President until just at the close of the session, near the end of the month of June. Under the provisions of that bill a commission must be appointed, and that comprovisions of that bill a commission must be appointed, and that comprovisions of that bill a commission must be appointed, and that commission must be prepared for the work. I think that the commission did not arrive in Colorado until September.

The bill then required that a full and complete census should be taken of these Indians. That was a work which required a great deal of time. These Indians were then scattered over a large extent of country. That the commission went to work in earnest and worked industriously and laboriously for the purpose of securing an accurate census, I have no doubt, and that census was not completed until late in the fall. Before the Indians could be settled upon the lands which should be allotted to them, they were to be paid in money and that required a certain time. The money was sent out and it took time to disburse it. These several measures were not accomplished until it was too late in the season to have surveys made and the Indians

The opposition to that bill, which delayed its passage from March till June, was the cause and I believe the only cause of the failure to accomplish the removal of these Indians to their new homes.

accomplish the removal of these Indians to their new homes.

And now we are told that the measure itself is a failure, and as evidence of this it is stated that not an acre of land has been allotted.

Three-fourths of the Indians, as required by the law, have signed the agreement. It has gone into force and effect by the payment and acceptance of the money. I understand that all we lack now of the thorough accomplishment of the purposes of the bill is the removal of the Indians, and that there is no opposition to that to any great extent. I have consulted several members of the commission, and they inform me that with very few exceptions the Indians underthey inform me that with very few exceptions the Indians underthey inform me that with very few exceptions the Indians understand that they are to be removed, and they expect to go peaceably and settle upon the lands which will be allotted to them. Therefore, and settle upon the lands which will be allotted to them. Therefore, I think we can say that the Ute measure of the last Congress, instead of being a failure, is a great success; that it has accomplished or will accomplish all that it was intended to accomplish.

In regard to the bill introduced in the Senate at this session by me,

In regard to the bill introduced in the Senate at this session by me, providing for removing these Indians to the Uintah reservation, to which reference has been made by my colleague, I wish to say that I introduced that bill by request. I did not draw the bill, and I introduced it by request. I supposed at the time that it might be amended so as to make its provisions available for the purpose for which it was intended.

which it was intended.

I am doubtful myself whether there is a sufficient quantity of agricultural land at the place assigned on Grand River to be allotted to the Indians, as required by the bill, but if there is not sufficient land on the Grand River I believe the provisions of the bill are broad enough to allow the Indians to be settled in that vicinity. I think sufficient land will be found in Colorado and Utah to provide for carrying out the measure as proposed.

I never was in favor of confining the Indians to this location on the Grand River. I asked last session when the bill was before the Senate to have it amended and have the Indians settled upon the Uintah reservation, but I became satisfied at that time that such a measure could not be passed through Congress, and therefore I favored what I thought was the best measure we could get. Therefore I think the statement that my colleague makes that I have come over to his view of the question cannot be sustained.

Mr. TELLER. I did not claim that my colleague was inconsistent.

It seemed to be generally understood that there was no place proper to put them; at least one of the most influential members of the comto put them; at least one of the most influential members of the commission told me it was very unfortunate that we attempted it. I did not make the point to charge my colleague with any inconsistency, but I simply thought he knew more about it to-day than he did last session. That is all. I should not have mentioned it if a Senator had not mentioned it. I did not mean to charge it offensively.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I did not think that my colleague charged it offensively, but I assert that my views have not changed on that subject at all; that I stand in exactly the same position that I did then, and I think the wisdom of the policy we adopted at that time has been fully sustained by the results of the measure. That is all I wish to say at present upon the subject. I wish to say at present upon the subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at five o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 20, 1881.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Speaker, according to yesterday's proceedings as printed in the RECORD of this morning, it appears that in striking out the amendment which was offered in Committee of the Whole by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Samford,] the House also voted to strike out the first proviso in the first section of the funding bill, which reads as follows:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize an in-ease of the public debt.

The SPEAKER. That clause is not stricken out.

Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to have that part of the Journal re-read, Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to have that part of the Journal re-read, as I was engaged when it was read just now, to see whether it is so recorded in the Journal; if so, it is an error.

The SPEAKER. That part of the bill was never proposed to be interfered with, from beginning to end, as the Chair recollects.

The Clerk was proceeding to read the Journal, when
The SPEAKER said: The clause referred to was never proposed to be interfered with in any part of the proceedings.

Mr. CARLISLE. If the error occurs in the Journal I move to correct the Journal in that respect.

rect the Journal in that respect.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised by the journal clerk that the Journal is correct in that respect.

The Journal was then approved.

Mr. CALKINS. I rise to call up the contested election case of Boynton vs. Loring; but I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE.]

Mr. CARLISLE. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COFFROTH,] who objected day before yesterday to the introduction of a resolution providing for an evening session for the consideration of Senate bills on the Private Calendar, is now willing to withdraw his objection provided the session be fixed for to-morrow evening. I ask that the resolution be read.

The Clerk read as follows: for to-morrow evening. I ask The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest the word "Friday" to be placed in the resolution, so it will read "to-morrow, Friday."

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to know exactly what the resolution covers.

The SPEAKER. Senate bills upon the Private Calender.
Mr. KEIFER. That is, private bills alone?
The SPEAKER. Senate bills on the Private Calendar.
Mr. KEIFER. No other than pension bills?
The SPEAKER. No, no; Senate bills on the Private Calendar of Mr. CARLISLE. The resolution shows on its face that it is for the consideration of bills from the Senate on the Private Calendar and in the order in which they stand.

Mr. KEIFER. Pension bills alone?

Mr. CARLISLE. No; it is not confined to pension bills alone; but of course it will facilitate their consideration.

The SPEAKER. Pension bills are included, of course. They will take their turn with the other bills.

Mr. REAGAN. Does that provide for going on the Speaker's table? The SPEAKER. This only applies to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KEIFER. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no further objection, and the resolution is agreed to

The SPEARER. The Chair hears no further objection, and the resolution is agreed to.

Mr. BUCKNER. Let the resolution be read again.

The SPEAKER. The resolution has been adopted. It provides for a session to-morrow evening for the consideration of bills from the Senate on the Private Calendar.

RECIPROCITY TREATY.

Mr. MORTON. I ask unanimous consent to present the memorial of Messrs. A. A. Lowe Bros., H. B. Claffin & Co., David Dows & Co., and 500 leading mercantile houses of New York, for early action on the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives for the appointment of a commission to ascertain on what basis a mutually beneficial reciprocity treaty can be formed between the United States and Canada; which I move be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and printed in the

Mr. BOWMAN. I have a similar petition of George C. Richardson & Co. and 1,029 other firms and business men of Boston, in favor of joint resolution for the appointment of commissioners to ascertain and report a basis for a reciprocity treaty between the United States and the British provinces, which I move be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the petition will be so referred and the body of the petition without the names will be printed in the RECORD.

The body of the petition is as follows:

Petition in favor of the "joint resolution for the appointment of commissioners to ascertain and report a basis for a reciprocity treaty between the United States and the British provinces."

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:
The undersigned respectfully represent as follows:
The National Board of Trade, as well as the principal local boards of trade in the United States, have for the past five years memorialized Congress and sent delegates to Washington in behalf of resolutions asking that Congress would authorize the appointment of a commission to ascertain and report to Uongress, and thus to the country, whether there could be any basis, and if so, what, on which a mutually satisfactory and advantageous reciprocal trade between the United States and the British provinces could be established.

The House Committee on Foreign Affairs reported April 28, 1880, a resolution to the above effect, which is now on the Calendar, awaiting action by the House.

Notwithstanding the urgent appeals thus made, no vote has during all these years of effort to secure it been reached upon the subject-matter of said resolution.

The business interests of the country, in asking simply that Congress will authorize a commission to investigate and report upon this great question, and in other words, in asking now only that information be obtained for them and the country, feel that the request is a reasonable one and is entitled to receive early consideration.

A mutual desire for closer trade relations on the part of the merchants and traders in the United States and Canada has existed ever since the peremptory abrogation by the United States of the treaty of 1854, as evidenced year after year by resolutions passed by the great commercial bodies of both countries, and it is no exaggeration to say, that in all probability the failure of Congress to give this business question due consideration has cost the people of this country $5,500,000, without any corresponding advantages in return, for fishery privileges, which could have been acquired at any time previous thereto, without cost, through the negotiations of such a commission as has been asked for; an

COAST SURVEY REPORT.

On motion of Mr. HAYES, by unanimous consent, Senate concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 3,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the year ending June 30, 1880, for distribution by the said superintendent, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Printing.

APPORTIONMENT.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back a resolution with a substitute, and I ask that the original resolution be first read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the tables presented on the apportionment by the Superintendent of the Ceasus be published in the CONGRESSIONAL EXCORD, and further, that the communication just read from the Secretary of the Interior be also published in the RECORD, and all of said papers in pampfilet to the number of 2,000.

Mr. WILSON. The Committee on Printing recommend the adoption of the following substitute for that resolution:

Resolved. That there be printed in pamphlet form 5,000 copies of the tabular statements furnished and to be furnished by the Secretary of the Interior and the Superintendent of the Census, and the remarks of Hon. S. S. Cox and communications explanatory thereof, under the tenth census for apportionment purposes; 3,000 copies for the use of the House, 1,500 for the use of the Senate, and 500 for the use of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is this a substitute for the previous resolution? Mr. WILSON. Yes; a substitute reported from the Committee on

Mr. WILSON. Yes; a substitute reported from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. It is a proposition to give the House all the information possible on the subject.

Mr. DUNNELL. It does not provide for printing in the RECORD?

Mr. WILSON. It has already been printed in part in the RECORD.

Mr. DUNNELL. Not the tables?

Mr. COX. No, not the tables, which are to be furnished hereafter, running the number of members to three hundred and twenty-five. They will be furnished and printed in this pamphlet. It is not necessary they should go into the RECORD. The speaker. It is a calculation running up the ratio and number of members to three hundred and twenty-five.

The substitute was agreed to, and the resolution, as amended, was

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution, as amended, was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHTING THE SAVANNAH RIVER.

Mr. NICHOLLS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6971) to appropriate $60,000 to light the Savannah River, in the State of Georgia, from the month of said river to the city of Savannah; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EDUCATIONAL FUND.

Mr. GOODE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill No. 133, now on the Speaker's table, providing an educational fund, applying the proceeds of the sale of public lands for the purpose of education, be made the special order for Wednesday, the 2d of February, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. CALKINS. I must insist on the regular order.

Mr. REAGAN. I shall not object to the consideration of this if it does not interfere with the interstate-commerce bill.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the request.

does not interfere with the interstate-commerce bill.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the request of the gentleman from Virginia cannot now be considered.

Mr. GOODE. I hope the gentleman will not object to fixing a day for the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order cuts off the opportunity for presenting the request of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not object to fixing a day for the consideration of the bill to which the gentleman from Virginia refers, but object to its consideration at this time, which I understood to be the request. request.
The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.
The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. No. 133) to establish an educational fund and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education, and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education.

Mr. REAGAN. I will not object to fixing a day for the consideration of that bill, as I have stated, if it does not interfere with the interstate-commerce bill.

Mr. BRAGG. I object to it without any condition.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. HUNTON. I ask leave to refer a bill at this time. Mr. CALKINS.

I must demand the regular order.
I hope the gentleman will yield to me simply to Mr. HUNTON.

have a bill referred.

Mr. CALKINS. I would yield with pleasure to the gentleman, but I have refused to yield to other gentlemen around me, and must insist upon the regular order.

At the request of parties in the contested-election case of Boynton vs. Loring, I am directed, if it is desirable on the part of the Appropriations Committee, to go on with the naval appropriation bill, and yield for that purpose.

Mr. ATKINS. I move, then, to dispense with the morning hour today.

Mr. REAGAN. Let it be understood that the waiver on the part of the gentleman from Indiana of his right to call up this contested-election case does not preclude anybody else.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to exercise his privilege in calling up this question, which is one of the highest privilege, at any time.

Mr. CALKINS. I give notice that I shall do so just as soon as the naval appropriation bill is out of the way.

Mr. ATKINS. I now renew my motion that the morning hour be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

CHATTANOOGA A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. BEALE. I ask unanimous consent of the House to report back a substitute for House bill No. 6594, declaring the city of Chattanoga, in the State of Tennessee, a port of delivery, and ask that it be considered and put upon its passage. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BELFORD. I object.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 6969) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I reserve all points of order on that bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose mittee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. Cox in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill making appropriation for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I will only detain the House for a few moments in explanation of the material points in this bill wherein it differs from the law or the appropriation act as now upon the statute-books for the present fiscal year. The net increase in this bill over the appropriation act of last year is $55,239.85. There are some items of increase, amounting to $151,976.10, and there are also items of decrease in the bill amounting to $96,736.25, leaving the net increase as I have stated before, a little over $55,000. The increased items consist, first, of $125,375 in the pay of the Navy. That is merely for the pay of the officers of the Navy. It results from the fact that there are different grades of officers to be paid for the ensuing fiscal year from those that are paid during the present fiscal year, and also because the question of longevity affects the result. This sum of $125,375 is in excess of what was paid during the last year to the officers of the Navy, and it is a mere matter of arithmetical calculation in the Navy Department, taken from the Naval Register and furnished to the committee in tabulated form; and hence, in accordance with the law, the committee has no option except to appropriate the with the law, the committee has no option except to appropriate the money upon the figures given.

The next item of increase is for the Bureau of Navigation, which is only $6,500. The next material item is for the Naval Observatory, is only $5,500. The next material item is for the Naval Observatory, and that is to provide for the necessary repairs to that institution, the sum of $3,350. There are other small items of increase, but the next important item is for the expenses of the Marine Corps, which amounts to $13,547; $5,000 of which is embraced in an increase of the contingent fund for the Marine Corps, which is in consequence of furnishing the buildings and quarters at the Washington navy-yard erected during the last year for the benefit of the officers of that corps, these quarters having not yet been furnished.

The net items of decrease over the bill of last year amount to over ninety-six thousand dollars and arise in a failure to repeat the an-

The net items of decrease over the bill of last year amount to over ninety-six thousand dollars, and arise in a failure to repeat the appropriation of $50,000 for torpedoes, in excess of the usual appropriation, which was contained in the act of last year. The next item of decrease is for the torpedo-boat Alarm, which appropriation was not repeated this year in this bill. We also appropriated last year the sum of $23,000 for the surveys of the Amazon River, which amount is not included in the present bill. These are the principal points of difference in the bill of last year and the present year, and I call the attention of the House to them. I have nothing further, Mr. Chairman, to add to what I have said, and I yield the floor to any gentleman who desires to ask any questions in reference to this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. The statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations included an item of $125,000 as increase in the pay of the Navy. I desire in connection with that point, if the investigations of the chairman of the committee will enable him to answer me, to ascertain how many ships we have afloat.

Mr. ATKINS. About forty-three I think are in commission. There are in the American Navy some ninety and odd vessels of all kinds

Mr. ATKINS. About forty-three I think are in commission. There are in the American Navy some ninety and odd vessels of all kinds that are afloat; but the number in commission is about forty-three.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask that question in order that in view of the number of vessels and the amount of increase of officers' pay I may call the attention of the House very briefly to the second paragraph in the bill. It will be seen that the pay of the Navy for the active list is as follows: list is as follows:

For one Admiral, one Vice-Admiral, twelve rear-admirals, eight chiefs of bureau, (commodores,) twenty-four commodores, forty-seven captains, ninety commanders, eighty lieutenant-commanders, two hundred and eighty lieutenants, one hundred and one masters, ninety-five ensigns, seventy-five midshipmen, fifteen medical directors, fourteen medical directors, fifty surgeons, seventy-three passed assistant surgeons, sixteen assistant surgeons, twelve pay directors, thirteen pay inspectors, fifty paymasters, thirty-one passed assistant paymasters, twenty assistant paymasters, &c.

There are thus nearly one hundred and twenty-six officers engaged in the pay service of these forty-three vessels in commission; and I understand the practice is to continue making these appointments. I suppose there is law for it; I have not investigated the subject.

The remainder of the section may attract more or less of attention; but it seems to me attention ought to be called particularly to the fact of the enormous number of officers connected with this service, and the large pay list in comparison with the number of vessels in commission, and the usefulness and necessity of this large number of

No doubt in the reduction of the Navy at the close of the recent war some officers were retained, whose services might otherwise have been dispensed with, on account of their gallantry and able service. But though that may necessarily have increased the list of officers, it cannot justify, it seems to me, going on and appointing others and making so large and apparently unnecessary a list of officers. I merely call attention to this so that there may be some satisfactory explanation of it.

Mr. WHITTHORNE rose.

Mr. WHITTHORNE rose.

Mr. REAGAN. I see my friend, the Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, rising. Perhaps he can give us information that will show the necessity of this.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask my colleague [Mr. WHITTHORNE] to allow me one word. It is not the business, Mr. Chairman, of the Committee on Appropriations to say how many officers shall be appropriated for. The law fixes the number, and it is none of our business whether there be few or whether there be many, so far as the duties of the Committee on Appropriations are concerned. Many of these officers are on shore duty; many are on waiting orders; some are at naval stations; some are at one place and some at another. But, sir, it is simply a question for Congress to consider, and not for the Appropriations Committee to consider, and I have risen to make that single remark.

Mr. REAGAN. One word. I am, of course, aware that the Appropriations Committee is required to make the appropriations for the officers who are in the service by law. But I am not entirely satisfied that the Appropriations Committee, which is the organ of the House for the investigation of expenditures and for recommending expenditures, might not with great propriety look into questions like this, and advise the House with reference to other action than can be taken in this bill, as to whether it is necessary to make such appro-

Mr. ATKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas what he would do with these officers if the appropriations were not made?

Mr. REAGAN. I think the gentleman misunderstands me. I said the Committee on Appropriations, as the organ of the House in the the committee of appropriations, as the organ of the House in the ascertainment of what appropriations should be made, if it occurs to them there are supernumerary, useless, and unnecessary officers, could make that suggestion to the House, which would be serviceable to us in guiding our action in such legislation as would reduce the

Mr. ATKINS. Why, sir, the whole history of the Committee on Appropriations since the democratic party has come into power has been a living argument that there are too many employes in this Government. Mr. BLOUNT. Government.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let me ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if it is not true that bills were reported to this House cutting down the number of these employés and salaries?

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir; such bills were reported, but not passed.

Mr. REAGAN. I will ask the gentleman from Georgia if that applied to this class of officers, to those enumerated in this bill?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly it did.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. After the close of the civil war the number of officers allowed to this branch of the public service was fixed and of officers allowed to this branch of the public service was fixed and determined by a law passed in 1870, and the number reported in this bill is the number now fixed by law. That being the case, Mr. Chairman, it is well enough for the House to understand, in justice to the Navy and in justice to the public service, what are the requirements of that service.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Reagan] has called attention to, or rather has laid emphasis upon, the number of commanders in the United States Navy. Now, are there too many for that service? Let gentlemen recollect that it is impossible for any man or any officer to be constantly upon service. By the regulations of the Department, under the law, to certain classes of vessels a commander is assigned for duty. Certain duties upon shore are to be discharged by commander. manders. And there must come to all of us who are engaged either manders. And there must come to all of us who are engaged either in private or public duties a season of rest. Under the law, therefore, you find upon analyzing this thing a certain number of commanders upon sea duty, a certain number of commanders on shore duty, and a certain number of commanders upon leave. Take that and apply it, if you please, to the paymasters of the Navy; a certain number of them are performing sea duty, a certain number of them are performing shore duty, a certain number of them are settling accounts, and a certain number are on leave. You will find this in all branches of the public service. It is a necessity.

When the law-makers in 1870 came to reorganize this branch of the public service, they then determined what in their indement were the

to accomplish such reduction and those efforts have never yet met with the concurrence of the House. The judgment of the House has seemed to me to be against that of the Committee on Naval Affairs on that subject. The action of the House at all events has been such that the number of officers has been allowed to remain.

To be sure, we have but forty-three vessels or about that number in commission; thirty-two or thirty-three of which are on cruising service. Now, is this to continue, and ought it to continue? I beg leave to say to the House and to the country, as I am about to close all my service in connection with the naval administration of this Government that I believe the incoming administration ought to recognize the fact that we have no navy, and ought to commence from the bottom and build it up. I say that the country needs and de-mands a Navy commensurate with its honor and its duty to our commercial interests. This should be done, and if done there will possi-bly then be not so much top-heaviness in the Navy.

I repeat again, that I admit when you come to consider the number of vessels in commission, and the number of seamen which go to make up our naval marine, and the number of officers in the Navy at the present time, that navy is somewhat top-heavy. But allow me again to state to my friend from Texas [Mr. Reagan] and to others that efforts have been made from time to time upon this floor to reduce the number of officers, and those efforts have failed to meet the judgment of the House.

I say, therefore, that the criticism upon my colleague from Tennessee, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. ATKINS,] is not warranted. If any criticism at all is warranted, it passes entirely over his head and over the heads of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and rests upon the majority of this House.

Mr. REAGAN. I would ask my friend from Tennessee, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, if his committee has ever submitted to the House a plan for the reduction of the number of submitted to the House a plan for the reduction of the number of these officers?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Not during this session.

Mr. REAGAN. At any time?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. In previous Congresses, yes.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman says that efforts have been made in previous Congresses on the part of the Committee on Naval Affairs to reduce the number of these high officers in the Navy. And he also says that the Committee on Appropriations are not liable to criticism in this matter. I did not aim to make any criticism upon the Committee on Appropriations, I knew that that committee had performed its duty in submitting appropriations for the different branches of the public service as appeared to them to be authorized by law.

I wish only to call the attention of the House to the enormous number of commanders in the Navy. According to this bill there is upon the active list of the Navy one admiral, one vice-admiral, twelve rear-admirals, eight chiefs of bureaus, (commodores,) twenty-four commodores, forty-seven captains, and ninety commanders. Of one hundred and sixty-one officers of the grade of commanders and higher ninety of the number are commanders.

Now, we have forty-three vessels afloat, some of them probably stationed at navy-yards; I am not able to give the number. That can be ascertained upon investigation. It does seem to me, however, that it is incumbent upon some one connected with this service to ask that the country be relieved from such an unnecessary expense as is indicated by this bill for these classes of officers.

Mr. ATKINS. The act of July 1870 fixes the number of officers.

ask that the country be relieved from such an unnecessary expense as is indicated by this bill for these classes of officers.

Mr. ATKINS. The act of July, 1870, fixes the number of officers, their grade and their rate of pay. That act has been upon the statute-book for eleven years. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Reagan] is a jurist and an investigator of law. He ought to have known these facts himself. And if he has felt the necessity for this great reform for which he is now advocating (and I sympathize with him somewhat) he should himself have come forward with a proposition to reform the Navy.

what) he should himself have come forward with a proposition to reform the Navy.

Mr. REAGAN. All that I can say to that is that if I had been upon a committee charged with the duty of looking after such matters, or if it had been my duty to consider such matters, I certainly should have done so; but I was on another committee, which required all my time and attention in another direction.

Mr. ATKINS. And I do not happen to be on a committee where such service was required from me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now proceed to read the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask consent that the first and formal reading of the hill be dispensed with.

the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now proceed to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING.

For repairs and preservation of machinery and boilers in vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase and preservation of all materials and stores; and patent rights, purchase, fitting, and repair of machinery and tools in the navy-yards and stations; wear, tear, and repair of machinery and boilers of naval vessels; incidental expenses, such as foreign postages, telegrams, advertising, freight, photographing, books, and instruments, $800,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to amend by striking out at the end of the paragraph just read "$800,000" and inserting "$1,000,000."

Mr. Chairman, the estimate submitted by the Secretary of the Navy for the Bureau of Steam Engineering was $1,000,000. For no cause that I have been able to learn it has been stricken down to $800,000. Last year the estimate submitted by the Department was $800,000 and it was allowed. So great confidence was felt in the Secretary of the Navy that the Committee on Appropriations felt justified in allowing the full amount of the estimate which he submitted. This year he has asked to have the amount increased to $1,000,000, and as I understood the Committee on Appropriations (and I suppose I am not now divulging any secret) have limited the amount to $200,000 because they appropriated that amount last year. That is the forcible reason; the great reason why they have deemed it necessary to fix the appropriation at this amount. And this has been done notwithstanding the committee had before them a statement from that bureau showing that of the $800,000 appropriated for this bureau last year there remained on hand for the use of that bureau on the 13th of the present month $12,077.79. We are of necessity confronted with a deficiency for this year; and I apprehend that the Committee on Appropriations will feel called upon in the deficiency bill which it will submit to the House to provide for the support and maintenance of this bureau for the balance of the current year.

Mr. Chairman, since this annual report was submitted another communication has been received from the Navy Department, which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 17, 1880.

Washington, December 17, 1880.

Sir: I have the honor to request that Congress will make a special appropriation under steam machinery for Bureau of Steam Engineering of $285,000, to be made immediately available, for purel-ase of materials for boilers for the United States steamers Benecia, Canandaigua, Dictator, Monongahela, New York, Ticonderoga, Wyoming, and Saugus, and of $50,000 for materials for vessels on foreign stations. I would state that I believe that the exigencies of the service which were not so manifest at the date of my annual report as at present, are such as to demand that this work should be put in hand at once; but the limited amount remaining to the credit of the appropriations for this bureau will not permit of its being undertaken unless the above special appropriation is made.

Very respectfully,

R. W. THOMPSON.

R. W. THOMPSON, Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. J. D. C. Atkins, Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Mr. HISCOCK. Taking into consideration, then, this subsequent call which has been made by the Navy Department, there is some-thing over one million three hundred thousand dollars asked for, yet the committee has deemed it wise to propose an appropriation of only $800,000, although I apprehend there is no gentleman on that committee who has investigated this question who doubts that the whole amount which has been asked will be expended, and can be

Confronting, then, the fact that we are unable to relieve our ships whose term of commission is about to expire; confronting the fact that these appropriations are urgently asked for by the Secretary of the Navy, and that no reason is submitted why his estimate should not be allowed, the committee has seen fit to strike down more than not be allowed, the committee has seen fit to strike down more than $300,000 of that estimate. In my motion, Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to give the whole amount which the Secretary of the Navy has asked for, but simply to increase this proposed appropriation of $800,000 to $1,000,000.

[Here the hammer fell,]

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations did not fix this appropriation at $800,000 simply because we made an appropriation of that amount for the same service a year ago. We did not act without reason. We had evidence before us that the appropriation of $800,000 for the Bureau of Steam Engineering will keep that particular branch of the American Navy during the next fiscal year in as good repair as it is this fiscal year, or was during the last fiscal year, when the same amount was appropriated for that bureau. I think that is a pretty good reason why we should confine ourselves to the same amount this year that we appropriated last year.

Mr. Chairman, the Bureau of Steam Engineering is one that rather gauges the other bureaus in the Navy Department. If we are to increase the appropriation for the Bureau of Steam Engineering we ought to make a corresponding increase in all the other bureaus, be-crease the appropriation for the Bureau of Steam Engineering we ought to make a corresponding increase in all the other bureaus, because, sir, it cannot be denied that in the Bureau of Steam Engineering the machinery can be preserved without detriment while not in use; it can be laid aside and kept in good order without being in use at all. The question, then, is simply whether we shall employ actively and put into commission every vessel that can be prepared for floating, or whether we shall confine our Navy to about the number of vessels that have been in commission for the last two or three vesses.

Now, I inquire of the House whether the needs of commerce demand that the Navy shall be increased. If the remarks made this morning by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Whitthorne,] the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, is an evidence of the feeling of this House and of the country, that question might be answered in the affirmative. But that gentleman also indicated that if we are to do anything with the navy we ought to begin de novo, as it were; for I believe that gentleman announced this morning that we had no navy; and I have heard distinguished naval officers make the same remark. Now, if we have no navy, I, for one, am utterly opposed to extravagant appropriations to patch up the old hulks that we have. I would prefer to see carried out the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs—a suggestion which has been made in other quarters—that if we are going to have a navy we shall make large appropriations and shall begin to build vessels of the most approved kinds, with the most approved armaments, and not take the old hulks that we have and endeavor to make good, new ships out of them.

Now, sir, the appropriation which the gentleman asks is not absolutely needed to require a single additional vessel to be put in commission for the ensuing year over and above those now in commission. And if that be true, I ask this House whether it is willing to make an appropriation of a million of dollars in the direction of building up this old navy? In my judgment, sir, we had better take these old ships and sell them. We had better dispose of them and keep the Navy about where it is as well as we can—and these appropriations will keep it where it is—and then we can proceed in the right way to have a new navy and make appropriations sufficient for that purpose.

I repeat that we have now for the ensuing year a likely prospect for having the navy in good repair. Indeed, sir, we have the testimony of the Navy Department itself that we shall have the navy in a good repair for the ensuing year with this appropriation as we have had it for the present and for the last year. I notice that the appro-had it for the present and for the last year. I notice that the appropriation for the Bureau of Steam Engineering in 1869 was as low as $674,000, and in 1870, when we had more ships in commission than now, it was only $674,000 again. It ran up for a few years, until in 1877 it amounted to $942,000; in 1878 it was $942,000 again. Last year it was $800,000, and for the present year it is $800,000.

This machinery, Mr. Chairman, will not deteriorate. It will not injure it to put it away. You can lay it aside and it can be kept in as good repair without being in use—as we have been informed by the officers of the Navy—as it would to have it in use. I trust the appropriation will be allowed to stand just as it is, because, to repeat the remarks I made at the outset, if this appropriation should be increased, as this bureau is somewhat of a gauge of all the others, it will then be necessary correspondingly to increase all these other bureaus.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to say a few words in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amend-

Mr. HISCOCK. I move pro forma to strike out the last word. I do not understand what evidence the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has that the sum indicated in this bill will support the Government in the same condition in which it is now for the coming year.

Mr. ATKINS. If the gentleman desires to know, I will furnish him with that information.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am myself certainly ignorant of any such information as that, but, before the gentleman answers my question, I desire to call his attention to a statement which I hold in my hand:

Note.—This balance will barely suffice to pay for expenditures abroad.

The statement comes from the Bureau of Steam Engineering, and it makes the exhibit that on the 13th day of this January the unexpended balance to the credit of that bureau was only $12,000. A note at the bottom says this balance will barely suffice to pay for expenditures abroad. That is the statement I have upon this question, and that is the statement, I apprehend, which the gentleman himself has upon the question, that, so far as this bureau is concerned, it is at the point of being starved out of existence.

In the brief time I have for this discussion, Mr. Chairman, I cannot allude to the suggestion which the gentleman has made that the result for four years of this species of legislation in limiting the amount of appropriation, made under his inspiration, has compelled him, on the floor here, to acknowledge to-day that we have no Navy, that it is absolutely starved out of existence, and to advise that the only course for the Government to pursue now is to sell the ships and commence the reconstruction of the Navy.

I say, sir, that the policy which has been heretofore adopted has compelled the expenditure of money on a certain number of ships, limiting it year by year, as it has been necessary to repair more ships and as larger repairs have become necessary, so that ships have gone out of the service, until now we are confronted by the fact that we have not sufficient vessels in repair to relieve those abroad when the have not sufficient vessels in repair to relieve those abroad when the term of their commission expires.

Mr.WHITTHORNE. I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from New York, but not quite for the reasons given by my colleague from Tennessee. I call the attention of the gentleman from New York, as well as that of my colleague, to this fact: that during the last session this House passed a bill to create what was termed the permanent construction fund of the Navy, and that bill looked to getting rid of what I choose now to term the débris of our existing Navy and to commence the work of reconstruction. I do not depart from the rules of the House when I state that the chairman of the Naval Committee of the Senate has informed me that bill has been reported back from his committee and is now upon the Senate Calendar, and that he proposes to take early action upon it—in fact to have it taken up he proposes to take early action upon the Senate Calendar, and that he proposes to take early action upon it—in fact to have it taken up and acted upon this week, if possible.

Now, if that bill is passed, of which I have words of decided encouragement, then there is no necessity, in my judgment, for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York. I am impressed with the conviction that there is no necessity for it.

I concur with my colleague from Tennessee when he says it is utterly useless to be expending money upon existing vessels in our Navy. It is a lamentable fact, Mr. Chairman, that we have no vessels in our Navy at the present time, with the possible exception of one or two, which are enabled to compete in speed with corresponding classes of vessels in the other navies of the world. Nor are we at all up with them in armor or armament.

them in armor or armament.

It seems to me, sir, that in this view of the case it is a useless expenditure of money to be appropriating for such a purpose, unless it is absolutely necessary that the work of repair should be continued on these existing vessels so that they may be continued in the service until others are supplied. We had better turn our backs on that and, facing the question, look to the future and the creation of a navy which shall correspond or equal in speed, armor, and armament the navies of the world. In doing this work we should be guilty of no excessive expenditures, nor is it required. Expenditures year by year should be made in the interest of meeting the progress in naval architecture, and we can go along in that way, keeping ourselves well up in naval construction, without any extravagances in our expenditure, and, in my judgment, create a navy of which our country may justly be proud.

and, in my judgment, create a navy of which our country may justly be proud.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make one suggestion in reply to the argument which has just been made. A navy is not created and cannot be created in a moment. It cannot be created in a year. It is a work which will take a long series of years to successfully accomplish. The country will be unwilling that the whole amount necessary to build up a navy, one which would do credit to the United States, shall be appropriated or an attempt made to complete the work in a single year. It is a work of time. Now, while we are building up a navy, if the next Congress shall enter upon that work, what are we to do with the naval service as at present existing? Do gentlemen mean to tell me that all our ships shall go out of commission? Do they mean to say that we shall not utilize what of commission? Do they mean to say that we shall not utilize what we have now; that we shall not repair the vessels now in service, but that the United States shall virtually abandon the seas? Are we to understand that to be the policy they would have us pursue? That is the logic of the statements and arguments which gentlemen

Now, this appropriation is asked for originally for the purpose of repairing machinery. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says that the machinery can be preserved from further deteations says that the machinery can be preserved from further deterioration. Does the gentleman mean to say that money cannot now be well spent upon that machinery? Does he mean to say that the vessels in which this machinery is used are to be condemned under the law to which he calls attention? I say, Mr. Chairman, that during the period it is necessary to build up a navy it is also necessary that the United States shall support and sustain the Navy and keep in repair its present vessels.

I am not one of those, sir, who feel fully committed to large expenditures for iron-clads and all that. A certain number of them may be necessary, but for most uses many of the ships we now have will always be serviceable. The point I make is, that while we are building up a navy it is necessary to continue the expenditures for the repairs of our present ships which, by the starvation policy heretofore adopted, have been rendered almost absolutely worthless. We must keep in repair the vessels we already have; we must utilize

Now, one suggestion further. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has said that if we increase the appropriation for this purpose we must increase the other appropriations specified in this bill. These appropriations have all been subjected to the basis of $1,000,000 for this bureau, and the chairman of the committee has approved the estimates up to this point. I do not understand that there is any necessity for an increase of appropriations in the other bureaus if this one is made.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment is ex-

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to hear the amendment again read. Mr. HISCOCK. I withdraw the formal amendment. The amendment was again read.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, listening to my friend from New York, one would suppose that there had been absolutely nothing done in the matter of keeping the vessels of our Navy in repair during the past year. I beg to take issue with the gentleman upon that point. In reply to him, I beg leave to call the attention of the committee to the last statement contained in the report of the Secretary of the Navy, who says in reference to this Bureau of Steam Engineering:

A large amount of work has been done upon the machinery and boilers of twenty six vessels of all classes. New boilers for five vessels have been farnished, and several new screw-propellers.

With this sum appropriated last year he has been enabled, accord-

With this sum appropriated last year he has been enabled, according to his own statement, to do a vast amount of work; and yet my friend from New York complains that the Department is starving.

Again he tells you that we have not money enough to keep our vessels in our foreign squadrons in commission. Now, in response to that I will read another statement in the report of the Secretary. He says in reference to the Bureau of Construction and Repair:

Repairs have been made by the Bureau of Construction and Repair during the year upon forty-three vessels. Work of the same kind is now progressing at the different yards; which is fully set forth in the report of the chief of the bureau. Some of the work of this bureau has been done in foreign ports. Two of our ships in the Asiatic squadron having needed repairs, I deemed it expedient to send out one of our naval constructors, so that they could be made under his supervision in preference to the expensive method of bringing the vessels to the Mare Island navy-yard. One of them has been completed and the other is now in hand. The experiment has turned out admirably well in an economic point of view, the expense being greatly diminished.

So that according to the view of the Secretary my friend's proposition of bringing these vessels home for repairs is entirely erroneous. Under this appropriation, which we have been making for several years, we have been able to make this display of work; and therefore, sir, there need be no apprehension in relation to the keeping of enough of our vessels in repair to do all the service required by all of the squadrons. I undertake to say there is no difficulty in having sufficient vessels for every single squadron in the whole of the Navy. My friend from New York says that a very large proportion of this money has already been expended. Well, sir, what of it? So far as that argument goes there might have been two or three times as much of this money expended. They may have spent in the first quarter the whole of it, or they may have distributed it through four quarters. It is a matter of discretion with them. We have had from year to year what my friend from New York calls small appropriaear to year what my friend from New York calls small appropriayear to year what my friend from New Tork cans small appropria-tions for the Bureau of Steam Engineering, yet in every report there are compliments to the constantly increasing betterment of the Amer-ican Navy. I trust, therefore, we shall not seek to increase this appropriation at this moment.

So that according to the view of the Secretary my friend's proposition of bringing these vessels home for repairs is entirely erroneous.

My friend, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, has very particularly called the attention of the House to the fact that if the object is to strengthen the Navy, to prepare it for a state of war, that purpose is not subserved by spending money on the repair of the vessels we have; but that the proper method is to inaugurate a new system with a different class of vessels. If this be true, our best policy in that line is to use the moneys which we have sparingly in the matter of repairing our vessels; confining it simply to such uses as we have for them in a state of peace.

Mr. ATKINS. In reply to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] I have but a single remark to make. I wish to state it was my distinct understanding from the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering that the appropriation of $800,000 would continue that bureau in all the efficiency that it has been for the last year and the present year. I desire my friend to hear me, and to understand distinctly what I say.

present year. I desire my friend to hear me, and to understand distinctly what I say.

Mr. HISCOCK. I did not catch the gentleman's remark.

Mr. ATKINS. The remark was this, that it was my understanding from the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering himself that the appropriation of $800,000 as provided in this bill will keep that hypers in all the efficiency it was in last received. bureau in all the efficiency it was in last year and that it is in this

Mr. HISCOCK. I hold the statement from the chief of the bureau which was submitted to the chairman of the committee, and a copy of it furnished to me, stating, as I have already remarked, that the whole amount now to the credit of that bureau is $12,077.79.

Mr. ATKINS. Why, sir, that does not make any difference. That amount of $12,000 is not all that was appropriated for this fiscal year. The chief of the bureau has gone on and made his improvements of machinery until he has exhausted the $675,000 that was allotted of the $800,000 for machinery. He might have done so in three months instead of eight months as far as that is concerned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to make another remark. I did not argue, neither did I understand my colleague from Tennessee, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to argue that the Navy as we have it to-day should be disbanded, or that it should be immediately sold out, or that it was entirely worthless, although the gentleman did say we have no Navy, and naval officers are in the habit of saying we have no Navy. That is a mere term they use. What we intended to say was simply this, that the Navy as it existed to-day did not justify large appropriations for the purpose of its reconstruction; but that if we intend to have a Navy in accordance with the progress of the age it would be necessary to begin de novo, it would be necessary to have different and improved armaments, improved models of vessels, and all that kind of thing to keep up with the progress of the age. That was the idea I intended to convey and which my colleague intended to convey.

My friend from Naw York has very ingeniously and admits in of the age. That was the idea I intended to convey and which my colleague intended to convey.

My friend from New York has very ingeniously and adroitly impressed upon the House that unless his amendment is adopted the Navy will fall to pieces during the coming fiscal year, and he says that has been admitted by myself on this floor. Why, sir, I distinctly stated when I first rose that the appropriation of $800,000 would keep this bureau in as good repair as it was last year, or as it has been for years. That was my distinct announcement, that is my judgment, and it was the assertion of Commodore Shock, the Chief of the Bureau of Engineering.

this bureau in as good repair as it was last year, or as it has been for years. That was my distinct announcement, that is my judgment, and it was the assertion of Commodore Shock, the Chief of the Bureau of Engineering.

It is not necessary, Mr. Chairman, that we utilize all the vessels or all the machinery we have to keep the Navy in as efficient a condition for the next fiscal year as it is now. Not at all. Why, sir, if we were to utilize all the vessels we have, all the hulks we have, all the bottoms, all the machinery, I undertake to say the sum of $500,000, large as it may be in proportion to the whole amount of this bill, would be nothing; $5,000,000, nay, $10,000,000, would not utilize all these vessels, all this machinery. But, sir, what we do propose to appropriate will be in our judgment sufficient to keep the Navy for the next fiscal year as efficient as it is now. The question is whether this House intends to reconstruct the Navy now. There is no necessity for making this large appropriation to keep the Navy as efficient for the next fiscal year as it is this; none whatever.

I will also say to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York, that he is slightly mistaken in one remark he made, and that is that we had recognized and approved all the estimates of all the other bureaus in this bill.

I beg the gentleman to recollect that we fail to appropriate nearly one hundred thousand dollars of the amount estimated for by the Bureau of Yards and Docks; and I am not quite sure there are not other bureaus whose estimates we fail to fully appropriate for. Now, if we increase the appropriation for this bureau, as the gentleman proposes to increase it, then, as it is the gauge of all the other bureaus of the Navy Department, I believe it will be necessary for us to increase the appropriations for the other bureaus of the Navy Department, I believe it will be necessary for us to increase the appropriations for the other bureaus of the present fiscal year, there remained to the eredit of this

I would state that I believe that the exigencies of the service, which were not so manifest at the date of my annual report as at present, are such as to demand that this work should be put in hand at once.

"This work" being the repair of the machinery of these vessels, as indicated in the letter which has been read from the Clerk's desk. The exigencies of the service demand that that machinery should be put in repair at once. He therefore asks that the appropriation made in this bill for that bureau be made available now, the appropriation for the bureau for the present fiscal year being practically exhausted. Now what those gentlemen have said, from which it might be inferred that all the necessary expenditure for the current fiscal year has now been made, has been anticipated, and that no further appropriation is necessary, falls to the ground in the face of this letter.

Mr. ATKINS. Will my colleague now allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.
Mr. ATKINS. Has my colleague any idea how much material is now on hand that has been purchased by that bureau?

Mr. HISCOCK. I have not.

Mr. ATKINS. Exactly. Then this sum may have been expended for material and that material may be now on hand.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have here the itemized statement showing the expenditure of the money, and it does not exhibit any great amount of material on hand.

of material on hand.

Mr. BLOUNT. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I desire to ask him whether the statement he reads from tends to convey the idea that there is only $12,000 in the Treasury which this bureau can use?

Mr. HISCOCK. That is the statement.

Mr. BLOUNT. Wait a moment. Or whether it tends to convey the idea that contracts binding the Government have been made which will cover all except $12,000 of the appropriation; which contracts are not yet fully executed?

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, I will give the gentleman the items:

To pay for material and stores on approved contracts which are now out, $6,088.75.

All of the contracts for material that were out at the date of this statement are for the amount of $6,088.77. All of the contracts which have been entered into by this bureau, and which are now outstanding, which contracts are taken into account in this statement, amount only to $68,567.54. That is the amount of the outstanding contract.

And I will state further that that item is for liabilities to January 13, 1881. That is the amount which will be due upon these contracts for the purchase of material at that date.

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to say a few words. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman having charge of this bill, [Mr. ATKINS,] whether that committee has ever considered the question of making an appropriation for constructing considered the question of making an appropriation for constructing a dry-dock at the League Island navy-yard?

Mr. ATKINS. Well, I will answer the gentleman by saying that that is a question which is being considered by the subcommittee having charge of the sundry civil appropriation bill; it is not germane to this bill at all.

Mr. O'NEILL. Then I will go on and say a few words—

Mr. ATKINS. I hope not upon that subject.

Mr. O'NEILL. Upon the question of steam engineering, and I may perhaps include in my remarks a few words concerning the dry-dock.

perhaps include in my remarks a few words concerning the dry-dock at League Island navy-yard.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] that debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Chairman, I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word. I believe that within the last three or four years we have permitted the Navy of the United States to deteriorate very much because we have not made liberal appropriations for it, very much because we have not made liberal appropriations for it, and this remark applies both to the Steam Engineering Bureau and the Bureau of Construction and Repair, and the other departments of the Navy. We have not within the last few years made such appropriations as would give us the proper dry-docks so absolutely essential in building up a navy at the proper naval stations where vessels might be repaired or completed. In the Forty-fifth Congress we made a great effort to have an appropriation made to commence the building of a dry-dock at the League Island navy-yard. That appropriation was agreed to by the sub-committee of the Committee on Appropriations and the Senate Committee on Appropriations and the Senate Committee on Appropriations and the Senate Committee on Appropriations as a part of the priations and the Senate Committee on Appropriations as a part of the sundry civil bill, but if my recollection serves me right it was struck out in some way in the Appropriations Committee of the Senate in full meeting.

I would remark just here that League Island is eminently suited for the purposes of naval construction, provided Congress will appropriate money enough to improve and put it in proper condition. We have had appropriations of a few hundred thousand dollars in the have had appropriations of a few hundred thousand dollars in the aggregate through a great many years; but this year I do not find in the report of the Secretary of the Navy that anything is asked for or proposed to be done to construct at that naval station a dry-dock, or to make the yard itself what it was intended to be when Congress accepted from the city of Philadelphia the great gift of this League Island property, embracing nearly nine hundred acres of land situated, as all gentlemen know, upon the best river of the country, where shipbuilding can most effectually be carried on, where iron, wood, and all the necessary supplies can be had; where the mechanical labor, of the Naval Committee why. Notwithstanding the terrible freezing weather we have had within the last four or five weeks the Delaware River is not ice-bound because the enterprise of citizens of Philadelphia through their city councils has built three ice-boats which are constantly breaking up the ice. There is no difficulty on account of the ice in any vessel getting up the Delaware River even in such a winter as this. I can assure the gentleman that there is no trouble in winter or in summer in reaching the League Island navy-yard. Does the gentleman like that answer? I think it is a complete answer. The gentleman never was favorable to the project of the League Island navy-yard: he never was favorable to commencing the building of a navy-yard; he never was favorable to commencing the building of a dry-dock at the League Island navy-yard; and I do not suppose he will be favorable to such a thing so long as he may remain in Con-

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that if it is important that large appropriations should be made for the Bureau of Steam Engineering, (I approved the amendment offered by the gentlemen from New York to increase this appropriation,) it is just as important for the interest of the Navy that there should be located at the League Island navy-yard a dry-dock; and I know that my friend from Virginia [Mr. Goode] of the Naval Committee, who is now looking at me, feels that way himself, because he favored us in our endeavor to get an appropriation a year or two ago.

I venture to say this much in anticipation of what may or may not priation a year or two ago.

I venture to say this much in anticipation of what may or may not be embraced in the sundry civil appropriation bill. Sir, after that great gift, which cost the city of Philadelphia nearly half a million of dollars, paid for the purchase of the island, a gift to the Government of the United States upon the understanding and pledge in the bill that a navy-yard should be constructed there, the House of Representatives and the Senate, when the bill for its acceptance was passed, believing that to be the most proper place in the country for the location of a great naval station, I, in anticipation of what may or may not be done hereafter, have desired to bring this question of drydock to the attention of this Committee of the Whole and through it to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations. to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations.

dock to the attention of this Committee of the Whole and through it to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAWLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. O'NEILL. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I renew it. Of course, Mr. Chairman, when gentlemen say that "we have no navy," it is in a "Pickwickian sense." Naval officers who say that mean simply that we have not a navy worthy of the country. We have many very good vessels, vessels in good condition now, and many more that could rapidly be put in good condition. Nor are they obsolete. There are branches of the service that will always require some vessels of that class. But I believe, as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Whittionne,] the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that it is high time for this country to deliberately devise a plan for large additions to the Navy, and for going to work in that direction with an appropriation of $5,000,000 or some other large sum for a series of years. We should take hold of the business in serious earnest; and I have not the slightest doubt that the people of the country would justify us, for the condition of our Navy is a continual subject of mortification.

But because we need these large and important additions to the Navy, some gentlemen say, Do nothing now; live from hand to mouth; keep but a small portion of our vessels afloat. That is not good policy. If large appropriations are to be made and a general plan entered upon to build up a creditable navy, should we throw away the vessels we have? Should we throw away these engines we are talking about? Not at all; this work proposed by the Navy Department now, and by the gentleman from New York, would be a part of that work, and it is a part which requires no serious investigation.

ment now, and by the gentleman from New York, would be a part of that work, and it is a part which requires no serious investigation by a board of naval officers as to whether it ought to be done or not, as would be the case with a new class of great ships. It is one of the obvious things to be done so as to save a large class of vessels with their machinery that would be useful in any navy we should devise.

Now I presume from what gentlemen have said many of them will be quite ready next winter to adopt a plan which will call for a considerable appropriation annually for putting our Navy into an efficient condition. I do not see why they should not be willing to vote $200,000 this year when it is urged upon them by the Secretary of the Navy for putting in order machinery that would inevitably be a part of any enlarged and improved navy. It is a matter of simple economy in anticipation of work which this country is certainly going to do in the next five years.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York states there are but $12,000 to the credit of this appropriation, and we are led to infer we have suddenly come to that point where we can do nothing more than what this poor, pitiful sum will enable us to do. In order to show this inference is incorrect, I have only to refer to the table of figures which the gentleman himself has presented fer to the table of figures which the gentleman himself has presented all the necessary supplies can be had; where the mechanical labor, skilled or otherwise, required in navy-yards can be obtained. Yet the Congress of the United States having accepted this great gift—

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Will the gentleman allow a question?
Mr. O'NEILL. Yes, sir.
Mr. WHITTHORNE. Is it not ice-bound now?
Mr. O'NEILL. No, sir; it is not ice-bound this day, though sometimes it has been. No portion of the Delaware River from the breakwater to Philadelphia is now ice-bound; and I will tell the chairman in the first place, we have material, stores, &c., $138,455.94. So, then, up to that time, January 13, 1881, they had actually expended for materials and stores, not consumed but actually paid out of that fund for materials, a part of which we may presume they now have on hand, the sum of $138,455.94. which we may presume they now have on hand, the sum of $135,450.94. This would make the total amount of money actually paid out $498,578.78, which would leave as a balance unexpended to pay for materials which they do not now have on hand the difference between $498,578.78 and $800,000, the amount of the appropriation for the year, which would be $301,481.22.

Now, Mr. Chairman, from the table presented by my friend from New York this was the status of this Bureau of Steam Engineering of the Navy Department upon the 13th day of January, 1881, or only a few days since. But to continue with the table of the gentleman from New York. We next have liabilities to January 13, 1881. They have made contracts, they have a quantity of supplies on hand, and requisitions have been made and approved to pay for on hand, and requisitions have been made and approved to pay for materials, stores, &c., and approved requisitions unfilled, $6,088.77; contracts and orders, &c., not yet filled but to be paid for, $68,557.54; foreign expenditures, $4,683.16; approved bills unpaid, $7,073.96. Then we have for labor at various yards for the balance of the year $203,000. This is not for labor which has been actually done, but for labor to be done. It is set down here as liabilities for labor, $203,000. So, then, they have $289,403.43 with which to pay for labor and materials and various other items. There is left $12,077 after all. The officer, in a note, says this balance will barely suffice to pay for expenditures abroad. I submit, therefore, after an examination of my friend's table, his inference, as I understood it, is an entirely unfair one.

Now, sir, I can well understand that this bureau is not satisfied Now, sir, I can well understand that this bureau is not satisfied with the amount given to it. I venture to say that in fifteen years there never has been a single report made by the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering which has been sanctioned by a single Secretary of the Navy having control of that bureau. They regard these questions just as Army officers do, simply as to what a high state of service requires. The Secretary of the Navy, as other Cabinet officers do in reference to their several Departments, when he sends in these estimates invariably cuts them down. I undertake to say, sir, that during the whole eight years of Mr. Robeson's service as Secretary of the Navy there was not a single year in which the estimates from during the whole eight years of Mr. Robeson's service as Secretary of the Navy there was not a single year in which the estimates from this Bureau of Steam Engineering were not cut down. The bureau is always eager to ask for these appropriations. I take it, therefore, this House will not accept the estimates of that bureau when it finds that even the officers presiding over the Department constantly refuse to agree to their urgent demands for larger appropriations.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I rise only because the gentleman from Georgia has seen fit to criticise the statement I made, and be-

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I rise only because the gentleman from Georgia has seen fit to criticise the statement I made, and because he seems to think it unfair. The statement says: "Expended to January 13, 1881, to pay for material, $138,455.94." I say to the gentleman that there is no evidence which he has, there certainly was none before the Committee on Appropriations, that any considerable amount of that material was on hand. It had been expended at the date I have mentioned. It doubtless had been utilized in that

In reference to the item of $6,088.77, that is the amount which is necessary to pay outstanding contracts, and it is not fair for us to assume that this bureau has on hand more than that amount of material in the face of the letter which I have had read from the Clerk's

He has also called attention to the item for "contracts and orders," the amount of which is due, or was due, upon those contracts on the 13th of January, being $68,557.54. This is not the amount which has become due during the entire year; but if these contracts continued during the year since the date mentioned, namely, the 13th of January, we have no money to pay upon them. And the whole amount, I say again, which stands to the credit of the bureau, after deducting everything which has been paid, is only $12,077.79. With no evidence and no report either before the Committee on Appropriations, and certainly none before this Committee of the Whole, that any considerable amount of material is yet on hand, I submit that that is the amount remaining as shown beyond controversy by the statement He has also called attention to the item for "contracts and orders," amount remaining as shown beyond controversy by the statement which I have submitted.

which I have submitted.

The gentleman says, also, that the estimates of that bureau have been cut down by Secretaries of the Navy, and by Appropriations Committees, I presume, also. But he seems to have forgotten that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, as a commentary upon that process, has announced here upon the floor of the House that the United States practically has no navy, and gives his approval to the policy of selling or disposing of these vessels and applying the proceeds to building up a new Navy. This cutting-down process which the gentleman from Georgia has alluded to has compelled the frank admission on the part of the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that to-day the vessels of the Navy, the ships of the United States of all kinds, are hardly worth being repaired. being repaired.

Mr. ATKINS. I demand a vote upon the amendment. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 87.

So the amendment was not agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

MARINE CORPS.

For pay of officers on the active list, as follows: For one colonel commandant, one colonel, two lieutenant-colonels, one adjutant and inspector, one quartermaster, one paymaster, four majors, two assistant quartermasters, one judge-advocate-general, United States Navy, nineteen captains, thirty first lieutenants, and fourteen second lieutenants, $172,840.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out, in lines 454 and 455, the words "one hundred and seventy-two thousand eight hundred and forty dollars" and insert "$196,320."

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. ATKINS. My point of order is that it does not reduce expenditures, but rather increases them; and that it is not in accordance with existing law. In the appropriation act of 1874 for the naval service of the Government I find the following:

For the pay of 1,500 privates, and no more, $270,000.

For the pay of 1,500 privates, and no more, $270,000.

Now, sir, I admit that the act providing for the organization of the Marine Corps originally made provision for 2,500 men, but afterward only 2,000 men were appropriated for; and I take the ground, and believe I am sustained by rulings of the Chair within the last three or four years, frequently, upon this point in appropriation bills, that this appropriation act limiting the number to 1,500 men in 1874 repealed, virtually and absolutely, that law allowing 2,500 men.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, a word in reply to the argument of the gentleman from Tennessee upon this point of order. I do not understand him to claim that the provisions of the statute—

Mr. ATKINS. Before the gentleman from New York proceeds, I wish to state further that I make this point of order also upon the ground that there is a bill now before Congress to reorganize the Marine Corps; and I think that there is a rule of the House which prohibits, if the point of order is made, an amendment to be incorporated in any bill which is the same in substance or identical with a bill pending before Congress.

porated in any bill which is the same in substance or identical with a bill pending before Congress.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, we have a general statute which provides for a marine corps; that it shall not exceed certain limits or that it shall consist of a certain number of men, &c. Now, my friend from Tennessee claims that if in one year an appropriation bill has been passed which limits the number of men, or limits the amount that shall be expended upon that service to the payment only of a given number of men, it is legislation, to the effect that if at a subsequent, period or a subsequent, year we propose to provide only of a given number of men, it is legislation, to the effect that if at a subsequent period or a subsequent year we propose to provide for the payment of a larger number of men, or of the number of men originally provided for in the statute, it is new legislation and repeals existing law. If that be true, sir, then it is utterly impossible for a bill to come in here and not be subject to that point of order which increases the amount which shall be expended in any Department of the Government. If we one year appropriated a certain sum of money for a specific purpose the words "no more" are of no consequence added to it. They repeal nothing and they enact nothing. They are mere surplusage, and I apprehend the gentleman from Tennessee hardly claims that the effect of these words upon that appropriation bill is to change or modify or vary the general statute which created the Marine Corps. It seems to me there is nothing whatever in the point of order.

reated the Marine Corps. It seems to me there is nothing whatever in the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will decide the question by sustaining the point of order. The present occupant of the chair has so ruled on previous occasions. It has been ruled otherwise by other occupants of the chair. The Chair has held, however, under the following rule that an appropriation bill fixing the number, as in this case of marines, would repeal the prior law pro tanto. The Clerk will read the third paragraph of Rule XXI.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisicition of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, I would like to have read again the words which have been read by the chairman of the Committee on Appro-

Mr. ATKINS. They are as follows:

For pay of 1,500 privates, and no more, $270,000.

That is in the appropriation act of 1874.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, do I understand—

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York for a moment.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand the Chair to hold that the language of the appropriation act which has been read so far modifies the provision of the statute creating the Marine Corps as to limit the number of men who may be engaged in the service to the number stated in the appropriation bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has held so heretofore in analogous cases, and holds so now.

Mr. HISCOCK. That it is a permanent limitation?

The CHAIRMAN. So far as this rule was intended to apply to it.

The Chair thinks the discussion upon the rule will show that.

Mr. HISCOCK. I can only say I am very much surprised at the

Mr. HISCOCK. I can only say I am very mach supported by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated there have been rulings both ways, but the ruling has always been one way by the present occupant of the chair. Does the gentleman from New York make an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. HISCOCK. No, sir.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to say, to satisfy my friend from New York, I am aware the Chair has made this decision heretofore, and it has been uniformly the decision, with one or two exceptions. Besides, it been uniformly the decision, with one or two exceptions. is provided in clause 4 of Rule XXI as follows:

No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House.

Now, here is a bill pending before this House introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Morse] "to establish and equalize the grades and regulating appointments and promotions in the Marine Corps."

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee send that bill to the Chair? The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] will proceed.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like the Chair to state the object of that Mr. HISCOCK. I would like the Chair to state the object of that bill which has been sent up.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand the Chair has ruled this amendment out of order already on one ground.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not examined the bill sent up. The Chair has already ruled the amendment out of order on one ground, and one ground is sufficient.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is the point I make.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct. The Clerk will continue to read. The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph under the heading "Marine Corps:"

For ten clerks and two messengers, $16,035; payments to discharged soldiers for clothing undrawn, $20,000; transportation of officers traveling under orders without troops, $8,000; commutation of quarters for officers where there are no public buildings, $10,000; in all, $54,035.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think it is hardly necessary the bill should be

Mr. HISCOCK. I think it is hardly necessary the bill should be read further with reference to getting the information I desire.

I confess I am surprised that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Atkins] should have deemed it necessary to furnish the Chair with what he believed to be a good reason for the ruling of the Chair after the decision of the Chair had been announced, and that a reason independent of the one upon which the Chair based his decision. Now I suggest again to the Chair as bearing on this question—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from New York that he has heretofore ruled on this point somewhat elaborately. The Chair will further state that in that former decision he referred to a decision of the Court of Claims which, if the Chair remembers rightly, held that an appropriation bill, though annual, was a law for all purposes. It will be found in the RECORD. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] rise to a point of order?

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to make a further statement of fact.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman appeal from the decision of the Chair? of the Chair?

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, no; I desire to make a statement of fact, if the Chair will allow me. I think I can satisfy the Chair that he made his decision under a misapprehension of the facts. I am not trying to quarrel with that decision or to reflect upon it.

I think if the Chair will again look at the language of the act submitted to the Chair, which the gentleman from Tennessee has read, it will be found that it applies not to the amount which was to be appropriated for the officers, but to the amount which was to be appropriated for the privates. And certainly there is nothing in that provision which puts any limitation upon the number of officers who may be employed in the service. If I am right, then I have not the least doubt in the world that the Chair will recognize the fact that he has made his decision under a misapprehension of the facts.

he has made his decision under a misapprehension of the facts.

Mr. ATKINS. Not at all. I beg to state to the gentleman from New York that these estimates were revised on the basis of fifteen hundred men and that the number of officers were provided for accordingly. Consequently the language I read would apply to the

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman from Tennessee send to the Clerk's desk the provision to which those words of limitation are attached, and let it be read?

Mr. ATKINS. I have no objection; I have already read it half a dozen times. But I want to state now, in reply to the gentleman from New York, that the estimates were sent in first for 2,000 men, and for officers in accordance with that number. The majority of the sub-committee—for the gentleman from New York dissented from the views of the majority—were not willing to allow more than 1,500 privates. They asked, therefore, that the estimates should be revised in accordance with that number. That was done. If you had had 2,000 men you would have had, of course, to provide for the additional number of officers, and that limitation would apply to the officers as well as to the men.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the clause of the act.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of 1,500 privates, and no more, $270,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, I suppose it is very clear that limitation of the number of men-

the number of men—
Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a question of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BLOUNT. I do not understand there is anything before the committee. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is now discussing a point of order which was made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and which was ruled on by the Chair; and the Clerk had read on beyond that point. The gentleman's remedy was an appeal from the decision of the Chair, which he did not make. I insist that the Clerk shall proceed with the reading of the bill. bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I want to say that I do not desire to flee from the merits of this question at all. Here is the fourth section of Rule XXI. I read it a moment ago in the hearing of the House. It says plainly that-

No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incor-porating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House.

It will be remembered that when I raised the point of order I gave It will be remembered that when I raised the point of order I gave two reasons for it; one was founded on that portion of the rule which has been read at the Clerk's desk; the other upon that portion of the rule which I have just read. In my opinion the amendment of the gentleman is out of order under either.

The gentleman now seeks to make a technical objection to the ruling of the Chair, simply upon the ground that the appropriation bill applies only to the privates and not to the officers; while his amendment applies to the officers. I realise that that ment applies to the officers. I replied to that point a moment ago, that if we provide for 2,000 men, as he proposes to do, we would be obliged to have an additional number of officers. Consequently the spirit of the rule applies to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the committee now rise and report this bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Cox reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6969) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment, and to recommend that it be passed.

Mr. ATKINS. I call for the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed. The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. MURCH. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURCH. Can an appropriation bill be passed without the veas and navs!

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, under the rule. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 215, nays none, not voting 77; as follows:

tified in voting.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST-ROUTES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Acting Postmaster-General, relative to post-routes; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

DISBURSING CLERK OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to additional compensation for the disbursing clerk of the Interior Department for services as disbursing officer of the Census Bureau; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Tenth Census.

DORA WESTPHALEN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to the Indian-depredation claim of Dora Westphalen; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORT OF CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER FOR 1880

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief Signal Officer requesting that 10,000 additional copies of his report for 1880 be printed; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MULLER for two days.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 1327) to grant lands to Dakota, Montana, Arizona, Idaho, and Wyoming for university purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr.

McDonald, Mr. Hill of Colorado, and Mr. Walker.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution and bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 144) authorizing the loan of certain flags and bunting to the committee on inaugural ceremonies;

A bill (S. No. 529) to provide for the better care and protection of quartermaster supplies;
A bill (S. No. 542) for the relief of Benjamin C. Bampton; and A bill (S. No. 548) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6972) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. SIMONTON. I reserve all points of order on that bill.

Mr. CALKINS. I now take the floor and yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. LORING.]

The SPEAKER. Before the gentleman from Massachusetts proceeds, the Clerk will read the resolution appended to the report of the committee.

I agree, except as to the opinion expressed on the registration law. The vote of the person who received aid from the town within two years, but who was not receiving aid at the time of the election, should be counted.

Mr. LORING. Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the House at this time, not for the purpose of defending myself, but for the purpose of defending the Commonwealth which I in part represent on this

I have noticed, sir, that Massachusetts is quite liable to be sharply criticised here and elsewhere. In this matter now before the House she is charged by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Weaver,] the minority of the Committee on Elections, with resorting to an act of dishonesty, to a petty trick, in order to retain her representation in Congress and her electoral vote in spite of the deliberate disfranchisement of her citizens. I think, moreover, her civil policy and the record she has won by her relations to the Federal Government and to her sister States have been somewhat misunderstood on a former occasion. And notwithstanding the prompt and vigorous vindication she then received from abler and worthier sons than I am, I must beg the House to bear with me while I set forth what I conceive to be her true record as an independent State and as a part of the American Republic, her character and the course she has pursued, to do which I must go beyond the simple question before the House.

The right to hold the seat I now occupy having been confirmed by an almost unanimous vote of the Committee on Elections, I am entirely satisfied to leave the final decision of the question to the House, before whom the arguments on both sides have been liberally spread, without debate so far as I am concerned; and were there no unusual circumstances attending these arguments, I should not now step out of the course commonly pursued by contestees in election cases, and ask to be heard. During the two years in which I have been bound and burdened by this contest, and in which a Congress of unparal leled interest and importance has nearly passed away, every effort has been made by recount and investigation, involving a single vote in this town and that in my district, and the application of critical rules to the form of the ballot, and by fancy sketches of personal oppression and wrong, to deprive me of my legally declared election. I think, and in this the committee seem almost unanimously to agree with me, that the questions of this description involved in the case have been satisfactorily settled by the testimony in my behalf and by the argument of my counsel.

SUFFRAGE.

The case, however, has been carried further than this, beyond the mere details of personal controversy and of casting and challenging and counting the ballot, into an unwarrantable attack on the Com-monwealth of Massachusetts, on her constitutional provisions relat-ing to suffrage, the principles on which her laws are founded and administered, the suffrage qualifications she has imposed upon her citizens. It is charged upon her not only that her citizens have been exposed to what is called "civilized bulldozing" but that they have been largely disfranchised by legal enactment and constitutional probeen largely disfranchised by legal enactment and constitutional provision. It is alleged in the minority report presented by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Weaver,] in which is published an elaborate statement of the wholesale disfranchisement of citizens taken from the brief of the counsel of the contestant in this case, that of the 490,158 ratable polls in 1878, 113,657 are disfranchised on account of being aliens, illiterates, paupers, non-tax-payers, convicts, idiotic, and insane; and that inasmuch as only 256,332 actually voted, it follows that one-third of the voting population of the State was disfranchised.

"All those citizens of the United States," says the report, "i. e., those who cannot read and write, who have not paid their taxes, or are so unfortunate as at some time in their lives to have required aid from the public, are by the laws in force in Massachusetts deprived "Leaving out the idiots, insane, aliens, and convicts, it appears de-monstrable that 134,256 citizens of the United States have their im-monstratic that 134,250 citizens of the United States have their immunities and privileges abridged and are deprived of their right to vote in that State," adds the report in chorus with the brief.

We are reminded, moreover, that under article 14 of the amendments to the Constitution, and under section 6, chapter 11 of the acts of 1872, "the number of Representatives apportioned in this act to such State shall be reduced in the proportion which such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State," should such State "deny or abridge these rights," "after the passage of this act;" and it is charged upon Massachusetts that in violation of this act and the amendment on which it is founded, and for political purposes, by an act of 1874, two years after the passage of the act of Congress, she so disfranchised her citizens as to substantially diminish her delegation in Congress from eleven to eight Representatives, and her electoral vote from thirteen

In other words, the State took advantage of the apportionment according to the whole number of people granted by Congress in 1872, in order to get the representation, and then deliberately disfranchised, in the face of the law, quite two-fitths of her voters, so that a few—scarcely half—of her citizens might control it.

Now, the answer to all this is easy. The disqualification in Massachusetts on account of illiteracy was created by the article 20 of the amendments to the constitution, adopted in May, 1857, and enforced by statute in 1860, twelve years before the apportionment of 1872 was made. For twenty years this statute has been known and recognized of all men. Various attempts to repeal it have failed. The learned counsel for the contestant, Hon. B. F. Butler, whose steps the gentleman from Iowa, the minority of the committee, has endeavored to follow, knew this when on December 21, 1869, three years before the act of Congress of 1872 was passed, he declared in this House—

Brerybody in Massachusetts can vote, irrespective of color, who can read and write. The qualification is equal in its justice. It is well that Massachusetts requires her citizens should read and write before being permitted to vote. And there are hundreds and thousands in this country who would thank God on bended knees if it could be provided that the voters in the city of New York should be required to read and write. They would then believe republican government in form and fact more safe than now

Nor does this measure of disqualification, together with all those which are by the laws of Massachusetts added to it, produce the startling effect presented by the figures of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] or convict Massachusetts of bad faith in the matter of apportionment for Representatives in Congress and presidential electors. Taking his figures, namely, 134,256, and of that number, according to his tables, 86,258 are aliens and therefore not citizens. Now, add to this last the number of paupers, idiots, criminals, and insane, namely, 9,271, and we have 95,529 disqualified for the above reasons, leaving 38,727 to be otherwise accounted for. Of these 14,691 naturalized citizens and 3,437 natives, or only 18,128, are dissorblied for illitoreous. qualified for illiteracy.

It is upon these figures that the charge of wholesale disfranchise-ment is based, and the demand for the reduction of the representative and electoral vote of Massachusetts is made by the minority of the committee and by one of her former representatives in this House, one who accepted the apportionment as a candidate for Congress in 1874, and witnessed as a member-elect the counting of her thirteen electoral votes in the great contest of 1876-777.

There is no ground for this charge, no foundation for this demand.

Massachusetts in recognizing the propriety of qualified suffrage has done no more than has been done by all her sister States in this

The right of a State to disqualify is not demanded and recognized by her alone. With the exception of natural disqualifica-tions, such as minority, insanity, and idiocy, the obstacles interposed by law between the citizen and the ballot-box are easily surmounted; but still they exist and enter into the system of suffrage everywhere. In every State the citizen attains the right to vote not until he has reached his majority. Most of the States disqualify paupers and inmates of asylums; several provide in their constitutions that they shall not be disqualified or their residence lost. Many States require a residence of two years; some of one year, some of three months. Persons under guardianship are, in several States, deprived of the right to vote; in one, "persons excused from paying taxes at their own request;" in two, Indians not taxed.

The constitution of one of the youngest States provides that the Legislature "may at its discretion make the payment of a poll-tax a condition to the right of voting." Another of the youngest States, Texas, has provided that "in all elections to determine expenditures of money or assumption of debt only those shall be qualified to vote who pay taxes on property" in the city or town where the expenditure is to be made or an existing debt assumed. In Massachusetts the constitution has provided from the beginning that every male citizen tution has provided from the beginning that every male citizen twenty-one years of age, except paupers and persons under guardianship, who shall have resided in the Commonwealth one year, and shall have paid any State or county tax within two years, may vote. In 1857 the reading and writing clause was added.

By one of her immediate neighbors, the State of Vermont, it is provided that a citizen who is twenty-one years of age, "and is of a quiet and peaceable behavior," may exercise the right of suffrage as his prerogative, and the political career of this well-ordered Commonwealth bears abundant testimony to the principle on which her suffrage is bears abundant testimony to the principle on which her suffrage is based. The Constitution of Connecticut requires the voter to be able to read any article of the Constitution or any section of a stat-

The variety of disqualification found in the State constitutions is The variety of disqualification found in the State constitutions is interesting and important. So far as residence is concerned some of the requirements are as follows, namely: Michigan, two and a half years; Kentucky, two years; Alabama, Delaware, Florida, Illinois, Maryland, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Rhode Island, Texas, West Virginia, Virginia, one year; Maine, three months; California, Colorado, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, six months. The payment of State, county, and capitation taxes is required in Delaware, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts. Tennessee, Virginia, and some other States. Education of the States. Massachusetts, Tennessee, Virginia, and some other States. Educational qualifications exist in Massachusetts and Connecticut, the Legislature of California being empowered by the constitution to impose this qualification after 1890. Now it will be noticed that all disqualifications arising from provisions like those to which I have referred partake in no sense of the nature of disfranchisement under the four-teenth amendment of the Constitution. None of them are insur-mountable. None of them are analogous to disqualification on account of race or color, which is insurmountable. And on this account they cannot be brought under any provision of the Constitution which reduces State representation or the electoral college for the reason of disfranchisement.

In the collected constitutions, therefore, of all her sister States may found in various forms and combinations the disqualifications which Massachusetts originally ingrafted on her own. In her more recent history, however, she has added one more, a disqualification which is easily accounted for when we consider her long and eventwhich is easily accounted for when we consider her long and eventful career in the work of founding popular government. To the founders of her civil institutions suffrage was the highest privilege which the State could bestow upon its most worthy citizens. In the Plymouth colony this privilege was enjoyed only by those who were connected with the church, a hard provision for these days I fear, sir; and it was accordingly ordered "to the end the body of commons may be preserved of honest and good men, that, for the time to come, no man shall be admitted to the freedom of this body-politic but such as are members of the churches of the same;" and so "it debarred from the exercise of the elective franchise all, however honest, who were nuwilling to conform to the standard of colonial orthodoxy." were unwilling to conform to the standard of colonial orthodoxy

In the colony of Massachusetts Bay the people, "bent on exercising their absolute power," were obliged to resist the influence of Cotton and Winthrop, who, with all their love of freedom, had not yet learned the true intent and meaning of popular government as we learned the true intent and meaning of popular government as we understand it. And as late as 1778, Theophilus Parsons, afterward the great chief-justice of the Commonwealth, in his famous essay, known as the Essex Result, upon the proposed constitution of Massachusetts, suggested a senate as a body representing the property of the State, and recommended that "each freeman who is possessed of a certain quantity of property may be an elector of senators"—a proposition which was rejected by the people, who were in advance of their leaders, as their fathers were in colonial days, and who already insisted that a legislative body should represent the people and not the property of the Commonwealth. property of the Commonwealth.

EDUCATION.

Call this what you will, it indicated a desire and determination to lay the foundations of the State upon the best elements of society. And it is not surprising that in later years, after a long trial of the free suffrage confirmed by the constitution, and at a time when illiteracy seemed to cast a shadow over the Commonwealth, a new qualification should have been added to those already in existence—a qualification which, under the light of schools and colleges on every hand, seemed to be by no means insurmountable. Whoever doubts the justice or wisdom or expediency of this measure cannot be unmindful that it is a crop easily grown on Puritan soil; for we cannot forget that it was the education of youth in "literature and sound doctrine"—intellectual, moral, and religious culture—which occupied the attention of those who founded the two immortal colonies which united to form the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. They had learned the importance of this at home from the experience of their own firesides, from the dialectic necessities which attended non-conformism, from the obligation which every dissenter laid upon himself to defend his faith, from the natural impulse o a mind freed from civil and ecclesiastical bonds and left to its own independent search for truth, from the declaration of the great reformer that "Governification should have been added to those already in existence-a to defend his faith, from the natural impulse o a mind freed from civil and ecclesiastical bonds and left to its own independent search for truth, from the declaration of the great reformer that "Government, as the natural guardian of all the young, has the right to compel the people to support schools."

More than two hundred years ago the feeble towns of Massachusetts, actuated by this principle even while holding a precarious existence in a savage wilderness, made grants of land for educational purposes. Amidst the hardships and in the gloomy isolation of colonial life, the stern ascetic fathers knew and felt the first approach of sin. Satan came among them, not clad in all the allurements and charms of cultivated and fashionable society, but appealing at once to their grosser passions, which the severe and rigorous restraints of their laws and a somewhat hard and discouraging philosophy irritated to a spirit of defiance and rebellion. They believed in his personality, and in my own district they fought him accordingly. They knew how prone to barbarism is a life in the wilderness. They knew the value of that cheerful courage with which education and religion fill the heart amidst the refinements of civilized life. And while dark cloud hung over them, and the weight of stern endeavor pressed upon them, and the tempter assailed the secret and hidden recesses of their hearts, and there was no relief to the gray and somber coloring of upon them, and the tempter assailed the secret and hidden recesses of their hearts, and there was no relief to the gray and somber coloring of life, and there was no external beauty to cheer the soul, either of song, or picture, or church, or symbol, they frowned upon their gross and human weaknesses and turned to the school-house and the meeting-house for their support and inspiration. They believed in an educated commonwealth and in the power of an enlightened mind to dispel the gloom of the wilderness and to diffuse a yital heat through the coldest and darkest caverns of the human heart—the heat given to more ardent souls by music and poetry and eloquence and art and the luxurious sublimity of architecture, expressive of human aspirations and desires. and desires

The bestowal of gifts upon schools and colleges was the sacrifice which the Puritan made on the altar at which he worshiped. An which the Puritan made on the altar at which he worshiped. An educated man he respected; an ignorant man he despised; believing that it was "one chiefe project of ye ould deluder, Sathan, to keepe men from the knowledge of the Scriptures." And he even witnessed with composure the operation of the school-house in bringing men to the enjoyment of suffrage—that sacred right which he had reserved to the church alone. His school-house, moreover, brought men to a level. It revolutionized town after town, until the right to vote became as universal as the right to hold property. The right to eivil position became general, and the graduate of the district school passed on into the town meeting to take his part in that controversy and debate which developed the popular powers of the times into a capacity for the largest civil duty.

In many a Massachusetts town the problem of free government was worked out long before it became a national question. The equality

In many a Massachusetts town the problem of free government was worked out long before it became a national question. The equality of all boys in the school-house, the equality of all men in the town meeting—this original colonial condition created a necessity for larger and higher declarations. And so in one town they struck for suffrage in the beginning; in another they resolved that "all men are created equal, and have a right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," and recorded the resolve on their "town-book" more than three years before the declaration of our national independence. I am confident it was the school-house which did this, raising the popular mind up to a general standard, of which the great men of our past history are but individual representatives, developing a people of whom Washington as a warrior and Jefferson as a civilian were the leaders, and verifying in its noblest sense that saying of Lord Bacon, that "in the management of practical affairs the wisdom of the wisest man is less reliable than the deliberate and concurrent judgment of common minds."

It was in accordance with this idea that Massachusetts while yet in

It was in accordance with this idea that Massachusetts while yet in her infancy placed upon her statute-book an act to provide for the in-struction of youth and for the promotion of good education. In that act the popular estimate of the value of education is embodied. With relicity of speech unusual, with a regard for religion and human elevation worthy of all praise, with an intellectual fervor which illumines the statutes and which stands out in delightful contrast with the usual chilling expressions of the law, her Legislature passed an act in May, 1647, which established the system of common schools.

To the end that learning may not be buried in the graves of our forefathers, in church and Common wealth, the Lord assisting our endeavors, it is therefore ordered by this court and authority thereof, that every township in this jurisdiction, after the Lord hath increased them to fifty householders, shall then forthwith appoint one within their towns to teach all such children as shall resort to him to write and read.

It is the spirit of this act which has directed the educational system of Massachusetts from its passage until now. Starting forth as she did with this high resolve, her institutions of learning have increased in number and prosperity until she has become literally the nursery of education and educated men. In the advance-guard of civilization, as it travels westward, may be found her young men, graduates of her schools, prepared to plant the school-house within the fortifications and palisades of the frontier. Within her limits no branch of science, or thought, or speculation on education goes unexplored; and when from the schools of the Old World the energetic plored; and when from the schools of the Old World the energetic and enterprising scholar turns his eye toward this country as toward a new field for investigation, and looks for that spot where he may find a genial atmosphere it is often the Commonwealth of Massachusetts which presents the most alluring charms. I cannot forget the encouraging and flattering fact that Massachusetts presented the most attractive home for Agassiz when he determined to bring his scholarship and his science to America.

And how faithful has Massachusetts been in this great enterprise of popular education. In peace and in war she has never faltered. Notwithstanding the heavy drafts made upon her treasury during the civil war her expenditures for education steadily increased; and the civil war her expenditures for education steadily increased; and when peace came, with its accumulated indebtedness, the schools received, if possible, still more earnest care.

In 1878 her population was about one million seven hundred thousand, and for this community there were provided 5,730 public schools with 310,181 pupils, taught by 8,508 different teachers. Included in the number of public schools are 216 high schools, having 595 teachers and 19,574 pupils. There were also in the Commonwealth 399 private and parochial schools, with 15,574 pupils, and 64 academies with 8,454 pupils, making the entire number of pupils in the public schools, private schools, and academies 334,175.

The amount raised by local taxation for the support of schools was $4,191,510.77, the amount appropriated by the towns was $60,833.58.

The whole amount expended for public schools, including wages of teachers, fuel, care of fires and school room, superintendence and printing, repairs and building, was $5,166,987.92.

In addition to this her colleges have been liberally supported; and it has been estimated that her sons have bestowed more than a million dollars, in private subscription and bequest, upon the fortunate ion dollars, in private subscription and bequest, upon the fortunate recipients of their bounty.

I present these facts, Mr. Speaker, not for the purpose of glorifying any one State in this Union, nor for the purpose of drawing contrasts and comparisons between herself and her associates. The influence of the Puritan fathers has spread too far and wide to make such com-of the Furitan fathers has spread too far and wide to make such comparisons possible.

In the business of education in our country there is no rivalry, but rather a universal desire to complete the original design of an educated republic and to lay the foundations of society and state everywhere on sound learning. If this ambition leads to errors, they are errors and mistakes which can easily be remedied and removed. To oppression and wrong it cannot lead. If it establishes a disqualification, it at the same time provides a cure. And if it is a natural impulse created by long and earnest devotion to the cause of education it is an imby long and earnest devotion to the cause of education, it is an impulse which can easily be forgiven even by those who would place the right of suffrage beyond the reach of qualification or restraint. The gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Weaver,] the minority of the committee, calls upon this House to remedy the wrongs which are perpetrated in calls upon this House to remedy the wrongs which are perpetrated in that Commonwealth by an oppressive system of suffrage qualification. I doubt not the House now understands the full extent of the wrong, and appreciates the liberality and earnestness with which Massachusetts herself provides the remedy. "Wholesale disfranchisement of citizens in Massachusetts and other States calls for prompt action by Congress," says the other gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. GILLETTE,] in his appeal to this House to lay aside the funding bill and attend to pleuro-pneumonia and its apparently kindred disease, bulldozing. But Massachusetts points to her record and congratulates herself and the country that Congress is even now manifesting a disposition to endow and encourage popular education, and to follow the example of the Puritan fathers and the founders of all the new and rising States of the Union, by dedicating the public lands to the cause of education. As one of the Representatives of Massachusetts in this House, I would suggest to the gentlemen from Iowa that this is the lesson taught by Massachusetts in her honorable career of more than two hundred and fifty years.

THE PURITANS I have dwelt somewhat elaborately, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps somewhat tediously on the working of the Puritan element in Massachusetts, in the direction of popular education especially, because it is now generally considered to be one of the vital forces of our country. It is an element on which the historian never ceases to dwell. It has inspired some of the most brilliant paragraphs of the most powerful English essayists. It has inspired the poet with some of his loftiest thought, the artist with some of his noblest conceptions. It has arrested the attention of the most thoughtful and progressive statesmen of our own day, and has drawn forth the warmest tributes of gratitude and praise from the reformer and the philanthropist. The great libaeral leader of England, struggling with the difficult and trying problems of state and society which vex the mind of his own country to-day, and searching with eager eye for some firm and substantial foundation of human government, has declared that "the Puritan element has given the American Republic its permanency and power." Without large possessions they established the system of citizen-pro-prietorship and of a division and conveyance of lands which has been prietorship and of a division and conveyance of lands which has been adopted and promised by political reformers everywhere. Not socially powerful, they destroyed all fixed classification, caste, and legitimacy, and built up society with equality as its corner-stone. Recognizing an ecclesiastical power in the State, they nevertheless insisted on the enjoyment of the highest civil opportunity by all men; and out of the stern necessities which rested upon them they learned the real value of labor as the source of man's true prosperity and happiness. Powerful as their influence was in the land from whence they came, it has been vastly more powerful in our own country where the strength of labor as the source of man's true prosperity and happiness. Powerful as their influence was in the land from whence they came, it has been vastly more powerful in our own country where the strength of our Republic consists in the energy and strength and force of each of its component parts. The defiant earnestness of those men whose faith neither the storms of ocean nor the gloom of the wilderness could quench is the American characteristic still engaged in peopling and developing this continent from latitude to latitude and from sea to sea. [Applause.]

Now, sir, how could a State animated by this force fail to make itself felt in all the great crises which have attended the formation and growth of that free republic of which it forms a part? As a colony Massachusetts was always heard when the great occasion called for great utterance—and always responded to the high and honorable appeal of others. Torn and riven by internal contentions, tossed on a sea of ecclesiastical controversy, this colony of school-houses and meeting houses, presented always a solid front for popular right and privilege. The people of Plymouth and Massachusetts Bay were a valiant as well as a godly people. They carried "the sword of the Lord and of Gideon," as their comrades and brothers did at Marston Moot and Naseby, and they believed as much in the courage of Miles Standish as they did in the holiness of Elder Brewster. [Applause.] During the two centuries and a half of their existence on this continent they have been ready at any time to gird on the sword. In the early Indian wars they traversed the forests with the fatal persistency of the slow. have been ready at any time to gird on the sword. In the early Indian wars they traversed the forests with the fatal persistency of the slow-hound from the waters of the bay to the slopes of the Green Mountains, and from the blazing towns of Bristol and Essex to the eastern lakes upon whose bosoms fall the shadows of Agamenticus and Mount Washington. In the last great struggle of France to retain her foot-hold on this continent the soldiers of Massachusetts stormed the Heights hold on this continent the soldiers of Massachusetts stormed the Heights of Abraham with Wolfe, and cherished his memory for generations in their households; the merchants of Massachusetts supplied the outfit for the siege of Louisburgh, and left behind them as a proud memento for their sons the tokens of regard for their devotion bestowed upon them by the colonial legislature; and to-day the Senate of Massachusetts as it assembles in its chamber passes beneath the Puritan drum which beat the tattoo and the Puritan musket which blazed in the line when the power of the mother country was established along the waters of the Saint Lawrence and far on toward the frozen seas.

Is there an American in this House or out of it, whether a native or an adopted son, wheresoever his home may be within the limits of the Republic, who is not proud to stand on the green at Lexington, in the early sunlight of that spring morning, or at the bridge at Concord, where "the embattled farmers stood And fired the shot heard round the world," a Puritan soldiery, and a series of heroic events commenced which, ending at Yorktown, gave us a common country? The history of mankind is radiant with its record of great deeds and inspiring endeavor, but not one can outshine that wonderful picture of devotion and valor where a little band of Puritan rustics defied the military authority of Great Britain and fired that first gun whose echoes roused the colonies and brought New England and New York, New Jersey and Delaware, Pennsylvania and Virginia, Maryland and the Carolinas and Georgia, into a sacred association whose memories are still fondly cherished and whose bond is not yet broken.

WAR OF 1812.

That there should have been differences of opinion among a people That there should have been differences of opinion among a people so filled with an earnest purpose is not surprising. Their teachers and orators had stored their minds with the profoundest civil and religious problems drawn from the few somber and didactic volumes which filled their narrow libraries, and which were brought even into the early years of the Puritan's education. While they fought they discussed also; and from the time when Adams and Otis and Quincy and Warren inflamed their hearts with a love of freedom and moved them to respond to the words of Henry and Mason and Lee of Virginia, down to the hour when the constitutional powers were all adjusted, and the State and the Republic had entered upon their career, the intellectual activity of Massachusetts was felt throughout the land, and her schools and colleges were educating statesmen for career, the intellectual activity of Massachusetts was felt throughout the land, and her schools and colleges were educating statesmen for the councils and soldiers for the armies of the country even while her political differences were positive and sometimes bitter—so that she has often been misunderstood. So true is this that when the war of 1812 broke out it was for a time difficult to decide where the abttle raged most hotly, whether between the two political parties which divided Massachusetts in those days or between the hostile armies on the battle-field and between the contending navies on the high seas. The people were exasperated by the political proscription of the party in power. Their commerce was swept from the high seas; their ports were closed by the embargo. But in the midst of their distress they never forgot that the impressment of American seamen by the commanders of British ships of war; their doctrine and system of blockade; their adoption of the orders in council which destroyed American commerce, together with a long and unsatisfied demand for remuneration on account of depredations committed by the subjects of Great Britain on the lawful commerce of the United States, were causes of war which a high-toned and spirited people should not overlook. It is true the condemnation of the war was bitter and unreasonable, but the support it received was warm and patriotic. Said John Adams from his dignified retirement, "I have thought it both just and necessary for five or six years." In the Legislature the house disapproved and the senate ably sustained the war measures, stating in an eloquent and powerful appeal to the people measures, stating in an eloquent and powerful appeal to the people-

When engaged with this same enemy our fathers obeyed the calls of their country, expressed through the authority of their edicts. In imitation of their example, let the laws everywhere be obeyed with the most prompt alacrity; let the constituted authorities be aided by the patriotic attempts of individuals; let the friends of the Government rally under committees of public safety in each town, district, and plantation; let a common center be formed by a committee in each county, that seasonable information may be given of the movements of the enemy; let our young men who compose the militia be ready to march at a moment's warning to any part of our shores in defense of our coast. * * And relying on the patriotism of the whole people, let us commit our cause to the God of battles, and implore his aid and success in the preservation of our dearest rights and privileges.

Notwithstanding the views of Governor Strong and the party which he represented, the records of the Commonwealth are filled with the deeds of popular devotion to the cause of the country and with hearty responses to the valor of her defenders on land and sea. The long coast-line extending from Eastport to Cape Cod was carefully guarded by State and national authorities alike, and the governor, who had declared that there was no intention on his part to resist the laws of the Federal Government, ordered a portion of the militia to march to Passamaquoddy for the defense of the ports and harbors of the eastern borders of the State; measures were taken for the defense of the State by large appropriations, and the General Government was called on for arms and ammunition to be used in the defense; the Senators and Representatives in Congress were instructed to use their influand Representatives in Congress were instructed to use their influence in the national legislature for an immediate augmentation of the naval force of the United States; and the Legislature was disposed also to view with favor the proposition previously made that the State should build a 74-gun ship to be presented to the United States. That there was a response to the anti-war resolutions passed at a meeting in New York attended by the most distinguished men of the State, among whom were John Jay, Rufus King, and Gouverneur Morris, I am well aware; but there was also a strong feeling of loyalty and devotion which found expression in the pulpit, in the halls of legislation, at the town-meetings, among all ranks and orders of men.

legislation, at the town-meetings, among all ranks and orders of men. Said the wise and thoughtful Dr. Channing, just then rising to his great distinction as the prophet of a new faith:

All wanton opposition to the constituted authorities; all censures of rulers originating in a factious, aspiring, or envious spirit; all unwillingness to submit to laws which are directed to the welfare of the community, should be rebuked and repressed by the power of public indignation.

repressed by the power of public indignation.

While one party charged the war to a base spirit of devotion to France, and the other party charged the opponents of the war with being under British influence, the people defended their coasts, manned the decks of our Navy, rejoiced with Hull in his victory, and took the gallant old frigate to their hearts forever: brought the ashes of Lawrence tenderly home, and buried them in the soil of my own county of Essex, and sacredly laid the remains of the two contending commanders who fell in the sea fight off the coast of the province of Maine, side by side in the cemetery of Portland. Clergymen who had denounced the war left their pulpits to lead their flocks to the contest with the invaders.

province of Maine, side by side in the cemetery of Portland. Clergymen who had denounced the war left their pulpits to lead their flocks to the contest with the invaders.

The State furnished more than five thousand soldiers, and more sailors, five regiments of infantry, being second only on the list, New York having furnished six, Pennsylvania with four, and Vermont with four standing next, all the other States furnishing from one to three. Of the officers of the army at the opening of the war, Massachusetts had one major-general of the two commanding, three brigadier-generals of the ix, one hospital surgeon of the six, one garrison surgeon of the two, and the colonel of engineers. Of the number of men she sent into the Navy it is impossible to speak, the hardy men of her maritime towns, from Eastport to Cape Cod, thronging the decks of the Navy wherever an emergency required, and when the war ended it was found that the bold, defiant, and patriotic town of Marblehead alone, in my own congressional district, had five hundred men confined in the dungeons of Dartmoor prison.

I refer to this record, sir, because the loyalty and bravery of the Commonwealth have been called in question; and as an illustration of the value of actual service over that of partisan utterances in the great conflicts of both peace and war. Of her more recent deeds on the battle-field it is unnecessary for me to speak. There are many on the floor of this House who have stood side by side with her sons, and many who have met them face to face in mortal combat; and they can bear witness whether the reputation of the fathers has been sustained or not.

Influence of Massaghuseris.

tained or not.

INFLUENCE OF MASSAGHUSETIS.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the manifest influence which this Commonwealth of free schools and protesting churches has exerted upon the States which have grown up around her since the days of her colonial condition—an influence which I trust no American citizen desires to repudiate or deny. The existence of Puritan modes of thought, Puritan habits, Puritan theories of government, the system of education, the constitutions and laws born of Puritan ambition and Puritan protests, in that great cluster of States occupying the northern and northwestern section of our Republic, indicates the fountain from which this great current of civilization sprang. Among the noble deeds which have contributed to the power and commanding presence of this Republic I know of none which is more admirable on account of its princely bestowal, or more striking on account of its influence, than the gift of the Northwest Territory to the United States by the Commonwealth of Virginia. And next to this comes the impressive fact that a son of Massachusetts dedicated this vast territory to the social and civil policy of his native State.

policy of his native State.

When Virginia gave the land and Massachusetts gave the law which, united, have fed and guided the intelligent and enterprising population of that great section, they performed an act second only to the work which they accomplished as they went hand in hand in the early days of the Revolution; and to that region thus bestowed and thus dedicated, the sons of Massachusetts have carried those institutions and habits and customs which neither time nor trial has destroyed in the spot from whence they sprang. There may be found the civil systems of the pilgrim fathers, the school-house, the town-meeting, the division and conveyance of land, the individual independence, the frugality and thrift, the manners and customs, the freedom of thought, the abiding faith, which were planted early in New England. And these characteristics still endure, in fact I sometimes think they have been strengthened by being transplanted, notwithstanding their asbeen strengthened by being transplanted, notwithstanding their association with many differing nationalities and the antagonistic influ-sociation with many differing nationalities and the antagonistic influences which have beset them on every hand.

To the growth and power of one of these great States our attention has been recently called by some of the most stirring political events of our day. The State of Ohio has risen somewhat suddenly into conspicuous importance. As an organized civil community she is not surpassed in the world. As a fortunate political community she has hardly been equaled since the days when Virginia furnished four and Massachusetts two Presidents of the United States. The diligence and industry and intellectual ambition of her people have, in three quarters of a century, constructed an empire of industry and education whose wealth and influence can hardly be estimated. I may be mistaken, but it seems to me she is the New England of the West. be mistaken, but it seems to me she is the New England of the West. The tides of New England life which have flowed into her fertile valleys have been made apparent by the founders of her colleges, her teachers, her scientists, her merchants, her statesmen, who are the immediate sons of New England or trace their blood back to the old fountain through a few generations. This influence began early and fountain through a few generations. This influence began early and has never ceased.

Nearly a hundred years ago Menasseh Cutler, who, as well as Nathan Dane, represented my own district in Congress, left his home in Hamilton, Massachusetts, to establish a colony in Ohio. In his covered wagon, on the canvas top of which was inscribed "Ohio, for Marietta, on the Muskingum," he carried the foundation of the great empire State of the West. He was a Massachusetts scholar, scientist, theologian, politician, statesman. In that wilderness he left the impression of his character and purposes, which has never been obliterated, and which has been strengthened and cherished by the innumerable host of young men who have left just such a home as he left behind him in the protesting and defiant and untiring old county of Essex, and have sought new homes and a new opportunity in the valleys of the West.

MASSACHUSETTS AND MAINE.

MASSACHUSETTS AND MAINE.

But not in the West alone has the influence of Massachusetts been felt. Among the most valuable of her colonial possessions was that vast territory extending to the northeast, clothed with the richest forests, intersected by the noblest rivers, with a sea-coast indented in every league with innumerable bays and harbors, with a strong and fertile soil and a climate capable of developing the strongest mental and physical qualities of man. It was settled by the sons and brothers of the people of Massachusetts Bay. The relations between Massachusetts and this eastern province were like the relations between members of the same family—bound by the same bond, divided by the same antagonisms. In the early heroic period the radiance of the great deeds performed in Massachusetts was shared by her children in the province of Maine. In her Legislature sat the statesmen and counselors of that eastern shore. The instinctive sagacity and sturdy sense and manly wit of the province gave additional power sturdy sense and manly wit of the province gave additional power in the halls of Congress to the commanding influence of the immediate representatives of the Bay State in both branches of the Federal Legislature. The brilliant sons of Massachusetts found a home beneath the ray of that eastern star which, as they boasted, would neath the ray of that eastern star which, as they boasted, would never set. From the shore of Plymouth the province of Maine drew one of her profoundest jurists, with the blood of the Puritan running in his veins, her first truly great Senator, whose proud record she rejoices to call her own and whose example is worthy of all imitation by $hose who may follow in his illustrious footsteps. There were, indeed, strong differences of opinion and interest between Massachusetts and the province; but in reply to earnest petitions for separation shortly after the Revolution, the Legislature passed many popular and necessary acts relating to the eastern country, and effectually quieted and lulled asleep the desire for independence.

It was, indeed, not without deep reluctance that the people of Massachusetts ultimately resigned their rich possession; and many of the people of Maine slowly assumed the responsibilities of an independent State. Not grudgingly, however, did Massachusetts do her share of the work. The legislative act of separation was promptly passed, and the farewell of the executive partook largely of the nature of sound advice and a warm benediction. Said Governor Brooks, of Massachusetts, in his message of January 13, 1820:

The time of separation is at hand. Conformably to the memorable act of January 13 and 15 and Massachusetts, in his message of January 13, 1820:

The time of separation is at hand. Conformably to the memorable act of January 19, 1819, the 15th of March next will terminate forever the political unity of Massachusetts proper and the district of Maine. And that district, which is "bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh," will assume her rank as an independent State in the American confederacy. To review the transactions which have immediately preceded and effected the separation, and to recollect the spirit of amity and mutual accommodation that has distinguished every step of its progress, must be truly and lastingly satisfactory. It is at the same time highly gratifying to every friend of republican government to observe the unanimity and disposition to mutual concession with which a constitution founded on the broadest principles of human rights has been formed and adopted.

That the district of Maine was destined to independence has been long foreseen and acknowledged. But it has been delayed until her internal resources and her capacity for self-government being fully developed, public opinion, emanating from a competent and increasing population, decidedly invoke a fulfillment of her destination. Having yielded my assent to the act of separation, it remains for me to obey the impulse of duty as well as of personal feeling, and of acknowledging to the gentlemen of the district who have been particularly associated with me, either in civil or military departments of government, the able support which on all important occasions they have readily afforded, and to the citizens of the district generally the candor and liberality and respectful attention I have experienced in the discharge of my official duties.

And in the "able, intelligent message," as it was called at the time, of Governor King to the first Legislature of Maine under its constitution to all important to the other than the constitution of the district of the constitution of the district of the first Legislature of Maine under its consti

And in the "able, intelligent message," as it was called at the time, of Governor King to the first Legislature of Maine under its constitution, he alludes to "the equitable and just principles" and to "the correct and wise course of policy pursued by the executive and legislative departments" of Massachusetts proper in giving their assent to the formation of the State of Maine which, he adds, "have laid the foundation of a lasting harmony between the two States."

When the governor of Massachusetts proclaimed the separation, the distinguished son of Maine who had led on the work enrolled himself among the conditores imperiorum, and guided the new State in a path rights and religious freedom which he had ingrafted on the laws of the State he left behind him.

William King learned his lesson in the Legislature of Massachusetts; he applied it as the chief magistrate of the new State of Maine. And true to the spirit of that province in which the statutes of Massachusetts were always subjected to the severe scrutiny of a freedom-loving people, in which the citizens were allowed to vote or to hold any office without qualification of property, and difference in religious opinions produced no difference in political rights, and in which religious toleration was the law, he framed a constitution which the Puritans recognized as the true intent and meaning of the principles which they proposed to incorporate into all human government, and he wrought into the fundamental law of the new and independent State the system of civil and religious freedom planted by the pilgrim fathers in the colony of Plymouth. The civil doctrines laid down in Massachusetts were liberally interpreted in Maine for the mutual benefit of these two Commonwealths, as they learned of each other amidst trials and antagonisms the best constitution for a free and independent people.

amidst trials and antagonisms the best constitution for a free and independent people.

It is no part of my purpose, Mr. Speaker, to discuss here the material condition of Massachusetts. Her financial integrity and honor, her industry and prosperity, the comfort and contentment of her people, the activity of her capital, the constant employment of her labor, are well known to all men. Her civil organization has been assailed, and I have endeavored to defend it. Her relation to the Federal Government, and to that family of States of which she is an illustrious member, has evidently been misunderstood. I have endeavored ous member, has evidently been misunderstood. I have endeavored to explain it. For her I have attempted to do no more than every man on this floor would do for the State he represents were she placed man on this floor would do for the State he represents were she placed in a false attitude before the country and the world. I rejoice now with the great brotherhood of American citizens in the supremacy of the Federal Constitution, the power of the flag, the commanding strength of our nationality, the massive structure of the Union. But I rejoice also in that sensitive regard for the honor and renown of each State which finds ever a prompt and fervid expression from those who represent her in the national councils.

I have no fear now, sir, of a State ambition which may result in assuming new powers; no fear of those dissensions and antagonisms which will force themselves into every strong and powerful system—none of dissolution and disruption. But disregard of the responsibilities of an educated Commonwealth, indifference to the duties which belong to a community forming a part of the American Republic, and belong to a community forming a part of the American Republic, and to the lofty position which each State is bound to maintain in the confederacy—this indifference and disregard we cannot too carefully avoid.

The triumph of popular government will not be complete if its duties are neglected and its privileges are forgotten and denied by any member of this family of States. In speaking for Massachusetts, therefore, I have spoken for her sister States also, and for the honor of the Republic of which she forms a part.

I have recited a chapter in history which belongs now to the American people, and constitutes a portion of that wonderful story of popular progress in which every State in this Union has performed her part, progress in which every State in this Union has performed her part, from the trials and sufferings of colonial life to the last bold and defiant adventure which planted our institutions on the remotest western froutier. It is not now the brilliant record of the Puritan of Massachusetts, or the Huguenot of Carolina, or the Cavalier of Virginia, or the Quaker of Pennsylvania—but of the American whose services and achievements are no longer bounded by State lines, but belong to a proud and powerful people. And as I pass from my service in this House to duties elsewhere, I congratulate myself and my country that in political energy, in educational ambition, in material prosperity, the States of this Union have entered upon a career of activity and strength which gives promise of great power and an unequaled opportunity to those into whose hands the destinies of this nation may be intrusted in the years that are to come. And standing here, opportunity to those into whose hands the destinies of this nation may be intrusted in the years that are to come. And standing here, at the opening of the second century of our national existence, I thank God, as we all do, that I behold not a cluster of discordant States, prostrate and riven by a tumult of passion, but a Union of rival commonwealths engaged in an ambitious contest to attain the lofty eminence assigned to every civilized community which is warmed by religion and illumined by education and built on the imperishable foundations of human right and equality.

[Mr. Loring's hour having expired during the course of the above speech, Mr. Calkins took the floor and yielded time sufficient in which to conclude it.] to conclude it.

Mr. CALKINS. I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr.

Mr. FIELD. I ask by unanimous consent to print some remarks on the pending contested-election case.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly. [See Appendix.]

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish, on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, to ask leave for that committee to sit this evening during the session of the House.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. Hill, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence until Monday next.

MASSACHUSETTS CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. I move the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 85. So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. GILLETTE. I move the House do now adjourn.
Mr. CALKINS. As there is some misunderstanding here, I hope the Chair will state whether or not an evening session has been

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. Cox in the chair.) A session has been ordered for this evening to consider business relating to the District of Columbia.

Mr. CALKINS. Then I ask that the question be again put to the House on taking a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As it is apparent there was a misunder-standing in reference to the vote just taken, the Chair, by unanimous consent, will again put the question to the House on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. CALKINS. The session this evening being for the consideration of the District of Columbia business?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly, and for that purpose only.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

At seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m. the House resumed its session, Mr. Blackburn in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order of the House for the session this evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That on the third and fourth Thursdays of January and February, at five o'clock p. m., or at such other hour as the House may on that day indicate, a recess shall be taken until seven and one-half o'clock for the purpose of considering such matters as may be brought before the House by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

GROUNDS SOUTH OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. HUNTON. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report to the House a joint resolution (H. R. No. 369) making appropriation for filling up, draining, and putting in good sanitary condition the grounds south of the Capitol along the line of the old canal, and for other purposes, and to ask for its passage. I beg leave to say that it is the resolution that is annually adopted for the purpose of procuring employment for the poor of this District, and with a view to the reclamation of valuable lands belonging to the Federal Government south of the Capitol.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read, appropriates the sum of $20,000, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of continuing the filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the old canal and the grounds of the United States south of the Capitol along the line of said canal. The commissioners of the District of Columbia shall determine the plan commissioners of the District of Columbia shall determine the plan of such work, employ the labor to do the same by the day, week, or month, and see that it is properly conducted, and shall disburse the money and make report of the same to Congress.

Mr. DUNNELL. This seems to be the continuance of a work begun last year. I shall be glad to have the gentleman from Virginia state how much was done last year, and how much money was expended.

Mr. HUNTON. Twenty thousand dollars was expended last year. Mr. BOUCK. How much the year before?

Mr. HUNTON. Twenty thousand dollars last year and $20,000 the year before. This is a continuing appropriation. It is considered a year before. This is a continuing appropriation. It is considered a charity to the poor of this District, as well as a beneficial improvement of the grounds belonging to the Federal Government. There were thirty-six acres embraced in the bed of this old Tiber canal. were thirty-six acres embraced in the bed of this old Tiber canal. Twenty-six acres have been reclaimed and the bed of the canal filled up, leaving ten more acres still to be reclaimed. This appropriation of $20,000 will fill up a little more than half of the ten acres remaining. The House has every year made this appropriation so as to enable the commissioners of the District to employ the unemployed poor laborers of the city of Washington. I trust there will be no objection to the passage of the resolution.

Mr. CLAFLIN. These lands belong to the Government of the United States?

United States?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir; the lands belong to the Federal Govern-ment, and are really worth ten times as much as it costs to reclaim

Mr. STEVENSON. How many are to be employed?

Mr. HUNTON. As many as can be employed at a dollar a day, allowing ten days for each set of laborers, after which another set is employed. This is done for the purpose of preventing suffering among the poor of this District.

Mr. STEVENSON. Do you know how many have been employed in the aggregate?

in the aggregate?

Mr. HUNTON. I do not. That will depend, of course, upon the rapidity with which the work shall be done.

Mr. SAMFORD. At what time will this work be finished?

Mr. HUNTON. In one more appropriation. The estimate of the commissioners is that it will take $40,000 to finish the job. Twenty thousand dollars is asked to be appropriated now and $20,000 the next season. The commissioners ask the whole appropriation should be made this year, but we think it is best to make the appropriation now for the usual amount of $20,000, leaving the remaining $20,000 to be provided for next year. to be provided for next year.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time,

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint res olution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTON. I now move that we proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table pertaining to the District of Columbia, embracing Senate bills and House bills with Senate amendments. When we go to the Speaker's table we will endeavor to take up only such matters as will probably lead to no discussion until more members are in the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask now unanimous consent to let the Committee on the District of Columbia select such business as will not probably lead to discussion or dispute until additional members are present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is within the province of the Committee on the District of Columbia, under the prior order of the House fixing this evening's session.

Mr. O'NEILL. Will the gentleman from Virginia please be kind enough to state his proposition again?

Mr. HUNTON. I stated that I ask unanimous consent of the House to take up for the present bills upon the Speaker's table under the direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia which will lead to no discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state again to the gentleman from Virginia that under the order of the House providing for this session it is within the province of the committee to select such business as it chooses to bring before the House for consideration.

The order of the House fixing this session for to-night will be read.

The Clerk again read the order.

Mr. HUNTON. Then I may bring up such business as the Committee on the District of Columbia may select?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly.

INSPECTOR OF PLUMBING, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HUNTON. Then I move that the House proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1894) authorizing an inspector of plumb-ing for the District of Columbia.

Mr. COBB. I will ask the gentleman from Virginia whether the Committee on the District of Columbia have decided to bring that before the House this evening?

Mr. HUNTON. I will state to the gentleman that I will not bring up for consideration anything to-night that the committee have not authorized me to bring up.

Mr. COBB. Do I understand that the committee have directed that Mr. COBB. But understand that the contact of the consideration to high!

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir. I will repeat that I am simply the organ of the committee to present such business for consideration as they shall determine. If I mistake, of course the committee will correct

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The title of the bill to which the gentleman from Virginia refers will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 1894) authorizing the employment of an inspector of plumbing in and for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the amendments of the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2 strike out the words "on recommendation of the health officer," and in nes 3 and 4 strike out the words "under the direction of the health officer."

Mr. HUNTON. I am directed by the committee to move concurrence in the Senate amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNION RAILROAD DEPOT.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask now to take up House bill No. 3047, the next bill on the Speaker's table, to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to recommend a proper site for a union depot in the city of Washington, and for other purposes, with union depot in the city of Washington, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of that bill until there is a quorum present in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The right of the gentleman to object the Chair does not think will hold good under the resolution of the House authorizing this evening's session.

Mr. O'NEILL. I can object until there is a quorum present.

Mr. HUNTON. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to move an amendment to the Senate amendment to this bill. The Senate amendment fixes the time at the 1st of July, 1880

Mr. O'NEILL. I might as well state here, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman that I do not feel like having this bill considered to-night. I do not want to make any captious objections. I am not in the habit of doing so. But I prefer to consider it when there is a quorum present in the House. I would prefer, therefore, to have the consideration of this bill postponed for the present at all events.

Mr. HUNTON. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me to explain for a moment, I feel satisfied that he will withdraw his objection.

to explain for a moment, I feel satisfied that he will withdraw his objection.

Mr. O'NEILL. I understand the provisions of the bill.

Mr. HUNTON. The only object of the bill is to enable the commissioners to recommend a site for this depot. It does not bind anybody or anything. The commissioners simply recommend a site to Congress, which recommendation is simply for the future action of the two Houses.

Mr. O'NEILL.

the two Houses.

Mr. O'NEILL. I understand very well, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill; still, as I have already said, I do not wish to have it considered until there is a full House present. Many of my constituents are interested in this matter. I do not believe, if we are not in favor of the passage of this bill, in giving it any special opportunity, or allowing initiatory steps to be taken to accomplish the result which is contemplated by the bill. If the commissioners are given the authority to recommend a site for this depot, it is the beginning or the inception of a certain enterprise to which we object. If they are allowed to remove certain property in which some of my constituents are deeply interested, then I believe the best way to prevent that is to stop the bill at the threshold, and I must insist upon the objection unless there is a quorum present. It is a much more important bill than most of us imagine.

unless there is a quorum present. It is a much more important bill than most of us imagine.

Mr. HUNTON. If the gentleman from Penusylvania insists upon his objection that a quorum is not present, of course that will defeat the consideration of the resolution for the present.

Mr. O'NEILL. I do not wish the bill to be taken up at this time. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Virginia as withdrawing the bill for the present?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir; I will have to do it if the gentleman from Pennsylvania insists. I would ask the gentleman, is he certain that there is no quorum present?

there is no quorum present?

Mr. O'NEILL. I am not certain, of course; but I am pretty well aware of the fact that there is not.

JURISDICTION OF JUSTICES OF THE PEACE IN THE DISTRICT. Mr. HUNTON. I ask the consideration of the next bill on the Speaker's table, (S. No. 41,) to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the District of Columbia, and to regulate proceedings before them.

The bill was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and cond time.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, dc., That justices of the peace of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction to hear, try, and determine all pleas and actions, including attachment and replevin not exceeding $50, where the amount claimed to be due or the value of the property sought to be recovered shall not exceed $30, except in cases were the title to real estate is concerned, actions for malicious prosecution, actions against justices of the peace or other officers for misconduct in office, and actions for slander, verbal or written.

SEC. 2. No appeal shall be allowed from the judgment of a justice of the peace in any common-law action unless the matter in demand in such action or pleaded in set-off thereto shall exceed the sum of $20.

SEC. 3. Whenever any constable shall neglect or refuse to pay over to the party entitled thereto any moneys collected or received by him on any process issued by a justice of the peace, the justice issuing such process may, upon complaint of such party, summon the said constable and the sureties upon his official bond to appear before him at a day and hour therein named, and not less than two days after service of such summons, to answer to the said complaint, and may render judgment against the said constable and his sureties for the amount so collected or received, if not exceeding $200, with interest and costs, and execution may issue therefor without stay, except by appeal; and when the sum claimed exceeds $20, either party shall be entitled to a trial by jury.

SEC. 4. Any justice of the peace may compel any constable to make due return of any process, signed by such justice and placed in his hands for service, by attachment, and for refusal to make such returns such constable shall be subject to the same fines and penaltics as a witness refusing to obey a summons.

SEC. 5. When the defendant domiciled in the District cannot be found so that personal service may be made upon him, service of process may be made by leaving a copy of such process at t discretion to receive the same, and the omeer in his return share the hands of such service.

SEC. 6. In cases of appeal or on certiorari the justice shall retain all original papers, except those filed in evidence, and make and file with the appellate court copies of the papers so retained, certified by himself; and for preparing and transmitting the papers on appeal or certiorari, he shall be paid a fee of $1, but the superior court may require the production of the original papers.

SEC. 7. The supreme court of the District is hereby authorized to make and establish such additional rules of practice, and prescribe forms of process and pleadings rendered necessary by this act, and to alter or amend the same, as they may from time to time deem advisable.

SEC. 8. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed; but nothing herein shall be construed to take away or limit the jurisdiction conferred upon justices of the peace by chapter 19 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia.

Mr. SAMFORD. I am not familiar with this bill, which is a Senate ill. We had a bill somewhat similar referred to our committee. I have forgotten whether any report was ever made on it; but I am sure we never reported a bill where the right of appeal was infringed so that there should be no appeal where the amount in controversy was less than twenty dollars, or any bill which authorized the summoning of a party by simply leaving a summons at his residence. In the language of this bill, it shall be a legal summons where it is left at the defendant's residence:

In the hands of some person residing therein of sufficient discretion to receive

I am not familiar with any practice where a summons is of any value if it be not served on the party individually; and I would like some reason to be assigned before we allow a summons to be served at the residence of a party and left in the hands of a person of sufficient discretion to receive the same.

Mr. STEVENSON. It appears to me the second section should be stricken out of this bill. It provides:

No appeal shall be allowed from the judgment of a justice of the peace in any common-law action unless the matter in demand in such action or pleaded in set-off thereto shall exceed the sum of $20.

Now, take that in connection with what has been suggested by the Now, take that in connection with what has been suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Samford] as to the mode in which service shall be made, and further in connection with the denial of any change of venue from one justice to another, and it occurs to me it might be productive of hardship in certain cases. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Virginia, the chairman of the committee, to these points: the provision which prevents an appeal from the decision of a justice of the peace where the amount is less than $20, and the further provision which prevents a change of venue from one justice of the peace to another.

Mr. HUNTON. This Senate bill, or rather a House bill of similar provisions, has been before the committee. The main provisions of this bill have been before the Committee on the District of Columbia in the House bill. While we were considering that bill and before we reported it, the Senate passed the bill now under consideration, and the Committee on the District of Columbia took up the Senate bill and considered it. I beg leave to say to the House that this bill has received the careful consideration of the Bar Association of the city of Washington. A representative of that association came before the committee and A representative of that association came before the committee and said they had no objection to the provisions of the bill with one exception. The section they objected to was one which turned out not to be in the bill as passed by the Senate. It was in the bill as reported by the Senate committee, and was stricken out in the Senate. It referred to the removal of causes from one justice to another. On finding that section was not in the bill, the representative of the Bar Association of Washington said they had no objection to make to the bill, and that it was of the highest importance to the litigants of this District that a bill of similar provisions should pass.

Now, in regard to the two objections made by my friend from Illinois, [Mr. Stevenson.] One is that no appeal is allowed where the judgment is under $20. I beg leave to state to the House that if the courts of this district are to be incumbered with appeals from decisions of justices of the peace for amounts below $20 the time of the courts of this district will be taken up in considering appeals.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Does this apply to misdemeanors?

Mr. HUNTON. It applies to civil actions.

Mr. STEVENSON. And appeal is only allowed in cases where the amount exceeds $20.

mr. SILVENSON. And appear is only anowed in cases where the amount exceeds $20.

Mr. HUNTON. Where the amount exceeds $20 the right of appeal is given. In my State, where the courts are more widely distributed than here the right of appeal is given for amounts exceeding $10. But the Bar Association of this city says that an appeal in cases over $20 is an appear in cases over $20 is quite sufficient for the purposes of this District.

An objection is raised by my colleague on the committee in regard to the service of process. A similar provision exists in almost all States of this Union that processes may be served, first by a service of a copy of the process on the party himself if he be found at home, and if he be not found at home then it is to be delivered to his wife at his home; and if it cannot be delivered to his wife to some member of his family over sixteen years of age; and if none of them be present the law of my State authorizes the copy of process shall be affixed on the door of the dwelling-house, which will effect a perfect legal service on the party. The provision is that it shall be delivered to somebody competent to receive it; that is, competent to ascertain from the officer serving the process the nature of it.

Mr. SAMFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hunton] if he means to say that the practice prevails in the various States that service of the process of legal tribunals may be had simply by leaving the summons at the domicile of the defendant?

Mr. HUNTON. In the hands of some person.

Mr. SAMFORD. In the hands of some one else than the defendant himself?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir; and not only that, but in my State, if there be no one at home, service is performed by sticking the process on the front door of the dwelling.

Mr. SAMFORD. I know that that may be done in some cases, such as the protest of notes, &c.; but in my State such is not the such as the protest of notes, &c.; but in my state such is not the case in regard to personal service.

Mr. HUNTON. It is so in Missouri and in Wisconsin and in other States, as gentlemen around me here say. Be that as it may, the parties most interested in the service of process in the District of Columbia agree that this mode of service is sufficient here.

Mr. BARBER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether under this bill, where the judgment is less than twenty dollars, it can be reviewed by a writ of certiorari?

Mr. HUNTON. Oh of the service is sufficient for the process of the service is sufficient here.

Mr. HUNTON. Oh, no.

Mr. BARBER. I think that must be the practice.

Mr. COBB addressed the Chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Hunton,] if he will give me his attention, and my colleague from Illinois [Mr. STEVENSON] are both in error in regard to this section, the section is regard to enough.

in regard to appeals.

Mr. COBB. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. BARBER. I thought I had it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have the floor.

Mr. COBB. I think the Chair recognized me.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair has the floor, I believe.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is antitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COBB. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. You see that you are mistaken.

Mr. STEVENSON. I think my colleague from Chicago [Mr. Barber] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is very easy for gentlemen to be mistaken.

The Chair kas recognized me as entitled to the floor. If I can have the attention of gentlemen, I desire to state that I think the chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia [Mr. Hunton] is mistaken in regard to the construction of section 2 of this bill, as I understand it. It says:

No appeal shell be allowed from the indepent of a justice of the peace in any

No appeal shall be allowed from the judgment of a justice of the peace in any common law action unless the matter in demand in such action or pleaded in set-off thereto shall exceed the sum of $20.

Now, if the demand of a person is for $21, or for any amount over $20, and he gets a judgment for only $5, he may take an appeal not-withstanding this section, because it relates to the matter in demand, or the matter in set-off before the trial begins. As I understand, it has no reference whatever to the amount of the judgment which may be rendered by the justice of the peace.

Now, if the party suing before the justice of the peace desires to bring his case within the right of appeal, all he has to do is to make his demand for $21, and no matter what the judgment may be he can take an appeal from that judgment. If I understand the section aright, I have no objection to it. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hunton] seems to suppose that in order to secure the right of appeal under this section the judgment must exceed $20.

Mr. HUNTON. The language of the bill is that "the matter in demand" shall exceed $20.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, "the matter in demand in such action or pleaded in set-off thereto shall exceed the sum of $20." If it does not, I think there should be no right of appeal. Any person going before a justice of the peace and desiring to have his case an appealable one can make his demand $21.

Mr. STEVENSON. The suit is brought against the one who usually taken the appeal takes the appeal. Mr. SPRINGER. And he can plead a set-off to the amount of $21, and then take his appeal. It is not necessary that he should prove his set off. It frequently happens that parties fail to prove both the set-off and the demand.

Mr. STEVENSON. I cannot say that I understand that way of practicing law.

Mr. COBB. I think this section might be improved very much. I dislike both its language and its spirit. It is true that where the demand is over $20, or the matter pleaded in set-off is over $20, an appeal may be taken under this section.

I take it the better provision would be that where a judgment has been rendered against a party defendant, and he desires to take an appeal, he must be required to succeed in diminishing the judgment appeal, he must be required to succeed in diminishing the judgment $5 or more, or pay the costs; and vice versa, if the party plaintiff takes an appeal, he must succeed in increasing the judgment $5 or more, or pay the costs. I think that would prevent unnecessary litigation.

I know that such a provision as that works exceedingly well in my State. We have a provision of that kind, that where a judgment is taken against a party and he fails upon an appeal to reduce it $5 or more, he must pay the costs in the appellate court.

Mr. HUNTON. It is impossible to adopt a method of procedure in the District of Columbia which shall conform to the proceedings in the different States.

the different States.

Mr. COBB. There is no trouble about it at all.

Mr. HUNTON. This matter has been carefully considered by the Bar Association of this District, and they desire the passage of this

Mr. COBB. I think that a legislator who is a practical lawyer can determine this question as well as the Bar Association here.

Mr. HUNTON. Very probably.

Mr. COBB. Suppose you provide that an appeal on the part of the defendant shall not be taken unless the judgment shall amount to $20 or more. Would that be right? Of course not. It is well known that in the city of Washington, as elsewhere, there are some very in-that in the city of Washington, as elsewhere, there are some very incompetent men acting as justices of the peace. Now, if you do not allow a change of venue from one justice of the peace to another, and I should bring suit against you before a justice who might have some little prejudice against you, and get judgment, and you are prevented from taking an appeal, that would be an injustice to you.

Mr. HUNTON. There is no provision denying a change of venue.

Mr. COBB. This bill does not provide for it.

Mr. HUNTON. But the law does.

Mr. COBB. But I instance that as a reason why a party should not be bound by a judgment of a justice of the peace. These justices' courts are courts of very inferior jurisdiction; the justice in many cases is an incompetent man; according to my experience there are in this city, as elsewhere, some good justices of the peace and some very bad ones, and to say that you will compel a man to stand by the judgment rendered against him before a justice of the peace does not seem to me right. These justices very often render judgments in good faith which are wrong in law and in fact.

Now, the great objection to this section is that it requires a man to plead a falsehood in order to get justice. That ought not to be. I know it is an easy matter for an attorney to sit down and put on paper a large sum and demand it as a set-off.

paper a large sum and demand it as a set-off.

Mr. HUNTON. You have done it many a time.

Mr. COBB. I have done it, it is true; but I would not wish to be compelled to do it. Sometimes my conscience might hurt me.

Mr. HUNTON. Do you expect your conscience to be better in the future than it has been in the past?

Mr. COBB. No, sir; I do not think it will be, for it always has

Mr. COBB. No, sir; I do not think it will be, for it always has been very good.

Mr. HUNTON. I do not mean to question that.
Mr. COBB. I do not like the section.

Mr. HUNTON. There is no question before the House.
Mr. COBB. I move to amend by striking out the second section.
Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. If I comprehend the matter rightly, it seems to me that when the Committee on the District of Columbia has investigated a matter, has consulted the bar of the city, as well as many of the people, and they have determined that they want a given thing, it is not the question whether we might desire it in our cities or not. If the people here in this city, if those who are interested, if the members of the bar are agreed so far as they have been consulted that this provision of law suits them, I can see no reason why we should not give it to them. I submit, in all fairness, that we ought to do so. If this were a matter affecting my State, there are some propositions in this bill which I might oppose; but certainly I am not disposed to do so as affecting this District, when the bar and the people, so far as heard from, favor these propositions.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, I trust that this amendment will not be adopted. If this section should be struck out, then some provision of the kind should be substituted. The object is to prevent appeals where the demand is less than $20. Now let me give you an illustration. A man who drives a dray hauls a load for some wealthy person, we will say, who is to pay $1.50. The man who has employed the driver of the dray refuses to pay him. The drayman goes into the court of a justice of the peace without any lawyer; sues the man for whom he has done the hauling, and recovers judgment. Now if you strike out this section, the defendant can appeal his case and compel the plaintiff either to abandon his suit or to employ a lawyer at an expense of $5,$10, or $20 to prosecute it.

This section is in the interest of the poor man. It is to enable him to obtain justice without being compelled to employ an attorney. I trust the House will see it in this light, and will not agree to this amendment unless there be some provision substituted for the section which will effect substantially the same purpose.

Mr. BRIGGS. Suppose that in the case the gentleman supposes judgment is given against the plaintiff.

Mr. NEAL. How can judgment be against the plaintiff, unless on a set-off?

a set-off?

Mr. TALBOTT. There may be a judgment of non-suit, and the plaintiff may be required to pay the costs.

Mr. OSMER. The gentleman from Ohio interprets the animus of the second section of this bill when he asks in reference to a justice's the second section of this bill when he asks in reference to a justice's court, how can a judgment be against the plaintiff? That is the difficulty with the legal proposition involved in the second section. Ordinarily the men who drive the drays and go to cheap courts without a lawyer have a judgment in their favor. If we are to legislate at all in the administration of justice, let us provide for the District of Columbia a bill which we would sanction in our own States, that both parties should have a day in court.

Mr. COBB. There is still no quorum voting.

Mr. HUNTON. If the gentleman from Indiana insists upon his point I hope the House will agree that I may withdraw the bill and proceed with the next on the Calendar.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask merely to withdraw that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has been read a third time. The question upon which the failure of a quorum was developed was the demand of the gentleman from Ohio for the previous question on the passage of the bill. The gentleman from Virginia now asks, by unanimous consent, that the bill be passed over for the present and the House proceed to the next business on the Speaker's table, and to that request the Chair hears no objection.

INCREASE OF DISTRICT POLICE FORCE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 1394) to increase the police force of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HUNTON. I move that bill be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1618) to amend section 553 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that section 553 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia, be amended by inserting the word "telephone" after the word "transportation;" so as to read second as follows:

as 10110Ws:

SEC. 553. Any three or more persons who desire to form a company for the purpose of carrying on any kind of manufacturing, agricultural, mining, mechanical, insurance, mercantile, transportation, telephone, or marketing business in the District, or savings-bank therein, may make, sign, and acknowledge, before some officer competent to take the acknowledgment of deeds, and file in the office of recorder of deeds, a certificate in writing, in which shall be stated, &c.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 1681) to provide for funding the 8 per cent. improvement certificates of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HUNTON moved that the bill be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE POTOMAC.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 1381) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Potomac at or near Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, returned from the Senate with the following amendments:

Page 1, line 26, after the word "constructed," to insert "upon, or;" so as to

"And provided also. That a draw of sufficient width to permit the free passage of vessels navigating that part of the Potomac River shall be constructed in said bridge, unless said bridge shall be constructed upon, or by the side of, or up the river from the present aqueduct, and at the same or greater elevation above the bridge, unless said bridge shall be constructed upon, or by the shall be river from the present aqueduct, and at the same or greater elevation above the water."

Add the following sections to the bill:

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of War may, for the purposes of the preceding section, acquire, under and subject to the provisions of section 355 of the Revised Statutes, the right to perpetually maintain a free bridge across the Potomac River upon the piers of the Alexandria Canal at Georgetown, District of Columbia, and for that purpose to use the present bridge as long as the same can conveniently and safely be done, and afterward to construct and maintain a new and permanent free bridge upon said piers: Provided, That the right to use the present bridge and to maintain a new bridge structure perpetually upon said piers can be purchased for a sum not to exceed $100,000 of the amount hereinbefore appropriated; and power is hereby conferred on the Secretary of War to establish regulations for the use of said free bridge. But said free bridge shall not interfere with the said Alexandria Canal, and shall be strong enough and be so constructed as to allow the trough or trunk of said canal to rest securely thereon; but the United States shall not be charged with the expense of constructing, maintaining, or keeping the said trough or trunk in repair, and shall have exclusive control of all of said bridge except said trough or trunk; Provided, That no steam-power shall be used upon said bridge or its approaches, or upon said piers, trough, or trunk, for any purposes whatsoever.

Sec. 3. And the Secretary of War is further authorized, in the event of said purchase, to repair the wooden bridge now on said piers, and for that purpose is authorized to expend of the moneys hereinbefore appropriated a sum not exceeding $10,000.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to move non-concurrence in those amendments, and to ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. Aldrich of Rhode Island, Mr. Hunton, and Mr. Klotz as managers of said conference on the part of the House.

BILLS ON THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills upon the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, (Mr.

HILL in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

Mr. SAMFORD. I ask to have taken up for present consideration the bill of the House No. 5715, to vacate and close an alley in square 504, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the bill to which the gentleman from Alabama refers is on the House Calendar and can only be reached after the committee has risen.

HEIRS OF EDWARD B. CLARK.

Mr. HUNTON. I move that the committee proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2098) for the relief of the heirs of Edward B. Clark.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be authorized and directed to remit the taxes, assessments, and charges upon the property, with improvements thereon, of the late Edward B. Clark, located in the city of Washington, and known as lot numbered 9, in square numbered 353, which accrued during the time said property was held by the Government under title of confiscation.

The report is as follows:

From record evidence it appears that in the year 1863 Edward B. Clark was the owner of lot No. 9, in square No. 363, in the city of Washington, together with valuable improvements thereon; that in the same year (1863) the Government of the United States libeled and sold said property for the sum of $1,500 to Martha E. Wheeler; that said Martha E. Wheeler failing to pay the taxes on said property, the same was sold for the taxes due thereon on the 30th day of August, 1865, to John R. Elvans, and the corporation of Washington executed a deed for the same; that said Elvans held said property from 1865 to 1876, when he sold the same to Henry F. Trenton, and that T. Crittenden owned and enjoyed the rents and profits until the same was reconveyed to the heirs of the said Edward B. Clark.

Your committee further report that during all the time the said property was in the hands of the Government's vendee, the rental value of said property was about six hundred dollars per annum, a much larger sum than would have paid all taxes assessed against said property; and, notwithstanding all this income, the taxes for nearly fifteen years remained unpaid, and are now charged against the said property, over which said heirs had no control; which said claim, if enforced against the property, would be practical confiscation against the heirs of the said E. B. Clark. Your committee do not believe that said taxes should be a lien upon said property or charge upon the same, and therefore beg to report back the bill for the relief of said heirs, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HUNTON. I move that the hill be laid saids to be reported to

Mr. HUNTON. I believe this is the only bill the committee has at present on the Calendar ready for consideration. I move, therefore, that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN as Speaker pro tempore having taken the chair, Mr. HILL reported that the Committee of the Whole House having had under consideration House bill No. 2098, had instructed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do near

CLOSE OF AN ALLEY.

Mr. SAMFORD. Mr. Speaker, a moment ago in Committee of the Whole I asked to have considered a bill which was on the House Calendar, to vacate and close a certain alley in this city. I now move that the House proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5715) for the purpose which I have indicated.

Mr. HUNTON. That bill has the unanimous approval of the committee, and also the District commissioners and everybody interested. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia, in their discretion, are hereby authorized and empowered to vacate and close up the alley running north and south in square 504, between lots 8, 9, and 10, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Margaret L. Paschal, praying the closing of a certain alley in square 504, in Washington, District of Columbia, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report that there is no objection thereto; and the committee therefore report favorably on said petition, and report an accompanying bill to that effect, and recommend its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and be-

PROPERTY OF UNITED STATES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, I move now that the House proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 4590.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.
The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Beit enacted, &c., That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, in charge of public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia, be, and is hereby, authorized to sell and convey, by good and sufficient deed, to each of the owners of lot 1, square 184; lot 5, square 185; lots 5, 6, and 7, square 198; lot 12, square 199, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, such portion of the ground immediately adjoining the front of said lots, or either of them, as will make the angles at the four corners of Sixteenth and K streets, northwest, right angles, upon payment into the Treasury of the United States by said owners, or each of them, of an amount for the number of feet in each lot so to be conveyed at the same rate as the assessment for taxition of the lot or lots mentioned above: Provided, That such owner or owners shall make such payment into the Treasury of the United States within one year from the date of the approval of this act.

Mr. NEAL. The committee recommend that the words-at the same rate as the assessment for taxation of the lot or lots mentioned above: Provided, That such owner or owners shall make such payments into the Treasury of the United States within one year from the date of approval of this act—be stricken out, and that the following be added to the bill:

At the rate the same may be appraised by three disinterested freeholders resident of the city of Washington, to be selected and sworn to said Chief of Engineers, impartially to appraise said real estate at the true value thereof in money; and upon said sale the owners of said lots respectively shall pay into the Treasury of the United States, for the erection of school buildings in the city of Washington, one-third of said purchase-money, and the remainder thereof with interest in one year from the date of sale. No conveyance shall be made until all the purchase-money is paid: Provided, That said Chief of Engineers shall not sell or convey one portion or any part of said real estate unless all the same is sold and conveyed.

portion or any part of said real estate unless all the same is sold and conveyed.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman having this bill in charge that this method of getting at the value of this land is somewhat unusual, so far as property belonging to the United States is concerned. I prefer very much that the proviso should contain the words "sold to the highest bidder, after due notice to be given." That is the usual method pursued in the sale of property belonging to the United States. Certainly the amendment suggested by the committee is a great improvement over the text of the bill; but I cannot see why it may not be sold to the highest bidder after notice in the usual manner. notice in the usual manner.

but I cannot see why it may not be sold to the highest bidder after notice in the usual manner.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman from Minnesota, I would state that the property which is proposed to be sold consists of four lots, I,296 square feet, which is in three separate and distinct triangular tracts. It is not valuable to any person except to the owners of the adjacent lots. If it be put up and sold to the highest bidder, nobody will bid excepting the gentlemen owning the adjacent property, and the consequence is that it will be sold for less than its true value. The object of the committee in providing that the sale be made in this manner is to obtain the best price for the land. We provide here that the Chief of Engineers of the Army, in charge of public buildings and grounds in this city, shall have this property appraised by three disinterested freeholders, and that the purchaser shall pay their valuation; in which way, as the committee believes, only is it possible to obtain the true value of this property.

Now, in regard to the property, I will state, in the first place, that these four triangular pieces of property are at the intersection of K and Sixteenth streets. There is not enough of them in connection with the street to make a proper circle for a statue such as the Thomas or the McPherson or other statues now erected in the city. The engineer who has charge of these public grounds, General Casey, whose judgment no one who knows him will object to, and who probably has the interests of this city, its beauty and its embellishment and its future as much at heart as any nublic officer, at the request of has the interests of this city, its beauty and its embellishment and its future, as much at heart as any public officer, at the request of the District Committee has reported in writing as to this. He says:

the District Committee has reported in writing as to this. He says:

The provisions of this bill seem to guard the interest of the United States, and will effect a desirable modification in the plan of the interesction of K and Sixteenth streets, northwest. The cut-offs at the intersection of these streets enlarge this intersection unnecessarily by some twelve hundred and ninety-six square feet at each corner. The unreserved space thus put into the street is not needed either for purposes of ornamentation or circulation of air. The neighborhood of this intersection has already a number of open spaces and reservations improved and ornamented with statues, &c., and it is not at all likely that the site in question would ever be selected for further ornamental or memorial structures in this part of the city. It is probable that the lots abutting on the cut-offs when squared out will have their value enhanced above the present assessed value; and provision should be made that all of these corners shall be sold, or none, so that the symmetry of the intersection shall not be destroyed by the purchase by some and the neglect to purchase by others of the present owners.

In addition to this, Mr. Speaker, I will state to the House that the

In addition to this, Mr. Speaker, I will state to the House that the commissioners of the District of Columbia, to whom this matter was also referred, recommend that this sale be made. It is already fenced also referred, recommend that this sale be made. It is already fenced in by the property-holders, and they want to own it so that they can build upon it and beautify it by the erection of such residences as will probably go up in that section of the city. It seems to me, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the House cannot do better than agree to the recommendations made by the officers who have this matter specially in charge and pass the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to hear the report read.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill H. R. No. 4590, have had the same under consideration, and recommend that said bill be amended as proposed by said committee, and that it do pass.

The passage of the act is recommended by the Chief of Engineers, having charge of the public grounds in the District of Columbia, and the committee, after an examination of the grounds proposed to be sold, fully concur in the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and

Mr. NEAL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY TAXES.

Mr. HENKLE. I call up the joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) ratifying settlement of taxes made by the District commissioners with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company. The joint resolution is on the House Calendar.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the settlement made by the commissioners of the District of Columbia with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company of the claim of said District upon said company for and on account of taxes due by the said company to said District up to July 1, 1879, be, and the same is hereby, ratified and condirmed, and that the said commissioners be, and they are hereby, authorized to execute any vouchers or papers necessary to the final consummation of said settlement, and as evidence that the same is concluded and closed.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred joint resolu-tion (H. R. No. 266) ratifying settlement of taxes made by the District commissioners with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report:

That they believe the settlement made by commissioners of the District with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company is equitable, and ought to be ratified as a final and full settlement.

For the reasons for this conclusion they refer to the report of said commissioners to this committee.

They therefore report back the resolution with a recommendation that it do pass.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed

GROUND IN SQUARE 446, WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SAMFORD. I call up a bill favorably reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia and referred to the House Calendar; the bill (H. R. No. 4749) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to dispose of the ground in square 446, in the city of Washington, belonging to said District, for market and school

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to dispose of the ground in square 446, in the city of Washington, which was purchased from Mr. W. W. Corcoran by said District, in the manner and for the purposes following, to wit:

First. To lease the south half of said ground for the purposes of a market, to be erected thereon by the lessees, for such term of years as they may deem expedient, and at a rent sufficient to pay its proportionnate share of the interest upon the price at which the District purchased the whole of said ground.

Second. To reserve from the north half of said ground a site for a public-school building, if they shall deem it expedient so to do, and sell the residue, after sub-dividing it into suitable and convenient lots, at public auction, after due and public notice, and the proceeds of such sale shall be applied to the erection of a school building on the site reserved therefor; but in case they shall deem it inexpedient to reserve any portion of said ground for a school building, then to sell the whole of said north half, and the proceeds thereof shall be applied to the purchase of a convenient site for a public-school building in that school district, and to the erection of a school building thereon.

Mr. SAMFORD. If the bill is understood, I do not think there would be an objection to it, at least not to the extent of the factious opposition of raising the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. SAMFORD. I will give an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BOUCK. I object. I will insist on a quorum.

Mr. SAMFORD. After the bill is explained I do not think there will be any objection even from the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOUCK. If the present occupant of the chair will examine the bill he will see there are various portions of it that we reported against in the Forty-fifth Congress.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to have the report read.

Mr. BOUCK. I object to any action unless there is a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's objection does not prevent the present consideration of the bill. The gentleman, of course, has his right under the rules. The reading of the report is called for by the gentleman from Michigan. It will now be read.

The Clerk read the report of the committee, as follows:

The Clerk read the report of the committee, as follows:

That some years ago the District of Columbia purchased from W. W. Corcoran the property described in the bill, for the purpose of a market, and paid therefor bonds of the District for $100,000 with interest at 7 per cent., which Mr. Corcoran donated to the Corcoran Art Gallery.

It seems that the portion of the city where this property is located needs market facilities. After the passage of the bill authorizing the purchase, property appreciated in the locality very largely in anticipation of the market, and has paid taxes since on such appreciation.

The citizens interested are very nearly unanimous, as shown by a large petition of nearly two thousand respectable signers.

There is a necessity for more school-houses in the District, and by the sale provided in the bill that necessity will be partially met.

By the market provision in the bill, a valuable piece of property now lying almost idle will be placed in a taxable condition, and yield a large revenue to the city. Wherefore the committee report back the bill favorably, and recommend its passage.

Mr. SAMFORD. This square was purchased under a law passed by the Legislature of the District of Columbia for the purposes of a mar-It was sold by Mr. Corcoran for market purposes, as the act of that Legislature shows.

It will be observed that in this bill there is nothing which requires the District commissioners to do anything. It simply authorizes and empowers them to dispose of this ground if it is in their judgment for the best interest of that property. The property cost $100,000 and is lying there idle, bringing no revenue to the District, and the District pays 7 per cent. on that $100,000, making $7,000 annually.

Now, as I said, this property was purchased originally for market purposes, and after it was purchased the erection of a market build-ing was began. The foundations were laid, and those foundations ing was began. The foundations were laid, and those foundations are there at this time. A year or two ago a movement was set on foot to divert this property to the purposes of schools in this District. A compromise was reached between those who desired it for school purposes and those who desired it for market purposes, which compromise is embraced in this bill, by which one-half of the property is given up for school purposes. In accordance with that compromise the commissioners of the District have gone forward, and are now erecting a school building on the north half of that lot. As I am informed, that school building is nearly completed, or at least is in fair progress.

in fair progress.

The first part of the second section of this bill provides that the District commissioners shall be empowered to lease the other half of District commissioners shall be empowered to lease the other half of this property for the purposes of a market, to be erected at the expense of the lessees themselves. The Government of the United States is not to be called upon to spend one single cent; the District of Columbia is not called upon to expend one single cent. On the contrary, the lessees of that half of the property will pay a sum equal to the interest which the District of Columbia now pays upon the bonds given to which the District of Columbia now pays upon the bonds given to Mr. Corcoran for the property.

What objection there can be to the passage of this bill I cannot possibly see. The objection which has been raised by some, and which has been intimated to me privately, is to what is known as ground rent. We propose to lease this property to these parties for the purpose of building a market at their own expense. That feature of the bill commends itself to me, because if we sell that part of the property outright, the money received for it will most likely not go to the payment of the bonds which have been given for the property.

If we allow the lessees to erect a market building upon this property, and they pay not less than 7 per cent. as the bill prescribes, then all the expense in the payment of interest upon these bonds will be taken from the District of Columbia for all time to come.

As the report of the committee shows, at least two thousand persons who live in that immediate neighborhood have signed a petition in favor of this bill. Those persons, just as soon as this lot of ground in favor of this bill. Those persons, just as soon as this lot of ground was dedicated to the purposes of a market, moved there in the anticipation of the erection of the market building, and their property has been raised in value for purposes of taxation on account of the facilities which it is expected would be afforded by the erection of a market building there.

Mr. PRESCOTT. What has become of the bonds given by the District of Columbia for this property?

Mr. SAMFORD. The interest upon those bonds is now paid by the District of Columbia to the Corcoran Art Gallery.

Mr. PRESCOTT. When will those bonds mature?

Mr. SAMFORD. In about twelve years, I understand, and the principal of the bonds is to be given also to the Corcoran Art Gallery, I believe. in favor of this bill. Those persons, just as soon as this lot of ground believe

As Mr. Corcoran himself informed the committee, this property was sold by him, at the request of the citizens living in the neighborhood, to the District of Columbia for market purposes. As I said before, as soon as it became probable that a market building would be erected there many citizens moved into that immediate vicinity. There are street railways on three sides of this lot, thus affording facilities for the inhabitants of a large portion of the city to reach a market there; all that portion of the city which has become densely populated within the last few years.

It seems to me that as one-half of this property has already been dedicated to school purposes, at the request of those who desired it for that purpose, the other half should be devoted to market purposes, especially when the bill provides that the lessees themselves shall erect a market building on this property at their own expense.

Mr. KLOTZ. And they will pay taxes on the building after it is erected.

Mr. SAMFORD. And the building after it is erected will become taxable property. A bill of a character somewhat similar to this has been reported in the Senate, differing from this in one respect. The Senate, impressed with a sense of justice, struck out everything pertaining to school purposes, and provided that the commissioners of the District of Columbia should devote the whole of this lot to market purposes, if they should deem it necessary.

These lessees are to erect this market building at their own expense, agreeing to pay not less than 7 per cent. upon the value of one-half of that lot. And the building after it shall have been erected will, as suggested by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Klotz,] become taxable property. This lot does not belong to the Government of the United States, and never did. It was bought in pursuance of an act of the legislature of the District of Columbia which authorized the then commissioners to purchase this property at Mr. Corcoran's offer of $100,000 for purposes of a market-house. Since that time, as I have said, a controversy arose between certain parties who desired to use this property for school purposes and other parties who desired to have it recontroversy arose between certain parties who desired to use this property for school purposes and other parties who desired to have it retained for purposes of a market-house. Last spring, when this subject was under consideration before the Committee for the District of Columbia, a compromise was reached satisfying both parties, and that compromise is embraced in this bill.

Since that time the commissioners of the District of Columbia, without any authority whatever, have authorized the construction of a school-building on one-half of this lot, as provided in this bill. And I understand that the commissioners of the District of Columbia a school-building on one-half of this lot, as provided in this bill.

And I understand that the commissioners of the District of Columbia are themselves in favor of the passage of this bill.

Now, what objection can there be to it? It gives away no money; it gives away no property. It affords market facilities to the people of a large part of this District who are now without such facilities. Of course the $50,000 building which these lessees are expected to erect upon this lot will become additional security for the interest which they agree to pay. I must say that I can see no valid objection to the passage of this bill, and I think it ought to be passed as a matter of justice.

Mr. COBB. Since, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I have taken charge of the appropriation bills for the District of Columbia, I have given some consideration to matters of this kind. Now, I can say that there is a very serious objection to the passage of this bill. There has been matured a plan—I now have it before me as a part of the appropriation bill, with the consent of every one of the trustees of the public schools, as well as the board of commissioners, and every citizen whom I have talked with—to locate upon these premises (being, as I understand, square 446, which is handsomely located with regard to railroads) a high school building, which is absolutely demanded here. There are now four hundred pupils who have gone through all the different grades of the schools as they now exist, and who are now occupying the upper stories of the Frank-lin building, all but the garret, and also the Seaton building. As I understand, there is a fund which has grown out of an old lottery system, and which is appropriated by law for public school purposes. This fund, amounting now to $72,000, is susceptible of being devoted to the erection of a high school building.

My friend from Virginia, [Mr. Hunton,] the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, suggested through an amendment to the appropriation bill that that school-houses. After consulting with the board of trustees and other persons deeply interested in the school system, we have determined that the very best thing that can be done with this money is to erect a high-school building upon this very piece of ground. It is centrally located, and such a building erected there will supply the demands of this city for year transfer.

trally located, and such a building erected there will supply the demands of this city for years to come.

I submit that this bill ought not to pass; that a market-house ought not to be erected upon this square. It is centrally located with regard to the geographical limits of the city; it has, as the gentleman from Alabama has said, the convenience of railroad facilities, and in this way it is well suited to supply the demands of this entire city, if devoted to the erection of a high-school building, which, as I understand from every one with whom I have talked, is earnestly demanded. I have spoken with the leading physicians of this city, who say that there is the greatest necessity for a high-school building. At present young ladies attending the high school are obliged to ascend long and high stairways, which, at their period of life, is dangerous to their health. But at present there is no other place that can be used for high-school purposes than the upper stories of the two buildings I have mentioned. have mentioned

Mr. SAMFORD. Does the gentleman say that the Committee on Appropriations propose an appropriation for this purpose?

Mr. COBB. We are proposing to appropriate $72,000.

Mr. SAMFORD. Precisely; you are paying out money; our plan

Mr. COBB. We are proposing to appropriate $72,000.

Mr. SAMFORD. Precisely; you are paying out money; our plan proposes to save money.

Mr. COBB. No, sir; we are appropriating a fund which belongs to the school system, and which was intended for purposes of this kind. The school trustees have been fostering this fund for years, as they inform me. Now, this lot belongs to the District—

Mr. SAMFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the District commissioners have not themselves reported it is the interest of the District that this ground be used for market purposes?

Mr. COBB. I do not know. They have reported that it would be the interest of the District to occupy it with a high-school building.

Mr. SAMFORD. I have no doubt they would report in favor of anything that was calculated for the benefit of the District. But, as I understand, this lot was sold to the District for market purposes. The Committee on the District of Columbia sent a message to Mr. Corcoran to know whether that was the understanding; and the act of the Legislature shows that it was. Since that time the erection of temporary sheds on this lot for market purposes has been authorized by the District commissioners; and these have been paying five or six thousand dollars annually as revenue to the District, thus showing the necessity for market facilities at that place. Unless such facilities be furnished you drive a large portion of the population, to whom this location would be convenient, down to the Washington market. So far as my experience goes, I have found nobody opposing the disposition of this property for market purposes except those interested in the other market.

Mr. COBB. I want to ask the gentleman whether there is not in the other market.

Mr. COBB. I want to ask the gentleman whether there is not already a market—a very large one—within less than four squares of this piece of ground?

Mr. SAMFORD. There is a market within three or four squares of this place; but it is off of any railroad, and it is scarcely patronized at all; it has gone down as a market simply because the women of this city who have to do their own marketing when they get on a street railroad, our prefer to go to the Weshington Mallet even street-railroad car prefer to go to the Washington Market, even though it be five, six, seven, or eight blocks farther, rather than go to the market of which I have spoken, which is so inconveniently located. Even persons living within a few blocks of that markethouse prefer, as a matter of convenience, to go to the Washington Market. The other market can now hardly be said to be in opera-

Mr. COBB. I submit that, as a matter of fact, there are two street railroads running parallel, north and south, giving convenient access to the market of which the gentleman speaks.

Mr. SAMFORD. To what market does the gentleman refer?
Mr. COBB. I speak of the K street market. There is one railroad running east and west, besides a railroad on Ninth street and one on Seventh street.

Mr. SAMFORD. You are speaking of an entirely different market. You are not referring to the market within three or four blocks of

That is my understanding about it.

Mr. COBB. That is my understanding about it.
Mr. SAMFORD. It is not mine.
Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Let me make a suggestion. It must be evident to the gentleman from Alabama this bill cannot pass to-night, at least not until after a long discussion. There is a large minority here opposed to the passage of the bill and it will require a long discussion. It is evident we can reach no vote on it to-night, and I ask the gentleman, therefore, to withdraw it for the purpose of allowing some bills to pass to which there is no objection.
Mr. NEAL. Is there any motion before the House?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; the question is on the engrossment of the bill.

Mr. NEAL. Is a motion to lay upon the table in order? The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.
Mr. NEAL. Then I make that motion.
Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Pending that motion, I move the House do now adjourn.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 31.

Mr. HATCH demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at nine o'clock and seventeen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In the interest of the Calendar I must object. I do not know what the bill is; it is not because I am objecting to the bill, but here is this great mass of cases reported from that committee and the other committees—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill goes on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it is the bill the Senator from Illinois states to me it is, and of course it is, it is a bill of such special and peculiar interest that I withdraw the objection with pleasure. I did not hear him when he made the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The objection of the Senator from Vermont is withdrawn. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill ?

Mr. LOGAN. Let the bill be read. The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4, after the word "Army," it is proposed to strike out the words "and ex-President of the United States;" in line 6, after the word "to," to insert "nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate;" in line 7, after the words "retired list," to insert "of the Army;" and at the end of the bill to add the words "and in accordance with the date of his commission;" so as to make the bill read:

That in recognition of the eminent public services of Ulysses S. Grant, late General of the Army, the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint him to the retired list of the Army with the rank and full pay of General of the Army.

SEC. 2. That at any time when the President shall consider that an emergency has arisen requiring the services of General Ulysses S. Grant on active duty, he is hereby authorized to assign him to any command commensurate with the rank of General, and in accordance with the date of his commission.

Mr. RANDOLPH. What is the motion of the Senator from Illinois? The VICE-PRESIDENT. He asks that the Senate consider the

Mr. RANDOLPH. I should like to have the bill printed and sub mitted to the Senate with the amendments, in its regular order. I will say in behalf of the committee of which I am chairman, that a full committee was not present this morning; that all the members of the committee did not act upon this bill, and therefore this is a majority report of only those members of the committee who were present. I did not know that it was the purpose of the Senator from Illinois to ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. I think Illinois to ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. I think it very probable that when the bill shall come up in this body, or at the pleasure of the Senate, some remarks will be submitted by myself and others concerning our action in the committee. I should like to have the time which is ordinarily granted for such purposes.

Mr. LOGAN. So far as calling the bill up is concerned, I did not say anything in committee, but I presume the committee understood that I would try to have action upon it as early as possible, for the reason well known to Senators that I have been trying to secure action upon it all the time. It is true there was not a full committee. tion upon it all the time. It is true there was not a full committee this morning, but I never knew that there was necessity for a full committee to report a bill.

mittee to report a bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Oh, no.

Mr. LOGAN. I think it is a bill so simple that any Senator can form his opinion in reference to whether he is for or against it, without very much time for consideration. It is a mere question whether it is desirable to reappoint the gentleman named in the bill to the Army on the retired list, and that is all the question there is in it, with a provision that he may be required to do active service, and with another provision which would prevent his interfering with anybody of similar rank in the Army. There can be no objection on that ground. There certainly can be no objection when a man is placed on the retired list, who is able to perform duty, to providing that he shall perform duty if he is drawing pay from the Government. My object in putting in that provision is that he might perform some duty at some time for the money he is to receive from the Government.

There certainly can be no objection to that section; and the only objection there can be is the objection that might be in the mind of any one to putting this distinguished officer back in the Army on the retired list. To that objection I only have to answer that within a very recent period a majority of the Senate did vote to put a man in the Army on the retired list who was not in the Army. Therefore so far as that is concerned there can be no objection on that ground.

Then if there is objection to the bill it is to the person and not to the precedent. So I take it that every Senator is competent and adthe precedent. So I take it that every Senator is competent and advised as to how he will vote on this particular question at this time. We have but a short period of the session remaining, and I thought that this bill was entitled to the consideration of the Senate now. For that reason I ask the Senate that they now consider it. Let it be disposed of either one way or the other.

Mr. FERRY. I suggest to the Senator from Illineis that as one objection carries the bill over he avail himself of the first opportunity to call it from the Calendar. I think he will have the support of the Senate in calling up the bill for immediate consideration at any time. Certainly a subject of this importance, and bearing upon so distinguished a citizen of the United States, will commend itself to a majority of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator that he have unanimous consent to fix a time, say to-morrow morning.

Mr. LOGAN. I shall be glad to do it, for I have never shown any disposition to try to force any measure before the Senate unless it was certainly with the consent of the Senate, and I have sometimes was certainly with the consent of the Senate, and I have sometimes felt as though I was somewhat derelict in my duty for not calling up bills that I have reported. But I will say that if any one wishes to discuss the bill, if it is agreeable to the Senate to fix a time, say Monday morning, when it shall be taken up and acted on, I myself will be willing to agree to that. It certainly will not require a great deal of consideration to decide as to the mere fact whether a person cherild water for or agreeing this bill.

deal of consideration to decide as to the mere fact whether a person should vote for or against this bill,

Mr. KERNAN. What is the question before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill just reported by him from the Military Committee, to which the Senator from New Jersey

Mr. LOGAN. I certainly know that an objection puts the bill over; but I ask if it will not be agreed to take it up on Monday morning by consent of the Senate.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2070) to provide for the better selection of hospital stewards, United States Army, and fixing their pay and allowances; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WHYTE. The other daythe Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS,] in behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, reported adversely the bill (S. No. 1991) for the relief of James Gibbons, of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland. The bill was placed upon the Calendar at my suggestion, but I now desire to dispose of it, and I will ask the Senate that it be indefinitely postponed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Theodore F. King, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2098) for the relief of the heirs of Edward B. Clark ;

Clark;
A bill (H. R. No. 4590) to provide for the sale of certain property owned by the United States in the District of Columbia;
A bill (H. R. No. 5715) to vacate and close an alley in square 504 in Washington, District of Columbia;
A bill (H. R. No. 6969) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes;
A joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) ratifying settlement of taxes made by the District commissioners with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company; and
A joint resolution (H. R. No. 369) making an appropriation for filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the grounds south of the Capitol along the line of the old canal, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1381) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. N. W. Aldrich of Rhode Island, Mr. EPPA HUNTON of Virginia, and Mr. ROBERT KLOTZ of Pennsylvania, managers of the conference on the part of the House. The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (S. No. 1618) to amend section 553 of the Revised Statutes relating to

ELECTION OF SENATORS.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 404) to amend section 14, chapter 1 of title 2 of the Revised Statutes, reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which was up yesterday morning.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elec-tions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause

That it shall and may be lawful for the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire, whose constitutional term commences next preceding the expiration of the term of a Senator in Congress from said State, to choose a Senator to fill the term which will so expire.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHYTE. I think the Senator from New Hampshire should explain the bill to the Senate, so that it may be understood.

Mr. ROLLINS. I occupied the attention of the Senate yesterday in explaining the necessity which exists for the passage of this bill. If the Senator will take the trouble to look into the Record, which he will find on his deak, he will see my explanation of the necessity for will find on his desk, he will see my explanation of the necessity for the bill.

Mr. WHYTE. I have not had time to examine the RECORD of to-day as yet.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This bill according to the amendment agreed to simply provides:

That it shall and may be lawful for the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire, whose constitutional term commences next preceding the expiration of the term of a Senator in Congress from said State, to choose a Senator to fill the term which will so expire.

According to my understanding of the Constitution of the United States that is precisely what the law is now. The Constitution declares that each State shall be entitled in the Congress of the United States to two Senators, who shall hold their offices for a term of six years; and the operations of the Government under the Constitution have made those six years begin on the 4th day of March, that being the day on which the Government under the Constitution went into operation.

I suppose nobody would doubt that the Legislature commencing its session at a time next and last preceding the 4th of March, when a vacancy would occur in the representation of a State, would be the proper Legislature to fill it, and that there could be no power in Congress to provide by any law for such a species of election as should leave the State debarred from electing a Senator by its Legislature lawfully assembled on the last occasion before the vacancy occurred. I should suppose that to be perfectly clear; but the act of Congress of 1866 did provide (evidently not foreseeing a state of things which might exist) that it should be the Legislature last elected preceding the expiration of a term. Therefore, as in the case of New Hampshire, taking that language literally, a Legislature elected in November last to meet under its constitution in June is the only Legislature that is authorized to elect a Senator in Congress, and therefore that the State of New Hampshire has no constitutional or legal right that is authorized to elect a Schator in Congress, and the text that the State of New Hampshire has no constitutional or legal right to have a Schator in Congress by legislative election from the 4th of March until the meeting of the Legislature of New Hampshire in June, because, under the constitution of New Hampshire, which it has a right to make and to have in that way, the constitutional term has a right to make and to have in that way, the constitutional term of the members of its Legislature runs over until June. Hence if the governor were to convene a called session of the Legislature to perform this duty he would have to convene precisely the Legislature that the act of Congress, reading it literally, says shall not elect.

If the act of 1866 is to be construed that way, then I think it is an invasion of the constitutional right of the State of New Hampshire and any other State that may be so situated to elect a Senator in time to begin to represent his State when the senatorial term begins. But I think in view of the Constitution that the act of 1866 may be fairly I think in view of the Constitution that the act of 1866 may be fairly construed according to its spirit, and not strictly according to its letter. The spirit and purport of the act of 1866, as I understand it, and as I understood it when it was passed, was to withdraw from preceding Legislatures that had sessions two or three years before, and between which and the next vacancy there was to be another Legislature not only elected but sitting, the right to go on and fill vacancies for the next three or four years, which, or something like it, had happened in one or two cases, that produced great difficulty. That the idea

I think, then, that fairly, if we construe the act of 1866 according to its spirit and purpose and apply it to the circumstances, it can be made and construed to be the requirement simply that the last constitutional meeting of the Legislature of a State under its constitution preceding a 4th of March when a vacancy is to be filled has the right to fill it, although the mere letter of the act says "last elected." However that may be, it might be wise, and I think it is, if there is any doubt about it, to change the law so as to make it clear.

It appears to me instead of saying "the State of New Hampshire" we ought to say "any State," so that if there be any other State in the Union so situated in respect of its own constitutional arrangements that under the letter of the act of 1866 construed that way it could not fill a vacancy in its representation in Congress it would be included within this construing or enabling authority and not have it confined specially to this one State.

Therefore I will move, if it is agreeable to the committee that re-

Therefore I will move, if it is agreeable to the committee that reported the bill, to strike out of the amendment the words "the State of New Hampshire" and insert "any State," so as to read:

Mr. SAULSBURY. As far as the committee is concerned that re-Mr. SAULSBURY. As far as the committee is concerned that reported the amendment already adopted, it was especially designed to remove embarrassment in the State of New Hampshire found to exist there. I do not know what the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Vermont would be; I do not know the absolute necessity of it. I do not know that there is any necessity to relieve any other State. We were especially trying to settle a question which has arisen in regard to the State of New Hampshire with reference to the construction of an act of Congress. I do not know that there is any objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont and I know of no necessity for such an amendment. If Vermont, and I know of no necessity for such an amendment. If there was a necessity for such an amendment, it would be exceedingly proper that it should be adopted; but I know of no such necessity in any case except in the case of New Hampshire. If the Senator from Vermont has apprehensions that there is any other State where there is necessity for applying this provision, I have no objec-

Mr. EDMUNDS. I submit to the consideration of my distinguished friend from Delaware, inasmuch as he states that the necessity for this legislation arises out of a doubt about the true construction of the present regulating act of 1866, and is designed to make it as to New Hampshire in conformity with the constitutional rights of the States, that if we make this act general we shall have thus put a proper construction upon the application of the act of 1866 to bring it into conformity to the constitutional rights of all the States, so that if any State, if there be none other now, shall happen to change its constitution in such a way as that the meetings of its Legislature shall not come into harmony with the letter of the act of 1866 as it now stands, there will be this general law to provide for it. I am sure if the provision be made general that it makes the law of 1866 thus construed or changed precisely what the framers and passers of it in 1866 under the Constitution meant to make it, and that is to provide that the last constitutional meeting of a Legislature preceding the occasion when there is necessity for the Legislature to fill a vacancy shall proceed to fill it.

Mr. PENDLETON. It seems to me, Mr. President, if this bill shall this legislation arises out of a doubt about the true construction of Mr. PENDLETON. It seems to me, Mr. President, if this bill shall pass in the way it is framed, that it will leave the section of the Revised Statutes exactly as it now is, and will provide also what is contained in italics here; that is to say, it will leave the provision of the Revised Statutes standing which it is proposed to amend, and enact also this law which is proposed to amend it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As far as this is inconsistent.
Mr. PENDLETON. I understand that, but there will be then standing on the statute-book these two provisions, one of them that the Legislature of each State chosen and organized next preceding the expiration of a term shall make the election, and the other that it may be lawful for the Legislature of a State whose constitutional term commences, and so forth, to make the election. It seems to me that it would be better to provide for the repeal of the original section, and then enact the proper form of one, so as to put beyond all question or cavil what the law is. Otherwise we shall have two provisions which are not entirely inconsistent, which the Senator from Vermont says ac-cording to this interpretation will be the same with the amendment standing on the statute-book. Therefore it seems to me the form of the bill might be improved. But there is danger, I think, in case this amendment passes just as it is, that the provision which requires the election to be made at the first regular term next preceding the expiration of the term of a Senator may be affected. It seems to me that that is rather a beneficient provision, and should be retained in the law.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Vermont whether it is worth while to press the amendment which he has offered. If it be true that there is no other State in the Union which is affected by this question except the State of New Hampshire, it is entirely unimportant to do anything except to pass the bill as applicable to that State. If there be any other State which is to be affected than the State of New Hampshire, then it would seem desirable that the people of that State should have some knowledge of the pending legislation which is likely to affect its interests. And practically it would be very likely to lead to the defeat of the bill, if not here, elsewhere, at this late period in the session, if there is danger that it may make any general or considerable change in the law. The people of New Hampshire have had the fullest knowledge of this difficulty. In point of fact the last Senator who took his seat here, the junior Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. Blair,] took his seat under an election held by his Legislature after the constitutional term of six years had begun; after his predecessor's term had expired. The people of New Hampshire have had the fullest opportunity to make known their wishes, and, so far as the committee or the Senate are aware, there is no objection from any party in New Hampshire to this aware, there is no objection from any party in New Hampshire to this proposed amendment. That being the case, it seems to me we ought to confine ourselves to this amendment, and let the other House concur with us, if they will, and have the bill go into operation without undertaking to enter upon or even to risk entering upon a change which it will require the most careful examination to see whether it affects a large number of States or not.

It strikes me, considering the way in which legislation must be adopted, for the House of Representatives must concur with legislation originated in the Senate at this time to make it effective, that it will be found practically impossible to obtain a concurrent majority of the Representatives of all the States to a bill which they may fear will be of large and general application, whereas, in regard to the will be of large and general application, whereas, in regard to the State of New Hampshire, if that body is informed that all parties concur in desiring this particular legislation for that State, it will get

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the answer that I have to make to Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the answer that I have to make to the certainly pertinent suggestions of the Senator from Massachusetts, is first, that if we pass this provision just as it came from the committee, it, to my mind, raises an implication it being made specially to apply to the State of New Hampshire—

Mr. HOAR. The Senate has already amended it so as to apply to the State of New Hampshire.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I say it being applied to the State of New Hampshire to my mind raises a clear implication of a legislative construction of the act of 1866, section 14 of the Revised Statutes, in favor of the point that without this provision the State of New Hampshire would have no right to elect before there had been a vacancy in its representation. It seems to me to be a legislative declaration that under the law as it stands no such election could lawfully take place, but that we make special exception in favor of the State of New Hampshire. If I am right about my idea of that implication, I cannot vote for such a proposition.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont, whether, if we pass the bill with his amendment, the same implication will not arise that the proper construction of the act as it now stands excludes New Hampshire from the right to elect before the vacancy occurs?

Mr. EDMUNDS. vacancy occurs?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a fair inquiry; it has great force, and I am inclined to think that it is partly true; but the degree of implication is vastly less in the general case than in the other. But I wish to propose, while I am up, in addition to the amendment that I offered, and to meet the views of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] which were so well expressed, to add after the word "that," in the third line, the words "section 14 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be so construed as that;" so that the whole clause will read in this way: read in this way:

That section 14 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be so construed as that it shall and may be lawful for the Legislature of any State whose constitutional term commences next preceding the expiration of the term of a Senator in Congress to fill it.

That is a legislative declaration of the true construction of section 14, the one that it is intended to have whether legally it will bear it now or not, and I think nobody ought to object to that if we really wish to put the state of the law so that hereafter in New Hampshire on the next occasion, or in any other State, where it may arise, there may be no difficulty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "that," in line 3, it is proposed to insert "that section 14 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be so construed as that."

Mr. HOAR. It may be well to state in a moment how this question has come up. Congress, within the limits of our constitutional power, provided for the time of the election of Senators by providing that that election should take place on a certain day during the first session of the Legislature chosen last before the expiration of the constitutional term of the Senator whose commission was about to expire. The State of New Hampshire then made that day certain by providing in its constitution that that meeting of its State Legislature should occur a few weeks after the beginning of the constitutional term. That would be a clear constitutional provision by Congress and by the State for a time and manner of electing a Senator, except that the doubt has arisen whether a provision can be lawfully and constitutionally made which leaves the office vacant for a short time after the constitutional term of the predecessor has expired-about three months. If that were an original question, it might raise a doubt and might support the view suggested by the honorable Senator from Vermout; but it is not an original question. It is a question which has been settled, so far as anything can be settled in that way, by a very extensive and uniform practice from the foundation of the Government in regard to the other House, which depends on precisely similar constitutional provisions. The time for electing members of the State Legislature in a large number of the States from the beginning of the Government has been fixed by legislative authority, for the convenience of the people, at a time shortly after the beginning of the constitutional term. When I first came into the other House, in 1869, the members of the other House from this very State of New Hampshire were not elected, I think, until April.

Mr. BLAIR. The second Tuesday in March.
Mr. HOAR. At any rate they were not elected until after the House actually assembled on the 4th of March, the law being then that the regular session of Congress was held on the 4th of March. regular session of Congress was held on the 4th of March. The same thing existed in Connecticut, the people of that State not electing at that time until April. The same thing existed in Mississippi, and gave rise, some forty years ago, to a very celebrated contested election case, in which S. S. Prentiss was one of the parties. The same law existed in California down to within a few years. So it is settled in our legislative precedents that a provision by legislative authority, whether of Congress or the State, or the joint operation of both, as in this case, which for any consideration of popular convenience fixes an election by the people or by the Legislature for a brief period after a constitutional term begins, is not for that reason alone unconstituconstitutional term begins, is not for that reason alone unconstitutional. If that be true, then the construction which the Legislature of New Hampshire and the governor of New Hampshire followed in the appointment of Mr. Bell, and which the Senate adopted by receiving Mr. Bell to his seat, and the legislation adopted in the election of Mr. Bell's successor, is to be considered as established as fairly as anything in a matter of that kind can be established by the precedents of this body and of the other House.

If the people of New Hampshire desire to have this difficulty removed by an express act of Congress, it seems to me we ought to do it. If they do not desire it, they can take any other course they shall see fit. But if they do, it seems to me that it is not worth while at this time in the session of Congress to accompany that act by entering upon an attempt to change the general operation of law for the election of Senators of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the instance of the law as to the election of members of the House of Representatives submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts, I think does not fortify his view, and I think it bears no analogy to the provision as to the election of Senators. I do not deny for a single moment that if the act of 1866 had said that the Senators of the United States should be elected on the first Tuesday in November or the first Wednesday in January or on any other day, the Congress of the United States was acting within its authority, for the Constitution says that we may fix the time, and we do fix the time when we make a day as we do as to members of the House of Representatives, and the State can conform to it. The people

House of Representatives, and the State can conform to it. The people are always in session, and all it requires is merely the legislative machinery to get them together. But in acting as to Senators under the same clause of the Constitution, instead of fixing a day we undertake to describe the body of constituents who are to exert the authority, which is quite a different thing I respectfully submit.

Then we come right back to the proposition as to whether it is competent, giving the worst construction to this act of 1866, for Congress by a description of the elective body to so describe that body that under the constitution of its own particular State it has no power to act and no power to be represented until after the occasion for representation has considerably passed. That is the question, and that question, I think, merits pretty serious consideration before you say we have any such right.

The matter of Mr. Bell and the election of my friend who sits at my left [Mr. Blair,] as it appears to me, does not touch the question.

my left [Mr. Blair,] as it appears to me, does not touch the question at all. As to the case of Mr. Blair it is the duty of the Legislature wherever there is a vacancy that they find to fill it up, no matter how it occurred. The Constitution says so. But as to Mr. Bell the question passed upon the right of the governor to make a selection under the Constitution under the circumstances that then

But I do hope that the Senate while it is acting upon this subject will put a construction upon this fourteenth section of the Revised Statutes such as will make it harmonious with the spirit of the Constitution of the United States and with the constitutions of all the stitution of the United States and with the constitutions of all the States in whatever form they may now be or may hereafter be.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first question is upon the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment reported by the committee.

Several SENATORS. What is that?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3 of the committee's amendment, after the word "of," it is moved to strike out "the State of New Hampshire" and insert "any State."

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the practical difficulty in the case that is now before the Senate I understand to be this: the Legislature, which was elected in November, 1878, assumes that it has the authority to elect the successor of the Senator whose term expires on the 4th of March, 1883, and that there has been a Legislature elected in November, 1880, whose constitutional term will not begin, under the constitution of New Hampshire, until the first Wednesday in June, 1881, which may see fit to exercise the same power, and that unless they should unite in selecting the same person there would be a conflict of the state of the second they should unite in selecting the same person there would be a con-

1881, which may see fit to exercise the same power, and that unless they should unite in selecting the same person there would be a conflict as to which person should receive the certificate and oath of office of admission into this body. It is obvious to me from suggestions that have already been made, notably by the Senator from Ohio, that we ought to pass this bill precisely as it came from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or else that we ought to amend section 14 of the Revised Statutes, so that the provision that is now proposed to be applied to New Hampshire shall apply to all the States in the Union, else, as has been suggested, we shall have the anomaly of two provisions upon the same subject standing upon the statute-book that are absolutely inconsistent with each other.

I hope the Senate will regard this question of sufficient significance and importance, as it certainly is, to vote understandingly upon the pending amendment, which I regard to be very essential indeed to the proper construction of the section as it now stands, and to a proper interpretation of rights that may arise hereafter upon precisely this same question. I regret exceedingly that the State of New Hampshire when it received notice in the case of the admission of Senator Bell, did not take the necessary steps to conform its constitutional provisions to those of the statute of the United States. I suppose it is now too late for them to do so; but the emergency is before us, and therefore, I repeat again, in my judgment the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont ought to be rejected, and we should pass this bill as it came from the committee or amend section 14, as has been suggested by the Senator from Ohio.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the first amendment.

has been suggested by the Senator from Ohio.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 22, noes not counted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I move the other amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont proposes a further amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1 of the committee's amendment, after the word "that," it is proposed to insert "section 14 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be so construed as that."

Mr. WHYTE. Is there a reference to the chapter and title there lso? I only heard a section of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no reference to the chapter; but the sections are continuous through the whole book.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask what is this amendment now? This is the amendment which states how section 14 shall be construed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.
The Chief Clerk again read the amendment of Mr. EDMUNDS.
Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the mover of this amendment whether its effect will be to repeal, to amend or to declare the construction of ection 149

Mr. EDMUNDS. The only answer I can make to that is precisely what the language of the amendment is, to give a legislative construction and definition to the scope and operation of the fourteenth struction and definition to the scope and operation of the fourteenth section, which is now in doubt and dispute.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the honorable Senator whether it will not be better plainly to amend the fourteenth section—it is very brief—to put in its place a section which shall contain the whole law, rather than to leave as it is in the Revised Statutes the fourteenth section and then supplement it with a statute years afterward merely declaring that the section shall be construed so and so?

The Senator form Verney terres years are talled. Leave the way whether

The Senator from Vermont says, not aloud—I do not know whether he wants me to report it—that although he agrees with me it would he wants me to report it—that although he agrees with me it would take a little time to draw such an amendment. I venture to suggest that he take five minutes if that be necessary—I think he Senator from Vermont can do it in that time; I think I could do it myself in twice that time—to propose an amendment which shall take the place of the four or five lines which now constitute section 14. If the Senator from Vermont will prepare such an amendment it will furnish me occasion for occupying a moment of the Senate's time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will not take me more than a second to put in the words necessary, and the Clerk can cony the rest from the printed.

the words necessary, and the Clerk can copy the rest from the printed section in the Revised Statutes.

Mr. CONKLING. I will speak for that second. Mr. President, I have had, not always but as often as this case has recurred and that have had, not always but as often as this case has recurred and that has been several times, a judgment that the Legislature of New Hampshire has the right to choose a Senator, or elect a Senator, both words I believe are used in the Constitution. Section 14 of the Revised Statutes provides that a Senator shall be elected by the Legislature chosen next preceding the expiration of the time at which the sitting Senator's term expires. One of the operative words there is "chosen." It has been suggested, however, that "chosen," as there used, requires in all cases not only the choice, but the arrival of the day when the Legislature might meet the organization of the Legislature and Senator's term expires. One of the operative words there is "chosen," at has been suggested, however, that "chosen," as there used, requires in all cases not only the choice, but the arrival of the day when the Legislature might meet, the organization of the Legislature, and behind all the specification in the constitution of the day on which the Legislature should meet. Speaking, as I do, in the hearing of better lawyers, I cannot so understand the section. I think when the statute speaks of the Legislature chosen, it is the chosen Legislature. I remember a quaint friend, who said things very sharply and drily, trying a cause once under a statute which gave a remedy to the "widow and next of kin." A husband brought suit for the killing of his wife. My friend, in arguing the case, said several times, "My point, your honors, is that this man is not the widow, or the next of kin of this woman." And so, with equal simplicity I should say that "the Legislature chosen "is the Legislature chosen, and that the Legislature not chosen last preceding the expiration of the time is not the only Legislature which has been chosen preceding that expiration. In New Hampshire, before a certain day, namely the 4th of March when New Hampshire's Senator ceased to hold his commission, there was a Legislature, and after that the people had chosen another Legislature and the constitution of New Hampshire fixed a day for the organization of that other, which was not as early as would be convenient and seasonable to appoint a Senator. In November, under the constitution of New Hampshire, the people might choose a Legislature. They did in November regularly choose a Legislature in the year in question. That choice was made under a constitution which provides that the Legislature shall not convene until the first Wednesday in June. If I were to observe upon such an arrangement, I should say it might become very inconvenient; I would not dare to say in reference to the Commonwealth of New Hampshire that it is unwise. Be this as it may it tainly not matter for me.

The argument and the fact is that until the Legislature chosen shall convene, the existing current Legislature is the one which would continue to sit if the session continued until surperseded by the organization of its successor. If a call issued for an extra session, no other Legislature could convene. This is the all-important circumstance in the case. But for this, no one would doubt the course to pursue. In June the Legislature organizes, in June every constituent member of it takes an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, one of the provisions of which relates to the choice of Senators. In June the question may arise when that Legislature was chosen. When was it chosen? Was it chosen after November? Certainly not. Was it chosen before November? Certainly not. The only way known among men in which it could be chosen was by the vote of the people of New Hampshire. That vote was cast in November, and at no other

When the Legislature in June comes together, when every man swears to support the Constitution of the United States, and enters upon the duties of his office, there may be a vacant place in the Senate of the United States—a place the expired Legislature has not filled. Does anybody doubt the right of the Legislature in such a case to proceed to elect? Whether it was a Legislature before June or not, whether its constitutional existence began before June or not, certainly it is in June a Legislature; it is the last Legislature chosen, and the only one in existence and if a Senator is then to be elected, and the only one in existence and if a Senator is then to be elected, I cannot see a doubt of its capacity to elect him.

The opposing view would require this statute to be read as if it declared what might be done by the Legislature chosen and also organized last before the expiration of the time. To so read, is to import into the statute an additional, substantive, and puissant word; and I know not the canon of construction which enjoins not only that meaning shall be given to every word, but that there shall be imported additional, operative, and controlling words, and the section be read accordingly.

I infer that other Senators take a different view, and I speak of course with deference to those who do.

I cannot suppose that if the State of New York in constitutional convention should change the day of the meeting of the Legislature from the first Tuesday in January to the first Tuesday in May, the effect would be to deprive her of the right to choose a Senator before or after a vacancy occurred.

The Senator from Vermont now hands me this draught of an amendment:

That section 14 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 14. The Legislature of each State whose constitutional term begins next preceding the expiration of the time for which any Senator was elected to represent such State in Congress, shall, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof, proceed to elect a Senator in Congress."

I suggest to the Senator that for abundant caution it might be well I suggest to the Senator that for abundant caution it might be well to amend so as to read "the Legislature of each State chosen and organized" in place of "whose constitutional term begins next preceding the expiration of the time." The only reason for that which occurs to me is this: it is barely possible that in the change of organic law it might occur that a Legislature chosen might be wholly superseded and never organized or effectually existing; and in some such state of facts a misapplication might occur of unguarded language. If the Senator were to say "the Legislature of each State chosen and organized," or if he were to insert with the phraseology he has adopted the words "chosen and" before "whose constitutional term begins," that might be better. that might be better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WHYTE in the chair.) The morn-

Mr. HOAR. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Vermont now, before this bill goes over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is unanimous consent granted to the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I want the Senator to consider whether there will be any question of difficulty hereafter raised under the law with the phraseology he suggests in the case of those States who choose part of their Legislature at one time and part at another.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour having exical

pired-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour having expired—
Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent to reply to the question of my friend from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not undertaken to cover that or to cover anything except to make this legislation general. The phrase "whose constitutional term begins" is the phrase reported by the committee after consideration. I only go upon the assumption that they have thought that was the best phrase. That is the very phrase, the very set of words that the committee have reported as a substitute for the original bill, and I took it upon the assumption that the words of the committee are on the whole the best words. There is great pertinence in the inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts, but I am not ready to answer it myself. Probably the committee can.

Mr. HOAR. The present proposition which is made here and which has been adopted by the Senate applies to the State of New Hampshire, which elects all its Legislature at one time, and I believe elects them annually. The Senator now makes a general bill of it, using the phraseology which was applicable only to New Hampshire; and my question is—though I do not make an objection to this proposition, I am merely asking its consideration—whether he has provided tion, I am merely asking its consideration—whether he has provided sufficiently in his general law for those States that do not elect all their Legislature at the same time, but elect part one year and part another

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business he will present some bills from the House of Representatives for the purpose of reference.

Mr. CONKLING. May I, pending that, send up an amendment to be printed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the amendment will be received.

Mr. CONKLING. It is to the bill which has been under consideration this morning.

The proposed amendment was ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. No. 2098) for the relief of the heirs of Edward B.

A bill (H. R. No. 4590) to provide for the sale of certain property owned by the United States in the District of Columbia; A bill (H. R. No. 5715) to vacate and close an alley in square 504, in Washington, District of Columbia; and A joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) ratifying settlement of taxes made by the District commissioners with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company

Company.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 369) making an appropriation for filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the grounds south of the Capitol along the line of the old canal, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr, DAVIS, of West Virginia. I believe that makes an appropriation.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I believe that makes an appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is an appropriation, but it has reference to property in the District of Columbia, and bills of a similar character have been referred to the same committee. If the Senator from West Virginia moves its reference to the Committee on Appropriations, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I only wish to say that I believe all direct appropriations go to the Committee on Appropriations. I heard the title of this joint resolution as one making appropriation.

Mr. HARRIS. It is a resolution making an appropriation to fill up the old canal. Bills on the same subject formerly have gone to the Committee on the District of Columbia, but I shall certainly not contest it with my honorable friend from West Virginia. I am willing his committee should take jurisdiction.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There is no contest between the Senator and myself. When I heard the title read at first, making an appropriation, I supposed it was one of the regular appropriation bills, and as the title was, "making an appropriation," I thought the proper place for it was the Committee on Appropriations. I have no objection, however, to its going to the committee of the Senator from Tennessee. Tennesse

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia make a motion to refer it to the Committee on Appropriations? The Chair thinks the proper direction was given originally.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I shall not contest the point with the Chair

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (H. R. No. 6969) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE POTOMAC RIVER.

The Senate proceeded to consider the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1381) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the presiding officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER appointed Mr. WITHERS, Mr. McMillan, and Mr. Rollins as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL

Mr. KELLOGG submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

MILEAGE OF WITNESSES.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer a resolution for reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved. That there be paid to J. V. Admire, L. T. Smith, E. B. Purcell, and George T. Anthony, out of the contingent fund of the United States Senate, the mileage for attending as witnesses from the State of Kansas in the investigation of the election of Hon. J. J. INCALLS, the same as the other witnesses received.

Mr. HOAR. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I merely desire to suggest to the Senator from Kansas whether that had not better go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection myself to such a reference, but I rather supposed the subject-matter of it would more properly come within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HOAR. As I understand the question it is this: these witnesses disobeyed a subpœna, or were alleged to have disobeyed a subpœna to appear before a sub-committee in Kansas. Thereupon an order of the Senate was obtained at its next session, ordering these an order of the Senate was obtained at its next session, ordering these gentlemen to be arrested and brought here by the Sergeant-at-Arms. That order being enforced, instead of actually arresting these gentlemen, who were said to be respectable citizens, and concerning whose failure to appear there was some explanation, (I do not remember the general character of it,) they telegraphed that if instead of the Sergeant-at-Arms sending a deputy for their arrest, if they could be permitted to come to Washington themselves they would do so. Thereupon they came; they went before the committee and gave the testimony which had been sought by the sub-committee in Kansas, and were discharged by the Senate on making known that fact. The testimony which had been sought by the sub-committee in Kansas, and were discharged by the Senate on making known that fact. The Sergeant-at-Arms then inquired of the Committee on Privileges and Elections whether he was at liberty to pay these gentlemen their expenses in coming here. Now, I suppose, speaking for one, that the Sergeant-at-Arms, when he is ordered to bring a person here whose fare he would have to pay, may properly, if the person comes voluntarily and pays his own fare, arrange to refund it. He may do that properly without any authority except what already exists. But the Committee on Privileges and Elections felt that they had no authority and no duty to advise the Sergeant-at-Arms as to what he should do. It was a matter solely within his discretion so far as his own act was concerned, and if he had not sufficient authority to make the payment, the application should be made to the Senate.

ment, the application should be made to the Senate.

Under these circumstances the question which I desire to submit to the Senator from Kansas, and I shall be entirely governed in my own vote on what he thinks best, is the mere question whether the reference to the Committee on Contingent Expenses would not result in their authorizing the Sergeant-at-Arms to make the payment of the expense incurred practically by him heretofore which the resolution provides for.

Mr. PLUMB. That is a matter which is entirely immaterial so far as I am concerned, and I am willing to accept that reference. Inasmuch, however, as the Senator from Massachusetts has attempted Inasmuch, however, as the Senator from Massachusetts has attempted to state the facts in the case, I may be permitted to say that he is mistaken in regard to the order in which certain occurrences took place. The witnesses were brought before the Senate, and the Senate, hearing their statement, discharged them. Thereupon they testified. I do not think the order was given to the Sergeant-at-Arms to arrest them, but they understood from public and private sources perhaps that the Senate might make such an order, and said if they had to be called here in pursuance of the undoubted power of the Senate so to do, either under arrest or otherwise, they preferred not to come under arrest, because that assumed what they did not deem themselves guilty of. a disobedience of any lawful subpœna of a comto come under arrest, because that assumed what they did not deem themselves guilty of, a disobedience of any lawful subpœna of a committee of this body.

I have no objection to the reference, accepting the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, and permitting the resolution to go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

LANDS IN SEVERALTY TO INDIANS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is the bill (S. No. 1773) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to (S. No. 1773) to provide for the allotment of lands in severally to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the States and Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST.]

Mr. WALLACE. I move to temporarily lay aside the pending order without prejudice and proceed to consider the Indian appropriation bill

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania ? The Chair hears no objection, and the motion is adopted.

Mr. COKE. I want it understood by proper action that the bill in relation to Indians is the unfinished business, and is only laid aside informally to be resumed when the Indian appropriation bill is disposed of.

Mr. WALLACE. That was my motion.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding.

DISTRICT MUNICIPAL CODE.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say before the Senate proceeds with the consideration of the unfinished business that some few days since I gave notice that I would on to-day ask the Senate to proceed to the gave notice that I would on to-day ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the House bill providing a municipal code for the District of Columbia. Inasmuch as the bill in charge of my friend from Texas is now under consideration, of course I shall not seek to interfere with the consideration of that bill; but I desire to give notice that immediately upon the conclusion of the consideration of that bill I shall ask the Senate to proceed to consider the bill that I have indicated have indicated.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The suggestion made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] is agreed to by unanimous

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6730) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1832, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, this bill is what is generally known as the Indian appropriation bill, and as it comes to the Senate contains an appropriation of $4,526,866.80. The Senate Committee on Appropriations have added to that total $71,000, so that the bill reported to the Senate contains $4,526,866.80. The bill is less than the estimates for the year 1882 by $261,000, and it is less than the appropriations for 1881 by $70,140.30.

The total items of increase are $72,000, as follows: For the Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Apaches, &c., $35,000; for subsistence of Joseph's band of Nez Percés, in the Indian Territory, $5,000; for the Shostone Indians in Wyoming, $5,000; for the Indians removed from the Malheur reservation, in Oregon, $12,000; a new item for rebuilding the Tallahassee mission school building, $5,000; and the expenses of the Indian commissioners, $10,000, making the total of $72,000. We have then reduced the appropriations by taking away the salary of one Indian agent, $1,000, making the net increase $71,000.

The increase for the Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Apaches, &c., of $35,000, is the result of what we deem to be a necessity of the Indian Territory, and are the warlike bands. The total of about ten thousand of them are upon two reservations. There is a deficiency for the past year of about eighty thousand dollars, with the appropriation made for the current year. The amount appropriated by the House is $315,000; the amount asked for by the Department is $350,000. Your committee have given the amount of the estimate, believing that it was true economy to support and sustain these Indians, at least in the manner in which the Increase for the increase of appropriation for the support of Joseph's band of Nez Percés. That was estimated for at them from raids and warlike demonstrations.

The same is the reason for the increase of appropriation for the support of Joseph's band of Nez Percés. That was estimated for at $20,000; the amount appropriated by the House was $15,000; and we have given the estimate. The Shoshone Indians in Wyoming are 1,157 in number. The total amount asked for support and civilization for the year is $20,000. The House gave them but $15,000, and we have increased the appropriation to $20,000.

We have also given for the support of Indians removed from the Malheur reservation, in Oregon, $12,000, which was not in the bill as it came from the House. The amount estimated for the support and civilization of these Indians upon their own reservation was $15,000. They have removed from their old reservation to the Yakamas reservation in Washington Territory. There are some four hundred and fifty They have removed from their old reservation to the Yakamas reserva-tion in Washington Territory. There are some four hundred and fifty or four hundred and sixty of them, and the necessity for keeping an agency there and for subsisting them separately does not continue to exist. We have therefore taken away the appropriation for an Indian agent there, and have given to them $12,000 of the $15,000 that was asked to aid in their support at the Yakamas reservation, to which they have been removed. This leaves there for entry and sale by the Government about a million and a half acres of land in Southern Oregon.

The new item for rebuilding the Tallahassee mission school building was added after the bill came from the House, the fire which consumed the building having occurred quite recently. It was a large normal or boarding school building, as we understand, in the Indian Territory for the education of teachers there. It cost some ten thousand dollars. They ask for aid in rebuilding it, and the committee have recommended that $5,000 be given for that purpose.

We have then added to the bill $10,000 for the expenses of the Indian commissioners. This item was struck out by the House. The committee has restored the appropriation and proposed to continue committee has restored the appropriation and proposed to continue the efforts and the payment of the expenses of the Indian commis-

These items comprise the whole of the increases in the bill. As we proceed with the consideration of the bill in detail there may be a necessity for further explanation.

I now send to the desk and ask to have read a communication from the Interior Department on the subject of the necessity for several of these appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the communication.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, January 19, 1881.

Sir: I have the honor to scknowledge the receipt of your note of the 17th instant requesting, on behalf of the "sub-committee on Indian appropriations bill," certain information in relation to increased appropriation asked by the Indian Office for Arapaboes, Cheyennes, Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, and other lives, &c., and in reply respectfully invite your attention to the inclosed letter, dated the 18th instant, from the Office of Indian Affairs, to which the subject was referred, which contains the information requested by you.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

Hon. WILLIAM A. WALLACE,
Of Committee on Appropriations.

C. SCHURZ.

Department of the Interior, Office of Indian Affairs, Washington, January 18, 1881.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by your reference of the 17th instant, of a communication from the Senate Committee on Appropriations, in which reasons are asked for an increase of appropriations for Arapahoes, Cheyennes, &c., from $315,000 to $350,000, and for Joseph's Band of Nez Percés in Indian Territory, and for Shoshones in Wyoming, from $15,000 to $20,000 in each case, as recommended by the Department; also, to be informed of the reason for requiring the Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi at the Jowa agency to sign a pay-roll, as provided on page 27, lines 642-647, of the Senate print of the bill, when no such requirement is made of other tribes; and further, as to what proportion of the amount appropriated under the head of "general incidental expenses of the Indian service" will be used for traveling expenses of agents and transportation of supplies, and if traveling expenses of agents and transportation of supplies, and if traveling expenses of agents have been paid out of this appropriation as heretofore made.

In reply, I have to state as follows:

appropriated under the head of "general incidental expenses of the Indian service" will be used for traveling expenses of agents and transportation of supplies, and if traveling expenses of agents have been paid out of this appropriation as heretofore made.

In reply, I have to state as follows:

The increase recommended for the support of the Arapahoes, Chevennes, &c., is absolutely necessary. There are 10.022 Indians at the two agencies to be furnished with supplies under this appropriation, namely: Chevenne and Arapahoe 5,899, and Kiowa 4,123. Even with the amount asked for but partial rations can be supplied, as a full ration for each person for the entire year would involve an expenditure of over a half million dollars, estimating the cost of a ration at fifteen cents. The regular appropriation of $20,000 made for said Indians for the fiscal year 1880 proved to be inadequate, and a deficiency appropriation was made by Congress for that year of the sum of $20,000, making a total of $370,000. The appropriation for the current fiscal year is $305.000, and there will be a deficiency of about fifty thousand dollars, for which an estimate will be submitted to Congress in a few days.

The increase recommended for the Nez Percés of Joseph's band is based upon the fact that the appropriation of $15.000 for said band for the fiscal year 1880 failed to be sufficient for their support, and Congress appropriated $19,000 additional to supply them with necessary articles for the remainder of that year. They number three hundred and forty-four souls, and beside subsistence, clothing, implements, &c., have to be furnished them out of the sum appropriated by Congress.

An appropriation of $15.000 was made for said Indians for the current fiscal year, and Congress will be asked for an additional $5,000, for the balance of the fiscal year, to meet a deficiency which is inevitable.

The sum of $20,000, recommended for the Shoshones in Wyoming, is required for the reason that the line in the summed of the summary of the fiscal

E. M. MARBLE, Acting Commissione

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. WALLACE. I also have a communication from the Indian Bureau on the subject of the appropriation for the support of the Nez Percés, which I ask the Secretary to read. The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS,

Washington, January 17, 1881.

GENTLEMEN: Referring to the conference which I had the honor to have with your committee on Saturday last, upon the Indian appropriation bill, I desire to state that it is not clear in my mind what conclusion was arrived at in the case of the appropriation for the "support of the Nez Percés, of Joseph's band"—whether or not it was agreed to increase the said item from $15,000 to $20,000, as estimated for.

If the question was not definitively settled, I beg to impress upon your committee the importance of placing at the disposal of the Department not less than the sum estimated for, as said Indians will require aid for another year to the extent of at least the amount stated.

Very respectfully,

JOS. T. BENDER,
Acting Chief Clerk.
Hon. Wm. A. Wallace, Hon. Jas. B. Beck, Hon. Wm. Windom, United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be acted upon as they are reached in order in the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 8, before the word "agents," to strike out "sixty-seven" and insert "sixty-six;" so as to read:

For pay of sixty-six agents of Indian affairs at the following-named agencies, at the rates respectively indicated, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out line 21 in the appropriations for Indian agents in the following words:

At the Malheur agency, at $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 126, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for the pay of the agents at the various agencies from $97,000 to $96,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 129, to reduce the number of interpreters for the tribes in Oregon from "seven" to "six;" after "Umatilla," in line 130, to insert "and;" in line 131, after "Warm Springs," to strike out "and Malheur;" and in line 132, after the word "each," to strike out "two thousand one" and insert "one thousand eight;" so as to make the clause read:

Six for the tribes in Oregon, namely, two for the Klamath, and one each for Grand Ronde, Siletz, Umatilla, and Warm Springs agencies, at $300 per annum each, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 134, before the word "for" to strike out "six" and insert "seven;" and in line 136, after the word "each," to strike out "one thousand eight" and insert "two thousand one;" so as to make the clause read:

Seven for the tribes in Washington Territory, to be assigned to such agencies as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, at $300 per annum each, $3,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "Interior," in line 188, to insert "and for special interpreters when necessary;" so as to make

For additional payment of the said interpreters, to be distributed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and for special interpreters when necessary, $4,000; in all, $26,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 920 to increase the appropriation "for subsistence and civilization of the Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, and Wichitas who have been collected upon the reservations set apart for their use and occupation" from $315,000 to $350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1011 to increase the appropriation "for support and civilization of Joseph's band of Nez Percé Indians, in the Indian Territory," from $15,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1017 to increase the appropriation "for support and civilization of Shoshone Indians in Wyoming" from $15,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.
The next amendment was, after the word "Yakamas," in line 1028, to insert "and of Indians removed from Malheur reservation;" and in line 1030, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty-two;" so as to make the clause read:

For subsistence and civilization of the Yakamas, and of Indians removed from Malheur reservation, including pay of employés, $32,000.

Mr. WALLACE. By direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I move to strike out the words "including traveling expenses of agents and transportation of supplies" wherever they occur in the bill, commencing on page 43, line 1035, and occurring on pages 44 and 45. These words are new, and seem to have been incorporated into the bill because the estimates contained them; but we have from the Second Auditor of the Treasury, since the bill was reported, a statement calling our attention to the unwisdom of retaining these words, which I will send to the Secretary to be read.

ment calling our attention to the unwisdom of retaining these words, which I will send to the Secretary to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania where these words first appear—on what page?

Mr. WALLACE. Page 43, line 1035, "including traveling expenses of agents and transportation of supplies."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter sent up by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 19, 1881.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith, for the consideration of your committee, copy of a letter from the Second Auditor of the Treasury dated the 15th instant, suggesting certain modifications in the items appropriated for traveling expenses of Indian agents, and transportation of Indian supplies, contained in the act (H. R. No. 6730) making appropriations for the expenses of the Indian Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882.

Very respectfully,

H. F. FRENCH, Acting Secretary.

Hon. H. G. Davis, Chairman of Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND AUDITOR'S OFFICE, Washington, D. C., January 15, 1881.

Washington, D. C., January 15, 1851.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the following items in the act (H. R. No. 6730) making appropriations for the expenses of the Indian Department for the year ending June 30, 1882:

On page 9 an appropriation of $32,500 is provided for "contingencies of the Indian service, including traveling and incidental expenses of Indian agents." On pages 43, 44, and 45 traveling expenses of Indian agents are also provided for under the head of incidental expenses in Arizona, California, Colorado, Dakota, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming.

On pages 43, 44, 45, and 46 the same service is provided for inder incidental expenses in the twelve States and Territories hereinbefore named.

At present the traveling expenses of Indian agents are chargeable to "contingencies of the Indian Department," while the cost of transporting Indian supplies can be paid only from the specific appropriation made for that purpose, namely, "transportation of Indian supplies." The two classes of expenditure are thus limited to one appropriation each; but the set proposes to make them payable not only from the appropriations above indicated, but also from twelve appropriations for incidental expenses. In other words, payments on account of traveling expenses of Indian agents and transportation of Indian supplies, instead of being limited, as now, to one appropriation each, will be spread over thirteen appropriations. It is scarcely necessary to remark that this will not tend to simplify the adjustment of Indian accounts. On the contrary, it will introduce another element of complication.

ment of Indian accounts. On the contrary, it will introduce another element of complication.

If the appropriations for "contingencies of the Indian Department" and "transportation of Indian supplies" are insufficient to meet the legal demands upon them, it would be preferable, for many reasons that will at once suggest themselves, to increase those appropriations than to render twelve other appropriations available to an unlimited extent.

I therefore respectfully suggest that the matter be brought to the attention of the proper committees of the Senate and House of Representatives for such action as they may deem wise and expedient.

I would a so suggest the propriety of inserting a proviso after the word "dollars" in line 201, page 9, (H. R. No. 6730,) that the traveling and incidental expenses of Indian agents shall not be paid from any other appropriation than "contingencies of the Indian Department."

Very respectfully,

O. FERRISS, Auditor.

O. FERRISS, Auditor. Hon. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania, on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, proposes to amend the bill by striking out the words indicated by him wherever they occur, commencing on page 43. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill. The ext amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1118, to insert:

For this amount, to assist the Creek Nation of Indians in rebuilding the "Talla-assee Mission school building," destroyed by fire December 19, 1880, $5,000.

Mr. WALLACE. I send to the desk to be read for the information of the Senate a communication on the subject of this amendment.

Department of the Interior,

Washington, January 12, 1881.

Sie: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter from the Office of Indian Affairs, dated the 10th instant, with inclosures therein noted, in relation to the loss by fire, on the 19th of December last, of the Tallahassee mission school building, in the Creek Nation, Indian Territory, and recommending, in view of the facts stated, that the sum of $5,000 be appropriated by Congress to enable the Creeks to rebuild their mission building and resume their educational work.

An estimate of appropriation in the sum of $5,000 is herewith respectfully presented, and the subject is recommended to Congress for its consideration.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

The PRESIDENT of the Senate.

Estimate of appropriation required to assist the Creek Nation of Indians in rebuilding the Tallahassee mission school building, destroyed by fire December 19, 1880.

This amount, to assist the Creek Nation of Indians in rebuilding the Tallahassee mission school building, destroyed by fire December 19, 1880 ... $5,000

Department of the Interior, Office of Indian Affairs, Washington, January 10, 1881.

Sir: I have the honor to inclose herewith copies of letters from Samuel Checote, principal chief of the Muskogee Nation, and Pleasant Porter and others, Creek delegates, in reference to the loss by fire, on the 19th of December, 1850, of the Tallahassee mission building, one of the most flourishing schools in the nation, and in which they ask the aid of the Government to enable them to rebuild the same.

The building above mentioned was constructed some years ago by the nation at a cost of $10,000, and accommodated about one hundred pupils.

Prior to 1879, under the fifth article of the treaty with the Creeks of February 14, 1832, and fifth article of treaty of Angust 7, 1856, they received from the United States annually the sum of $1,000 for educational purposes; but Congress in 1879, for the reason that this amount was allowable only during the pleasure of the President, discontinued the appropriation, and they have not since 1878 received from the Government any aid for educational purposes.

In view of the fact that this annual appropriation of $1,000 has been discontinued, and, further, that the Creek Nation expends annually about two-fifths of its national funds for educational purposes, I respectfully and urgently recommend that Congress be requested to appropriate the sum of $5,000 to assist the Creek people in rebuilding their mission, and to enable them to resume the education of the one hundred pupils now deprived of school facilities.

Very respectfully,

E. M. MARBLE,

E. M. MARBLE, Acting Commissioner.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

OCKMULGEE, INDIAN TERRITORY, December 22, 1880.

Gentlemen: I write you this time simply to inform you that great loss and destruction has befallen us. On last Sabbath evening, while all were in Sunday-school, some way the top part of Tallahassee mission caught fire and was all in a flame when discovered. The teachers and children all got out and the entire building burned to ashes. It is a great loss to the nation—just as all seemed so deeply interested in the education of the rising generation, to lose the building of one of the most flourishing schools in our midst. This would not seem such a great loss but that our educational fund is very small at present. In accordance with treaty, it used to be that we derived the benefit of a certain amount, by and with the pleasure of the President, but it seems that that officer has seen fit and proper to discontinue his generosity in that direction. It would be well if you could secure a renewal of said amount, which would aid considerably in rebuilding on burned mission. Do all you can to secure or obtain aid from some source to be used in the way of building a new mission. Hoping that success will ever attend you on your mission, I remain, mission, I remain, Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAM'L CHECOTE, Principal Chief M. N.

Hon. Pleasant Porter, Hon. Ward Coachman, Hon. D. M. Hodge, Creek Delegates, Washington City, D. C.

Department of the Interior, Office of Indian Affairs, Washington, January 4, 1881.

Six: Inclosed please find letter of Samuel Checote, principal chief Creek Nation. The subject therein called attention to is one of much importance, and has been urged heretofore. The funds alluded to were allowed to the Creek people under the treaties of 1833 and 1836, and were used for school purposes in the main. These funds were suspended in the year 1874, and again allowed in 1875, but have since then been disallowed, not by any act or fault of the Indian Office, but by Congress.

The terms of continuance of these funds were by treaty during the pleasure of the President.

Owing to the fact that these funds were discontinued by a department of the Government not designed by treaty to have any control of the matter, and the present needs of the Creeks, we trust that your office may find it proper to estimate for the allowance to be continued for at least a limited period of time.

We are, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

PLEASANT PORTER, WARD COACHMAN, D. M. HODGE.

Creek Delegates.

Hon. E. M. Marble, Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out from line 1125 to line 1128, inclusive, as follows:

That all laws or parts of laws creating or authorizing the commission of tem citizens provided for in the act of April 10, 1869, be, and the same are hereby, repealed;

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Expenses of Indian commissioners:
For the expenses of the commission of citizens, serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary concluded the reading of the bill. The last amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out section 6, in the following words:

All advertisements for contracts involving the expenditure of any money herein appropriated shall be made at least sixty days before any such contract shall be awarded.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg to call the attention of the Senate to page 46 of the bill, and the paragraph in lines 1116, 1117, and 1118 providing "for support of industrial schools and for other educational purposes for the Indian tribes, $85,000," and I wish to move to this amendment, to add after the word "dollars:"

And out of this sum the Secretary of the Interior may make and pay such allowance, not exceeding the rate of $1,500 a year, as he shall think just to Captain R. H. Pratt, in charge of the school at Carlisle, Pennsylvania.

Mr. WITHERS. I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont ance, not exceeding the rate of $1,500 a year, as he shall think just to Captain R. H. Prati, in charge of the school at Carlisle, Pennsylvania.

Mr. WITHERS. I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that there is another school engaged in the education of Indians also, to the head of which the same privilege should be extended if the amendment be adopted, and that is the school at Fortress Monroe under the charge of General Armstrong. Many Indians have been educated there and are being educated there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be; and I have no disposition to make any objection to that. I only speak of this because I happen to know about it. About four years ago I happened to be, for purposes of recovering my health, at the city of Saint Angustine in Florida. I found there in an ancient Spanish fort, now a part of the property of the United States, this gentleman, Captain Pratt of the Army of the United States, in charge of a considerable number, I do not remember how many, but I should say probably eighty or one hundred Indians who had been captured on the plains accused of all the atrocities of which Indians are so often accused, and in many of the instances from my inquiries I have no doubt correctly. The policy of the Government appeared to have been, not to subject those Indians, on account of the particular mode of warfare that they had, to being tried and executed, but to sentence them to what was practically indefinite confinement. They were sent to this military reservation, this old Spanish fort at Saint Augustine, and put in charge of this officer of the Army who was commanded to do that duty, not begging for it as it is said the Army officers do for staff appointments in Washington, but commanded to go and attend to that disagreeable duty of keeping guard over this body of the worst Indians that could be possibly picked up on the plains. He had been there for some time, as I then learned, not from him particularly but more from philanthropic ladies and gentlemen who had endeavored in their way, on the plains, that they were sent back to their respective tribes that they had left, perhaps six years before, and set at liberty; and whereas when they came away from the great plains of the West they were what we call murderers in the very worst sense of the term with all the atrocities that can make the taking of human of the term with all the atrocities that can make the taking of human life the most disagreeable possible, they went back as missionaries of good order, of respect for the rights of other people, of the value of civilized industry and civilized enterprise. The remnant of these people and some of their children that had come on to them, with others that Congress had provided for to be brought in from the plains to be taught, the children of these wild tribes, were sent to the Carlisle barracks, in Pennsylvania, a famous and historic rendezvous, as we all know, for the recruiting of the armies of the United States. Captain Pratt was ordered—not seeking for it—to go to Carlisle and take charge of this industrial and educational school for the wild young Indians that were sent in to him under some author-the wild young Indians that were sent in to him under some authority of law, at Carlisle. He went.

He has been only a captain in the Army. His salary, of course, is an extremely moderate one; one sufficient for his comfortable supan extremely moderate one; one sumcent for his comfortable support and that of his wife and his children in doing strictly Army duties at some distant post on the frontier, with his company in the field or wherever. Detailed to this duty under the command of the President of the United States, head of that school which excites, justly, the interest, and I think I may say the admiration of everybody who desires to try experiments in the advancement of the civilization of the Indians, a large incidental expense falls upon his personal pures. Visitors members of Congress Secretaries Indian agents. sonal purse. Visitors, members of Congress, Secretaries, Indian agents, philanthropists coming to that vicinity, and sometimes coming very primantaropists coming to that vicinity, and sometimes coming very great distances, Indians coming or sent to see what has become of their children and how they are getting on—because some Indians are sufficiently civilized to do that—come to the place he has in charge. Of course he feels obliged, as any one of us would feel obliged, to exercise such hospitality as he possibly can, to ask them to dine, and he does all the other things that the ordinary civilities of society require. That as we all know entails expense. So the fact is that require. That, as we all know, entails expense. So the fact is that this poor man has been taxed in order to carry on this philanthropic effort on the part of the Government of the United States, in respect of his private resources

The subject was brought to the attention of the Secretary of the Interior some time ago—I believe I did it myself a year ago or so—and he quite agrees that some provision ought to be made to aid Capand he quite agrees that some provision ought to be made to aid Captain Pratt in bearing the necessary burdens which fall upon him on account of these extraordinary duties. It was suggested that his rank ought to be increased in the Army, and that increase of rank would give him an increased pay. Then the Secretary of War was seen. I will suppose—of course I have no right to talk about interviews with the Executive Departments, of which we are independent—but I will suppose that the Secretary of War was seen. He agreed to it most heartily in principle, but was decidedly opposed to it in practice, because it would be a bad precedent to increase the compensation of any particular Army officer. The consequence has been that between two favorable and sympathetic millstones, the Interior and the War Department, this poor captain has been ground Interior and the War Department, this poor captain has been ground just about to powder.

Here is a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, which merely fortifies what I have been saying about the desert of this Department of the Interior.

My Dear Sir: I have received your letter of the 11th instant, and had at once a conversation with the President about it, who thought that in the way of promotion in the Army the object you had in view, and with which I fully sympathized, could not be accomplished.

And that is for the reason I have said that the stupendous co-ordination of Army glory would be at once disturbed if this gentleman who has probably done more for the country in the last five years than any other Army officer extant—of course I mean below the rank of, say, colonel—cannot go in.

I think it best, therefore, to try to accomplish the end desired by way of legislation. An amendment to the Indian appropriation bill will be prepared and sent to the Committee on Appropriations, to be accompanied by a letter setting forth the circumstances of the case and urgently recommending its adoption. I hope that it will be successful, and that in this way your pay can be raised to a point corresponding with the position you occupy and the services you render. I may assure you that no effort will be wanting on my part.

Very truly, yours,

Captain R. H. PRATT, Carlisle, Pennsylvania.

Captain Pratt writes me, and for the reason that I stated that it happened by accident that he knew I was a living witness to the service which he had performed, and the way in which his small stipend has been drawn out to pay public expenses. This was the excuse for writing to me, and he says that he observes that somehow or other the Indian appropriation bill in the House has not made any reference to this subject, and therefore calls my attention to it.

Therefore, without making any points of order (and I am not certain that they could be made; but I do not put it on that ground; I will assume for the sake of the argument that a point of order could be made) I sak the Senate to adopt the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to make an inquiry. How are these schools supported? Where is the appropriation for the Carlisle and Hampton schools? Is that in this bill?

Mr. WALLACE. The provision that it is proposed to amend is the provision for their support.

provision for their support.

Mr. TELLER. Is that all there is?
Mr. WALLACE. I think there is no other item.
Mr. President, the committee do not feel like raising a point of order upon the amendment of the Senator from Vermont. It is due to the committee to say that neither here, nor in the House, nor in the Book of Estimates, have we heard of anything in reference to the necessities of Captain Pratt. We are content, on the statement of the Senator from Vermont and in view of all the circumstances surrounding the needs of this school, that the Senate shall do what to them seems proper. We shall not undertake to raise a point of order on the proposition. It is in the right direction. We are desirous of doing anything we can to aid in the education of these unfortunate people.

Mr. PENDLETON. I am very glad the committee has concluded not to raise a point of order upon the amendment of the Senator from Vermont. I happen to have had an opportunity, as that Senator has vermont. Inappen to have had an opportunity, as that senator has had, to see the fidelity, devotion, and intelligence exercised by Captain Pratt in the discharge of the duties to which the Senator from Vermont has alluded in Florida. He has continued since to exercise the same fidelity and intelligence in regard to the Indian children at Carlisle barracks that he exercised there. As I happen to know, the expenses incurred by him and the duties that devolved upon him are such as have been stated by the Senator from Vermont. It has been a very heavy burden upon him, and he has borne that burden uncomplainingly. Now that the Senator from Vermont has the opportunity and has availed himself of it by offering this amendment, I trust it may pass the Senate unanimously.

Mr. CALL. I also am a witness to the singular merit and great success of Captain Pratt in his treatment of the Indians in Florida, success of Captain Fratt in his treatment of the Indians in Florida, and his efforts on behalf of the education of Indian children. I myself know, as other Senators know, that he devoted all his means and all his time, with a singular and wonderful devotion, to the purpose of bringing these people into harmony with the civilization of our time, by forming industrious habits, and giving them some principles of conduct which would make them useful hereafter. He did succeed. The Indians that he had brought there as wild and bloodthirsty ceed. The Indians that he had brought there as wild and bloodthirsty savages he returned to the West kindly and docile, gentlemanly and honorable in their dealings with each other and with the people around them. These circumstances are well known to me. I am intimately acquainted with them. For a period of several weeks I was with Captain Pratt while he had these Indians in Florida. I concur earnestly in what has been stated by the Senator from Vermont and by the Senator from Ohio, and hope that this appropriation will be made at once.

Mr. PLIJMR. The proposition of the Senator for Western Senator for the Senator

Mr. PLUMB. The proposition of the Senator from Vermont, in my judgment, is objectionable from one stand-point. I admit that other members of the Senate are as well posted as I am, but I say that when an Army officer gets a detail to do something that is not military duty proper, or that is only quasi-military, he, in a large number of cases, esteems himself entitled to much greater compensation than when he does the duty for which he is specially employed and for which he is paid. The pay of the Army is larger than it ever was at any other period of the history of the country. The Army officers are proverbially hospitable. At every frontier post the officers in command and the officers stationed there, whether in command or not, are called upon to exercise hospitality toward traveling persons, members of the Government, and of various commissions sent out, and the tax upon them is large as well as it is upon Captain Pratt. If hospitality is to be rewarded, the persons in command of frontier posts ought to be rewarded as well as the teacher of a lot of Indians. More than that, to my certain knowledge a large number of the Indian agents have onerous burdens of this same kind that they bear uncomplainingly. The Indian, in his more savage state, is a subject Mr. PLUMB. The proposition of the Senator from Vermont, in uncomplainingly. The Indian, in his more savage state, is a subject of curiosity as well as the Indian at the Carlisle barracks. People go out on the frontier to witness the operations of the Indian policy for various purposes, and they impose themselves, if I may use such a term, on the officers at the various agencies where they happen to be, and this burden is borne by a class of people who get a very unremunerative salary. Fifteen hundred dollars is about the maximum—the average at all events.

In the next place, I think it is vicious, because I do not believe that schools like that at Carlisle barracks are calculated to be, in proportion to their cost, of any permanent value to the Indians, nor of value in the settlement of the Indian problem. The Indians whom Captain Pratt converted at Saint Augustine, could have been converted just as well anywhere else, where there was plenty of flour and beef, under the auspices of any man who had plenty of them and a good spoon to feed them with. These miraculous conversions do not occur with reference to that class of people. Captain Pratt could not have converted that many white men from even the character of barbarism with which they are afflicted; and the conversion which he worked in the Indian was physical and not spiritual.

acter of barbarism with which they are afflicted; and the conversion which he worked in the Indian was physical and not spiritual. The Indian question is not to be settled in any such way. I think the problem is to make these people self-supporting. The effort, such as we witness at Carlisle barracks or Fortress Monroe, or Saint Angustine and other places remote from the point where the Indians roam at will, is to take them from the low plane in which they ordinarily exist, their natural plane, and with a hop, step, and jump, so to speak, to bring them on a plane with the white people; in other words, to do for the Indians in a year or five years what the white race has been a thousand years in bringing about in the various processes of progress and of revolution.

cesses of progress and or revolution.

If the same money and the same efforts were directed to the education of the Indian where he naturally belongs, toward teaching him to do something which he is qualified to do, not to teach school, not to perform in the higher classes of mathematics or of manufactures, but to learn pastoral things and the lower walks of agriculture, those things which tend to qualify him to fill his stomach and to clothe his back by his own labor, the result to the Treasury of the country and even to the humanitarian side of this question would be far more conspicuous and salutary.

I therefore regard this amendment as in the wrong direction for both the considerations which I have mentioned; first, because Captain Pratt while there under the orders of the Government is no more tain Fratt while there under the orders of the Government is no more entitled to this salary than any other officer engaged in performing quasi-military duty. In the next place, while of course Captain Pratt did not go there at his own request, I have no doubt he could have been relieved at his own request. Under the operation of the ordinary rule of detail in the Army there are what is known as detours of duty. The quartermaster who serves at a remote frontier post where he cannot educate his children and where he may be called of duty. The quartermaster who serves at a remote frontier post where he cannot educate his children and where he may be called upon to exercise these acts of hospitality which I have mentioned to his financial loss, after the expiration of two or three years is transported, so to speak, is ordered, to another post, a more favorable one. So after Captain Pratt has served for two or three years at the Carlisle barracks, if he desires to avail himself of this privilege which all other officers of the Army have, I have no doubt he can do so and somebody else can go there to take his place. After all, there is still left to these officers the privilege of resigning, a privilege of which few of them I fancy ever avail themselves.

We are establishing here all the while the principle of paying men who enlist ostensibly for military services a great deal more for services that are not military. We are ingrafting upon the Army a civil establishment large and extravagant, which is making the Army today anything else but a military establishment.

Talk about contact with the Indians! The man who serves on the frontier as General Miles and other men of that kind have served and are serving to-day, undergoing the discomforts of that remote service, undergoing the dangers of a service that is truly military, are more entitled to pay, more entitled to consideration, more entitled to promotion and extra allowances that require and exhibit the favor of the Government than a class of men who, whether with or without their own consent, do not render military service—the only service that the Government now has for them to perform. They either seek—or at all events if they do not seek it they have the benefit of a quiet location, of the uninterrupted service, of social surroundings, of educational facilities, and everything which a man situated as Captain Pratt is constantly has, and for the lack of which no money can compensate.

These details and these extra allowances are breaking up the Army,

These details and these extra allowances are breaking up the Army, These details and these extra allowances are breaking up the Army, because the young officers out on the frontier, the officers who have not influence, are constantly chafing at the idea that their more favored fellows in the East, the men who get the details in the East, are not only having the details to enable them to dance attendance upon the social observances and operations of society where they have to be stationed, but they are able to receive besides additional allowances in consequence of it.

If there is to be a teacher of the Indians at the Carliele berreaks allowances in consequence of it.

If there is to be a teacher of the Indians at the Carlisle barracks there are plenty of men in civil life who would be glad to take it for half the salary that Captain Pratt is getting to-day. He not only is getting the pay of a captain, but that is being added to largely, and in a few years, by reason of what is called the longevity provision in the statutes, it will be about twenty-five hundred or three thousand dallowers. the statutes, it will be about twenty-nve hundred or three thousand dollars a year. There is not a professor of learning in an institution west of the Mississippi River, there is not a professor in the State University in my State to-day, who is getting $2,500 a year. That is largely more than the average pay for persons who are engaged in teaching white persons; and I am not prepared to say that a man who is engaged in teaching Indians requires a higher order of intelligence wis critical to greater may than man who teach their fallows in the or is entitled to greater pay than men who teach their fellows in the universities and schools of this country.

I therefore hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas whether Captain Pratt is receiving his regular pay in the Army and keeping his regular position?

Mr. PLUMB. I so understa

keeping his regular position?

Mr. PLUMB. I so understand that he is receiving his full pay as a captain in the Army, and all the advantages, as commutation of quarters, extra allowances, and whatever is attached to that position.

Mr. COCKRELL. And he is in the line of promotion?

Mr. PLUMB. He is in the line of promotion.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask another question, and that is whether he asked to be relieved or attempted to escape from this very grave responsibility and take his chances in the active service?

Mr. PLUMB. I cannot answer the question that the Senator from Missouri has propounded.

Missouri has propounded.

Mr. COCKRELL. The question was whether this assignment was of his voluntary choosing, whether there was anything that was forcing him to make these expenditures and to incur this arduous work, or whether it was a matter of his own voluntary choice?

Mr. PLUMB. I want to suggest to the Senator from Vermont that if it is necessary for Captain Pratt to meet these extraordinary expenses, it ought not to be done by adding to his salary. I am quite happens, no doubt, that a man's service in the Army, as well as here and elsewhere, is more arduous than it is at other times; but an Army officer has substantially a contract with the Government, and he is always prompt to assert it, that he shall be employed so long as he lives. The Government is entitled to the fat along with the lean, and he is entitled to take the lean along with the fat. If he sometimes has hard lines, much the greater portion of his time his lines are cast in pleasant places. He ought not to complain while on a detour of duty, for after three or four years at the furthest he will be relieved. duty, for after three or four years at the furthest he will be relieved. While the hospitality that may be imposed upon him may be a little expensive, he at least is relieved from the danger of military service; he is placed in a position where he can educate his family and be surrounded by all the enjoyments of life, in consideration of the fact that the Government is under contract to take care of him, and does take care of him, and will take care of him as long as life lasts, and has taken care of him, perhaps, for twenty or thirty years preceding.

Mr. WITHERS. When I stated a few minutes ago that I desired to amend the amendment offered by the Sonator from Vernont as it with the stated a few infinites ago that I desired to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, as it was read from the Clerk's table, I did not exactly appreciate its force, but regarded it as a proposition to aid the school at Carlisle to the extent indicated. As it was within my own personal knowledge that a similar educational enterprise is in successful operation at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, I saw no reason why similar aid should not be extended to that school. Upon examination I find that this is a proposition to relieve the individual named by an addition of

is a proposition to relieve the individual named by an addition of $1,500 to his salary. As I do not know any reason which would require an addition of that kind to the salary of General Armstrong, who is at the head of the Hampton normal school, I decline to offer the amendment I indicated the purpose of offering.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I cannot let what my distinguished friend from Kansas [Mr. Plumb] has said go without a single word. The pay of a captain, not mounted is $1,800 a year. He is entitled for the first five years of continuous service, on the longevity principle, according to the Army table which I hold in my hand, to $165 additional; for ten years' service to $180 additional; for fifteen years' service to $195 additional; and for twenty years' service to $2,010 as the pay of a captain.

Mr. Plumb. Let me ask the Senator a question right there in regard to the pay. What is to be added to that for fuel and quarters?

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator would have been kind enough to have listened, as I have no doubt he will be, to what I was just about have listened, as I have no doubt he will be, to what I was just about say, he would hear what I have to say on that point.

Whether Carlisle, Pennsylvania, falls within one of those circumlocutory staff appointments and positions that entitle an officer to allowance either in kind or by commutation for quarters, fuel, &c., I do not know. All I do know is that the services that Captain Pratt was commanded to perform began with his being ordered from the plains, where he had aided in the capture of these atrocious savages, carry them under his charge to the ancient fort at Saint Augustine, Florida, in order, instead of subjecting them to the punishment of death, that they might be subjected to the punishment of seclusion indefinitely by the political power of the United States exerted through its military administration. It was not the judgment or sentence of a court; but they were captured; he carried them there, and year after year, with an extraordinary and rare faculty for getting hold of the hearts and sympathies of his fellow-men, if they were savages, he endeavored to bring them into relations, harmonious relations, with such better men as my friend from Kansas and myself, to make them more like us; and everybody will agree that that was a good thing to do. To a large degree he succeeded. Some of the persons who went back backslid, as I believe some of the disciples did on certain went back backsiid, as I believe some of the disciples did on certain occasions; but on the whole the success of the work that he did because he was commanded to do it, first to capture and then to civilize, was extraordinary, because it happened that that particular man had that particular organization of nerve, or sympathy, or whatever you call it, that enabled him to get into relations with the wild natures of these wild men and to bring them, as the electrician does, or the magnetic doctor, or the amazingly strong personal politician, who brings his party to follow him with meekness and submission, sometimes to victory and sometimes to death brings his party to follow him with meekness and submission, sometimes to victory and sometimes to death.

That was the quality of Captain Pratt, and he devoted it without grumbling, not by self-seeking but by fidelity to this mission, and it bore heavily upon him. Then he was transferred with the remnant of these people, and with the new additions of Indian children coming from the plains, to Carlisle, a mere place of civil administration. It was an ancient barrack and recruiting place, but that has long since gone by. However, that place was taken advantage of, because the Government had its old buildings there, and it would save expense to put them in that place, to say nothing of the moral influences of the Quaker State of Pennsylvania. There he went, and in consequence of being commanded to do this really entirely unmilitary duty, to cultivate the arts of peace instead of the arts of war, he is subjected to the stress of pecuniary expenditures and obligations that he would not be if he were doing his regular duty either in staff or line. That is all there is to it; and I do think it is just to authorize a responsible officer of the Government to make him an allowance sure that under the great discretion which is vested in the Secretary of the Interior by this bill, and which has always been vested in him by similar bills heretofore passed, he can very easily provide means of some kind by which the visitors to that institution can be suitably boarded, and thus we shall not set the precedent of increasing a man's salary upon an excuse which may fail after awhile.

man's satary upon an excuse which may fail after awhile.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend will pardon me, and allow me to interrupt him; I think if he will read the phraseology of the amendment I have had the honor to offer he will see that it is not an increase of salary, but that it simply authorizes the responsible head of the Indian administration to make such allowance not exceeding a certain rate to the officer in charge of this school as shall appear just.

Mr. PLUMB. The habit of the Executive Departments under an executive of that hind is always to pay received what this law are to the law and the law are the same to the law are the law are to the law are the l enactment of that kind is always to pay precisely what the law says may be paid. Mr. EDMUNDS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; but it is too much so.
Mr. PLUMB. I have had occasion to observe that in a number of cases, where the statute was permissive only, the executive officers have said that they would regard it as mandatory, because Congress have said that they would regard it as mandatory, because Congress having seen fit to act upon it, it was better to regard the enactment as conclusive and settle the question than that they should fight with somebody else as to whether they should assume the responsibility or not. It is entirely safe to say that if the amendment is agreed to Captain Pratt will get $1,500, no more and no less.

When it comes to the question about the regenerating influences which have been thrown around the Indians through the mediation of this officer, I desire to call attention to another, and I think more notable instance. Some years ago the Gevernment provided by treaty for the removal of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians to the Indian Territory. The Indians after fighting for two years as to whether they should go or not, denying that they ever agreed to go, finally were obliged at the end of a long and costly war to go. The bulk of them did go, or rather they were taken down there. They received, them did go, or rather they were taken down there. They received, as they have received since that time and as they will receive through the medium of this bill, a large annuity, given to them in the shape of money, of clothing, of food, agricultural implements, &c.

A portion of them, however, could not be found to be taken there, and remained north. They came to General Miles when he was in service upon the Yellowstone, and he employed some of them as scouts. Subsequently the Government created a military reservation at Fort Subsequently the Government created a military reservation at Fort Keogh. A portion of these Indians, being in General Miles's service, camped near there. He finally took the responsibility of putting such as would go upon that reservation to the pursuits of agriculture. They have, from that day to this, supported themselves without one single penny from the Government of the United States. They are doing so to-day, and they are living better, and are a better example as to thrift, than any one or all the Indians who were taken to the Indian Territory and whom it has cost the Government $2,000,000 to keep there and feed and take care of while they are there. That was done under the operation of the humanity, or judgment, or skill, or sentiment, or whatever else you may call it, of General Miles, and there are plenty of instances of that kind.

Of course I have nothing against Captain Pratt: I do not know him

Of course I have nothing against Captain Pratt; I do not know him at all; no doubt he is a very meritorious officer; but I think before singling him out for a reward of this kind it would be well to inquire singling him out for a reward of this kind it would be well to inquire whether that would not be a little invidious. But my objection goes to the whole system. I have given an example of what can be done without money by simply putting before the Indian the problem which every white man meets, that he has to labor or die. That is one of those things which we need to apply to-day, a great deal mere than we do, and it would do them much more good than giving them an education of the kind that they get at Carlisle barracks or Forters. tress Monroe

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend to vote for this amendment, and I propose to give my reasons in just a word why I shall not vote for it. If Mr. Pratt is so worthy and deserving an officer that he should be paid an additional sum to the salary which he is now receiving, it should be paid by the Government of the United States, receiving, it should be paid by the Government of the United States, and not by the Indians. The proposition simply is to take a certain amount from the educational fund that the Department and the committee have said is necessary for the Indians and pay it over to Captain Pratt; that is, to take from somebody else this money and give it to Captain Pratt under the plea that we are discharging a debt that we owe to him. I suppose it will be admitted by everybody that if we establish a school at Carlisle and appoint a teacher, it is our business to pay him. We have treaties with a great many tribes of Indians which provide that we shall assist them in educational matters, and here we have the enormous sum of $85,000 appropriated by the and here we have the enormous sum of $85,000 appropriated by the Government of the United States for these industrial schools and for all the Indians in the United States that we are in duty bound to assist in procuring an education.

There are in the United States about one hundred thousand civil-tree are in the United States about one hundred thousand civil-ized Indians in round numbers; there are about one hundred and twenty-five thousand semi-civilized, and about one hundred thousand more who are not civilized, according to my figures, although accord-ing to the general arithmetic as to the numbers it ought to be more than that. Here is a large number of wild Indians, from seventy-five thousand to one hundred thousand at all events. There are at least one hundred and twenty-five thousand semi-civilized Indians who want and expect and who ought to have some assistance from the Want and expect and who ought to have some assistance from the Government. Out of the mere pittance of $85,000 we propose to take a portion of it to pay an increase of salary to Captain Pratt. I am entirely willing to be generous to Captain Pratt, but if I take any credit for being generous it must be with my money. If I act as the representative of the Government and the Government is going to be generous, then it will be with the Government's money, and not with the Indians' money. That is all there is of this proposition. It is pro-posed to take that which ought to be devoted to hiring teachers and pay Captain Pratt, in order that he may entertain people who go to Carlisle barracks, led by curiosity in ninety cases in a hundred; and in every case it is a matter of utter inconsequence whether they go or whether they stay away.

I am willing, with these explanations, to put myself on the record as opposed to appropriating any portion of the fand for the purpose

Mr. COCKRELL. I find in section 1765 of the Revised Statutes, which I am very much astonished that the distinguished Senator from Vermont is willing to set aside and trample under foot, these provisions:

No officer in any branch of the public service, or any other person whose salary, pay, or emoluments are fixed by law or regulations, shall receive any additional pay, extra allowance, or compensation, in any form whatever, for the disbursement of public money, or for any other service or duty whatever, unless the same is authorized by law, and the appropriation therefor explicitly states that it is for such additional pay, extra allowance, or compensation.

There are hundreds and thousands of cases pending and ready to be presented to Congress for additional compensation, (they are before the Committee on Claims; they are before the Committee on Military Affairs, and they are before every committee nearly of the Senate, Affairs, and they are before every committee committee on Mintary Affairs, and they are before every committee nearly of the Senate,) based upon the ground that the parties have done extra work, that they have performed extra services, that their services have been extra-valuable and have contributed to the advancement of humanity or Christianity or something of that kind. This law was enacted long ago, and it was for the express purpose of letting every officer of this Government know in advance that the salary and the honor and the opportunity for usefulness in every civil position were the full equivalents of all services, labors, sacrifices, &c., that he might make.

Here is an officer of the Army who is assigned to a duty. There are hundreds of other officers in the Army who would willingly seek this place and ask for no extra compensation. It is a pleasant place, remote from the dangers of battle, of Indian wars, diseases, &c. He is getting the same pay precisely that other officers are getting. We say that he has been performing extra-valuable services, that he has performed services that have resulted in great good to the Indians, and we will pay him for them. We are sending a pang, a sting, a feeling of sorrow to every other captain's heart in the Army, that this man is taken out and paid $1,500 a year for services that they would willingly perform at the regular salary of the office. I think this a discrimination which ought not to be made in favor of any officer of the Army, and I am only astonished that the Appropriations Committee seem not and I am only astonished that the Appropriations Committee seem not disposed to make any opposition to this indirect mode of increasing the salary of this officer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend from Missouri thinks that it is safe to be at Carlisle. If he were to put into the position of being exposed to the hostility of seventy or eighty captured atrocious Indian murderers, with only ten or fifteen men to help him take care of them in an old Spanish fort, a mile away from a small American watering place, I think he might imagine that in some stage of Captain Pratt's career he think he might imagine that in some stage of Captain Pratt's career he had been exposed to as much peril as either he himself or my friend from Illinois, [Mr. Logan,] who, I take as the two highest types, were at any time between the years 1861 and 1865, and a great deal more. A civilized enemy you know where to find; you know how to meet him; you know he respects the laws of war. An Indian enemy is quite a different thing.

If I had time I would like to tell to the Senate some of the experi-

If I had time I would like to tell to the Senate some of the experiences of Captain Pratt, (which he did not volunteer to tell to me,) in year after year attempting to keep these people that he was sent down within that old fort; and the perils that he ran, and "the hair-breadth 'scapes" that he and his little gang of a corporal's guard had from death in their efforts to keep these Indians in their places. That has gone by; and inasmuch as gratitude is an unconstitutional sentiment in the Senate, inasmuch as the discharge of an obligation that is past (unless it be a mail contract or something of that kind) is not one of our constitutional missions of course I must dismiss that: not one of our constitutional missions, of course I must dismiss that; not one of our constitutional missions, of course I must dismiss that; I must come to the matter as it stands now.

My friend from Missouri says that I wish to trample under foot this statute of the United States. By no means. I did not suppose that when a subsequent Congress chose to make an exception or a modification, or a repeal of a past law, it was guilty of violating the principles of government or the principles of administration or legislation. The rule that my friend has referred to is perfectly correct; but year after year, without serious difference of opinion in a great many cases and with it in others, the Congress of the United States has felt it to be a duty under special circumstances of justice and right, to make a different provision from that general and constant rule. That is what I propose to do now. I am sure I shall satisfy my friend from Missouri, with whom I usually act with great pleasure in matters of this kind, that I have not committed a great offense

nre in matters of this kind, that I have not committed a great offense in proposing the amendment in view even of the statute he has cited. Now we come to the next point. The Senator says that this will carry pain to the hearts of the two hundred, if that be the number, captains in the Army of the United States. What leads him to think so? Are the captains in the Army of the United States so groveling and so base that they would look with envy or malice or hatred upon any better fortune that some of their fellows had, if they did not get it by unfair and unjust means toward their associates? I do not believe that of any captains of the Army of the United States; I believe the reverse. I believe if we had the two or three hundred captains of the Army of the United States here before us now, knowing as all captains do pretty well the general history of their brother captains and what they have done, and if you could march them through tellers in this area of the Senate you would get a unanimous vote in favor of authorizing the payment out of the Treasury of the United States of a just allowance to Captain Pratt, consistent with the circumstances under which he has been placed.

United States or a just allowance to Captain Pratt, consistent with the circumstances under which he has been placed.

It has been suggested to me that $1,500 means that he must be paid that sum, and that that may be too much. To guard against that possibility, which I did not suppose existed, when we consider the duties of a Secretary of the Interior, I ask leave (because I can only do it with leave) to modify my amendment so as to make it "not exceeding $1,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection ? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is so modified.

none, and the amendment is so modified.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it in order to amend the amendment now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By consent of the Senate it is.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to add at the end the words "from and after this date;" so as not to be retrospective.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I shall not assent to that, because I will tell my friend from Missouri that when this matter a year or more ago came to my attention, and first, without any intervention of this gentleman, whom I only saw casually and who is no friend of mine in any other sense than any person in the United States whom I happen to know is, the War Department and the Interior Department stated and reiterated that we were doing injustice under the circumstances to this gentleman in respect of putting unfair burdens upon him, and that some provision ought to be made for him, but there was the technical objection about rank, and no particular appropriation the technical objection about rank, and no particular appropriation in the other case, and all that. So I submit to my friend from Missouri whether we cannot trust, out of the current appropriation for this year, the Secretary of the Interior, if he choose on his responsi-souri whether we cannot trust, out of the current appropriation for this year, the Secretary of the Interior, if he choose on his responsibility, to look back a little, to make some allowance for what has been lost to Captain Pratt.

Mr. COCKRELL. But would that be right? That would be retrospective, back salary, back compensation. Is that principle right, when here is an express statute saying that officers can get no pay unless an appropriation is first made by Congress? If we confine this to the future, it comes within the spirit and purview of this provision of the statutes by saying "from and after the passage of this act."

Mr. EDMUNDS. But if it happens, as it has happened over and over again, that a great flood comes in the Mississippi River and the poorer people there are swept out of house and home and corn and grain and cattle, the Secretary of War is appealed to issue rations and tents and everything that he can to help them. There is no authority of law to do it. It is a vacation of Congress. He does it. He has made himself liable to impeachment; he has parted with public property without consideration. Now, how should we look when it came around to the session and it was proposed to pass a law that should indemnify him for that and fill up the storehouses again, if we should say, "Why, that is retroactive; that will not do?" No, Mr. President, I think that whatever in justice—and if you do not want to trust the Secretary of the Interior, trust the President of the United States—ought to be done for this gentleman, ought not necessarily to be confined to the future. If anything ought to be add un to to trust the Secretary of the Interior, trust the President of the United States—ought to be done for this gentleman, ought not necessarily to be confined to the future. If anything ought to be made up to him, a hundred or two hundred or five hundred dollars for what he has already suffered, then I submit to my friend from Missouri that it is not a bad thing to do.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand, then, that the object of this provision is to authorize and permit the Secretary of the Interior to go back and pay for back services when no claim has been made in any way? Do I understand the Senator from Vermont to ask this appropriation in order that the Secretary of the Interior may go and pay for past time, that he may expend the whole thousand dollars in paying for services rendered up to the present time?

Mr. TELLER. What would become of the visitors then?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Sure enough. My friend from Colorado would go away hungry for aught we know, unless Captain Pratt paid for the horse and wagon that brought him up from the depot, and for the pork and beans and milk and water, out of his private pocket. I do not want to haggle about this water. It is perhaps of much less interest to me, who live in a remote State where there have not been any Indians since the war of the Revolution. I do not want to haggle about it. If I can meet the conservative views of my friend haggle about it. If I can meet the conservative views of my friend from Missouri by saying "from and after this date," I am willing to do that, because I know that when I follow in his footsteps I shall go in a straightforward direction, whether it be right or wrong.

Mr. WALLACE. As I understand the bill, it is an appropriation for the fiscal year commencing the 1st of July, 1881. The effect of the amendment of the Senater from Vermont, it seems to me, would be to commence that now in place of from the 1st of July. Taking be to commence that now in place of from the 1st of July. Taking the bill as it stands, I think the proposition of the Senator from Missouri is better than the proposition of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri proose an amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS.

I will accept that suggestion. I do not wish to Mr. EDMUNDS. I will accept that suggestion. I do not wish to be haggling about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it better. We will know, then, with certainty that it will not go back of the date of this bill; and if those words are not inserted, nobody can tell how far it will go back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment to the amendment? The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment is modified. The Secretary will report the amendment as modified, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary. After the word "dollars," in line 1118 of the bill, it is proposed to add:

it is proposed to add:

And out of this sum the Secretary of the Interior may make and pay such allowance, not exceeding the rate of $1,000 a year, as he shall think just, to Captain R. H. Pratt, in charge of the school in Carlisle, Pennsylvania, from and after the passage of this act.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted-yeas 27, nays 24; as follows: YEAS-27

Allison, Anthony, Baldwin, Blair, Bruce, Burnside, Butler,	Call, Cameron of Pa., Cameron of Wis., Conkling, Davis of Illinois, Dawes, Edmunds,	Ferry, Hill of Colorado, Johnston, McDonald, McMillan, Pendleton, Platt,	Ransom, Rollins, Saunders, Wallace, Whyte, Windom.

So the amendment was agreed to. Mr. CALL. I have an amendment which I desire to offer. On line 654, page 27, I move to strike out the words "they having joined their brethren west," and in line 657, after the word "dollars," to add:

To be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the education and encouragement of agriculture of the Indians now in Florida, and for the payment of the salary of an agent and teachers and agricultural implements and land for said Indians.

The appropriation which I desire to amend now reads as follows: For 5 per cent. interest on $250,000, to be paid as annuity, (they having joined their brethren west,) per eighth article of treaty of August 7, 1856, $12,500.

It will be seen by observing the bill that the preceding clause is as follows:

For 5 per cent, interest on $250,000, to be paid as annuity, per eighth article of treaty of August 7, 1856, $12,500.

The clause which I desire to amend is for 5 per cent. interest on $250,000 to pay the annuity, they having joined their brethren west, and so forth, under the eighth article of the treaty of August 7, 1856. I read from that article of the treaty:

Also to invest for them the sum of $250,000, at 5 per cent. per annum, the interest to be regularly paid over to them per capita as annuity; the further sum of $250,000 shall be invested in like manner whenever the Seminoles now remaining in Florida shall have emigrated and joined their brethren in the west, whereupon the two sums so invested shall constitute a fund belonging to the united tribe of Seminoles, and the interest on which, at the rate aforesaid, shall be annually paid over to them per capita as an annuity.

It will be seen that that condition was attached to the treaty. There were two sums of $250,000 provided to be paid. The last sum of $250,000 referred to in this appropriation was to be paid when those then in Florida migrated to the West and joined their brethren. The clause in the appropriation bill alleges that they have joined their brethren west. The preceding appropriation acts, I understand, contain the same provision. The Indians in Florida have never emigrated from Florida and joined their brethren in the West. They are still there. There are from there to say hundred Indians. never emigrated from Florida and joined their brethren in the West. They are still there. There are from three to six hundred Indians now in Florida who have never emigrated from there. That provision of the treaty has never been complied with, and yet it seems the money has been appropriated by Congress for some years past as if those Indians had fulfilled the condition of the treaty and migrated to the West. They are there unprovided for, unaided by the Government. The stipulations of the treaty of course do not in terms apply to them. Some of them are becoming civilized without land to work upon, without agricultural implements, without assistance from the Government; and they are the remnant of the most bloody, adventurous, and brave tribe of Indians upon this continent.

The money thus provided for their benefit, to be used for them when they might emigrate to the West and join their brethren, is sought to be appropriated by this bill in pursuance, I understand, of former bills having the same provision, without the condition of the treaty having been complied with, for a purpose not contemplated in it—for the benefit of the Indians now in the West. For that reason I ask that this provision be stricken out. It is not authorized by the treaty, and in fact, if it be in order and if there is no objection to it, I would ask that the money be applied for the benefit, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, of the Indians now in Florida.

the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, of the Indians now in Florida.

Mr. WALLACE. It seems that there are about 2,000 Seminoles at the Union Agency in the Indian Territory. We have no account of any other Indians of this tribe. In former statutes the statement is made that the Seminoles joined their brethren in the West in pursuance of treaty, and appropriations were made accordingly. Now, the Senator says that there are numbers of them in Florida. If they be in Florida they are not entitled to this money; they have not joined their brethren in the West; and it inevitably follows that the amendment proposed by him constitutes a new item of appropriation; and on behalf of the committee, therefore, I raise the point of order that it is in violation of the twenty-seventh rule as making a new item of appropriation, not adding additional money, but devoting money to other purposes than those contemplated and provided for in the bill.

Mr. CALL. If the point of order is raised, of course it is well taken;

Mr. CALL. If the point of order is raised, of course it is well taken; and I now move to strike out so much of the clause as appropriates for the benefit of the Indians in Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Florida repeat his amendment so that the Clerk can understand it?

Mr. CALL. I move to strike out so much—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator withdraws the proposition which he made awhile ago, and now proposes a separate amend-

Mr. CALL. I move to strike out in lines 654 and 655 the words "(they having joined their brethren West.)"
Mr. WALLACE. The objection to that is that if they have not joined their brethren as a whole, they are not entitled to any money

Mr. CALL. If the Senator will allow me, I will now propose to strike out the whole of that clause beginning with the words "For 5 per cent. interest," in line 653, down to the word "dollars," at the end of line 657.

The CHIEF CLERK. The proposed amendment is to strike out after line 652 all down to and including the word "dollars," in line 657, as follows:

For 5 per cent. interest on $250,000, to be paid as annuity, (they having joined their brethren West,) per eighth article of treaty of August 7, 1856, $12,500.

Mr. WALLACE. The effect of that amendment is to take away

Mr. WALLACE. The effect of that amendment is to take away from these Indians this money if there be a portion of them in the West. There may be, as stated by the Senator from Florida, some of them yet in Florida, but that we should deprive those who are in the West, having joined their brethren, the larger proportion of them, of any of their money, seems to me to be an improper thing.

This bill is drafted in precise accord with the language of the Book of Estimates, and it seems to me that it having come from the House in the precise words of the statute of last year, without further information than we have now we ought not to depart from the language of the bill of last year and that of the Book of Estimates.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania what is the meaning of these two clauses, each one referring to the same amount? Are we not paying by this a double amount, that is paying twice the $12,500?

Mr. WALLACE. The treaty explains that. It was read in the hearing of the Senate awhile ago by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. I will explain to the Senate that the treaty is as follows:

Also to invest for them the sum of $250,000 at 5 per cent. per annum, the interest to be regularly paid over to them per capita as annuity; the further sum of $250,000 shall be invested in like manner whenever the Seminoles now remaining in Florida shall have emigrated and joined their brethren in the West.

Since the year 1856, when this treaty was made, a very small portion of the Indians then in Florida have gone to the West.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It seems to me that some part of this ought to be stricken out.

Mr. CALL. The fact has been the subject of investigation in the Interior Department. They have had an agent in Florida, and I have been informed by an officer of the Department that there is now an officer in Florida looking to the condition and status of the Indians

Mr. WALLACE. Do I understand the Senator from Florida to say that no part of the Indians who were provided for by the second clause of the treaty migrated to the West and joined their brethren? Mr. CALL. No, I do not say that no part, but I say a very small portion of them did.

portion of them did.

Mr. WALLACE. Can the Senator give the proportion?

Mr. CALL. I do not think there were over seventy-five. I cannot state with entire accuracy, but I can state, as a matter of public history, that the larger portion of the Indians then in Florida did remain and are there now.

Mr. WALLACE. What is about the total?

Mr. CALL. They are variously estimated, without any accurate and certain data on the subject, without any enumeration either by the State or by any public authority, from three hundred to six hundred Indians

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Let the amendment be reported again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Florida will be read.

The CHEF CLERK. After the word "dollars," in line 652, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "dollars," in line 657, as follows:

For 5 per cent. interest on $250,000, to be paid as annuity, (they having joined their brethren West,) per eighth article of treaty of August 7, 1856, $12,500.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. RANSOM. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The question being put, a division was called for, and the ayes were 25.
Mr. JOHNSTON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 27; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

RICHARD FATHERLY.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is now in

Mr. HOAR. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to pass the bill (S. No. 2054) to remove the political disabilities of Richard Fatherly, of Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator propose to have a ote on it now

Mr. HOAR. No, sir.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

LANDS IN SEVERALTY TO INDIANS. Mr. BECK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate again the unfinished business which was informally laid aside, being the bill (S. No. 1773) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the States and Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes. It is now before the Senate.

Mr. COKE. I give way to the Senator from Kentucky.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BECK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifty-five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened and (at five o'clock and thirty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 21, 1881.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

APPORTIONMENT

Mr. COX. I ask by unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to have printed in the RECORD a continuation of tables A and B, in relation to the apportionment.

Mr. WILSON. They are already included in the pamphlet.

Mr. COX. They are already included in the pamphlet ordered by the House. I wish now to have these tables printed in the RECORD. There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly. The tables are as follows:

TERRESTRIAL GLOBE FOR COMMITTEE USE.

Mr. WILSON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved. That the Librarian of Congress be requested to purchase one terrestrial globe and one large map of the world for the use of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs: Provided. The same shall not cost over $150, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move by unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House—

Mr. BELFORD. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope my friend from Colorado will not insist.

Mr. CALKINS. I propose to call up the contested-election case from Massachusetts.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask, as objection was made to my previous motion, to introduce some resolutions for reference only.

The SPEAKER. The regular order having been demanded, that cuts off all requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. MILLS. What is the regular order?

cuts off all requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. MILLS. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the contested-election case of Boynton against Loring, from the sixth district of Massachusetts.

Mr. MILLS. Is it not the regular order, this being Friday, under the special rule, to proceed with the consideration of private bills?

The SPEAKER. The contested-election case is a question of the highest privilege, and takes precedence. But the House has its remedy by raising the question of consideration.

Mr. MILLS. I do raise the question of consideration.

Mr. DICKEY. I move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The contested-election case is a question of the House on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The contested-election case is a question of the highest privilege; but the gentleman from Texas raises the question of consideration, and the Chair will put it to the House.

Mr. CALKINS. I suggest before the gentleman can raise the question of consideration we must first dispense with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. No; the contested election case is a question of the In SPEARER. No; the contested election case is a question of the highest privilege, and interrupts the morning hour as well as all other business. This is the only time when the gentleman from Texas can raise the question of consideration. If the House shall refuse to proceed with the consideration of the election case then the morning hour will be proceeded with.

Mr. CALKINS. I insist, then, on proceeding with the consideration of the contested election case.

Mr. CVIELL. Why will not the contleman permit the House to go of the contested-election case.

Mr. O'NEILL. Why will not the gentleman permit the House to go to the consideration of private bills, this being Friday, and the day specially set apart for the purpose? Upon the Private Calendar are reports from committees which ought to be acted on. Congress certainly should decide one way or the other, and we ought not to refuse to consider this business on the day specially set apart for that purpose.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to state that the gentleman who contests the seat of the sitting member from Massachusetts is not present, and therefore we camput proceed with the consideration of the election.

therefore we cannot proceed with the consideration of the election

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa who has the floor is

Mr. SPRINGER. But it is intended the contestant shall occupy the hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands by a message from the gentleman from Iowa that he is ready to go on.

Mr. WEAVER. If this case can be taken up to-morrow I do not object to proceeding to-day with the consideration of the Private

The SPEAKER. The contested-election case is a question of privilege, and the Chair is bound to recognize it at any time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will allow us, then, to go on with the Private Calendar.

Mr. WEAVER. I have no personal objection to this going over until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The SPEAKER. The question now is, Will the House proceed with the consideration of the contested election of the sixth district of Massachusetts?

The House divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 42.

Mr. MILLS. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. CALKINS and Mr. O'NEILL.
The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 133, noes

So the motion was agreed to.
Mr. WEAVER. I move to reconsider, and I wish to state my reasons for making the motion.
The SPEAKER. Reconsider what?
Mr. WEAVER. The last vote in reference to the election case.
Mr. CAMP. I wish to make the point that the gentleman cannot make the motion to reconsider for the reason that he voted in the neg-

Mr. UPSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the question.
The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from New York as rising to a point of order.
Mr. CAMP. I stated that the gentleman had no right to make the motion to reconsider for the reason that he voted in the negative.

The SPEAKER. There is no record of the vote.

Mr. CAMP. I raise the point of order that the gentleman cannot make the motion to reconsider for the reason that he voted in the negative, which was not the prevailing side. That being the case, he has no right to make the motion.

The SPEAKER. There is no remede in this case if the gentleman

The SPEAKER. There is no remedy in this case if the gentieman chooses to move to reconsider, for the reason that there is no record

Mr. CALKINS. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I have made a motion to reconsider, and I will state to the House the reason why I have made that motion.

The SPEAKER. Debate on the priority of business is not in order. The motion that the gentleman has made is not debatable, because the original motion was not debatable. The gentleman from Indiana moves to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. UPSON. I have asked for the yeas and nays on the last vote. The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Texas as asking for the yeas and nays on a motion to reconsider?

Mr. UPSON. No, sir; on the question of consideration.

Mr. O'NEILL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. O'NEILL. But I wish to ask for information of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has held that this question must be decided without debate.

Mr. O'NEILL. But cannot I ask a variamentary approximation.

Mr. O'NEILL. But cannot I ask a parliamentary question? If this motion is carried on a vote by yeas and nays—

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of debate.
Mr. O'NEILL. I am coming to the question. I want to know, after the election case is disposed of, if private business can come up after the election case is disposed of, it private business can come up nits regular order?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order.

Mr. O'NEILL. That was my parliamentary question. I know when I want to ask a parliamentary question. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. On the question of consideration the gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 133.

Mr. WEAVER. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered.

Tellers were ordered.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. Calkins and Mr. Weaver were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and there were ayes 46, noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House proceed to the

The SPEAKER. The question is, will the House proceed to the consideration of the contested-election case?

Mr. KEIFER. I understood the yeas and nays to be ordered on the question of laying on the table the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to consider, as the Chair understood. That would take precedence of the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HAYES. Did not the gentleman from Indiana move that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas claims that prior to motion to reconsider be laid upon the table?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas claims that prior to that he took the floor to demand the yeas and nays on the question of consideration. The House has since then been dividing on the question of taking the vote by yeas and nays on the question of consideration, after which question is decided the other question which is now held in abeyance will come up.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to make a brief explanation of the reason why I made the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. Debta is not in order.

why I made the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WEAVER. I know it is not in order; but I am satisfied when I state to the House that I do not wish to proceed with this case in the absence of Mr. Boynton, who is to follow Dr. Loring—

Mr. ATKINS. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays will be called on the question of consideration.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 140, nays 79, not voting 73; as follows:

MILITARY ACADEMY AT WEST POINT.

Mr. PHILIPS. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to yield to me that I may present the report of the Visitors to West Point.

Mr. WEAVER. I am willing to yield for that purpose.

Mr. PHILIPS, by unanimous consent, presented the report of the congressional Board of Visitors to the West Point Military Academy for 1880, accompanied by a bill.

INAUGURAL DECORATIONS.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time the joint resolution (S. R. No. 144) authorizing the loan of certain flags and bunting to the committee on inaugural ceremonies.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized and empowered to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies the flags and bunting in the Government depots for use in decorating the city of Washington on the 4th of March next: Provided, That the said committee shall indemnify the Departments against any loss or damage resulting from the use of said flags and bunting.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GENERAL EDWARD O. C. ORD.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to ask that by unanimous consent the bill (S. No. 1922) for the relief of Brigadier-General and Brevet Major-General Edward O. C. Ord, United States Army, be taken from the Speaker's table for present consideration.

The bill was read as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the President did, by virtue of the discretionary power vested in him by section 1244, Revised Statutes, retire Brigadier-General and Brevet Major-General Edward O. C. Ord, United States Army, from active service, to take effect the 6th day of December, 1880; and
Whereas at the date of his being retired from active service the said Edward O. C. Ord had served his country in the Army honorably, efficiently, and continuously for more than forty years, as shown by his official military record; and
Whereas at the date of his retirement the said Edward O. C. Ord held the brevet rank of major-general in the regular Army, conferred upon him by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and was commissioned as such to take effect March 13, 1865, for gallant and meritorious services; and
Whereas at the date of the order retiring said Edward O. C. Ord from active service he was in command of the Military Department of Texas, where his services were of great importance and value, and especially in bringing comparative peace to a disturbed frontier; and which command was greater than a division of the Army: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to place Brigadier-General and Brevet Major-General Edward O. C. Ord on the retired list of major-generals, according to his brevet rank, with the pay and emoluments of a major-general of the United States Army on the retired list.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEA-VER] to yield to me for a moment that I may ask unanimous consent for the adoption of certain resolutions in relation to the ceremonies attending the unveiling of the statue of Farragut.

Mr. HAYES. I demand the regular order.

ELECTION CONTEST-BOYNTON VS. LORING.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the report of the Committee on Elections in the contested-election case of Boynton vs. Loring. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WEAVER. I yield one hour of my time to the contestant in this case, Mr. Boynton.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that is all the time the gentleman has.

Mr. WEAVER. I am entitled to one hour and fifteen minutes.
The SPEAKER. By agreement?
Mr. WEAVER. Yes, sir; and I ask unanimous consent that the contestant may be heard.

The SPEAKER. That is in accordance with the practice. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Iowa claims an hour and a quarter?

Mr. CALKINS. The arrangement was that an hour and a quarter should be allowed to each side.

Mr. SPRINGER. In this case but one member of the committee signed the minority report; so that there is no other member of the committee than the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] to occupy the time allowed to the minority. By agreement, the gentleman is entitled to an hour and a quarter.

Mr. WEAVER. I yield one hour of my time to the contestant, Mr.

Mr. BOYNTON, (the contestant.) Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, I was assured by several members of this House that to-day being private-bill day I would not be called upon to speak in this case, and therefore when I came up here I left my notes at my hotel. That is the reason why I was so late in coming this morning.

For two years I and my counsel have been subject to public criticism in Massachusetts and throughout the country for turning State's evidence against the giant wrongs committed on the suffrages of white men in that Commonwealth. During these two years I have never made an argument before the Committee on Elections or published.

lished an article in the public press. My side of the case has been wholly suppressed from public knowledge, except perhaps in the reports of that committee.

I beg the distinguished gentlemen who listen to me to believe that it is no personal contest that I bring before this House. It is no personal desire for office that has led me for two years to employ the ablest and most expensive counsel of our country upon this great Advised by a former republican opponent, a learned lawyer, that my case was perfect in its legal aspects, I laid it before the illustrious Caleb Cushing, and he also advised this contest. I laid it also before General Butler, with whom for years I have been laboring to secure the enfranchisement of one-third of the citizens of Massachusetts now disfranchised by the laws of that State. I speak advisedly when I say that one-third of the citizens of Massachusetts are diswhen I say that one-third of the citizens of Massachusetts are disfranchised, taking into consideration the votes in the last election. At that election, in New Hampshire, with as large a proportion of her people laboring in manufacturing towns and cities, such as Nashua and Manchester, adjoining Lowell, Massachusetts, the voters were as 1 in 4.15 of the population, while in Massachusetts they were as 1 in 6.35. In Maine, where many people from Canada now reside, refusing to lay aside their allegiance to the British Queen, the voters are about in the same proportion—4.42—showing that 130,000 citizens of Massachusetts, in the election of 1880, were deprived of the ballot. I trust, therefore, that the members of this House will at least give a patient hearing to the first infraction of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and the first case that has ever been brought before this House legally and officially. You stand here, gentlemen, at the threshold of the disfranchisement of twenty million people; and this case will go down to history as the first case under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States calling for enforcement and vindication of that amendment.

States calling for enforcement and vindication of that amendment.

Now as to the majority report of the Committee on Elections. I assumed that Caleb Cushing knew law, that General Butler knew law. And if you will turn to page 45 of the record you will find that my opponents themselves, according to the affidavits of Gardner P. Ladd and Charles H. Hopkinson of Groveland, admit as follows:

There were cast 138 votes which failed to designate any office

My opponents themselves, being judges, solemnly swore that there was no office designated on those ballots. The law of Massachusetts makes it mandatory that the office shall be clearly written or printed on the ballots. And then to make assurance doubly sure the law positively inhibits the election officers from counting ballots on which the office is not thus clearly designated in writing or printing if placed with other ballots in a common box as those were.

There is not a single respectable lawyer from Massachusetts or elsewhere who, if placed upon the supreme bench in the seat that was offered to the learned Cushing, would read that law and dare under his official oath find any office designated on those ballots by the words "for representative, sixth district."

words "for representative, sixth district."

There are ten sixth representative districts in the State for the Legislature and one sixth congressional district. Dr. Loring himself resided in the sixth representative district of the State Legislature, and those ballots might with exactly the same propriety have been counted for him for the Legislature. There are three sixth districts in the sixth congressional district. There were three thousand of such defective ballots printed by the republicans for, and presumably circulated in, this congressional district. (See testimony of Ridgeway.) Blame me not, then, for believing it when this able counsel and my opponents themselves, the henchmen of Dr. Loring, thus swear that there was no designation of the congressional office, as required by law. I speak to a hundred lawyers and to men who believe in following the laws of the States and nation. I speak to men who know that there never has been an instance in an election case where the State law has been deliberately overridden by the Committee on Elections before this report of the majority.

Now, as to the evidence that has been submitted in this case. In the first place, I wish it to be distinctly understood that under the

the first place, I wish it to be distinctly understood that under the laws of Massachusetts there has been and there can be no recount of the votes cast in a congressional election in the towns of a district. We are not allowed even to look at the ballots which have been cast, and which are sealed up; and there never has been a recount of the and which are sealed up; and there never has been a recount of the towns, as asserted by Loring.

To obtain a recount I applied to the Congress of the United States. When it was proposed to come before this House and call for the production of these ballots, then he who had delayed the matter for a year and claimed election by 102 votes offered to admit and put in 138 of said votes without designation of office in a Representative district which is not the sixth district, although there was testimony that throughout the congressional district there had been given thousands of such votes. They offered to admit that so many ballots had been cast, bearing only this designation: "For Representative sixth district, George B. Loring;" which gives me a legal majority of 36. It being so late, General Butler accepted the offer, and the result is the majority override the law and count them for Loring, in spite of the inhibition. There has been no recount in the towns of that district, more than twenty in number; and a recount was the object of application to Congress.

In the sworn testimony of the election officers of Marblehead, will

In the sworn testimony of the election officers of Marblehead, will it be believed, when it was discovered by a man of shorter stature that another was trying to conceal two votes which he was stuffing into the ballot-box, that challenge was being made though attested by note the ballot-box, that challenge was being made though attested by four men, according to the testimony against Coates, (pages 7, 10, 12,) that these two votes so stuffed into the ballot-box, as testimony shows, were counted and allowed? And afterward we find, by the admission of the same polling officer, that he had found other ballots folded together and counted in defiance of the law. Counsel of Loring mingle those and these two separate votes and deduct but one vote.

vote.

The three Hathaways this Loring claims as good voters. Two of these Hathaways swear as follows, (I refer to page 138 of the record:)

Question. Which of the four rooms on Bassett street is your room?

Q. Is there a fire-place in it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Pretty cold?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Sleep there all the time?

A. No, sir.
Q. When you do not sleep there where do you sleep?

A. At my grandmother's.

It further appears in the testimony that the grandmot!

It further appears in the testimony that the grandmother is long

These men go on and swear to the house, to the other rooms, to the furniture, to their occupancy, to their registry from said residence in Marblehead, when it turns out that they had been residents of Salem for seven years, and that this very house, these very rooms, had all been burned up three years before, and at the time to which their testimony refers had no existence. Do you think Lering believes that such a residence is simply a question of intention and that these men intended to live in a flat house that had been burned up three men intended to live in a fiat house that had been burned up three years before, though these men solemnly swear to its rooms, its furniture, and all that it contained? Do you believe he thinks these are good legal voters, to be counted when ten thousand honest men are disfranchised by the disfranchising laws of Massachusetts? I do not want such votes as those to elect me. Yet the sitting member through his counsel claims for these "poor men" the right to vote and for many like them in that district. Those perjured villains, those deliberate repeaters, those non-residents he has infinite sympathy for, and asks that the privilege be accorded to such men to vote the republican ticket as these men swear they did vote it. On vote the republican ticket as these men swear they did vote it. On examination the presiding officer of that poll admitted that he knew the house had been burned three years, that he knew these men had been residents of Salem for six or seven years. He further admitted that he had counted ballots folded together. He further admitted that he had counted ballots folded together.

that he had counted ballots folded together. He further admitted that he had permitted Woodfin to vote, although Woodfin was not registered in that town. (See Marblehead testimony.)

Next I come to Danvers. And allow me here to say that a change of 100 votes which can never be accounted for satisfactorily was made at midnight. But there were 10 votes that were challenged. The law requires instant notice of any challenge. This was not accorded in the Marblehead case. Here there were 10 challenged votes and the challenges were not made good. I have twice brought before this committee a certificate from the governor and council under the broad seal of Massachusetts saying that those 10 good challenged votes had not been counted; and that certificate was printed in the record. "Boynton 483, and 10 challenged." Suppose they had said 483,000 and 800, would it have meant only 483,000? Who of this intelligent House can say that because the poll officers returned 483 good votes House can say that because the poll officers returned 483 good votes unchallenged, and 10 challenged votes which they returned separately as they were bound to do, (votes which proved to be good,) that this undoes the thirty days' later certificate of the governor and his council, as officially canvassing. It is simply a question of count, and here is the later certificate. The committee admit that those 10 votes belong to me; they could not do otherwise; yet they strangely give Dr. Loring 102 plurality. You will thus cut that down 10; and it gives him 92. Let us cut that down 7 for those votes at Marblehead, and that gives him 85.

him 92. Let us cut that down 7 for those votes at Marbienead, and that gives him 85.

Next I take you to the city of Haverhill, Massachusetts. The telegraphic message recorded in the files of my newspapers here gave Boynton 1,049, but was changed the next day to 999 in the public record of the daily that I take, the Newburyport Herald, and which had copies of the telegraphic reports to Loring at Salem. I caused examination to be made and I found those 50 votes, (as in a city there can be a recount, but not in a town.) Officially the matter was examined, and officially it was found that 8 had imperfect spelling, and also that 42 of those ballots evidently had been pencil-erased, and no name had been written instead. Had any voter desired to defeat me the name of one of my two opponents would have been written in, but that was not done. Mr. Ridgway, running on the democratic and greenback ticket for the Legislature, was one official recounting, and is one of the most experienced polling officers in Massachusetts. Mr. Ridgway, since re-elected in the city by a large majority, solemnly swears, as you will find in the testimony, that he had personal and official knowledge of the distribution of my ballots; that he paid every man who distributed them; that he visited every polling place, and that no such ballots, so far as he could learn, were cast there. place, and that no such ballots, so far as he could learn, were cast there.

place, and that no such ballots, so far as he could learn, were cast there.

Mr. Ridgway's testimony, it seems to me, is conclusive, if the very nature of the transaction is not in itself conclusive. The individual voter would have had time to write in the name of the candidate of his choice; he had both parties to choose from; and there would be no excuse for his not doing so. Certainly there would not have been that wholesale destruction. The other 8 ballots were found to have a defective initial or misspelling. That accounts for the 50 changed. That cuts Dr. Loring down to 35.

Next I come to West Newbury. I live over the line from Newbury-port in that little republican town that usually gives 500 per cent.

republican majority, or did for many years. It availed not that in my chilchood I brought the first republican flag from near Oberlin, Ohio, and raised it on the hill where the first Senator of the Revolution lived. While a hundred of my nearest republican neighbors voted for me, comprising the most liberal and intelligent, yet officelution lived. While a hundred of my nearest republican neighbors voted for me, comprising the most liberal and intelligent, yet office-seekers and some of the later converts, small and bitter politicians, turned fiercely upon me, because they said if I followed my conscience in voting I was assisting to destroy the republican party. Therefore you find that sad, that shameful testimony with regard to Mac-Namara and others of my neighbors disfranchised, and one of them thought himself given the option of a dungeon or a vote for the candidates of my opponents. The first signer of the Declaration of Independence lived in sight of where this deed was done. I should be untrue to his blood that runs in the veins of my children if I failed to denounce it as a wrong to man's liberty. I had rather go to prison, as did Caleb Moody, for denouncing Andros' breach of chartered freedom, than purchase peace by fawning at the feet of a few purse-proud petty tyrants who terrify the poor out of their ballot.

MacNamara had been a leader of the Irish, once a man of culture, a man of ability, who had been their leader in earlier and better days, but like many men who go into politics, when this man had been there for thirty-eight years he finally got to drinking. He lost his cigar factory; he was reduced to poverty. That was the opportunity of the opposition, bitter partisan leaders. Our laws punish a man with imprisonment in solitary confinement for the third conviction of the offense of being drunk. For the third offense of drunkenness the law punishes by six months' imprisonment in solitary confinement in a dungeon. That is the law of Massachusetts.

This man, MacNamara, finding a warrant was issued for him, happened to meet one of the most influential of the former town officers, who asked him whether the Irish were going to vote for Butler and Boynton. He said they were, and he added, "I will vote and use my pened to meet one of the most influential of the former town officers, who asked him whether the Irish were going to vote for Butler and Boynton. He said they were, and he added, "I will vote and use my influence with my friends to vote your republican ticket, if you will get that warrant quashed." He went off and said he had made the arrangement. MacNamara was in doubt that it was strictly a fact that the warrant had been returned, therefore he went to the selectmen on the morning of the election and asked them not to have him arrested and sent to the dungeon, and to purchase immunity promised to vote their ticket and use his influence with friends. They asked arrested and sent to the dungeon, and to purchase immunity promised to vote their ticket and use his influence with friends. They asked "How many votes can you get?" "I may get more than I expect," said MacNamara. "Come down, and I will speak to the officer not to arrest you," said Bailey. Now, Bailey's ignorance does not clear him. Was not that a bribe of awful magnitude? Mind you, I am speaking of a crime punished by United States laws with five years in the State prison. This offense was committed by the man presiding at the polls, a selectman, the best man of those virtually independent townships of our ancient Commonwealth. "How many votes can you get?" He said he might get more or less. He was to go to the polls and the selectman promised to speak to the officer not to arrest this terrified man. terrified man.

That is the uncontradicted testimony; these men were within five miles of where this testimony was being taken; knew its contents. They had plenty of time to rebut it; but they never have attempted to rebut it. This man held up the ballot in town meeting in the presence of a hundred men and said, "This ballot weighs ten pounds, for I am voting against my conscience." He then walked up, a manacled slave, and voted in order to save himself from the dungeon. His brother-in-law did the same. This is the uncontradicted testimony in this case in West Newbury.

My next neighbor. Ferguson, the proprietor of a large farm, a man mony in this case in West Newbury.

My next neighbor, Ferguson, the proprietor of a large farm, a man of spotless character, a man who maintained a large family, a man with no legal disqualifications, having averred that although a democrat he was going to vote for Boynton, his name was stricken from the poll-list, although his taxes were paid. When he appeared to exercise a freeman's right; when, with his tax bills, he demanded his same should be put on in accordance with the laws of Massachusetts. name should be put on in accordance with the laws of Massachusetts, he was deprived of a freeman's right to vote and disfranchised. He swears that two others were similarly treated. This is the uncontradicted evidence.

dicted evidence.

West Newbury reduces Dr. Loring down to 30 votes. Then we come to Amesbury, Massachusetts; to Amesbury, where the poet Whittier lives; to Amesbury, where Governor Josiah Bartlett, the first signer of the Declaration of Independence, was born, and there you find are mills, formerly busy with 1,500 operatives, which have been silent for four long years; there men had been driven to such misery they could not pay their taxes. It is in the evidence there were five hundred former employés still remaining; there 55 old voters' taxes were paid in one day, and then disfranchised; there Michael Kennedy, an old voter, more than half a century old, a voter who, I suppose, even under the constitutional amendment of 1857, had a right under the State laws to vote, as had others of these 55 voters. a right under the State laws to vote, as had others of these 55 voters, for you will notice there were many of them over twenty-one years of age when that disfranchising amendment was adopted—Michael Kennedy's was made the test case in reference to all these old voters. So swears the selectman. It is shown by the testimony in the record it was made the test case; the case of Michael Kennedy, a man over half a century old; also Thomas McCue, who had voted twenty-two years; these with 55 voters were disfranchised for illiteracy in defiance of the fourteenth constitutional amendment.

There were young men (see testimony of Michael Lawless; he had to make his mark to the testimony in this case) who were permitted to vote although but thirty years old. Because he voted the republican ticket they paid his taxes and refused to disfranchise him in accordance with the rule applied to eld voters. These illegal and wholesale frauds ought to throw out the ballot of Amesbury, which elects me by 22 plurality; or, counting the 55 old voters disfranchised, gives 25 plurality. I think the 55 ought to wipe out the 30 remaining votes for Dr. Loring. It does according to the report of General Weaver, of the committee. But you say that the ballots were not absolutely deposited. They were offered; they were presented; the taxes were paid; it was made a test case; they demanded their rights, paid their money, fulfilled the law, and it is not contradicted that these were old voters and had a right, many of them, to vote even under the State law of Massachusetts, that law giving the right to all who were voters at the time of its adoption, 1857. But, gentlemen, if you can say that 138 ballots with no office printed thereon, ballots inhibited by the law of Massachusetts, are still to be counted, then I ask you to give force to the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States and here re-enfranchise a hundred thousand citizens. Now, gentlemen, although I have been fairly elected, I do not want a technical decision. I personally want nothing at your hands—certainly no partisan decisions. But while I want no office from you, you are here to answer to your conscience, to your country, and to the great Jehovah and to coming history for your action in the case where I appear as the attorney of over one hundred thousand disfranchised freemen, over one hundred thousand citizens of Massachusetts, made such by the Constitution of my country. I had rather be the victim of your disfranchisement than contend for syndicate and corporate powers, and against the people, even if you would give me the seat to which the independent men of all parties in my district the victim of your distranchisement than contend for syndicate and corporate powers, and against the people, even if you would give me the seat to which the independent men of all parties in my district have elected me. The sixth Massachusetts district gave birth to Garrison, Whittier, and Wendell Phillips, and although it once mildly, serenely obeyed the then English laws and example in punishing witches, Quakers, and Baptists, yet it has done more for liberty than any other, and is yet the fairest and most independent district in America. I will not sell out their trust or bargain away the rights of men for office. I had rather got on we grave in obscurity contends any other, and is yet the fairest and most independent district in America. I will not sell out their trust or bargain away the rights of men for office. I had rather go to my grave in obscurity, contending for God's poor in compliance with my convictions of truth and duty than secure office by injustice and deceit.

And permit me right here to say that Dr. Loring and his counsel took out a second time more than 80,000 names, such as aliens, paupers, insane, &c., that had already been deducted in General Butler's brief in this case. His brother took them out before the committee, and I called his attention there that night to it, and it was not denied. And again the sitting member comes before this Heuse and makes a claim that 18,000 only are disfranchised. I have shown you by comparison with New Hampshire that over one-third of our voters are disfranchised, and you can easily figure out that there are more than 100,000 citizens of Massachusetts, white men, some of whom have fought for us on sea and land, who were disfranchised at the time of this election in 1878. The following examination of figures in the Massachusetts census and in General Butler's brief demonstrates the falsity of Loring's statement.

By reference to General Butler's brief, page 81, you will find that the number of voters returned by the Massachusetts State census of

To destroy this appalling disfranchisement he deducts again 86,258 aliens, a part of and already included in the 95,529 already deducted. He deducts it from the net result as follows: 86,258—122,512—36,254.

Now, his brother's attention was called to this in the committee room, and he simply repeats it with variations. To show the folly of attempting to screen the disfranchisement by making the same deduction twice, let us recall that the Massachusetts census of 1875 gives returns as izens of Massachusetts, made such by the supreme law of the nation in its fourteenth constitutional amendment, disfranchised by Massachusetts in defiance of her obligations.

I ask you to do what your official oaths require you to do, give force to the supreme law of the land, that Massachusetts adopted first, and that Massachusetts as well as the other States is heard to be supremed to the supremediate of the land, that Massachusetts adopted first, and that Massachusetts as well as the other States is been all the supremediates as well as the other States is been all the supremediates. I ask you to do what your official oaths require you to do, give force to the supreme law of the land, that Massachusetts adopted first, and that Massachusetts, as well as the other States, is bound by, and it is but just if you are going to apply the strict State laws to this case, that you apply also the ballot law which disfranchises one hundred and thirty-eight citizens of that State, rather than one hundred times that number of good, honest citizens, many of whom served on sea and land in the service of their country during the war. Which is the worst? Is it worse for you to say that you did not make that law that inhibits that ballot and reject them, or that this House allows ballots that the very men who counted them now swear were illegal, and also that the distinguished counsel in this case say were not legal ballots such as the simplest and the plainest reading of the law requires, or will you disfranchise ten thousand men, according to General Butler's brief, in this district? Say not with regard to the punishment of Massachusetts in this one district, say not when the time comes you will take away three Representatives of Massachusetts after you each get your congressional apportionment. He that is unjust in that which is least is unjust in that which is much. If when the facts are clearly brought before you; if when it is shown to you by incontestable testimony that the Legislature of a State has disfranchised a great army of her people, (one hundred and five thousand in 1878,) in defiance of the supreme law which you and they have sworn to ebey; if you do not act, you say as King Agrippa said to Paul: "Go thy way for this time, and when I have a convenient season I will send for thee." There is no record that the King ever repented; an orthodox minister says he went to hell—a warning to both the old parties combined against the people in this case, who, as the Jews and Romans, were not inclined to do Paul justice or you to do me justice on the merits of this case.

Much as I desire to shield Massa mans, were not inclined to do Paul justice or you to do me justice on the merits of this case.

Much as I desire to shield Massachusetts I protest against the disfranchisement of an entire nation, being founded upon the example of liberty-loving Massachusetts. I predict that you would fill this Hall with a volume of thunders if the time should come when the Southern States disfranchise, by cruel taxation, as prerequisites and literary qualifications, two-thirds of their citizens, and who ought to be protected by the flag of this country. It would be held to be the mark of a cruel partisanship, that would meet the condemnation and disapproval of the entire country. I predict if South Carolina—that votes 1 voter to 5.38 better than Massachusetts, which is 1 in 6.35—if South Carolina should enact a law which would permit the vote of only 1 in 12 or 15 of the people, there would be such a howl come up, especially from the republican party, it would justly startle and shock the entire country. Is there a man upon this floor who does not assent to this statement? Is there a man here in the republican party that desires to go down to history refusing an act of justice, refusing to vindicate the first infraction of the supreme law of the land, officially and legally brought before Congress, the last and final court of the freemen of the land? If there is, I beg him to beware, for however sweet that music of peace, at any price, him to beware, for however sweet that music of peace, at any price, may be in his ears, it is like that which you and I have heard among the rugged Alps, where it is said that the winding of an Alpine shepherd's horn will sometimes start the avalanche that bears destruction to the valley. It is the inception of the disfranchisement of twenty millions of people of this country, and your example is certain to be serviced. to be copied.

Nay, Mr. Speaker, I may do wrong in saying it is certain to be copied, although it has been in part copied by Virginia, Georgia, and Tennessee. I look around me and behold brave men upon the other side of this Chamber, many of them with whom I have conversed, and I know that these sixty or seventy rebel brigadiers say they are determined some time hereafter to protect enfranchisement for every man in the United States who lives under the flag of the country. These are the men, sir, who say they are new willing that the right of suffrage be extended without proscription or intolerance to every man hereafter. I hope it will prove true. But I protest against the disfranchisement of a nation being thus really accomplished by the example of Massachusetts nullifying the amendment. I am proud of Massachusetts nullifying the amendment. chusetts. I have just cause to be proud of the old State, but I am not proud of this wrong she has done or of the faults of Massachusetts. But I am proud to be of the people fitly represented by Charles Sumner. The people he represented are a two-thirds majority of that State. When they understand it, they will right the wrongs that are being done here in riveting the chains of silence and disfranchisement until like England it may come to pass that three million farm laborers with not one rising in twenty years is the answer to such repression here as there; until tyranny shall plant and gather such harvests as France in 1792.

The people, north and south, stretch out their hands to you to right their wrongs and give them back their liberties and suffrages. For four long years we have plead with our rulers, and thundered at the gates of the State capitol, calling upon them to do what they have promised, by passing the enfranchisement United States constitutional amendments, to do. Enfranchisement is just, for on the contional amendments, to do. Enfranchisement is just, for on the consent of the governed rest our liberties. It promotes manhood to annually select the rulers by a free ballot. It stimulates love of country. It prevents plots and revolutions against the State. It promotes public morals by enlisting all the citizens in the public welfare. It gives security, happiness, and prosperity to all classes by giving equal rights, equal privileges, and equal burdens. You need not fear the influence of the poor and of the ignorant, for even that is divided in support of candiates selected by the cultured, the wealthy, and the influential influential.

Equality had its birth in the soul of man, in the teachings of Christ, in the Declaration of Independence. Manhood suffrage is an American invention, and the first realization of universal freedom. Egypican invention, and the first realization of universal freedom. Egyptian learning, Grecian art, Roman power and organization, are surpassed in the free manhood of America. Its establishment has given to us, alone among the nations of the earth, eighty thousand free pulpits, not one supported by the State. It has given to us, first among the nations, three hundred thousand free schools, all supported by the State. The only titles of nobility issued are a quarter of a million patents to the poor inventors, who so advance our material wealth. To us alone, among the nations of the earth, it has given freedom from the armaments of Europe and the taxation of tyrants. It has taken off the load that crushes out the liberty and happiness of every other nation in Christendom. Here, with labor doubly rewarded in America, (partially on account of our tariff,) it is fast teaching the European peasant the folly of being obliged to carry a soldier on his back.

True, France, learning financial wisdom from the captured treasury books of ancient Venice, despite the changes of empires and republics, has been eighty years without a panic. France may therefore teach the legislators of this land financial self-reliance and the beneficence of full legal-tender paper money. And England, with the sovereignty the legislators of this land financial self-reliance and the beneficence of full legal-tender paper money. And England, with the sovereignty of the ocean in her grasp and needing no defense except her bulwarks that float upon the stormy sea, may instruct us to protect our commerce by subsidizing peaceful navies to carry our mails and limitless productions. But we can teach them more than France and England are learning of real self-government and the extension of suffrage, for manhood suffrage is the strongest form of government. It is broad-based as the Pyramids and as enduring. It teaches the millennium of peace; it teaches the fraternity of nations. There are but two forms of government on earth—voluntary and involuntary.

millennium of peace; it teaches the fraternity of nations. There are but two forms of government on earth—voluntary and involuntary. Through blood and tears we have settled forever, I trust, the question of our form of government in favor of universal freedom. A million brave and sincere lives and eight billions of treasure have been paid for this amendment to the Constitution of our Republic. Wise or unwise we cannot go back now. The brave men of the South assure me they do not desire to do so. They have sworn to keep the fourteenth amendment. They promise that the seventy rebel brigadiers before me have fought their last battle against enfranchisement, and they are ready to join (after they get their apportionment) in breaking the fetters of more than one hundred thousand disfranchised white citizens of Massachusetts.

Will Massachusetts reward the tens of thousands of her heroes who were compelled, because they could not read and write, to make their

Will Massachusetts reward the tens of thousands of her heroes who were compelled, because they could not read and write, to make their mark on the muster-roll as well as on the battle-field—will she reward them by disfranchisement? I ask the men who represent Massachusetts on this floor, will they disfranchise the men who went out to give their lives for the Union? The bones of many of those men lie bleaching on our battle-fields, but their comrades who have returned—will you disfranchise them because they were compelled to make their mark on their receipt-roll of payment for their blood? You insisted on their enfranchising four million slaves by their valor. Will you disfranchise twenty million white freemen? Will you undo the work of Sumner which you promised to sustain? I ask that of the members from Massachusetts on the floor of this House. I ask them members from Massachusetts on the floor of this House. I ask them to listen to the words of Sumner that preceded the enactment of this constitutional amendment—his words of warning that even in death now come to us from his home above the stars:

In the life of a nation there are special moments when outstanding promises must be performed under peril of ruin or dishonor.

Here is the promise you have sworn to perform in behalf of the uncounted millions that may come after you.

There are sacred promises beginning with our history yet unperformed, and now the hour has sounded when continued failure on our part will open the door to a long train of woes. Our fathers solemnly announced the equal right of all men.

Sumner secured the adoption of the fourteenth amendment, which you would now nullify if you refuse to vindicate its majesty and power in accordance with its sacred provisions

Shall the black slave be made a free man and the white citizen in Massachusetts be made aslave? What would you say if the South were to copy your example? You cannot escape history by defying your official oaths to enforce and defend this sacred provision of the Constitution. It is now for the first time brought to your attention, and the ages will point at you in wonder and witness your untruthfulness if you sanction the cruel enforcing laws of 1874, disfranchising one hundred thousand white citizens of Massachusetts they have sworn to protect by accepting the amendment and the apportionment law

Shall we do this when we are about to celebrate our first century of freedom, which has accomplished more for mankind, more for his moral nature, with three free pulpits to one of any other nation ; more intellectually, with three free schools to any other nation's one; more materially, with three free schools to any other nation's one; more materially, with three inventions to any other nation's one; more for peace, with fifteen school teachers to a soldier; when we have accomplished more for mankind in our first century than has been accomcomplished more for mankind in our first century than has been accomplished by sixty centuries of monarchical and aristocratic government? Apply the laws of Massachusetts, and you disfranchise a majority of the voting population of the South. You destroy all the protection given by the ballot to one-third, ay, to more than one-third of the fifty millions of this nation.

Will you bid men pay taxes on all that they consume and produce and not give them representation? Will you bid them produce billions by their toil and refuse the citizenship guaranteed by the four-teenth amendment? Will you enroll this great heroic army, larger than the army of Xerxes, larger than any other army that was ever gathered in the world—will you enroll this great heroic army of voters in your national militia throughout this broad domain, subject to draft in your defense, and yet give them no vote in disposing of their property and lives?

Because these men have been born out of the reach of the free school, property and lives?

Because these men have been born out of the reach of the free school, because they have paid duties and taxes on all that they and their children consume, gives you no right to disfranchise them by requiring an additional tax as a payment, and educational qualifications as a prerequisite for suffrage. You may punish their misfortunes with cruel pauper and tramp laws if you will, laws more cruel than any that were ever passed in the reigns of Nero or Caligula; you may put them in dungeons for five long years as criminals in State prison, because of their misfortunes and their poverty; but pray at least give them a vote for the officer that shall pluck the child from the mother's breast or draft their sons to die for your defense in the bot breasth of the or draft their sons to die for your defense in the hot breath of the cannon.

Maintain, or else will you frankly repeal, the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of my country that has been bought with a million lives and $8,000,000,000 treasure. Then the people will understand that the last refuge of self-defense has been taken from the poor and the illiterate. But in so doing, remember that warning of Jehovah: "Rob not the poor because he is poor; neither oppress the afflicted in the gate; for the Lord shall hear their cry and spoil the soul of him that spoileth them."

The best defense of Massachusetts, the best defense of my distinguished counsel from the charge of Loring, that unwarrantable slanders have been made upon Massachusetts, the best defense against assaults in the public press, is the record of heroic men like James assaults in the public press, is the record of heroic men like James Otis and Charles Sumner that have made Massachusetts illustrious in her defense of liberty.

There was a time when Massachusetts did require defense, and Loring was silent. There was a time when the great rebellion, which my distinguished counsel said he did his utmost to avert, came upon the country. When the thunderbolt of war fell it found General Butler in court with a thousand briefs and retainers on his dockets, and handing his papers to the next lawyer almost with the swiftness of light ing his papers to the next lawyer, almost with the swiftness of lighting his papers to the next lawyer, almost with the swittness of nghining he gathered his regiments together and celebrated the anniversary of Lexington by snatching this Capitol from doom. He declared the black slave a contraband of war. He opened the Mississippi to our fleets. He aided in passing the amendments to the Constitution. Although he was a Jacksonian democrat and tried to avert the war, when the battle came he went to the opposite extreme as much as General Jackson would have done. as General Jackson would have done.

I warn the contestee that the name of General Butler will be remembered in the annals of men, in the memories of fifteen million of the descendants of Massachusetts throughout our broad domain; will be honored in the records of our nation until the stars have faded, until history is no more. He needs no defense at my hands or the hands of any one, for history will be his undying monument.

The sitting member has referred to the "Essex plan" of Theophilus Parsons, the eminent chief-justice of Massachusetts. I will give what he said in the "Essex result," in rebuttal of the statement which he has made in regard to that illustrious man, of the sixth congressional district of Massachusetts, which is prolific in great names—men like Choate, Rantoul, and Cushing, Butler, Pickering, and Parsons, Winthrop, Vane, and Endicot, and Saltonstall, Moody, Prescott, Phillips, and others, illustrious names that have honored and made glorious our history. The name of Parsons should not be invoked, as Dr. Loring has invoked it, against the rights of freemen in Massachusetts. In that Essex plan Theophilus Parsons uses

Every freeman who hath sufficient discretion should have a voice in the election of his legislators. All the members of the State are qualified to make the election unless they have not sufficient discretion, or are so situated as not to have wills of their own; persons not twenty-one years old are deemed of the former class from their want of years and experience.

I quote also the words of James Otis:

The very act of taxing, exercised over those not represented, appears to me to be depriving them of one of their most essential rights as freemen, and, if continued, seems to be in effect an entire disfranchisement of every civil right. For what one civil right is worth a rush, after a man's property is subject to be taken from him at pleasure without his consent? If a man is not his own assessor in person or by deputy, his liberty is gone or he is entirely at the mercy of others.—Otis's Rights of the Colonies, page 58.

But Otis was not the only interpreter of this maxim of liberty. The legislature of Massachusetts on repeated occasions made the same claim. On one occasion, in solemn resolutions drawn by Samuel Adams, and adopted unanimously, it spoke as follows:

That by the law of nature no man has a right to impose laws more than to levy tax upon another; that the freeman pays no tax, as the freeman submits to no law, but such as emanates from the body in which he is represented.—John Adams's Works, volume 1, page 78.

I might quote the bill of rights of Virginia, drawn by George Mason and adopted June 12, 1776:

All men having sufficient evidence of permanent, common interest with and attachment to the community have the right of suffrage, and cannot be taxed or deprived of their property for public uses without their own consent or that of their representatives so elected, nor bound by any law to which they have not in like manner assented.

Here is a statement found among the papers of Benjamin Franklin, under date of 1769:

under date of 1769:

That every man of the commonalty, except infants, insane persons, and criminals is of common right and by the laws of God a freeman, and entitled to the free enjoyment of liberty. That liberty or freedom consists in having an actual share in the appointment of those who frame the laws, and who are to be the guardians of every man—life, property, and peace; for the all of one man is as dear to him as the all of another, and the poor man has an equal right but more need to have representatives in the legislature than the rich one.

That they who have no voice nor vote in the election of representatives do not enjoy liberty, but are absolutely enslaved to those who have votes and to their representatives; for to be enslaved is to have governors whom other men have set over us, and be subject to laws made by the representatives of others, without having had representatives of our own to give consent in our behalf.

Let the words of him who drew the lightning from the clouds and defied the tyrant on his throne, the illustrious Franklin, defend the men who seek to carry out the words of that immortal native of Massachusetts. Then Alexander Hamilton, whose ideas of government in general I detest—Hamilton the very antipodes of Jefferson the author of the immortal Declaration, whose writings on government and finance I so much admire—even the aristocratic Hamilton who wanted to give us a virtual dictator and king, drafted the following proposition in his plan of a constitution.

Representatives shall be chosen except in the first instance by the free male Representatives shall be chosen, except in the first instance, by the free male citizens and inhabitants of the several States, comprehended in the Union, all of whom of the age of twenty-one years and upward shall be entitled to an equal vote.

Then Chief-Justice Taney, in the Dred Scott decision, over which my republican friends have so often in years gone by been eloquent,

The words "people of the United States and citizens" are synonymous terms, and mean the same thing. They both describe the political body, who, according to our republican institutions, form the sovereignty and who hold the power and conduct the Government through their representatives. They are what we familiarly call the sovereign people, and every citizen is one of the people and a constituent member of this sovereignty. (19 Howard, 404.)

His language further on is still more precise. He says:

There is not, it is believed, to be found in the theories of writers on government or in any actual experiment heretofore tried an exposition of the term "citizen," which has not been considered as conferring the actual possession and enjoyment, or the perfect right of acquisition of right and enjoyment, of an entire equality of privileges, civil and political.

And Sumner says:

Nor is it decent to call any State republican where any considerable portion of its people constituting an essential part of its "body-politic" is permanently disfranchised. Even if in times past such a State could have been treated as republican, it will not do to treat it so now. It lacks the vital elements of a republican government, and must be treated accordingly. I do not dwell on this point, for it seems absurd to call it in question. Clearly, it is your duty to enforce the guarantee of a republican government.

By the oaths you have taken to support the Constitution, you must take care that in all the States where governments have lapsed this guarantee shall be carried out.

How quickly you would interfere if a Southern State should pass a law disfranchising two-thirds or three-fourths of her people. You intend to interfere in the next Congress, do you? You intend to do it hereafter? I warn you that the hour has struck, the hour is now, when you must do this or leave it forever undone. The case has come lawfully and officially before you.

By an amendment to the constitution of Massachusetts, article 20, (page 38, general statutes,) adopted the 3d day of May, 1857, it is provided as follows:

provided as follows:

No person shall have a right to vote, or be eligible to office, under the constitu-tion of this Commonwealth who shall not be able to read the constitution in the English language, and write his name.

Then follows the provision as to physical disability and age. This article was adopted by the Legislature of 1854-755, and ratified by the people on the 23d day of May, 1857, by a vote of 23,833 in favor, and 13,746 against, out of some one hundred and fifty thousand, the then voters of Massachusetts.

sand, the then voters or Massachusetts.

Under it, the most learned professors of Europe, coming here and taking upon themselves the duties and privileges of citizens, could not vote unless they were able to read English. It attracted no attention, and has not been enforced by a statute until since 1874, when the dominant party in Massachusetts began to fear for their majority. The principal disqualification in Massachusetts is one imposing an energy soll tay as a prerquisit to exercising the right of our frage.

onerous poll-tax as a prerequisite to exercising the right of suffrage, so that in the town of Fall River, by a sworn affidavit, it was found that a majority of its citizens had neglected to pay tax in 1879, and their disqualifications are largely removed by generous politicians furnishing money to pay their taxes, thus corrupting the very fountain of free government, and in a mild sense bribing the voter, making it impossible for any but rich men to take office. All parties are equally it impossible for any but rich men to take office. All parties are equally guilty participators in this bribing. It is interesting to notice the editorials in the Boston religious newspapers urging their Christian readers to contribute money to aid in carrying elections, knowing that the largest expenditure is for the purpose of removing this disqualification of voters by paying their poll-taxes. As these voters have paid taxes on all that they consume, is it not time for this shameful business to cease if a pure ballot is to be maintained? The literary disqualification would exclude the father of Abraham Lincoln. The tax would exclude the fish of this figure would exclude the fish of the figure would exclude the figure of the disciples while the figure that the figure would exclude the figure of the The tax would exclude Christ and some of His disciples, while the fish with a tax in his mouth would vote. The evil is intensified by the favoritism of selectmen in enforcing the law against opponents while blind to the illiteracy of those who vote with them.

The fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States made a radical change in many State laws necessary, especially in the Southern States. Senator Cowan, of Pennsylvania, in the de-bate called special attention to the necessity of a repeal of the tax disqualification in Pennsylvania and other States. This fourteenth amendment is as follows:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States, and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make OR ENFORCE ANY LAW which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Now, is the right to vote one of the "privileges or immunities" of a citizen of the United States? That is answered by section 2 of the same article, which provides a penalty against the State for depriving a citizen of a right to vote at any election, as follows, (see, also, 23 Pick. R., 308, where it is decided to be a privilege, per Shaw,

But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.—Fourteenth amendment, section 2.

Section 6, chapter 11 of the acts of 1872, approved February 2, 1872, 17 Stat., p. 28, under which the apportionment is made, enacts:

That should any State, after the passage of this act, DENY OR ABRIDGE the right of any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age and citizens of the United States, to vote at any election named in the amendments to the Constitution, article 14, section 2, except for participation in the rebellion or other crime, the number of Representatives apportioned in this act to such State shall be reduced in the proportion which such male citizens shall have to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

This answers the question, and also whether the phrase in the Constitution, article 14 of the amendments, "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges of citizens," &c., is aimed against a law depriving them of the right to vote. It also settles the question which is sometimes raised, whether a constitutional provision can execute itself without being "enforced by appropriate legislation."

To enforce this law—and all laws ought to be enforced, especially those that grand the rights of the citizen—will substantially diminthose that guard the rights of the citizen—will substantially diminish Massachusetts from eleven to eight Representatives, and from thirteen electoral votes to ten, unless she concludes not to nullify the Constitution of the United States and stands up for the freedom she

Another question may be raised: It will be observed that this section says, "That should any State, after the passage of this act, deny or abridge the rights," &c. It may be objected that the laws under which the State elections are held in Massachusetts do not appear to have been made after the passage of this act. But if the committee will turn to the law before cited (General Laws of 1874, page 283, chapter 376) they will find that the law imposing these restrictions was passed June 29 of that year, and was an act of the State, therefore, two years after the apportionment act of Congress. In other words, the State took advantage of the apportionment according to the whole number of people granted by Congress in 1872, in order to get the representation, and then deliberately disfranchised, in the face of that law, quite one-third of her voters, enforcing an obsolute State amendment of 1857, old as the days of slavery.

FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS, March 16, 1880.

I, George Lord, on oath, depose and say that I have been informed by James C. Brady, city treasurer of Fall River, that the following statement of unpaid poll taxes in this city is correct, and I believe it to be true. The number of unpaid poll taxes in 1876 was upward of 4,000: number assessed May 1,1876, was 10,519; number unpaid in 1878 was about 4,000; number unpaid in 1879 was about 7.000.

I appeal to all fair minds to aid me in restoring the promised rights of citizenship. Shall the freedman fleeing from the South lose his vote in Massachusetts?

Charles Sumner speaks for Massachusetts and for man, as follows.

Charles Sumner speaks for Massachusetts and for man, as follows, in the preliminary debate of this question:

DEBATE UPON PROPOSITIONS TO AMEND CONSTITUTION, H. R. NO. 57.

Our fathers solemnly announced the equal rights of all men, and that government had no such foundation except in the consent of the governed; and to the support of the Declaration heralding these self-evident truths pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor.  * Mighty words. Fit utterance for the giant infant then born. Fit device for the great Republic taking its place in the family of kings. * * * Fit lesson for mankind. * * * A failure to perform these promises is moral and political bankruptcy. * * Whoever dissowns any of the promises of the Republic leads the way in repudiation.

But the argument for enfranchisement, which is nothing but the complement of emancipation, is the same. Enfranchisement is not only intrinsically just, but it is necessary to the safety of the Republic. * * * I shall noterr if I say that emancipation itself will fail without enfranchisement. * * As an act of justice enfranchisement has a necessity of its own. No individual and no people can afford to be unjust. Such an offense will carry with it a curse, which sooner or later must drag its perpetrator to the earth. But here the necessity from considerations of justice is completed and intensified by the positive requirements of the national safety, plainly involved in the performance of these promises.—Congressional Globe, February 6, 1866, pages 673 and 674.

Remarking upon the guarantee of a republican form of government

Remarking upon the guarantee of a republican form of government under the Constitution, Mr. Sumner says:

It is expressly declared that "the United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government." These words, when properly understood, leave no alternative. They speak to us with no uncertain voice. The magnitude of the question now before us may be seen in the postulate with which I begin.

stood, leave no alternative. They speak to us with no uncertain voice. The magnitude of the question now before us may be seen in the postulate with which I begin.

Assuming that there has been a lapse of government in any State so as to impose upon the United States the duty of executing this guarantee, then do I insist that it is the bounden duty of the United States to see that such State has a republican form of government, and in the discharge of this bounden duty they must declare that a State, which in the foundation of its government sets aside "the consent of the governed," which imposes taxation without representation, which discards the principle of equal rights, and which lodges power exclusively with an oligarchy, aristocracy, caste, or monopoly, cannot be recognized as a "republican government," according to the requirements of American institutions. Even if it may satisfy some definition handed down from antiquity, or invented in monarchical Europe, it cannot satisfy the solemn injunctions of eur Constitution.

For this question I now ask a hearing, Its correct eletermination will be an epoch for our country and for mankind.

Believe me, sir, this is no question of theory or abstraction. It is a practical question, which you are summoned to decide. Here is the positive text of the Constitution, and you must now affix its meaning. You cannot evade it, you cannot forget it without an abandonment of duty. Others in vision or aspiration have dwelt on the idea of a republic, and they have been lifted in soul.

You must consider it, not merely in vision or aspiration, but practically as legislators, in order to settle its precise definition, to the end that the constitutional guarantee may be performed. Your powers and duties are involved in this definition. The character of the Government founded by our fathers is also involved in it. There is another consideration which must not be forgotten. In affixing the proper meaning to the text, and determining what is a "republican government," you act as a c

Alluding to the source of definition of the term "republican government," Mr. Sumner remarks:

ernment," Mr. Sumner remarks:

In these words of hypothesis I have already foreshadowed the four different heads under which these principles may be seen: First, as asserted by the fathers throughout the long revolutionary controversy, which culminated in war. Secondly, as announced in solemn declarations. Thirdly, as sustained in declared opinions. Fourthly, as embodied in public acts. If Senators ask why our fathers struggled so long in controversy with the mother country and then went forth to battle, they will find that it was to establish the very principles for which I now contend. To secure the natural rights of men, and especially to vindicate the controlling maxim, that there can be no taxation without representation, they fought with argument and then with arms. Had these been conceded at that time there would have been no Lexington or Bunker Hill, and the colonies would have continued yet longer under transatlantic rule. The first object proposed was not independence, but the establishment of these principles, and when at last independence was proposed, it was because it became apparent that these principles could be secured in no other way. Therefore, the triumph of independence was the triumph of those principles, which necessarily entered into and became the animating soul of the Republic, which was then and there born. The evidence is complete, and if I dwell on it with minuteness it is because of its decisive character on the present occasion.

Charles Sumner further says:

By the oaths you have taken to support the Constitution you must take care that in all the States where governments have lapsed this guarantee shall be carried out. In the performance of this duty you may proceed by an enabling act, establishing in advance the conditions on which these States shall be restored to their "practical relations with the Union," or by an act directly annulling all constitutions and laws of any such States inconsistent with a republican government. The power is in Congress. It has been recognized in formal terms by the Supreme Court, and you are the final judge of the means you shall employ.

Under the principles of Charles Sumner you could go directly to Massachusetts with an enabling act and by the broad shield of your sovereign power compel immediate acquiescence. Instead of punishing a single representative, you could overturn the government of Massachusetts if she did not conform her constitution to the requirements of the national Constitution.

I read further the language of Sumner:

To say that you have not the power is to abdicate at a great exigency the very means of salvation. It is to fling away your arms in the very face of the enemy. It is to spike the Constitution at a moment when its full cannonade is needed for the overthrow of wrong. Clearly you have the power, and upon your heads will be the fearful responsibility if you fail to exercise it.

It is to spike the Constitution at a moment when its full cannonade is needed for the overthrow of wrong. Clearly you have the power, and upon your heads will be the fearful responsibility if you fall to exercise it.

Men of Massachusetts, dare you take this responsibility? Loring has quoted young Ohio, the daughter of Massachusetts; Ohio does not do this deed of disfranchising weakness and wickedness. I owa does not perform this infamy. Maine does not disfranchise her people. New Hampshire, adjoining Massachusetts, with a similar people in every respect, does not find it necessary. Shall Massachusetts dim the luster of her heroes, go back upon the teachings of her history, give the lie to her professions? Shall she act the part of those rulers in Judea who when Jesus was crucified would not enter the judgment hall for fear of being defiled, yet when the stern and bloody Roman governor said, "I find no fault in him," cried out "Let him be caucified! Give us Barrabas, the robber!"

Men of Massachusetts, shield not yourselves behind your illustrious names. As well might Loring, petitioning for national appointment, go to the gravestones of our ancient Salem for names to secure it as to seek to answer the points of law and fact in this case by taking refuge behind the history, the fame, and the glory of our ancient Commonwealth. Massachusetts is not that little space between the hills of Berkshire and the sands of Barnstable; she is now fifteen million of descendants, whose warehouses are in every portion of the Republic from Maine to San Francisco; it is the liberty-loving men of America, it is the ideas that come down to us from the scaffold of Sidney, from the words of Locke in his exile, from the pilgrims and Puritans, from John Hancock, Adams, Warren, from James Otis, insisting that taxation without representation is tyranny, speaking for universal manhood suffrage in the old cradle of liberty. I adjure you by all her immortals and by the kindred revolutionary heroes of Virginia, by the Sumters and Marions of

I quote our own immortal poet Whittier, my near neighbor. I want to quote his words, for I know how wise is his head, how tender is his heart. He wrote of this very thing in his poem "The Mantle of Saint John de Matha," a legend of A. D. 1154, "The Red, White, and Blue," which described the saving from re-enslavement of a ship-load of once ransomed European captives; it changes to the vision of freedom and enfranchisement he saw in 1864 in the midst of our horrible sivil exists. horrible civil strife. He says:

With rudder foully broken, And sails by traitors torn, Our country on a midnight sea Is waiting for the morn.

Before her, nameless terror;
Behind, the pirate foe;
The clouds are black above her,
The sea is white below.

The hope of all who suffer,
The dread of all who wrong,
She drifts in darkness and in storm,
How long, O Lord! how long?

But courage, O, my mariners! Ye shall not suffer wreck, While up to God the freedman's prayers Are rising from your deek.

Is not your sail the banner
Which God hath blest anew,
The mantle that De Matha wore,
The red, the white, the blue?

Its hues are all of heaven—
The red of sunset's dye,
The whiteness of the moon-lit cloud,
The blue of morning's sky.

Wait cheerily, then, O mariners, For daylight and for land; The breath of God is in your sail, Your rudder in His hand.

Sail on, sail on, deep-freighted With blessings and with hopes; The saints of old, with shadowy hands, Are pulling at your ropes.

Behind ye holy martyrs
Uplift the palm and crown;
Before ye unborn ages send Their benedictions down.

Now, after you have put that "freedman's prayer" into the Constitution of my country, do you propose that Massachusetts, of illustrious name and fame, shall be used to wipe out all the war has won? Do you refuse to hear and redress this first breach of the charter? Have the two old parties—republican and democratic—united like Herod and Pilate, like Scribe and Pharisee, to punish those standing up for liberty and justice here in the last court of freedom—here in the Congress of the country? The men who won England's Magna Charta could not read or write. The blood of poor men ransomed and enlarged the charter of American freedom and nationality.

The United States census of 1880 shows that from the same non-and enlarged the charter of American freedom and nationality.

The United States census of 1880 shows that from the same population three men voted in Maine and New Hampshire, Ohio and Indiana, where only two voted in Massachusetts, in a population of similar intelligence and employment. If Maine, that up to 1820 shared and illustrated the history of Massachusetts, safely gives equality, why cannot the mother State? Does it dim the splendor or retard the success of Ohio because she does not refuse a vote to the poorest freedman in her borders? Have we not in America's three hundred thousand free schools academies and colleges security that intelligence man in her borders? Have we not in America's three hundred thousand free schools, academies, and colleges, security that intelligence shall rule, without making the poor and the unfortunate tremble at the loss of his manhood suffrage? The eloquent words of Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, in accepting the presidency of the national republican convention at Chicago, June 3, 1880, were fitly cheered by the delegates of every State and Territory, and have before and since been echoed by the President-elect. I quote the Senator:

The key-note of every republican platform, the principle of every republican union, is found in its respect for the individual man. Until that becomes the pervading principle of every part of the Republic, from Canada to the Gulf, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, our mission is not ended.

The Republic lives, the republican party lives, but for this: that every man within our borders may dwell secure in a happy home, may cast and have counted his equal vote. Until these things come to pass the mission of our party is not accomplished, nor its conflict with its ancient enemy ended.

Had the equality proclaimed in our immortal Declaration of Independence been real, a million men would not have died to write freedom in the Constitution. Two hundred thousand black men fought for their liberty. The colored people alone outnumber our nation pendence been real, a million men would not have died to write freedom in the Constitution. Two hundred thousand black men fought for their liberty. The colored people alone outnumber our nation when it won independence. You legislate for our fifty millions of to-day, for the five hundred millions that will celebrate our next centennial. No power can compel you to do justice and keep your oath at freedom's altar. Will you refuse and dim the splendor of the hero-crimsoned flag that is destined to gather in all the States of the New World—destined to teach law and liberty, peace and fraternity to all mankind. That flag is alike for the lowly and the strong; touching earth, it sweeps the stars.

The uncounted generations that have come and gone, the slow advance of freedom through sixty centuries, the mistakes that have darkened history warn us vigilantly to guard the summit of man's liberty, our Constitution so dearly won. The morning gilds our mountain heights of freedom, when eclipsed by noon it shall only make the men that held their passes immortal.

Mr. WEAVER took the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to yield me five minutes of his time for the purpose of stating the position of the Committee on Elections, as that position has been assailed in this debate.

Mr. WEAVER. I have but a short time allowed me, and I cannot spare any of it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask by unanimous consent, then, that I be allowed five minutes, not to come out of the time on either side.

Mr. WEAVER. The time for debate has been fixed and the other minutes, and a quarter; the contestant has taken up his hour, leaving only fifteen minutes to me.

Mr. CALKINS. I give notice that when the gentleman from Iowa closes what he has to say, I will then demand the previous question, after which I understand under the rule thirty minutes are allowed on each side.

ing that this debate on this contested-election case should last only two hours and a half.

Mr. CALKINS. The gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Elections, only asks for five minutes to explain the position of the committee. If the House undertakes to cut off debate after the previous question is seconded and the main question ordered, I give notice I shall then ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be allowed five minutes to explain his position.

Mr. REAGAN. That cannot be done, for it is contrary to the agreement entered into on the floor of the House.

ment entered into on the floor of the House.

Mr. CALKINS. I will state that nobody else wishes to speak.

Mr. REAGAN. The understanding was that two hours and a half would be given in the discussion of this subject. I hope the Chair in the execution of that agreement will insist on limiting it to that time and not permit it to be extended by unanimous consent to another hope.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proceedings will be read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to show what was the agreement as to the disposition of time. The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CAIKINS. I now call up the contested election case of Boynton vs. Loring. Mr. REAGAN. Is there an agreement as to the time that shall be occupied by this

Mr. CALKINS. I must decline to yield for the reason that there is barely time to liscons this case this evening.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] whether he will not agree that by unanimous consent debate be closed in two hours?

Mr. CALKINS. Under instructions of the Committee on Elections, I will call the previous question in two hours and a half.

Mr. CALKINS. That is what I propose to do, and I shall ask unanimous consent for five minutes for the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WEAVER. If I have a right to object to that, I will do so. The committee used its entire time, and I shall certainly object, if I have the right, to any further time being extended to that side.

Mr. REAGAN. I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that I did not understand it as it has been read, or else I would have made further objections.

stand it as it has been read, or else I would have made further objection. My understanding was the debate should be continued only for two hours and a half, and that there should be no further extension.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was the understanding of the Speaker—not the present incumbent of the chair, but the Speaker of the House—that there was remaining one hour after the calling of the previous question.

Mr. REAGAN. I confess I did not so understand it at the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair knows nothing about it further than what appears in the RECORD.

Mr. WEAVER addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. MURCH. I ask that the time of the gentleman from Iowa be extended for five minutes.

Mr. REAGAN. I would suggest that the previous question be ordered, and that the gentleman from Iowa get an extension of time after that.

Mr. CALKINS. I understand that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Russell] desires to offer a substitute for the pending resolution. I yield to him for that purpose, and after that will call the revious question.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. I move as a substitute for the pending resolution that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the papers in this case be recommitted and that the Committee on Elections is hereby instructed to inquire and report whether the State of Massachusetts is entitled under the Constitution of the United States to eleven members of this House, and if not, whether Mr. LORING and the other members of this House from that State are entitled to be members of this House.

Mr. CALKINS. Before I call the previous question, and in order not to be cut off from the right to make a point of order upon the substitute, I now make the point of order that it is not germane to the subject-matter before the House.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. It is a motion to recommit, which is always in order; a motion to recommit to the Committee on Elections with instructions to report. I hope the Chair will examine the matter thoroughly.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. Then I understand that the Chair would sustain the point of order even if the portion relating to other members from Massachusetts were stricken out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order on the substitute as presented.

Mr. CALKINS. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. CALKINS. If under the rule I have the right to further debate this matter for thirty minutes—

Mr. Calkins. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Calkins] to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] only five minutes.

Mr. Calkins. I understood that that was all the gentleman wanted, and upon the suggestion of gentlemen around me who desire to proceed with the public business, I limited the time to him to five minutes, as I understood that was all he desired.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is all that I desire. If the gentleman will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Weaver,] then I will take five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEA-VER] will proceed.

Mr. WEAVER. I understand that it is disputed by members on this floor that there was any such ticket voted in the city of Boston in the election of 1878 as the one I have exhibited here. Now let me call the attention of the House specifically to the language printed on this ticket.

Copyright, 1878, by Rockwell and Churchhill, 39 Arch street, Boston.
As printed, this ballot bears the names of the regular republican nominees; beare of pasters and erasures.
Certified to by the republican State committee of Boston.

NATHANIEL J. ROSS, President,
HENRY N. SAWYER, Secretary
Republican State Committee.

I am assured by General Butler, and by other gentlemen with whom I have conversed, that thousands of these tickets were voted at that election. Not only that, but they were placed in the hands of employés in large numbers, and those men were taken to the polls in close carriages and were seen to vote the ticket, and were then allowed to return to their places of business. I understand that to be the fact, and I charge it upon the testimony which I have cited.

Now, I wish to make one other comparison, and then I will have done. Take the constitutional provision of Massachusetts, making other qualifications for suffrage than those prescribed by the four-teenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; then take the constitution of the State of Alabama, and contrast the two. I have before me the constitution of the State of Alabama, and section 38 of the bill of rights reads as follows:

No educational or property qualifications for suffrage or office, nor any restraint upon the same on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, shall be made.

Now, there is a great deal of complaint made on the part of Massa-chusetts against Alabama that she does not allow her people the right to vote. But Alabama has gone ahead of any State in this Union, and of any constitutional provision in modern times. She has put into her very bill of rights that no educational or property qualification shall ever be required by the law of that State. And I am happy to state to this House that the honorable member from the eighth congressional district of that State [Mr. Lowe] is the author of that provision in the constitution of Alabama.

But Massachusetts, because of her heraldry, because of her great men, because of her public institutions, because of her previous history in the struggles for liberty, claims the right to trample this Constitution in the dust. What we demand is that Massachusetts shall take her feet off the Constitution of the United States and off the previous of 105,000 disfranchised attrapped that Communically. the necks of 105,000 disfranchised citizens of that Commonwealth.

the necks of 105,000 disfranchised citizens of that Commonwealth.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GHLLETTE, and Mr. RUSSELL of North Carolina, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks on the pending case. [See Appexdix.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the House for a few minutes in order to explain the position of the committee in reference to two questions involved in this case. It will be seen from the report that all the members of the committee with the expression. in reference to two questions involved in this case. It will be seen from the report that all the members of the committee, with the exception of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Weaver,] have reported in favor of the sitting member. The gentleman from Iowa concludes his report with a resolution that Mr. Boynton is entitled to the seat. Taking the two reports, it thus appears that the committee are unanimous to the effect that the seat should be filled and not declared vacant. The argument that we should disfranchise the State of Massachusetts because she has provided in her constitution and laws that the voter must be able to read and write, is not sustained by any member of the committee. When the apportionment act was passed in 1872 it was provided in section 22 of the Revised Statutes: in 1872, it was provided in section 22 of the Revised Statutes:

Should any State deny or abridge the right of any of the male inhabitants thereof, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, to vote at any election named in the amendment to the Constitution, article 14, section 2, except for participation in the rebellion or other crime, the number of Representatives apportioned to such State shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall have to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

At the time of the passage of that statute the constitution and laws of Massachusetts contained the disqualification which has been referred to; and the committee were of the opinion that the question was then concluded by the action of Congress, (taken in the light of the existing law of that State,) declaring her entitled to eleven Representatives. We held that the number of Representatives to which Massachusetts was entitled having been fixed by a law passed by both Houses of Congress and approved by the President, it was not competent for the Committee on Elections or this House to say that Massachusetts is entitled to only ten Representatives.

sachusetts is entitled to only ten Representatives.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will allow me, I wish to ask him whether he holds that this House in passing an act apportioning Representatives is bound to take notice of the laws of the different States !

Mr. SPRINGER. This House in such a case must take cognizance of all existing laws—not only the laws of the United States, but the laws and constitutions of the several States. Therefore, Congre laws and constitutions of the several States. Therefore, Congress having given Massachusetts eleven Representatives, notwithstanding this disqualification in her laws and constitution, this House ought to assume, and the committee did assume, that the action of Congress had been taken in the face of the laws and constitution of the State.

Mr. REAGAN. I only want to say that while we must take notice of the laws of Congress, it surely cannot be insisted that a provision of the Constitution is to be invalidated because this House in the passage of a particular act may have failed to examine the statutes or constitution of one of the States.

Mr. SPRINGER. Whether Congress in 1872 failed to examine that question or not is immaterial in this case. The law as it now exists does entitle the State to eleven Representatives. Therefore the committee did not believe the question material; and upon that point the committee is unanimous.

Now, one other question. The contestant has stated that 138 votes in Groveland precinct had no designation of the office upon them; in Groveland precinct had no designation of the office upon them; and he cites the evidence of one of the witnesses to that fact. The witness did testify in an ex parte affidavit that there was no designation of the office upon the 138 ballots; but further evidence discloses that there was a designation of the office. One of the tickets was produced, and it is admitted that the ticket which appears upon page 7 of the printed evidence was the form of ticket voted at that election. This is the designation upon that ticket:

For representative, 6th dist.: Geo. B. Loring, of Salem.

The contestant held that this was not a designation of the office of Representatives in Congress; but the committee, with the exception of one member, were of the opinion that it was a designation within the meaning of the law of Massachusetts. Upon the same ticket the word "representative" occurs in only one other place, and that is in connection with the last name upon the ticket—"For representative to general court 17th Essay dist" resentative to general court, 17th Essex dist."

Under the law of Massachusetts that is the lower house of the State Legislature. Looking at the face of this ticket, the committee were of the opinion that when the voter had in the one instance designated "for representative to General Court," and in the other had designated "for Representative, sixth district," the intention of had designated "for Representative, sixth district," the intention of the voter should govern; that the voter should be entitled to have his ballot counted for George B. Loring as Representative in Congress, although the words "in Congress" were not upon the ticket.

Mr. PHILIPS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly, if it is not to be taken out of my time. The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. Cox.) The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has expired.

Mr. CALKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois for one minute worst.

Mr. SPRINGER. If we count these one hundred and thirty-eight tickets which contain as the designation of the office the words "Rep-resentative, sixth district," there is no other dispute in the case except resentative, sixth district," there is no other dispute in the case except as to Haverhill precinct, and in that precinct the contestant contends that he is entitled to 52 votes which were not cast for him at all, upon the evidence of one witness who testifies that there were that many voters in the precinct who would have voted for the contestant, and who were entitled to vote if they had presented themselves at the polls. But there is no evidence in the record that any serves at the poils. But there is no evidence in the record that any one of these persons appeared at the poils and demanded the right to vote. There is simply the statement of this one man, who says that there were that many persons in the precinct who would have voted for the contestant, who were entitled to vote, and who would have presented themselves to vote but for a test case which had been made. So we could not consider those 55 votes. Then giving the contestant all the other votes he claims, the committee decided that Mr. Loring was elected, and they so reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to have the gentleman from Illinois state whether there is any controversy between the majority and the minority of the committee on the question as to whether these fifty-five voters offered to vote.

Mr. WEAVER. Of course there is. Mr. CALKINS. I do not understand they claimed that these fifty-five offered to vote.

Mr. WEAVER. Not all of them. Two of them did, and the others were there in line, having paid their taxes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, announced that body insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1381) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Potomae at or near Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. WITHERS, Mr. MCMILLAN, and Mr. ROLLINS managers of said conference on its part.

MASSACHUSETTS CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. CALKINS. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Field.]
Mr. FIELD. Mr. Speaker, knowing the time of this House is precious, and believing this debate would close in two hours and a half, I got leave to print what I had to say, and it is to be found in the Record of this morning. If any gentleman has done me the honor of reading it, he will know my views.

I have stated as carefully as I can all the statistics of Massachusetts that enable anybody to determine the number of paupers, the numthat enable anybody to determine the number of paupers, the number of convicts, the number of insane, and the number of male illiterates over twenty-one years of age. The number of persons not included in these classes, being naturalized or native-born males over twenty-one years of age who do not choose to register, or who do not choose to vote, or who have not the requisite residence in the city or district, or who have not paid a tax, now not exceeding one dollar, within two years, it is an utter impossibility to ascertain, and it varies with different elections.

I have only one or two things to say. In the first place, it is not, as has been stated by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Weaver,] the law of Massachusetts that a man who has once been a pauper shall never vote. He must be a pauper at the time of the election. If he be a pauper then he cannot vote, but he may have been a pauper always up to that time, and, if not then a pauper, he is entitled to

We originally had a property qualification in 1780. We changed it in 1821 to the existing law, except in 1857 we added the provision against illiteracy, and since that time we have made no changes affecting this question in the constitution or laws of the Common-wealth. The assertion that Massachusetts has made changes in view of the fourteenth amendment, or in view of the apportionment act of 1872, either by her constitution or her laws, is absolutely without foundation.

In the second place, in regard to the ballot—
Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?
Mr. FIELD. Certainly.
Mr. WEAVER. You do not deny that in 1874 these laws were reenacted by Massachusetts—that was the action of the Legislature after the apportionment in 1872.
Mr. FIELD. I regret my throat is in such a condition I cannot well be heard. I will answer the question of the gentleman from Iowa. These amendments of the constitution would enforce themselves, but they were enforced by statute. In the general statutes of Massachus. they were enforced by statute. In the general statutes of Massachusetts of 1860, section 1, chapter 7, we have a statute exactly re-enacting the words of the constitution. Now, we added the twenty-third amendment to the constitution, which was ratified, I think, in 1859 and annulled in 1863, which related to naturalized voters, and this act of 1860 referred, among other things, to the twenty-third amendment. After that amendment was annulled, that section, being still the law, was re-enacted in its very words, except leaving out the reference to the twenty-third amendment, it having been meanwhile annulled. So there has never been a moment from 1860 up to the present time when statutes in the exact words of the existing con-stitution have not been in force and precisely of the same effect as stitution have not been in force and precisely of the same effect as they are in force to-day.

One other question. The gentleman has exhibited a ballot. I do not know whether it was a ballot used or not; but ballots like that, of different colors and devices, up to the year 1879, were used by all parties, particularly in the city of Boston. I will call attention in one moment to our provision for secret voting. These ballots were used because it had been the habit of some low persons in both parties to get, if they could, the design of the ballot of the opposite party and copy it, put the names of other persons as candidates on it, and thus deceive the voters; and the habit had been common to all parties to invent, if they could, a design which could not be easily counter-deceive the voters; and the habit had been common to all parties to invent, if they could, a design which could not be easily counterfeited, and to copyright it if they could, so that counterfeiting it would be subject to a penalty. That it was done for the purpose of watching how voters voted, or was used for any purpose of intimidation, is news to me. I never heard it charged before.

But we have a provision, and have long had in Massachusetts, expressly adopted for the purpose of securing a secret vote. It is by sealed envelopes. The provision of law under which these are provided is that the secretary of State shall have on hand a sufficient number of self-sealing envelopes, which he shall furnish to cities and towns, which, on or before the day of election, shall furnish them to the inspectors of election, who shall furnish them on the day of election to the voter, and the voter may put his ballot in a sealed envelope and present it in that form.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CALKINS. I now demand a vote upon the question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous indulgence of the House for a moment in order to correct a mistake which I made a few moments ago in my statement.

ago in my statement.

Mr. CALKINS. I will yield simply for the purpose of correcting an

Mr. SPRINGER. I referred to the precinct of Haverhill as the pre-cinct in which it was claimed the contestant was entitled to fifty-odd votes that were disqualified, the voters not being able to read and write. The precinct I intended to refer to was Amesbury, not Haverhill. The Haverhill vote was different. That was the precinct in which, when the count was made, it appeared there were forty-two ballots upon which the name of the contestant was simply erased, and the voters did not vote for any other person. But the committee were of opinion that the evidence did not show that there was any fraud in connection with it, because it failed to show any fact going to establish that anybody connected with the election had caused the alteration to be made.

Mr. WEAVER. I object to any further argument.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the substitute submitted by the minority of the committee which the Clerk will report.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the Chair to examine the rule bearing upon the motion which I submitted. I think upon examination the chairman will reconsider his ruling upon that point. I ask, therefore, that Rule XVII, section 1 be

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to be entirely courteous to the gentleman from North Carolina, but I submit that it is now too late to ask that. The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can only be read by unanimous consent and objection is made.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. I hope it will be read. I think the Chair ought to desire that it should be read in justice to himself because he has decided in the very teeth of that rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not intend to refer the Constitution of the United States or the second section to a committee of this House. The Chair ruled that the motion to commit with instructions was not in order.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. I submit, however, to the Chair that under the language of Rule XVII, to which I have referred, it is

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman ought to have taken an appeal at the time the decision was made. The Chair thinks it is now too late.

The question is on the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa in the nature of a substitute to the report of the Committee on Elections, which the Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That E. Moody Boynton is entitled to a seat in the Forty-sixth Congress rom the sixth congressional district of Massachusetts, and that George B. Loring a not entitled thereto.

The House divided; and there were ayes 13, noes not counted.

So the substitute was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs upon the adoption of the majority report, which the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That George B. Loring is entitled to retain his seat in the Forty-sixth Congress as a member from the sixth congressional district of the State of Massachusetts, and that E. Moody Boynton is not entitled thereto.

The resolution was agreed to.
Mr. WEAVER. I ask the yeas and nays upon that resolution.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 145.
So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CALKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolu-tion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE, BISBEE VS. HULL.

Mr. KEIFER. I rise to call up a privileged report in the case of Horatio Bisbee, jr., against Noble A. Hull, of Florida. I may state to the House that I think there will be no debate upon the question. At least I am advised of no gentleman who desires to discuss it. So far as the members of the Committee on Elections who examined the case are concerned, it was a unanimous report.

Mr. DICKEY. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to raise the question of consideration on this case.

Mr. KEIFER. I hope the gentleman will not do that now.
Mr. DICKEY. This is Friday, private-bill day, and I think we should proceed to the consideration of that business.
Mr. KEIFER. It will take longer to decide the question of consideration, in my judgment, than it will to dispose of this election

Mr. DICKEY. I think we should proceed to the consideration of rivate business. Therefore I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. DICKEY. I think we should proceed to the consideration of private business. Therefore I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House proceed now to the consideration of the privileged question raised by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER?]

The House divided; and there were—ayes 131, noes 85.

Mr. PAGE. I call for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BERRY. I request that the Speaker state the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio presents for consideration a privileged question, the consideration of the election case to which he has referred. Those in favor of taking up and proceeding with the contested-election case will vote in the affirmative.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 157.

So the House refused to adjourn.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were not ordered; only thirty members voting therefor.

Mr. FINLEY. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays, no quorum having voted on the last vote.

The demand for tellers was refused.

Mr. BLAND. If there was no quorum voting, has not the gentleman a right to have tellers ordered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was a quorum on the last vote.
Mr. FINLEY Mr. Speaker, [cries of "regular order,"] I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask the Chair what the former vote was? I raised the point of order that there was no quorum, believing that no quorum had voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There were 24 in the affirmative and 157 in the negative, which is more than a quorum.

The question will now be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Keifer,] that the House proceed with the contested-election case named, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken: and there were—vess 136 page 93 not

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

At the close of the second call of the roll,
Mr. KEIFER asked unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.
Mr. DAVIDSON and others objected.

The Clerk then read the names of those voting.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] that if he will consent that this matter go over until tomorrow I will interpose no further objection to its consideration at

Mr. SAMFORD. I desire to inquire how my name is recorded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the gentleman is not recorded as voting.

Mr. SAMFORD. I did vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Did the gentleman vote when his name was called was called?

Mr. SAMFORD. There was so much confusion in the Hall that I did not hear my name when it was called, and I did not know that it had been called until another name after mine had been called. I thereupon voted "ay."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the circumstances the Chair will rule that the vote of the gentleman be recorded, as it will not sharper the result.

The following additional pairs were announced: Mr. Washburn with Mr. Fernando Wood. Mr. Wait with Mr. Johnston.

Mr. Bliss with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. BLISS with Mr. KETCHAM.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not think it will take very many minutes to dispose of this case. I have not been advised thus far that there is any gentleman who desires to be heard upon it. The report of the Committee on Elections is unanimous, so far as its members were present at the time the report was adopted. The sub-committee, consisting of five members of the Committee on Elections, considered this case at the extra session of this Congress. It was one of the first cases considered by the committee.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Do you propose to argue this case now?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes, so far as I desire to argue it. I shall be through in less than five minutes, I think.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Do you propose to allude to the proposition which

Mr. KEIFER. There was so much confusion I did not understand it.

Mr. KEIFER. Let me say in answer to the gentleman that the proposition seems to be a reasonable one, and I will agree to it provided that there be given unanimous consent that this question shall come up without opposition immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I will interpose no obstacle myself.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand that, but I cannot accept that. I want unanimous consent of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Keifer,] that this case go over until to-morrow, to be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal ?

Mr. FINLEY and others objected.

Mr. KEIFER. Then I do not yield the floor.
Mr. DAVIDSON. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not yield the floor for any such purpose. I yielded to the gentleman only that he might submit his proposition.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman does not have the floor.

The SPEAKER protempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] has been recognized by the Chair as entitled to the floor.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Is not a motion to adjourn in order?

Mr. KEIFER. I do not yield the floor for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to adjourn has just been yeted down.

voted down.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. What is before the House at the present time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is before the House, [laughter,] on the contested-election case from Florida. The House has decided to proceed with the consideration of that case, and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER,] as the organ of the Committee on Elections, is on the floor and will proceed.

Mr. KEIFER. I propose to occupy the time of the House but a very few minutes. I was about saying, when interrupted, that the sub-committee of the Committee on Elections, consisting of five members, heard this case early in the extra session of this Congress. Counsel were heard orally before the committee. Printed briefs were furnished. And I may say that that sub-committee considered this case long and carefully before it was enabled to reach a unanimous conclusion. It then did reach a unanimous conclusion, which mous conclusion. It then did reach a unanimous conclusion, which conclusion was affirmed unanimously by the full Committee on Elections, at least so far as its members were present at the time the case was considered.

Now, I will say, briefly, that when the State canvassing board of the State of Florida canvassed the votes of the second congressional the State of Florida canvassed the votes of the second congressional district of Florida it rejected the entire vote of one county of that district, Madison County. By the rejection of that vote a result was reached which gave to the sitting member [Mr. HULL] a majority of 12 only. That State canvassing board had before it the returns from Madison County, all regular in form, as shown in the record in this case, and all unassailed then and now. There never has been a word uttered or shown in the record against a single one of the returns from Madison County before that canvassing board. Up to the present time not a word has escaped the lips of the sitting member or his counsel in the form of an objection to any one of those returns that were before the State canvassing board. By canvassing those returns with the other counties canvassed by the State canvassing board, Horatio Bisbee, jr., was found to have received a majority of 201. The Horatio Bisbee, jr., was found to have received a majority of 201. The State canvassing board, it is fair to say, rejected the returned vote of Madison County because the return of one precinct of that county, precinct No. 4, was not there. Somebody had destroyed it or disposed of it, or it had been lost; so that it was not present. The contestant applied to the supreme court of the State of Florida and obtained a peremptory writ of mandamus directed to the State canvassing board which compelled that board to assemble again and canvass the returned vote of the county of Madison.

When it had been canvassed they found that the contestant, Mr. Bisbee, had a majority of 201. When that majority was ascertained the contestant appealed to the then governor of the State of Florida to issue to him a certificate, the governor having theretofore issued a certificate of election to the sitting member. The governor very politely referred that application of Mr. Bisbee to the attorney-general of the State, a distinguished lawyer and democrat, asking his opinion as to whether he ought to annul his former certificate and issue a certificate to the man who, as shown by the canvass of the canvassing board, had been elected. The attorney-general with commendable promptness returned the application with a lengthy opinion, exhibiting great ability, and saying that it was the imperative duty of the governor to cancel his previous certificate and issue one to Mr. Bisbee. Thereupon the governor declined to do so.

The Committee on Elections, I will say, put no great stress on all this that I have stated about the supreme court, but finding the whole of the returns before the committee, together with the indisputable return from poll No. 4, Madison County, showing the precise vote in that precinct—the committee having all the returns before them said, unanimously, "It is immaterial what the supreme court did or what its powers were; here is the vote of the county all here; it is regular in form; unassailed in every respect." Hence the committee counted it, and by counting that vote the committee found that the majority for Mr. Bisbee, without taking anything else into consider-what its powers were; here is the vote of the county all here; it is regular in form; unassailed in every respect." Hence the committee counted it, and by counting that vote the committee found that the majority for Mr. Bisbee, without taking anything else into consideration, was 258 instead of 201. We found that at poll No. 4, the poll unreturned to the canvassing board, the majority for Mr. Bisbee, undisputed by the contestee in his brief, was 57. There is no case where, with the vote all before the House and its committee, with the returns all regular, the votes undisputed, the House has ever undertaken to reject a claim to a seat because somebody failed to do his duty.

Now I turn to Marion County, and only to refer to what is very commendable in the sitting member. The contestee himself, after examining the vote in that county, concedes openly and plainly in his brief that there was fraud in the Long Swamp or Whiteville poll of that county—fraud committed by the judges of election, they taking 93 votes from those actually cast for Horatio Bisbee, jr., and transferring them to the vote actually cast for the sitting member, thereby making a change of 186 votes. The vote of that county was canvassed by the State canvassing board, giving to the sitting member in that precinct 134 votes and to the contestant 41, whereas it is admitted on all hands and abundantly proved that it should have been 134 votes for the contestant and 41 for the contestee. We have there a change of 186. there a change of 186.

We find that in one precinct in Alachua County, Cow Creek poll, the vote was not returned, and that poll really gave to the sitting member 24 votes, and to the contestant 2 votes.

member 24 votes, and to the contestant 2 votes.

The county of Brevard I have not spoken of; and that is the only other part of the case to which I mean to refer. In that county the vote was returned in some form or other to the State canvassing board, but the board unanimously rejected the entire vote of that county—did not canvass it—for what particular reason we have been unable to ascertain. We do know from their return that they threw the whole vote aside for some reason which they deemed sufficient. The contestant, Mr. Bisbee, attacks the whole vote of this county. He thinks there were irregularities. It is shown in the case, it is true, that in one precinct, in the absence of a ballot-box such as is prescribed by the statute of the State of Florida, in the absence of a box or anything with which to make one, the vote was taken in a beer-bottle. It is shown that in another case a cigar-box was used, and so on. But we examined all these things carefully; and in view of an agreed statement of fact which we find in the case, we have decided to count the vote of Brevard County, which gives to the contestee 116 votes and to the contestant, Mr. Bisbee, 41 votes.

In view of everything in the case we have concluded that it is our duty to canvass this vote. Canvassing all the votes in the light of

In view of everything in the case we have concluded that it is our duty to canvass this vote. Canvassing all the votes in the light of the returns, in the light of agreements and everything that is before us, we find 350 majority for Horatio Bisbee, jr. This is subject to a very slight deduction. The contestee objects to 18 votes in certain counties—Duval, Putnam, Baker, Columbia, and Suwannee. He claims that those votes were cast by non-residents or non-registered voters. Without stating any reasons, I may say that the committee deduct 11 votes from the majority of 350, and find the majority of the contestant to be 339. Only 18 votes were attacked in that way.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have occupied much more time than I intended. I demand the previous question on the resolution, and if, after that demand is seconded and the main question ordered, the gentleman desires a portion of the time accorded to me under the rules, I will be willing to yield it to him.

desires a portion of the time accorded to me under the rules, I will be willing to yield it to him.

Mr. MILLS. Under a previous order of the House a session has been arranged for this evening, and if the gentleman from Ohio will yield to me I will move that the House now take a recess.

Mr. KEIFER. Let the previous question be seconded.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not yield the floor except for a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When the gentleman demands the previous question he yields the floor necessarily, and a motion to adjourn is then in order.

Mr. MILLS. Pending the motion to adjourn, I move the House Mr. SPRINGER. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is, the motion to adjourn having ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H.R. No. 1894) authorizing the employment of an inspector of plumbing in and for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

Mr. Kelley, until Wednesday, on account of important business.

Mr. Harris, of Massachusetts, for one week.

LEAVE FOR COMMITTEE TO SIT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. Cox, Mr. Thompson of Kentucky, Mr. Colerick, and Mr. Sherwin, sub-committee of the Committee on the Census, to sit this evening during the session of the House.

INDIAN DEFICIENCY ESTIMATES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting deficiency estimates for the Indian service for the year 1881, and for prior years; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMP. I move the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman insist on his motion to cut off the executive communications now being laid before

Mr. CAMP. No; I do not object to the Speaker laying before the House these several executive communications. I withhold my motion for the present.

HEMPSTEAD HARBOR AND GOWANUS BAY, NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports from Colonel John Newton, Corps of Engineers, upon examination and surveys of Hempstead Harbor and Gowanus Bay, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

RESTORATION OF CERTAIN OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, tramsmitting the petition of officers of the Sixth Cavalry, against the restoration of certain officers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REIMBURSEMENT OF LIEUTENANT GILMORE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the claim for reimbursement of Lieutenant Gilmore, Eighth Cavalry, for bag-gage lost; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WHARF AT SANDY HOOK, NEW JERSEY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the exten-sion of the United States wharf at Sandy Hook, New Jersey; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

QUARTERS AT FORT LEAVENWORTH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the con-struction of a permanent brick building for quarters at Fort Leaven-worth; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Acting Postmaster-General, relative to a deficiency in the appropriation for postal clerks and route agents; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSE, CAPE HENRY, VIRGINIA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Light-House Board, relative to the light-house at Cape Henry, Virginia; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CAMP. I withdraw the motion to adjourn. Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not yield to anything but the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to take a recess.

Mr. SPRINGER. I should like to have read the order of the House for the session this evening. The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KEIFER. I submit that the motion to take a recess is not now in order pending my demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER protempore. The Chair overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. A motion to adjourn would undoubtedly be in order, but not a motion to take a recess pending the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion for a recess is undoubtedly in order at this time, or at any time before the hour at which the House has heretofore agreed to take a recess.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise to a point of order. I make the point that the hour of four and a half o'clock has arrived.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to adjourn has been made, which is in order.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 64. So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to. And then, in pursuance of the previous order of the House, (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.,) the House took a recess until eight o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

At eight o'clock p. m. the House resumed its session, Mr. Carlisle in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order of the House for the session this evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House will take a recess to morrow (Friday) at four and a half o'clock p. m., to meet again at eight o'clock for the consideration of Senate bills on the Private Calendar in their order on the Calendar, and for the transaction of no other business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under that order it will be now in order for the House to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, (Mr. Townshend, of Illinois, in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar for the purpose of considering Senate bills on that Calendar.

The Clerk will report the first bill.

THEOPHILUS P. CHANDLER.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. No. 22) for the relief of Theophilus P. Chandler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be itenacted, &c., That Theophilus P. Chandler, late assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston, is hereby relieved and discharged from all liability for the acts of Julius F. Hartwell, late disbursing clerk and cashier in the office of said assistant treasurer, in loaning or advancing the moneys or funds of the United States to Mellen, Ward & Co., and from all liability to account for any moneys or funds of the United States which were loaned or advanced by said Hartwell to said Mellen, Ward & Co., the same having been without the default or negligence of said Chandler.

The report is as follows:

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the petition of Theophilus P. Chandler, late assistant treasurer at Boston, Massachusetts, and the bill (S. No. June 18, A. D. 1833, the petitioner was appointed, without his previous application or knowledge, assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston, and continued to hold said office to until the month of June, A. D. 1889, when he resigned, during which time he faithfully performed all the duties of said office to the approbation and entire satisfaction of his superior officers at Washington, and at the close of his service his accounts were all settled and closed.

When the service his accounts were all settled and closed.

And the service his accounts were all settled and closed.

contested on each side by able counsel, and counsel on each side testify that throughout there was no claim, suggestion, nor evidence that Mr. Chandler was in fault.

Hon. Hugh McCulloch, Secretary of the Treasury at the time of these occurrences, writes, under date of November 23, A. D. 1878, to Mr. Chandler, among other things:

"I bear cheerful testimony to the admirable manner in which the business of the office of assistant treasurer at Boston was conducted when you were at the head of it; to your ability, uprightness, and carefulness as an officer. For the defalcation and criminal conduct of Hartwell you were in no wise responsible. It would be cruel injustice to hold you and your sureties legally liable for it. You found Hartwell in office when you were appointed; his ability was manifest, his integrity undoubted. No laches have been attributed to you. On the contrary, the reports of the manner in which your duties were performed and the business of the office was conducted—reports made by the general and by special examiners—were always creditable to you and satisfactory to the Department at Washington. I heartily unite to the petition to Congress that an act be passed for the relief of yourself and sureties."

The result is, first, that there appears to be no question about Mr. Chandler's ability, uprightness, and carefulness; second, that the embezzlement was of funds not in Mr. Chandler's actual personal custody, but necessarily intrusted to the disbursing clerk, who, as we have seen, the Supreme Court has decided was himself "an officer of the Government charged with the keeping of the public moneys."

Mr. Chandler himself is about seventy years of age and possessed for but little property. Two of his sureties, now living, are insolvent, and of those who have died, one, Governor John A. Andrew, left an estate of about thirty-two thousand dollars; and the estate of Mr. Edmunds, another surety, is insolvent, the liabilities being $733,339, the assets inventorical at $342,023, a considerable part of wh

"An act for the relief of Thomas Hillhouse, assistant treasurer of the United States in New York City.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the proper accounting officers be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to allow Thomas Hillhouse, assistant treasurer of the United States at New York City, in the settlement of his internal-revenue stamp account, a credit for the sum of $185,000, being the proceeds of sale of internal-revenue stamps embezzled by James I. Johnson, a clerk in his office, without the default or negligence of said assistant treasurer."

This bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, embracing many eminent gentlemen.

The facts of the case appear in House of Representatives Executive Document No. 41, third session, Forty-second Congress.

A select committee of the House of Representatives, appointed to investigate this loss, close their report as follows:

"No sane man would be willing to hold a position of so much peril except on the conviction that whatever his responsibilities may be under the law, Congress would judge each case on its merits, and grant relief when it ought to be granted. To refuse it when there has been no official misconduct would turn over the treasure of the Government to mere soldiers of fortune."—House Report No. 70, third session, Forty-second Congress.

This bill for the relief of Mr. Chandler passed the Senate at the last Congress, and was favorably reported by this committee, but was not reached in season for action in the House.

The committee report back the bill with recommendation that it pass in concurrence.

Deputy collectors are ordinarily required to give bonds; but so far as the committee is advised, bonds have never been required of clerks like Hartwell. The committee submit to the House the question whether a law should not be passed requiring bonds from all persons having access to the public moneys.

Mr. LINDSEY. Mr. Chairman, the report of the committee which has been read embraces all of the facts, I believe, that are important in this case. I desire to call the attention of the committee very briefly to two or three of the prominent facts as they appear in that report, and as they appeared conclusively in evidence before the committee. Mr. Chandler was appointed in 1865 as sub-treasurer in Bosmittee. Mr. Chandler was appointed in 1805 as sub-treasurer in foston. He found this man Hartwell in that office highly recommended. The business of the office was very large and was divided into various departments. Hartwell was the disbursing officer, and had charge of the funds. It was utterly impossible for the sub-treasurer to give personal supervision to all the details of the office, and he was necessarily dependent to a considerable extent upon the subordinates. In 1867 Hartwell formed an alliance with the firm of brokers in Boston known as Mellen, Ward & Co., to whom he loaned several large sums of public money, which had come into his possession in the daily business of the sub-treasury. These sums of money were got in by him each month before the monthly examination. He could easily transfer the gold certificates before examination, and they were always in This money was largely in gold certificates, and so compact in form that some five or six hundred thousand dollars of them could be carried in his breast pocket. This went on for some three months, at the end of which time Hartwell contrived, with the assistance of the cashier of one of the banks or a paying teller, to have these certificates returned, and then made a confession touching his relations with the bank by which the certificates were all returned to the sub-The accounts were all examined and supposed to be cortreasurer. The accounts were all examined and supposed to be correct. A settlement was made, and in 1868 the sub-treasurer resigned, and his accounts were believed by himself and the Government to be entirely correct. But suit was instituted by one of the national banks to which these certificates were pledged, which was not determined for some ten years afterward, and in 1877 a judgment was obtained against the United States for the amount of certificates pledged. And the object of this bill is to relieve this sub-treasurer who had acted in the most perfect good faith from any effects which may follow that judgment recovered ten years after the transaction.

Any one who has examined this report will see that there could

Any one who has examined this report will see that there could have been no fault on the part of the sub-treasurer. No care or oversight of his could have prevented this defalcation; and in accordance with the numerous precedents which came before the committee and which have been the practice of Congress we reported this bill for the relief of Mr. Chandler and his sureties.

Mr. Hartwell was indicted and was punished. But I may say the ground on which this action was sustained against the United States as that Mr. Hartwell was himself a Government officer and that his acts bound the United States, he being an appointee of the Treasury Department. That is one of the important facts I desire to

With this statement I propose to leave the matter with the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman from Maine permit me to ask him, what is the precise amount here involved?

Mr. LINDSEY. Four hundred and eighty thousand dollars.
Mr. BRAGG. I listened to the reading of the report carefully, but did not hear anything as to the amount.
Mr. LINDSEY. It is stated in the report.
Mr. REAGAN. I know nothing of this case except what is developed by the reading of the report, and what appeared before the House when a bill to relieve this same person was formerly before the House. I desire to call the attention of the committee to two or three points in this case. three points in this case.

It may be hard upon the assistant treasurer that, by the infidelity of his subordinates, he is involved in so large a pecuniary liability. The report sets up the theory that this assistant treasurer ought not to be held responsible for this; first, because the clerk was not appointed by him, and because it is substantially said, though perhaps it is not very clear, that he was appointed by the Treasury Department; and second, because it was impracticable for the sub-treasurer to supervise and look after the safety of the money under his con-

Now, while on these grounds it is insisted that the assistant treasurer should be relieved, it is also said that this man to whom the keeping of the money was actually intrusted was not required to give bonds. I do not mean the assistant treasurer, but the clerk—that the clerk was not required to give bonds. The only thing I desire to do is to call the attention of the House to the fact that if it is impracticable for assistant treasurers to watch over the safety of the money left in their care, and their clerks are not required to give bonds, and that fact becomes known, we can have no security for the public money, no hope of being able to protect the Treasury, except that which may exist in the obtaining of honest officers, and all human experience shows us that occasionally we will find men in these positions not to be trusted.

The assistant treasurer gives bonds for the safe custody of the funds committed to his charge. If it can be said whenever money belonging to the Treasury is lost it is lost by the mistake of some clerk not under bonds and the officer of the Government is not responsible, then the Government might as well repeal its laws for the security of the public moneys and intrust them without bond to such persons as may be selected to undertake their custody.

as may be selected to indertain their custody.

In view of these considerations, while it may be a hardship on the assistant treasurer that he should suffer pecuniarily, that he should be made pecuniarily liable for this large sum of money, certainly the Government cannot consent to the recognition of a principle and rule which takes from it all security for the safe custody of the public moneys.

Mr. MORSE. The bill under consideration is in the interest of some of my constituents, and I therefore feel it my duty to say a word about it, and explain, as far as I am able, to the House the case under consideration.

It seems that Mr. Chandler was appointed sub-treasurer at Bos-ton. While in possession of that office he had a clerk who was there ton. While in possession of that office he had a clerk who was there before he was appointed, and who stole a large amount of money. When that clerk found that the examining officers of the Government were to come to Boston to examine the accounts, he managed to draw on several banks that had confidence in him. He borrowed from them by drawing on them on his own check the whole amount of money in which he was in default at that time, and restored it to the sub-treasury. The sub-treasurer seized that money and held it, and made his account good with it. But later on, a long time after, those banks which had lost that money sued the United States Government and recovered it; and a default only came into existence after the recovery of that amount by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, which recited that this man so employed was not an employé of the treasurer himself, but was an appointee of the Government; and he was so indicted and so convicted by the of the Government; and he was so indicted and so convicted by the United States court, and the United States court so decided.

Therefore, the United States having decided to take the money out of the Treasury after it was fairly there, and give it back to the banks on the ground this man was an officer of the Government, and not an employe of the sub-treasurer, it seems perfectly clear he must be entitled to the relief he asks for.

Mr. MILLS. This bill has passed the Senate of the United States,

I believe, unanimously.

Mr. MORSE. Twice.
Mr. MILLS. It has twice passed the Senate of the United States, having been reported by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CAMERON,] who is one of the most careful and cautious members of that body.

who is one of the most careful and cautious members of that body.

Now what is the precise question that we here are called on to determine? A citizen of this country appeals to the highest legislative body of this Government for relief upon the strongest case of merit that can possibly be presented. Mr. Chandler was appointed assistant treasurer at Boston, and upon taking charge of his office he found there a clerk over whom he had no power of removal; a clerk who is appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury over him. That clerk was a disbursing clerk, having charge of the daily receipts and expenditures of millions of money.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MILLS. Certainly.

Mr. BRAGG. What authority has the gentleman for saying that this man was appointed against the wish or not upon the recommendation of his chief in the sub-treasury?

Mr. MILLS. Because I am informed he was appointed by the Secmendation of his chief in the sub-treasury?

Mr. MILLS. Because I am informed he was appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury before Mr. Chandler himself was appointed.

Mr. BRAGG. Yes; but if he was appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury when there was a former sub-treasurer, was he not then appointed upon the recommendation of that sub-treasurer?

Mr. MILLS. But not upon the recommendation of Mr. Chandler.

Mr. BRAGG. And when Mr. Chandler took possession of the office, was he not as its chief the person who then recommended anew the appointment of persons to hold places in that sub-treasury or did he appointment of persons to hold places in that sub-treasury, or did he not by his act indorse the persons already there as proper persons to be retained? The reason I ask this question is that it has been said that in the case of the United States against the State bank of Boston the Supreme Court decided that this man Hartwell was an appointed of the Secretary of the Treasury. I have that case before me and I find no such allusion in the opinion of the court; but on the contrary the court held—and from that perhaps the inference has been drawn—that Hartwell was an agent of the United States, appointed by them, and therefore when dealing with third parties the third parties had a right to treat him as a representative of the United States, and the United States were bound to respond for any wrong committed by him in the discharge of the duties of the place in which the United States had placed him. That would be the holding of the court if he were an appointee of the sub-treasurer, because he would be an agent of the United States, and that is all the Supreme Court say in 6 Otto, which I have here 6 Otto, which I have here.

Mr. CRAPO. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] will permit me I think I can refer the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Brago] to the decision of the Supreme Court in this case in which it defines the position and appointment of this man Hartwell. In the case of the United States against Hartwell, in 6 Wallace, the court declares that Hartwell was an officer of the Government—

Mr. BRAGG. Of course he was.

Mr. CRAPO. Charged with keeping the public money. The court says the defendant Hartwell was appointed by the head of a Department, within the meaning of the constitutional provision upon the subject of the appointing power; and the court also says, in 6 Otto, in discussing this case, that Hartwell was the agent of the United States; that he was appointed by them, that is, by the United States, and acted for them.

Mr. BRAGG. In reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, 1 would ask if that statement of the law does not apply to every appointee of the United States; and if the United States appoint a man chief of a Department does not every appointee under him become an officer of the United States?

officer of the United States?

Mr. MILLS. I cannot allow all my time to be taken by others. The view I take of this case is beyond all technicalities. I do not propose to inflict a heavy punishment upon an officer of this Government, and support my action alone by a legal technicality. The common honesty of the Representatives of the people is appealed to by a citizen who has been visited with a fearful penalty, a penalty inflicted upon him as a vicarious sufferer, not for his own guilt, for all the evidence shows that Mr. Chandler has been a faithful and efficient officer; that he has been guilty of no laches, none whatever. He is complimented by the Secretary of the Treasury for his integral. He is complimented by the Secretary of the Treasury for his integrity and his efficiency as an officer.

But Mr. Chandler was required by law, strangely enough, to give bonds to answer for moneys which were to pass through the hands of a subordinate—a subordinate appointed by the same authority that of a subordinate—a subordinate appointed by the same authority that appointed him.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no.
Mr. MILLS. Is not the assistant treasurer appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury †
Mr. SPRINGER. He is appointed by the President.
Mr. MILLS. Ab, well; it is the same thing; he is appointed on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury. The argument is precisely the same if he is appointed by the President of the United States. This disbursing officer was not subject to removal by the assistant treasurer.

The law of the United States requires the assistant treasurer to give bonds for the faithful keeping of moneys that pass through the hands of a disbursing clerk under him. That disbursing clerk equantity dered the money, to put it in the strongest terms and to leave outall equities. I take no notice of the fact that he was dealing with gentlemen and got back the gold certificates that he loaned. He was culpable in the fact that he allowed one dollar of that money to go to culpable in the fact that he allowed one dollar of that money to go to anybody; he should not have done it.

But is it to be supposed that the head of a Department shall have the eyes of Argus, and know all that is transpiring with those that are under him? Suppose that the Secretary of the Treasury was required to give bond for the faithful keeping of all the money—of the three hundred and fifty millions of dollars brought into your Treasury every year by taxes imposed upon the people. What Secretary of the Treasury would take that position and be responsible for the faithful conduct of the five hundred or the thousand subordinates under him? under him?

Sir, it would be to farm your revenues out to adventurers; for no man who had a private fortune to be held responsible for the culpable conduct for those under him would take any of your offices, I do not care how high.

Now this officer comes and asks the Government to relieve him from the legal liabilities placed upon him for the willful misconduct of one whose conduct he had no power to control. The case is supported whose conduct he had no power to control. The case is supported by the strongest kind of equity. Will you destroy this man? For the judgment of $480,000, if the Government insists upon enforcing it, means simply to crush this man into powder. Or will you, in your sound judgment, relieve him from this liability which he did not bring upon himself, but which a subordinate over whom he had no control brought upon him?

Mr. WARNER Limited the control of th

Mr. WARNER. I would like to put a question to the gentleman from Texas. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Well, if you undertake to force a vote, you will get a vote when you have a quorum. Now, force a vote, you will get a vote when you have a quorum. Now, then, content yourselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is on the floor and has a right to be heard.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas whether the Treasurer of the United States is not required to give bond, and whether he is not responsible for the conduct of clerks under him; responsible for any losses that may occur to the Treasury?

Mr. MILLS. The Treasurer is the very man who ought to give a bond instead of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WARNER. The Treasurer does give bond.

Mr. MILLS. And the disbursing clerk is the very man who ought to have been required by law to give this bond, instead of the subtreasurer.

Mr. WARNER. I am not questioning the correctness of the gentle-man's reasoning in this case; but it is a fact that the Treasurer does give bond and is responsible for those under him.

give bond and is responsible for those under him.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mills] seems to misunderstand the position of this officer. This man was not an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, but an assistant treasurer of the United States. Now the question here is to whom did the people of the United States look for the protection of this money but to this assistant treasurer? Somebody ought to be responsible for the safe-keeping of the funds belonging to the United States. The Treasurer and assistant treasurers of the United States are bound for funds in their hands. Their duty is simply to safely keep funds. They do not perform the thousand functions devolving upon the Secretary or Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury. They are simply the custodians of the money of the United States belonging to the people.

That was the charge devolving upon this man; and he, under the law, was compelled to give bond for the safe-keeping of such funds as came into his hands. Now, the Government of the United States has lost $480,000. How? Through the laches of a man whom Secretary McCulloch calls a very careful man. Now, let us look at this case. A few million dollars, perhaps, altogether came into this man's hand. His special business was to safely keep it, and he is so faithful in the keeping of it (as it seems) that he allows, as this report shows, a clerk under him, and for whose acts he is responsible, to loan it to this bank and that bank; and so the money is lost to the Government and to the people. Gentlemen come here and ask that this man, because he can get a letter from some sympathetic friend asking it, shall be relieved. It shall not be done, Mr. Speaker, if I can prevent it. I do not know that I can. I believe I never saw a case like this in Congress that did not get through. Let me read a paragraph from this report: That was the charge devolving upon this man; and he, under the from this report:

In December, January, and February, A. D. 1868-'67, Julius F. Hartwell, distributing clerk, secretly loaned Mellen, Ward & Co. several large amounts from the sub-treasury, which were got in by him each month before monthly examination, and were finally got in by him on the last day of February, when he confessed the transaction. The whole matter was immediately reported to the Treasurer at Washington, and Hartwell and other participants criminally punished.

Now, here is a man who has given bond in a large amount charged with the custody of this money, who when he is appointed accepts the office with the understanding that this high duty devolves upon him, yet allows a clerk under him to be loaning the funds out and he never detects it. In my judgment it is criminal negligence on his

Now a point is made that this clerk was not the assistant treasurer's appointee but was the appointee of the Treasury Department. I do not believe a word of it. The court does not say so in the decision quoted in this report. The court says in the report, "Hartwell was appointed by the head of a Department." Now I understand all this. Chandler found Hartwell in the office when he entered it. It was said that he was a man of high character. Well, if he was a man of high character he deceived his principal; and his principal is responsible for his acts. His principal could have turned him out if he desired to do so. Our Sergeant-at-Arms is charged with the keeping of a good deal of money, and yet he and we understand that he must have men under him whom he knows and has confidence in, for he is responsible under bonds. This assistant treasurer had the power to do the same thing. True, the clerk came with recommendations, he had been a clerk or a teller in a bank, or something of that sort, and he did not change him but kept him as his clerk and through his villainy the assistant treasurer lost of the people's money in his hands the sum of $480,000. Now I insist that there is no good reason why he and his securities should be released and the people lose this money. Now a point is made that this clerk was not the assistant treas-lose this money.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to defend this case of the claimant as a lawyer, because I am not one; but one point is perfectly clear to everybody here, and that is that this defalcation took place sixteen years ago. The Government never attempted to collect it and does not now, and does not believe it could even if it desired

You may well say, then, why are you here asking for relief? It is not for the treasurer himself but for the men upon his bond, many of whom have since died leaving their estates involved; and under the law of Massachusetts, and I do not know but it is the law elsewhere, the assignees refuse to pay over to several large estates dividends due to them until this bill which the people feel ought to be passed. It is not for the Treasurer himself, therefore. The Government makes no claim. There is no evidence from anybody, and I do not believe any one can furnish any by which the Government claims not believe any one can furnish any by which the Government claims it can collect this money.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I desire to put myself right. The proposition I stated seems not to have met the approval of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. CRAPO,] who cited to me a case in 6 Wallace, United States vs. Hartwell. There I find the law to be stated precisely as I claimed that it was. The court was speaking of Hartwell in answer to the objection that he was not a Government officer, and, therefore, could not be indicted under the penal statute of the United States against its officers for the embezzlement of its funds. The court says he was a public officer. The general approximation of the United States are the way and the officer. funds. The court says he was a public officer. The general appropriation act of July 23, 1866, authorized the assistant treasurer at Boston, with the approbation of the Secretary of the Treasury, to appoint a specific number of clerks who were to receive respectively the salaa specific number of clerks who were to receive respectively the salaries thereby prescribed. The indictment says the appointment of the defendant was in the manner provided by the act. So it seems, Mr. Chairman, by the terms of the act itself, the assistant treasurer at Boston had the control of the appointments in his office subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Therefore, when Mr. Chandler became sub-treasurer at Boston he assumed the responsibility for the good conduct of all the appointees then in the office, and, by not recommending others to take their places, as he had the power of making the appointments, he affirmed the fitness and capacity of those who were already there and assumed the responsibility under the law to be liable for all acts of malfeasance of which they might be guilty.

might be guilty.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BRAGG. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS. Do I understand you to say the Secretary of the Treasury, because he has the power to appoint and remove all the subordinates under him, is responsible for the defalcations of all officers, collectors of customs, and deputy collectors, and all internal revenue officers !

officers?

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir.

Mr. MILLS. That is your argument.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; it is not; and I am astonished that a gentleman with the legal acumen of the gentleman from Texas cannot define a line of demarcation between an officer holding an office like the Secretary of the Treasury, with his liabilities and duties fixed under the law, and a subordinate who has his liabilities fixed under a specified statute, and who is compelled to give a bond for the faithful performance of his duties in conformity with the provisions of the statute which confers the power upon him.

Mr. MILLS. My legal acumen is not sufficient to draw a distinc-

Mr. MILLS. My legal acumen is not sufficient to draw a distinction between tweedledum and tweedledee. The gentleman made an argument—

Mr. BRAGG. I decline to yield the floor to tweedledum or tweedledee.

Mr. MILLS. Allow me one minute.

Mr. BRAGG. If you have any question to ask I have no objection. I assert it as a legal proposition, this was a clerk of the sub-treasurer. That being so, and he having the right to make the selection, and being bound by law that the party by him selected should faithfully perform his duty, he was under the law responsible for the performance of that duty and for all the liabilities which might attach for the non-performance of it. It was one of the liabilities which he assumed when he entered upon the duties of his office. Therefore, in law there is no question at all as to his liability.

But the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Morse] says the Government for the last sixteen years has never made a claim. What does that prove? Because they never have made a claim shall we does that prove? Because they never have made a claim. What does that prove? Because they never have made a claim shall we proceed by our legislation to break down the safeguards and protections which are thrown around the public moneys in the several depositaries of the United States?

The report says that no man is obliged to assume this responsibility, but that no man who is a fit and proper person to discharge the duties.

but that no man who is a fit and proper person to discharge the duties of such an office could be induced to enter upon that office by reason of the immense responsibilities attached to him unless there was some relief like this, and that otherwise the result would be the public relief like this, and that otherwise the result would be the public moneys would be deposited in the hands of men who were mere soldiers of fortune to use as their private wishes and interests might dictate, and not to discharge their duties honestly and faithfully under the laws of the United States. Let me ask the gentleman who drew that report if he has such a dread that the public depositaries of money shall fall into the hands of soldiers of fortune, why does he recommend when thieves under the eyes of their chief shall rob the depositaries that in cases where these robberies have occurred the thieves and all their bonds, given for the protection of the public thieves and all their bonds, given for the protection of the public money, shall be discharged. What better invitation do you want to soldiers of fortune to seek

What better invitation do you want to soldiers of fortune to seek to get control of public moneys, than to discharge their principals from all liability on account of any peculation or robbery they may be guilty of while handling the public money? It is a question of public policy whether the laws of the United States shall be relaxed in each individual case of robbery so as to discharge the principal who would otherwise be responsible. As I understand it, there is no law by which chiefs require of their clerks who are to handle public moneys that they shall execute bonds for the proper execution of their duties, and also for the protection of the principal himself.

Neither is there any law that our private or other banking institutions or the officers in control of them shall require the tellers, cashiers, or other disbursing officers who have charge of the moneys of the institution to execute bonds for the faithful discharge of their duties in handling and disbursing their funds. But all wise and prudent bankers, if I am correctly advised, require of each subordinate officer who handles money, that he shall give security for the faithful performance of his duty to protect the bank and the stockholders of the bank from loss. It seems to me that the same sagacity and prudence should be required of an assistant treasurer who is required to give large bonds himself for the safety of the public moneys intrusted to him, and who has power to appoint his confidential clerks, that he should require the same security from his subordinates, in order to protect himself from liability on his own official bond for any shortcomings or malfeasance in office on their part.

Mr. REED. I would like to ask the gentleman a question here.

Mr. REED. I will answer the gentleman certainly.

Mr. REED. I will answer the gentleman certainly.

Mr. REED. I will osk by what right the assistant treasurer could require a bond from an officer appointed by the head of a Department; and if he did require that bond, would it be legal? I am asking him now as a lawyer. or the officers in control of them shall require the tellers, cashiers, or asking him now as a lawyer.

Mr. BRAGG. I will answer the question by saying, in the first place, you beg the premises, and then you base your question upon that.

Mr. REED. The Supreme Court has decided my premises. Mr. BRAGG. Ah! I have the Supreme Court decision here myself. They based that decision upon an appropriation act, which authorized the assistant treasurer of Boston to make the appointment, subject to the approbation of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. REED. Then the Supreme Court says that is an appointment

Mr. REED. Then the Supreme Court says that is an appointment by the head of the Department, and being such, what right has the assistant treasurer to require anything of him which the law does not require?

Mr. BRAGG. The Supreme Court has not considered the law in the light of an appointment by the head of the Department further than as making him an officer of the United States, and as such would subject him to the penalties fixed by the statute against embezzlement by officers of the United States. And that same principle applies whether his appointment is made with the approbation of the Secretary of the Treasury or not.

Mr. REED. I only want to ask the gentleman if the assistant treasurer, in his judgment, has the right to exact a bond of an officer whom the court has declared was appointed by the head of the Department?

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; but that statement, in the opinion of the Supreme Court, which goes beyond the question presented to them, is a mere dictum, when as in this case it is carried beyond the case then under consideration; and when they cite the act to show that he was appointed by the assistant treasurer, the subsequent statement, which is all a mere dictum, that that constitutes him an officer of the United States have been included to stablish the province to stablish the province. States, has no bearing to establish the premises upon which you base your question and upon which I answer.

Mr. ROBINSON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question here, which is a simple, practical question, and has no special legal

Mr. BRAGG. Certainly, I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. ROBINSON. It appears here by the report that some six million dollars a day passed through the hands of this sub-treasurer in Boston. Six million dollars a day is a very large amount. Now, I suggest to my friend from Wisconsin that it would be extremely difficult to get clerks to qualify themselves to attend to business involving so much money as that if they were obliged to furnish security to the treasurer for that amount. I think the bond fixed in the case of the treasurer in the first instance was only about five hundred. to the treasurer for that amount. I think the bond fixed in the case of the treasurer, in the first instance, was only about five hundred thousand dollars. Now he has $5,000 a year. His clerks receive $1,500 or $2,000 or $3,000 a year, if you please. I wish to know, then, if the gentleman believes that any young men occupying positions of that kind can furnish enough security or guarantee indemnity to the treasurer against a loss involving this vast amount of money, or even a considerable portion of it?

Mr. TALBOTT. I wish to ask the gentleman a question here, too. Mr. BRAGG. I decline to be interrupted any further.

Mr. WARNER. That was about six times as much as was collected at all the custom-houses in the United States.

Mr. SPARKS. Let us understand this question. Is it true that $6,000,000 a day passed through his hands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has not yielded the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has not yielded the floor.

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Robinson] has misunderstood me and the application of the principle I was illustrating. I do not say that of necessity the treasurer should be obliged to demand this security; but I do say that he takes upon himself the responsibility of determining whether he will or not, when he has the responsibility for his appointments. He may be able to find a young man of sufficient character and integrity, one in whom he is willing to trust the care of that money without asking him a single dollar of bond, because it is not the bond that makes the man honest. It is the bond which should be given for the security of the honest. It is the bond which should be given for the security of the appointing power himself. But that security may be found in the character of the appointee, ay, and from his blood and race, as would warrant him in trusting him without requiring such a bond. But still he takes the responsibility from that knowledge of the character of the man; he trusts to that and nothing else, and for that he is responsible.

But after all, all this talk about six millions of money passing every day through that sub-treasury as fixing the standard for bonds does not really amount to anything. That is simply done to spread a thin gauze over this question and to make it one that looks so plausible that nobody unless he be a very hard-hearted man can vote gainst the proposition.

But, after all, I submit to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] is it not a question of public policy whether we will relax our hold upon the officers of the Government who have charge of the moneys of the Government by relieving them every time some subaltern officer in the Department shall rob the Government of the United States. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Morse] puts the case that the reason for this is because some of the sureties have died and in the distribution of the sureties. puts the case that the reason for this is because some of the sureties have died, and in the distribution of the estates there are large sums of money to be distributed, and the executors decline to distribute. Why? Because they are afraid of a claim of the Government. Now, if the sureties have money, what earthly reason is there, if the estates are responsible and the administrators or executors hold the funds subject to the settlement of the claim of the United States, that the people's money could not be paid back into the Treasury before heirs or other creditors should be entitled to its distribution?

Mr. MORSE. Because it cannot be collected by law people's money could not be paid back into the Treasury before heirs or other creditors should be entitled to its distribution?

Mr. MORSE. Because it cannot be collected by law.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then you need no statute.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is a view of this case which has not been referred to by any gentleman who has spoken heretofore. It is this: This report states that Mr. Chandler is possessed of but little property. It is not stated how much he is worth. But the amount is so small that the committee did not think it worth while to mention it. The bill is nominally for his relief, and he can only pay to the extent of his property. The persons actually to be relieved by this bill are his sureties. Who are those sureties? Some of them are dead and insolvent. One of the deceased sureties was ex-Governor Andrews, whose estate amounts to $32,000. Another surety who is mentioned as having property is Mr. Edmunds, against whose estate claims to the amount of $733,000 have been proven. And assets have been inventoried to the amount of $342,000. His executors have in their hands $150,000 for distribution. This amount of $150,000 belonging to the estate of Mr. Edmunds and the $32,000 belonging to the estate of ex-Governor Andrews, deceased, are all of the estates which can be reached by the failure to pass this bill. They will not amount to $200,000. Hence, instead of relieving the Government of a right to prosecute and obtain $480,000, we could not secure by the prosecution of these sureties on their bond to exceed $200,000.

Now suppose you require the estate of ex-Governor Andrews to pay $2000 that role his family of everything they have.

Now suppose you require the estate of ex-Governor Andrews to pay $32,000, that robs his family of everything they have. Suppose you require the estate of Mr. Edmunds to pay, what would be the fate of his creditors? Only $150,000 are in the hands of his executors to respond to the judgment of the United States. The creditors of Mr. Edmunds will have to pay this judgment, and they are the persons to suffer by a prosecution of a claim by the United States against these sureties.

It cannot be supposed that the creditors of Mr. Edmunds are responsible for the acts of this defaulting disbursing officer. And whoever may be responsible the heirs of ex-Governor Andrews should not be held responsible to the last dollar of their deceased father's estate.

Mr. SPARKS. Why not?

Mr. SPARKS. Why not?
Mr. SPAINGER. In equity I say they ought not.
Mr. SPARKS. If you go security for a party and that party fails ought you not to pay the amount for which you are surety, or ought not your estate to pay it if you die?
Mr. SPRINGER. I admit the legal liability of those persons to pay.
Mr. SPARKS. Well, moral liability.
Mr. SPRINGER. I deny the moral liability to pay that for which the party was not responsible morally and could not be. In the case the party was not responsible morally and could not be. In the case of Mr. Spinner, ex-Treasurer of the United States, we relieved him from the payment of $60,000 which were stolen out of the Treasury Department in this city in broad daylight through the fault of two of his clerks.

Mr. McMILLIN. We did wrong when we did so.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Tennessee says we did wrong when we did so. Perhaps we did; I do not believe it. I think it is amazing that there should have been handled $300,000,000 a year, received and disbursed, and that we should have had so little of it stolen by dishonest clerks.

I believe in rigorously holding to account the officers of the Government who are required to handle public moneys. And I believe ernment who are required to handle public moneys. And I believe where money is lost, if persons come to Congress and make a good claim for relief, wherever that claim shows the officer himself who gave the bond was in no way responsible for the loss of the fund—I think in such a case it would be exceedingly hard to hold that officer responsible for the payment of that money. The great mass of the people of the United States can better afford to lose what, by unwrightly conjugate and the criminal conduct of others than the avoidable accident and the criminal conduct of others than the bonded officer, may occasionally be lost in a great Government like this, than can a faithful officer and his innocent sureties and their innocent creditors be held responsible for such misfeasance or malfeasance in office. I would hold public officers to the strictest accountability. But when a public officer, as this public officer has done, shows that he was faithful in all things, I do not believe in mulcting his sureties who, believing in his honesty, signed his bond.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the bond for ?

Mr. SPRINGER. To hold the officer responsible; to hold him responsible for any criminal negligence on his part.

Mr. McMILLIN. Why does it not then recite that it is only for his

Mr. McMillin. Why does it not then recite that it is only for his own criminal negligence.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think it should; but I did not make the law.

Mr. CARLISLE. So long as there is no law exempting Congress from the responsibility of adjudicating upon claims against the United States and applications like this, I think we ought to be governed by some fixed rule or principle in our consideration of them. Courts of justice when they have laid down a principle or rule usually adhere to it in all similar cases, unless upon full consideration it is overruled. tion it is overruled.

Without going into a full investigation of the facts in this case as disclosed by the report, it is sufficient for me to say that this officer was not himself personally guilty of any wrong, unless it can be contended or shown that he might by the exercise of an extraordinary degree of diligence have discovered this defalcation as it was being committed.

He might have discovered it by ordinary diligence. Mr. SPARKS. He might have discovered it by ordinary diligence.
Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman from Illinois says that he might have discovered it by ordinary diligence. I submit to the gentleman whether anything less than the most extraordinary diligence and care would have enabled this officer to discover the fact, when five or six millions daily was passing through the office, that some one of his subordinates was from time to time loaning a part of the money to his friends.

Mr. SPARKS. Is it the fact that some five or six millions of dollars passed through the office daily?

Mr. CARLISLE. It has been so stated.

Mr. SPARKS. There is nothing like that in the report.

Mr. ROBINSON. The mistake probably arose from my use of language. The report says that the daily balance was five or six millguage. The re

Mr. CARLISLE. The only mistake is in using the words "passing through his hands" instead of "on hand every day in the office." One of his subordinates, appointed perhaps as stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bragg] upon his nomination, but at least receiving his commission really from the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, falls into the habit of loaning to some of his friends what as compared with the whole amount on hand is a very inconwhat, as compared with the whole amount on hand, is a very inconsiderable portion of this money, and, as I understand from the report, he replaces this money from time to time before the cash in the office is counted, and therefore the transaction is not discovered; and on the final settlement of the account he puts every dollar of the amount the final settlement of the account he puts every dollar of the amount back into the vaults and it goes into the Treasury of the United States, and all these gentlemen suppose that their accounts are fully and finally settled. Many years afterward the bank from whom this subordinate borrowed this $550,000 in gold certificates, which were thus returned to the Treasury, brought its action against the Government of the United States and recovered the money.

This House has again and again relieved officers of the Government under precisely similar circumstances, or under circumstances not so favorable to the officer as those disclosed in this case. In the case of Collector Buckner, of the city of Louisville, in the State of Kentucky, an act was passed to relieve him from the consequences of the defalcation of one of his subordinates; and during the last session of Congress this House passed two bills, one to relieve an officer at Philadelphia, whose name I now forget, and another to relieve an officer at the city of New Orleans, by the name of Clinton.

Now, it may have been that the House acted improperly in establishing this rule in the first place; but it has established it nevertheless, and has relieved public officers under it, and unless gentlemen can show that the circumstances disclosed in this case do not bring it within the rule which the House and the Senate have again and again applied, they ought not to contend that a discrimination bring it within the rule which the House and the Senate have again and again applied, they ought not to contend that a discrimination should be made against this officer.

It is true that he gives a bond, and it is true, likewise, in my judgment, that upon strict principles of law he is liable upon that bond for every defalcation that may be made by a subordinate officer under him, no matter whether he himself be guilty of negligence or not; but surely it is not the intention of this great Government to make its public officers absolute insurers of the public moneys in their hands.

hands.

The whole purpose of the law requiring a bond, as I understand it, is to put the officer under a legal obligation to faithfully and honestly perform the duties of his office so far as he is personally concerned, and so far as he can reasonably exercise power and influence over his subordinates. But it seems to me that every principle of justice and equity demands that when an officer has done that, and especially in a case where the officer made a final statement of his accounts, and rested securely for many years upon the conviction that he was free thereafter from liability, Congress ought to relieve

The passage of this bill will not take any money out of the Treasury of the United States beyond what has already been taken out. The $580,000 which was lost by the defalcation of this man Hartwell has already been recovered from the United States under a judgment of the courts and has been paid.

The simple effect of this act is to relieve the securities of this man and to relieve the man himself, who have been guilty of no moral wrong, and, as I understand the facts, have been guilty of no official delinquency whatever, from an onerous responsibility which would

In them, and in some cases, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Springer,] ruin their creditors also.

Now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we ought either to pass this bill and relieve this man and his securities, or we ought to let it be understood that hereafter we repudiate the principles upon which we have acted heretofore, and that no similar applications ought to come before Congress. One or the other of these two things we certainly applications to the contract of the tainly ought to do. Mr. McMAHON. Mr. McMAHON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] whether the facts as found by the committee, and by the United States court that tried the case, did not exclude all idea of any collusion between Mr. Chandler and his deputy?

Mr. CARLISLE. They did, as I understand it. So completely did they exclude any idea of collusion between these parties that the money, as shown by the report, was actually put back in the subtreasury and paid into the Treasury of the United States, and Mr. Chandler, as well as his securities, supposed that his accounts were finally settled. Mr. HAWLEY.

Mr. HAWLEY. And Hartwell was sent to the penitentiary.
Mr. CARLISLE. And Hartwell, as the gentleman from Connecticut suggests, was prosecuted, convicted, and sent to the penitentiary.
Mr. SPARKS. But the Government lost the money.
Mr. CARLISLE. But the Government lost the money as the Government lost the money in all the other cases to which I have referred and many others to which I might refer if it would not consume too much time of the committee.

much time of the committee.

Mr. WARNER. I want to ask one question for my own information. It has been stated that this loss in whole or in part occurred before the appointment of Mr. Chandler as sub-treasurer.

Mr. MORSE. That is not true.

Mr. WARNER. It occurred, then, while he was sub-treasurer. But when did Mr. Chandler find out the facts of the loss?

Mr. MORSE. The day the account was made good by the clerk

Mr. MORSE. The day the account was made good by the clerk.
Mr. WARNER. Not until that time?
Mr. MORSE. No, sir. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]
Mr. ATHERTON. Before the vote is taken on this question, I would like some gentleman who knows the facts of this matter to would like some gentleman who knows the facts of this matter to answer one question. It seems to me a sound principle that a public officer is to be held liable for the acts of his subordinates if he has substantially the power of appointment and removals.

Now, will some gentleman refer to the statute, if need be, so that we may know without any question whether this superior officer had the right to appoint this clerk, and whether he had the right of removal. If not directly, had he indirectly that right, by a recommendation to the proper officer of the Government? If he had the power of appointment, he ought to be liable, because you cannot premendation to the proper officer of the Government? If he had the power of appointment, he ought to be liable, because you cannot preserve the honesty of public officers and prevent collusion between an officer and his subordinate except by holding the superior officer liable for the acts of his subordinate. If, on the other hand, the superior has not the power of appointment and removal, then, as a matter of course, if he has been guilty of no wrong he ought not, in common honesty, to be held responsible for the acts of a subordinate whom he could not control.

Mr. SPARKS. He has the newer of appointment.

Mr. SPARKS. He has the power of appointment. Mr. CRAPO. In answer to the gentleman's question, I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read—

Mr. SPARKS. I believe the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON] yielded to me. The sub-treasurer has the power of appointing his subordinates, that appointment to be confirmed by the Secretary of the Treasury. He has the power of appointment. Mr. ATHERTON. Then I say he ought to be held for acts of his appointees. Mr. REED.

But he has not the power of removal.

Mr. REED. But he has not the power of removal.

Mr. TALBOTT. I insist that the assistant treasurer has only the power of recommendation; that is all. He can recommend, but the Secretary of the Treasury appoints. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall this bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 85, noes 15.

Mr. SPARKS. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SPARKS, and the gentleman from Maine, Mr. LINDSEY.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes 15.

Mr. SPARKS. No quorum!

Mr. SPARKS. No quorum!
Mr. BURROWS. Would not the gentleman from Illinois be content to let the bill pass in Committee of the Whole and then take the yeas and nays in the House?

Mr. SPARKS. There are twenty members besides myself who will not consent to that. The CHAIRMAN. The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, the Chair, in accordance with the rule, will direct the Clerk to call the roll. Mr. PAGE. Cannot there be some agreement by which this bill can be passed over and the committee can go on with other business upon the Calendar? If not we might as well adjourn, as we cannot upon the Calendar? If not we might as well adjourn, as we cannot get a quorum, and everybody knows it.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been suggested the pending bill be passed over and other business on the Calendar proceeded with.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Let it be laid aside, to come up in regular order, and let us reach some of these Senate bills for pensions.

Mr. MILLS. I object.

Mr. LINDSEY. It cannot be passed over so as to keep its place.

Mr. PAGE. I move the committee rise.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to make a suggestion.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. It is suggested that the pending bill be passed over in order that other business upon the Calendar may be reached. Is there objection? Is there objection?

Mr. TALBOTT. What would be its place?

The CHAIRMAN. If that agreement is reached, the bill would retain its present position upon the Calendar.

Mr. MILLS. I suggest that the bill be reported to the House with the understanding that we shall take a yea-and-nay vote on it in a full House. Now, who will object to that?

Mr. MORSE. Put that motion to the committee.

Mr. MILLS. I make the point that there is no quorum, and I

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will take notice it is objected to by the demand for the regular order.

Mr. PAGE. I move the committee rise.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, and I do not often bother the committee by asking unanimous consent. Is it in order, Mr. Chairman, to ask unanimous consent to make a statement and a proposition that will not consume more than a minute? [Cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. Is that in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Only by unanimous consent. If there be no objection, the gentleman will proceed. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. It is evident we can have no quorum here to-night, and this bill cannot be disposed of. There are a number of Senate bills for pensions that nobody will have any objection to, and that we might dispose of to-night. I myself have one which has been passed by the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. Regular order.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. No regular order, if you please, until I have made my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is in order, as he has unanimous consent to proceed.

consent to proceed.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The case I have referred to I have no Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The case I have referred to I have no doubt is not more meritorious than other like pension cases upon the Calendar. The man lives in my district. He has lost his sight in the service on $13 a month, and now as a reward for his service to his country, unless this House shall relieve him by passing this bill, he will have to go to the poor-house before the winter closes. It does occur to me as we cannot make progress on the pending bill we might as well proceed to dispose of some thirty or forty Senate bills, in the main as meritorious as the one I have referred to, and I say it is our duty to do it. Let this bill be passed over for the present and let it keep its place upon the Calendar; and let us proceed to dispose of these other matters to-night which can be done, I am sure, without objection.

objection.

Mr. MORSE. I should like to reply to that suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition?

Mr. LE FEVRE. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MILLS. I object.
Mr. REED. I rise to a point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. REED. It is that when the House in the Committee of the Whole finds itself without a quorum the Chairman must have the roll called.

Mr. LE FEVRE. That is it.

Mr. LE FEVRE. That is it.

Mr. REED. It is the only thing in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk was directed to call the roll, but the gentleman from California prior to that moved the committee rise, and the Chair was simply putting that motion to the House.

Mr. PAGE. I withdraw it.

Mr. GILLETTE. I renew it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing is in order except the roll-call.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The roll-call has not yet been begun.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I understood the Chair to decide a motion was made that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. But it was withdrawn.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I understood the Chair to put the vote and said the yeas had it. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I understood the Chair to decide the yeas had it. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. KING. I move that there be a call of the House.
Mr. WILSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.
The CHAIRMAN. No motion is in order at this time until the roll-call has been completed and the announcement of the result made. The Clerk will continue the second call of the roll.

The Clerk resumed and completed the roll-call, when it was found

The Clerk resumed and completed the foll-call, when it was found that no quorum was present.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Carlisle, as Speaker pro tempore, having taken the chair, Mr. Townshenn, of Illinois, reported that the Committee of the Whole House having had under consideration the Private Calendar, and particularly the bill (S. No. 22) for the relief of Theophilus P. Chandler, had found itself without a quorum and directed him to cause the roll to be called and report the list of absentees to the House.

the list of absentees to the House.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the list of absentees.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I wish to ask a parliamentary question. The gentleman from West Virginia has moved that the House do now adjourn; is not that motion in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair supposes that to be in order at any time, although the rule says that when the committee finds itself without a quorum it shall cause the roll to be called; thereupon the chairman of the committee shall direct the Clerk to report to the House the list of absentees, which list shall be entered upon the Journal. That report is not yet completed. As soon as that report is finished, the Chair will entertain the motion of the gentleman.

Mr. BRÅGG. Is not the motion to adjourn in order at any time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the motion to adjourn is always in order; but the Chair is now engaged in receiving a report from the chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, which report has not yet been completed. [Cries of "Regular order!"] It is like interrupting the reading of a report, which the Chair thinks is not in order.

The Clerk will report the list of absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee of the Whole reports one hundred and twenty-three members present—not a quorum.

Mr. KING. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the House do now adjourn. It is now ten o'clock.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to on a division, there being ayes 30, noes 78.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana that there be a call of the House.

Mr. TALBOTT. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER protempore. The regular order is the motion that there be a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that gentlemen who are absent by leave of the House or have excuses should be exempted from the necessity of attending. Excuses would now be in

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that my colleague from Kentucky, Mr. McKenzie, as is well known to the House, is absent because of sickness. He is not able to be present, and I desire to make the same statement as regards the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Hubbell. I ask that these two gentlemen shall be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move that Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, be excused from attendance this evening.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAMFORD. My colleague, Mr. Herndon, is detained from the House on account of indisposition, and I ask that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. I beg to state, Mr. Speaker, that my colleagues, Mr. ARMFIELD and Mr. SCALES, are detained from the House by reason of illness, and I hope they will be excused.

Mr. McMILLIN. My colleague, Mr. ATKINS, is, as the House knows, quite indisposed. I desire to have him excused, if it has not already been done.

The motion was agreed to.
Mr. REAGAN. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. FERNANDO WOOD

Mr. BRAGG. I move that Mr. James, of New York, be excused.
He has been obliged to go to his home on account of sickness.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. AIKEN. My colleague, Mr. O'CONNOR, is absent by reason of sickness. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED. My point of order is that this list of absentees is a list which was discovered in the Committee of the Whole, and that now the House must proceed to a call of the House, and thereupon the House can order the attendance of its members who are absent from that call and without excuse. My point is that, with regard to the list of absentees as reported from the Committee of the Whole, it is not in order at this time for the House to proceed to excuse them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Maine the list of absentees has been reported to the House and read in the House.

read in the House.

Mr. REED. But, if the Chair will permit me, the second division of Rule XXIII, on page 180 of the Manual, provides that the names of the absentees shall be reported to the House, and that is the end of that proceeding. And now, in the House, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] has moved for a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And that has been ordered.

Mr. REED. And after there has been a call of the House and a discovery of the absentees the House thereupon orders the attendance of such as are not excused. The Speaker will find that provided for in the second section of the fifteenth rule, on page 175 of the

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clause of the rule to which the gentleman from Maine refers relates to a call which originates in the

Mr. REED. I am probably not making myself clear to the Chair. On the one hundred and eightieth page is the rule which refers to the action which is taken with regard to absentees in Committee of the Whole. That is the second section of the twenty-third rule. The provision there is:

vision there is:

The chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And that has been done.

Mr. REED. And that having been done the gentleman from Louisiana has moved that there be a call of the House, and that has been carried. And the only thing in order now is a call of the House. After a call of the House there will then be an order of the House to summon any absentees; and then there may be a chance for gentlemen to present the excuses which have now been offered, which may reveat the House from sending for such absentees as which have now been there are not present the House from sending for such absentees as which have now been there are not present the House from sending for such absentees as which have now been there are not present the House from sending for such absentees as which have now been discretely he are prevent the House from sending for such absentees as shall be ex-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is simply a question as to whether the excuses shall be received before the Sergeant-at-Arms is ordered to bring in the absentees, or after there has been a call of the House.

Mr. REED. There may be a quorum in the House, I submit to the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the report made by the Committee of the Whole House shows there is no quorum.

Mr. REED. That was in the committee; but a call of the House may show there is a quorum here.

may show there is a quorum here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine then desires that the roll be called in the House?

Mr. REED. Precisely; and that may disclose a quorum, in which case there may be no need of going into the question of why members are absent. If the Chair will read the second section of Rule XV he will see after the call of the House has been ordered—

The names of the members should be called by the Clerk and the absentees noted; the doors shall then be closed, and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may by order of a majority of those present be sent for and arrested, &c.

The House has now ordered a call of the House, and that is the only thing now in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is nothing in the rule that defines the time in which excuses may be offered. In fact it is in order at any time when the House is in session for any member to have an application made to excuse him from attendance at the sessions of the House for any reason. It is a question of privilege. It is not necessary that an excuse should not be presented until a call is ordered. It is in order at any time because the rules require any member to be here at any time and any member who is not now in his seat and not excused is absent without leave, and is violating the rules of the House. But a request that an absent member be excused may be made at any moment.

Mr. REED. Does the gentleman say the proceedings of the House can be interrupted by excuses for absence of members, except under the section of the rule I have read, which provides that absent members may be sent for?

Mr. SPRINGER. At any time when the House is in session it is in order for any member to rise and ask that a colleague be excused.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to bring in the absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A call of the House has been ordered, and before the Sergeant-at-Arms is directed to proceed to bring in absentees gentlemen are making excuses for absent colleagues and asking that certain members be excused from attendance this evening. It seems to the Chair to be as good a time as any to make excuses. After that the Sergeant-at-Arms will be ordered to bring in absentee Mr. PRICE. There must be a call of the House before that is done.

Mr. VALENTINE. The Sergeant-at-Arms will not be directed to bring in absentees as reported by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the order of the House there will be a call of the roll.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is what we want.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is what we want.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg leave to state that my colleague, General JOHNSTON, is too unwell to attend the session of the House this evening. I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. My colleague from New York, Mr. CrowLEY, is confined to his house by illness, and has been for several days.
I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. My colleague, Mr. Gibson, and also my colleague, Mr. Elam, are too unwell to attend night sessions, and I ask that they be excused.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask that Mr. BUCKNER, of Missouri, be excused. I know he is indisposed, and should not be required to

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that my colleague, Major HAWK, who has but one leg and is too unwell to attend night sessions, be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. CARPENTER. I ask that my colleague from Iowa, Mr. UPDE-GRAFF, be excused. He is absent to-night on account of sickness in his family.

There was no objection.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Felton, of Georgia, is detained at his room by reason of the illness of his wife. I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. ERRETT. I ask that my colleague, Mr. BAYNE, be excused.
He is absent on account of indisposition.

There was no objection.

Mr. WARD. I ask that my colleague, Mr. Godshalk, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask that my colleague, Mr. Bachman, be excused. He has been called home by reason of sickness in his family.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANNING. I ask that my colleagues, Mr. Money and Mr. Singleton, be excused. Mr. Money is quite unwell, and Mr. Singleton, as all know, is an old man, and they should not be required to be out at night in this inclement weather.

There was no objection.

Mr. ATHERTON. It seems to me that there is an extraordinary Mr. ATHERTON. It seems to me that there is an extraordinary condition of sickness and want of ability on the part of members to attend here. There seems to be some terrible disease in the city. Therefore, as there seems to be an epidemic to such an extent that we cannot get along with the business of the House, I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise to a point of order upon that motion. Mr. RICE. The call has not yet been had.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call has been ordered but not yet had. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON] moves to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. ATHERTON, and

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. ATHERTON, and upon a viva voce vote the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. ATHERTON. I call for a division on that question.

Many Members. Oh, no!

Mr. FRYE. If there is to be a call of the House, what is the use of keeping us here all night to get it? Why not keep on and get through with the call by twelve o'clock?

Mr. ATHERTON. I do not want to stay here all night; I am sick.

The motion of Mr. ATHERTON was not agreed to, upon a divisionayes 18, noes 72.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move that the doors be now closed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll will first be called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of the roll discloses the presence of one hundred and twenty-one members; not a quorum. The doors will now be closed.

Mr. SAPP. I understood the name of my colleague, Mr. Upde-GRAFF, of Iowa, was called. He was excused. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The names of all the members have been called, absentees and others; but only such as are absent with-out an excuse will be sent for should the House order the absentees to be sent for.

Mr. KING. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of this House such of its members as are now absent without its leave.

Mr. HAZELTON. He is not sick; and he is a much younger man than this gentleman who makes the motion.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask that my colleague, Mr. Wait, who ought not to be brought out in this weather, be excused.

Mr. WILSON. I object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What is the matter with him? Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know that Mr. Wait is ill at all; but he ought not to be brought out, for I think it might make him ill.

Mr. TALBOTT. He ought to be excused.

The question being taken on excusing Mr. Wait, it was agreed to. Mr. KING. As I have heard some discontent expressed on the part of some gentlemen present, I deem it my duty to state that this determination to have a call of the House and to summon members here is not captious. It is known that heretofore sessions have been held night after night when there was no quorum present; and at those sessions important legislation has been enacted, bills involving very large amounts of money have been passed—

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise to a question of order. I submit that debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa has not asked it.

Mr. STEELE. It is a wonder he has not.

Mr. STEELE. He will be so thoroughly inspired when he returns that he will be perfectly scintillatic. [Laughter.] That is a big word for my friend, his colleague.

The deputy sergeant-at-arms appeared at the bar having in custody, in obedience to the order of the House, Mr. Speer and Mr.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. Speer, you have been absent from the session of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. SPEER. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I should not have been absent from this midnight session had I been aware of the fact there would have been a call of the House. [Laughter.] I had not the slightest anticipation there would be that degree of controversy this evening on matters before the House to necessitate so extraordings.

this evening on matters before the House to necessitate so extraordinary a proceeding. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMAHON. That is where you missed it.

Mr. SPEER. I have to say in excuse for myself, and perhaps because the people at home will not exactly know the character of this arrest and the nature of these proceedings, that I have been at work all day in discharge of my congressional duties since the meeting of the Election Committee this morning, and I regarded that to-night as a matter of course the business of the Private Calendar would be transacted without my important and valuable assistance. [Langhtransacted without my important and valuable assistance. [Laugh-

Mr. McGOWAN. I move the gentleman be excused.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 12.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. KITCHIN, you have been absent from the session of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. KITCHIN. I have two excuses.
Mr. HAZELTON. One is enough.
Mr. KITCHIN. I do not know either will be satisfactory.
Mr. HAZELTON. One at a time.
Mr. KITCHIN. One is I thought this was a session for the business of the District of Columbia, [laughter,] and as nobody has anything to do in the House but those on the committee, I thought it might be left to them.

Mr. HAZELTON. Too thin.
Mr. KITCHIN. Besides, I have been taught the Lord set apart the night for rest, and I was availing myself of that blessed dispensation. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON. I move the gentleman be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to ask if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Frost] was not on the list of absentees when the roll was called?

Mr. HAZELTON. Yes; certainly.
Mr. SPEER. And I wish to know how that gentleman reached the floor of the House without making the excuse some of us have been compelled to make.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. He came in through the window. [Laughter.] [Cries of "Bring him before the bar of the House!"]
Mr. STEELE. "Farewell heat and welcome frost." [Great laugh-

The deputy sergeant-at-arms appeared before the bar of the House and announced that he had in custody, by order of the House, Mr.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. Frost, you have been absent from the House without its leave during its sitting. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I beg pardon, but I think there is some error upon the part of the Sergeant-at-Arms in announcing that I am under arrest here. I am not aware of that, and have not been brought before the bar of the House. If I rise now, it is simply for the purpose of moving to adjourn. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMAHON. The gentleman cannot do that, as he is not here. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman to make that motion as long as his name appears upon the list of absentees.

of absentees

Mr. FROST. I move to correct the record, then; because it is certainly an error in that respect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman state that he was within the bar of the House at the time the roll of absentees was

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, at the time the list was called, I presume that I was very soundly asleep. I was awakened by an invitation by some party to me unknown, announcing that there was a roll-call in progress. With that alacrity with which I endeavor to pertion by some party to me unknown, announcing that there was a roll-call in progress. With that alacrity with which I endeavor to perform the duties of a member of this House, I immediately presented myself here. I had not seen the Sergeant-at-Arms until I entered the House and was in my seat.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman states that he was absent from the House at the time the roll was called, but that he has not been arrested. He offers this as an excuse; what will the House do

Mr. HAZELTON. Put him on trial.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Put him under arrest.
Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the motion just made is in order. If I understand my constitutional rights here, I am privileged from arrest except for felony or breach of the peace, neither of which I have committed. I have not been brought before the bar of the House to answer for anything. I came voluntarily here and of which I have committed. I have not been brought before the bar of the House to answer for anything. I came voluntarily here and have made my excuse.

Mr. DICKEY. As the gentleman has reported without being arrested, I move that he be excused.

Mr. HAZELTON. I have already made a motion before that he be brought before the bar of the House and give reasons for his arrest. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has not been arrested, but has voluntarily appeared before the House, and has given his reasons for his absence, although his name appears upon the list of those who were not present when the roll was called.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I understand the gentleman to defy the power of the Speaker and of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not so understand. The Chair understands the gentleman to offer what he considers a sufficient excuse for not being here. He states in effect that he was not arrested, but is now here and offers his excuse.

Mr. WILSON. I move that he be allowed to go his way and sin no more. [Laughter.]

Mr. COVERT. I move that the gentleman be excussed.

The motion was agreed to.

The deputy sergeant-at-arms appeared before the bar of the House having in custody, under the order of the House, Mr. Anderson and Mr. Forsythe.

Mr. FORSYTHE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. Anderson, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. ANDERSON. The reason is simple. [Cries of "Louder!" "Louder!"

Mr. ANDERSON. How much time have I †
Mr. HAZELTON. Let him have as much time as he wants.
A MEMBER. Give him leave to print.

Mr. ANDERSON. The reason of my absence is because I have been sick and at home all day. Another reason is that it is a physical impossibility for the same man to be in two different places at the same time. I wanted good company, and I found it at home.

possibility for the same man to be in two different places at the same time. I wanted good company, and I found it at home.

Mr. COVERT. I move the gentleman be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. FORSYTHE, you have been absent from the House during its sittings without leave. What excuse have you to offer? you to offer?

Mr. FORSYTHE. Mr. Speaker, I have been absent, I will admit. [Cries of "Londer!"] One of the first lessons that I was taught in [Cries of "Louder!"] One of the first lessons that I was taught in early life—

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. That is going back a long way.

Mr. FORSYTHE. Was that it was not wise to be out late of nights; that people who are accustomed to that sort of thing would probably come to no good. [Laughter.] In pursuance of that—

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. You came here—

Mr. FORSYTHE. I was in my room and had prepared myself—

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. What for?

Mr. FORSYTHE. To retire to my couch and sleep, perhaps to dream, when the sanctity and privacy of my room was invaded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, who informed me that the light of my countenance, together with my counsel and advice, was greatly desired by the Sergeant-at-Arms, who informed me that the light of my counternance, together with my counsel and advice, was greatly desired by this august assembly here to-night. [Laughter.] I immediately invested myself in that of which I had divested myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. What was that?

Mr. FORSYTHE. And repaired to the House in obedience to the command and flattering invitation of the Sergeant-at-Arms for my presence here. That is the only reason I have in the world for being here at all

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. Now give us your reasons for being

Mr. HAZELTON. That is what I want to know, and that is what

Mr. HAZELTON. That is what I want to know, and that is what you were brought here for.

Mr. FORSYTHE. The reasons for my being absent are so many, so very numerous, that it is absolutely impossible for me to undertake to give them all to you to-night.

Mr. HAZELTON. Give us a few of them.

Mr. FORSYTHE. And this invitation being so sudden, so startling, and so pressing that it would be presuming upon the patience of this august body to attempt to enumerate them.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. I move that he be admitted to bail.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I will agree to that if he does not speak any more

Mr. ATHERTON. I move that he be excused.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes not counted.
Mr. TALBOTT. I demand tellers.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. There being no further count demanded, the gentleman is excused.
Mr. TALBOTT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. TALBOTT. I would like to ask the Chair how he can excuse gentlemen while a demand for tellers was pending. A call for tellers was made to ascertain whether the House desired to excuse the gentleman, and while that was pending the Chair has decided on a rising vote that he was excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman having been tried once cannot be put on his trial again.

Mr. MORTON, (at 12.45 a. m., Saturday.) I move that the House do now adjourn.

do now adjourn.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 36, noes 56.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. SAMFORD. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAMFORD. I understand there are as many leaving the Hall as have been brought in. Can we not have another roll-call?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, in obedience to the order of the House, directed the doors to be closed, and presumes the order has been complied with. has been complied with.

has been complied with.

A MEMBER. A very violent presumption.

Mr. ATHERTON. A presumption of law, not of fact.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. It is rather tedious waiting here. A good many gentlemen want to return to their homes. I move that the House take a recess until eleven o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order. The House is without a quorum, and while a call of the House is proceeding it is not competent to take a recess.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend that motion so as to provide that this session of the House shall not continue longer than seven o'clock.

this session of the House shall not continue longer than seven o'clock this morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin is not susceptible of amendment.

The question being taken on Mr. Briggs's motion, there were—ayes 22, noes 50.

So the motion was not agreed to.
Mr. STEVENSON. I ask that by unanimous consent we proceed to consider the pension bills on the Calendar to which there is no objection. We might as well consider those bills while we are waiting for a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That cannot be done. The pension bills are in Committee of the Whole House, and the House is now in session and proceeding under a call.

Mr. FROST. I desire to offer a motion, to which I trust there will be no objection. I move that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. King] be excused from further attendance.

Mr. MILLS. For what reason?
Mr. EINSTEIN, The gentleman has not asked to be excused.
Mr. FROST. It is out of consideration for the gentleman's modesty that I am induced to move that he be excused.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I make the point of order that the time for excuses has gone by.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana does not appear to want to be excused.

Mr. FROST. I desire to make a motion which I am confident will Mr. FRUST. I desire to make a motion which I am confident will meet with success. I move that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER] who has displayed such a kindly interest in the proceedings of this House and in my individual welfare, be allowed to address the House upon the Tugaloo and the necessity of improving that stream, which I believe flows through his district. I hope the gentleman will not be limited as to time.

Several MEMBERS. No objection.

After a short interval

After a short interval,

After a short interval,
Mr. SPEER said: I have been reflecting upon the aggressive remarks made before this House a moment ago by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FROST] in relation to the Tugaloo River. I think there is a cevert sarcasm in that gentleman's remarks which it is, perhaps, impossible for this House to discover. I have reflected upon what he has said, and I find it is impossible to see the sarcasm myself. But I cannot permit anything that can possibly be construed as a reflection on the Tugaloo River to pass this House unnoticed.

A MEMBER. What river is that?
Mr. SPEER. The Tugaloo River, which is famed not only for the character of the people who inhabit its classic banks, but for its pellucid waters, and for the further fact that it is one of the headwaters of our great Savannah. I desire to say the gentleman from Missouri has no river within the limits of his own State that compares in any sense with the Tugaloo; and if he would devote some of the extreme energy which he has devoted to the development of the muddy streams of his own territory to the development of such a stream as streams of his own territory to the development of such a stream a the Tugaloo and the waters of which it is one of the tributaries, it might perhaps be better for the country.

Mr. TALBOTT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question ?

question?
Mr. SPEER. Certainly.
Mr. TALBOTT. What is the width of that stream?
Mr. SPEER. That stream is a great deal broader, I believe, than the comprehension of the gentleman from Maryland. [Laughter and applause.] I rather think that my friend from Missouri intends to reflect upon a speech which I made during the last session in which I incidentally alluded to the Tugaloo. I assure the gentleman that I was quite as sincere in the encomiums which I pronounced on that stream as he was when he delivered several magnificent eulogies here last session in praise of Mr. Parnell, the Irish liberator. It was a long time before I could understand why the gentleman from Missouri was so wonderful an admirer of that great patriot who is now giving so much trouble to the effete monarchy of Britain.

I afterward ascertained that the gentleman had an extraordinarily large Hibernian vote in his own district. This explains his enthusiasm satisfactorily to me, and I have no doubt will explain it satisfactorily to others who may have been meditating upon it. I trust now that I am even with the gentleman for his ironical allusion to the Tugaloo. My love for that beautiful mountain stream is not, I submit, more unnatural than the gentleman's fondness for Green Erin, the "gem of the sea."

Mr. FROST. We appear to be in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. EINSTEIN. No, we are out of that.

Mr. EINSTEIN. No, we are out of that.

Mr. FROST. At least any manner of remarks seem to be in order, for the House appears to be willing to listen to almost anything that may be said. We have arrived at a very happy period in our political history, for since the result of our last election I believe the time has come when not only can the lion lie down with the lamb, but republicans and democrats can meet upon this floor and amuse themselves during the late hours of the night.

A MANNER P. Vary early in the mountage.

A MEMBER. Very early in the morning.

Mr. FROST. I stand corrected. I regret very much that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Speer] should entertain any disposition to "get even" with me. I had no idea at all of alluding to a speech delivered by the gentleman at the last session. Indeed, I had not the pleasure of hearing him deliver that speech, nor have I read it in the RECORD.

RECORD.

Mr. SPRINGER. Nor in the public press.

Mr. FROST. Nor had I seen any allusion to it in the numerous publications to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] alludes. When I alluded to the Tugaloo it was because it seemed to me that I had a dim recollection of having heard or seen the name of that stream with many other names before unknown to me in that gigantic bill which we will shortly be called upon to pass, known as the river and harbor bill.

My knowledge of geography has been very materially increased by

My knowledge of geography has been very materially increased by a careful scrutiny of that bill. Streams hitherto unknown to me, as I believe they were unknown to many other gentlemen, among them even the "pellucid Tugaloo," were brought to my knowledge, greatly to my advantage, but I think very greatly to the detriment of the Treasury of the United States.

Now, the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive by the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extensive the gentleman from Georgia,

Now, the gentleman from Georgia, I understand, represents an extremely homogeneous constituency, composed largely of Americans, but also to a considerable extent of gentlemen of African descent. I have observed, and it does equal credit to his intelligence and to his heart, that whenever any proposition comes before this House having for its object the welfare of his constituents, whether they be of the proud Anglo-Saxon race or of the recently lowly African, all of his efforts are expended for the welfare of either.

In my humble way I try to represent those who send me here. I have, it is true, as I suppose every other gentleman in this House has, a considerable number of the descendants of the Irish race in my district. I myself have some Irish blood in my veins.

A Member. Let it out. [Laughter.]

Mr. FROST. And if I had no Irish blood in my veins, and if I had not a single Irishman in the constituency I represent, I should still retain toward the Irish people kindly sentiments for what they accomplished during our revolutionary struggle and for that which they have accomplished since then and during the first century of our existence, for it would entitle them not only to my sympathy but I believe to the sympathy of every American in this country.

Mr. ATHERTON. I believe that is not germane to the bill. [Laughter.]

ter.]
Mr. FROST. We have been traveling somewhat aside from the bill.
Mr. EINSTEIN. What is your opinion of the Chinese question?

Mr. FROST. With regard to the Chinese question, I think we had better adopt the platform of the republican party. I believe that platform contains more definite opinions on that point than any I can

Mr. EINSTEIN. One moment, if the gentleman will allow me. While I will not go back on the platform of the republican party, I desire to say that there was a letter said to have been written by a man of the name Morey, which letter came from the democratic party and which was used in their behalf.

Mr. FROST. "Shake not thy gory locks at me; thou canst not say

Mr. EINSTEIN. I never for a moment would believe that a gentleman of the position and standing of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Frost] would do anything of the kind. I only say that his party did it.

Many Members. Oh, no!
Mr. EINSTEIN. I am speaking for my State, and of what I know happened there, for it happened that the letter originated in New in this country, it was because that, while it may have been a forgery—and I believe it was a forgery, and never claimed otherwise on the stump or elsewhere—it was because it represented the principles which have been advocated on this floor by the party of the gentleman from New York, and notably by the gentleman to whom the letter was attributed. [Laughter.]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I think both gentlemen are mistaken. I believe Beb. Butler wrote that letter. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. MORTON. I move that all further proceedings under the call of the House he dispensed with Mr. MORTON. I move that all further proceedings under the call of the House be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No business has intervened since a similar motion was made and voted down. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the House now adjourn.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar of the House, having in custody, in pursuance of the order of the House, Mr. HELLMAN, Mr.

NEWBERRY, and Mr. DICK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. Hellman, you have been absent from the sittings of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer ?

you to offer?

Mr. HEILMAN. I was not very well to-night—
Mr. HAZELTON. I move that the gentleman be allowed to speak in his native tongue. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can take his choice.
Mr. HEILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I believe in doing business in business hours. I do not believe in this nonsense. [Laughter.] It affects me very materially if I do not have a proper amount of rest, and I am very sorry that I was called here to-night; I should not have been; it will hurt my health; I will feel it for a week. [Laughter.]
Mr. PACHECO. I move that the gentleman be excused.

The motion was agreed to; there being ayes 46, noes not counted.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. Newberry, you have also been absent from the sittings of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

absent from the sittings of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. NEWBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I appear before the House in a very humble and contrite frame of mind; and when I look upon these distinguished men, some of them unfledged Senators—two or three on their way to promotion—I feel a great deal deeper grief than I ever did before; but it is for them, not for myself. Still I feel very much like apologizing to the House for having given them the trouble of sending for me. If I had known what a jovial assembly was here I should have hastened here hours ago. I would not have been deprived of the pleasure of participating in the proceedings of this assembly for anything. If the Sergeant-at-Arms will give me due credit, he will say that I arose with the greatest alacrity. I am here now to submit to the judgment of the House.

Mr. BREWER. I move that my colleague [Mr. Newberry] be excused.

Mr. TALBOTT. Provided he will promise to stay here.
The motion of Mr. Brewer was agreed to.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. Dick, you have likewise been absent from the sessions of the House without its leave. What absent from the sessions of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. DICK. I am ready to accept the apology of the House for having woke me up, because I was where I think the balance of this House ought to be—in bed.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. In order to bring the matter before the House as the gentleman desires, I move that the House apologize to him for hybriding him here.

House as the gentleman desires, I move that the House apologize to him for bringing him here.

Mr. MORTON. I move that the gentleman be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, (at one o'clock and five minutes a.m.) I move that the House now adjourn.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 48, noes 61.

Mr. WILSON. I demand the yeas and nays on this motion. It is now after one o'clock; there is no quorum here, and it is manifest that we cannot do any business to-night.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 55, nays 63, not voting 174; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the roll-call the following proceedings occurred:

Mr. SAMFORD. I am paired with Mr. Aldrich, of Rhode Island, on all questions, but am privileged to vote to make a quorum.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. A great many members have come in and gone out since these proceedings began, and I wish to know whether the order made by the House

ings began, and I wish to know whether the order made by the House for a session to-night was a business order and whether it means anything or, on the contrary, that this is a simple travesty.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can of course have no knowledge of the fact stated by the gentleman from Louisiana; but if it be stated as a fact that the Sergeant-at-Arms has permitted members to leave the House after the House has ordered the doors to be closed, of course that is a matter to be inquired into. But the fact that a member does not vote on this roll-call cannot be taken by the Chair as evidence of the fact that he is not here because many mem-Chair as evidence of the fact that he is not here, because many members who are present are paired and refrain from voting.

Mr. EINSTEIN. I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with Mr. HERBERT, of Alabama.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is engaged in taking a vote, and, after the result has been announced, the Chair will hear anything that the gentleman from Louisiana has to say.

Mr. MANNING. The Sergeant-at-Arms is not the one who has charge of the doors. It is his duty to bring absent members in custodly a the hear of the House.

tody to the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the Chair used the name of the Sergeant-at-Arms, it was by mistake. But this is not the time to inquire into that matter while the House is engaged in taking a vote.

quire into that matter while the House is engaged in taking a vote.

Mr. BLAKE. I withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper states to the Chair, and he desires to have it stated to the House, that if any members have gone out they have gone after making a pledge they would return. This has been the usual course pursued in such cases.

Mr. FRYE. He is obliged to keep a record of them and he can tell whether they are out or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course, and the Chair presumes that he has done so.

that he has done so.

Mr. ATHERTON. If they are out and have not answered at the roll-call and are not paired, we should order a new call of the House roll-call and are not paired, we should order a new call of the House in order to bring them in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not know they are out until that fact appears. That they do not vote on this roll-call is no evidence they are not here, because many members the Chair sees before him have not voted on the roll-call because they are paired.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the House adjourns now, does that supersede the call of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course it does.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. KING. I rise to a question of order.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. KING. I wish to know by what process this House can bring the members here and keep them here. [Laughter.]

Mr. EINSTEIN. I for one, sir— Mr. KING. I do not yield the floor. Mr. EINSTEIN. Just one moment.

Mr. KING. I want an answer to that question. [Cries of "Regular

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not aware of any process in the control of the House which will compel gentlemen to remain here except to close the doors as provided by the rules. If gentlemen leave the House after that order has been made, of course it is in the power of the House to censure them, or take such steps as to it may seem proper. The Chair has no power merely as the presiding officer, but the whole matter rests with the House.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move the Clerk read the Doorkeeper's list of those who have gone out and have not come back.

Mr. TALBOTT. I desire to ask a parliamentary question, and it is this: whether it is in order to move there be another call of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.
Mr. EINSTEIN. Well, I believe in asserting the dignity of the House, and I am one of those who agreed with gentlemen who desired to remain here until we could get a quorum; yet we have been here two hours and a half, and have not obtained the presence of more than ten or fifteen members, or at the outside twenty.
Mr. PRICE. We have less now than on the first roll-call.
Mr. EINSTEIN. I am not speaking of what we had on the first roll-call or anything of that kind. I hope the House will be able to adjourn within an hour or two and have a quorum for the transaction of whatever business we are about to do. But, sir, it seems very singular after two hours and a half or three hours we only have fifteen members, in a small city like Washington, brought in by the fifteen members, in a small city like Washington, brought in by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar, having in custody, in pursuance of the order of the House, Mr. Keifer and Mr. Finley.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. Keifer, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. KEIFER. I have been absent attending to the same duties with about one hundred and seventy-five other members. I was not purposely absent in contempt of the House. My impression was there would be enough members interested in the particular business of tonight to be present in order to transact it. I can only say there was no real reason why I should not have come here if I had understood my presence was essential to the transaction of business. I can say, hy presented was essential to the transaction of stand however, I came very promptly on being summoned. Mr. WILSON. Upon being arrested. Mr. KEIFER. Not arrested, but summoned. Mr. DICK. I move the gentleman be excused.

The motion was agreed to. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. FINLEY, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have

Mr. FINLEY. I have no particular excuse, except I did not suppose I was wanted when my colleague was absent.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. Make an example of him.

Mr. McGOWAN. I move that the gentleman be excused.

Mr. SIMONTON. Mr. Speaker, we have been here attending to the public business, and our business has been interrupted by the absence of gentlemen. I do not think they ought to get away so easily upon these excuses.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. It is an outrage.
Mr. SIMONTON. We are here now acting upon a bill involving some $480,000. I move that he be excused upon payment of that sum. [Laughter.]
Mr. McGOWAN. I insist on my motion that he be excused; his

Mr. McGOWAN. I insist on my motion that he be excused; his time expires on the 4th of March anyhow.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 46.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair votes in the affirmative, and the gentleman is excused. [Laughter.]

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order to read the list of names kept by the Doorkeeper of members who have left the Hall since the call of the House began? If so I desire to have it read.

keeper of members who have left the Hall since the call of the House began? If so, I desire to have it read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not aware of any rule or law of the House which would make that paper an official one, or give it any official sanction or authority whatever. It is kept by the Doorkeeper simply for his own convenience and information. It would be in the nature of evidence to show that certain gentlemen have retired from the House, but it would not be conclusive, and no gentleman, the Chair thinks, could be proceeded against, as the Chair is now informed, without a direct assertion on the part of some member that this paper contains the names of members who have absented themselves since the roll was called. Moreover, the Chair would state that the proceeding of that sort against members of the House for leaving the House without its consent after a call was ordered and the doors closed, would be a proceeding in the nature of a contempt, and it is hardly within the province of the House, the Chair thinks, to begin a proceeding of that kind without a quorum present. The Chair simply suggests this for the consideration of gentlemen who feel disposed to take further steps in this matter.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. For the information of the House I move that the Doorkeeper's record be read so the House may see what mem-that the Doorkeeper's record be read so the House may see what members or whether any have gone out and not returned.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will state from my own observation, for I had occasion to go into one of the adjacent rooms after the doors were closed, that the Doorkeeper has kept such a list of gentlemen and I saw my own name placed on it and scratched off on my return. It is the same course that has prevailed always so as to allow members to their house that they would return of their own volls. to go out on their honor that they would return of their own volition

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair supposes that such a list should be kept simply for that purpose; but states again, in his judgment, a member cannot be proceeded against on such evidence without some gentleman making a positive charge to that effect, which would place the matter in a different form. The Chair will take this occasion to say that it is certainly a great inconvenience to the House, at least for members, to remain here and answer to their names and then return after the roll is called, and thus prevent a quorum and the House from proceeding with its business.

Mr. SPARKS. Would it not meet that difficulty to dispense with all further proceedings under the present call and then make a new call? [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks if any gentleman would make a direct charge that any gentleman had gone out and not returned that the House could entertain it. But still he is of opinion that with less than a quorum it could not properly be entertained.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared before the bar of the House, having in custody, according to the order of the House, Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, and Mr. WARNER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. TAYLOR, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. TAYLOR. The only excuse I have is that I was not well at all last night, and I did not think the night session would continue so long, or I would have been present.

Mr. HAZELTON. I move to excuse him.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. WARNER, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have ou to offer?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. If the gentleman will not say a word, I move to excuse him

Mr. WARNER. I cannot accept that. I must insist upon my right to the floor.

Mr. HOUSE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he was not here upon the first roll-call, and then went away?

was not here upon the first roll-call, and then went away i Mr. WARNER. I cannot yield the floor for questions. Mr. HOUSE. This is a serious case. [Laughter.] Mr. WARNER. I was not aware, Mr. Speaker, until I came to the bar of the House, that I had missed a roll-call. Some gentleman in the restaurant below told me that I had. I thought I would come the restaurant below told me that I had. I thought I would come and see, and to my surprise I find that I have missed a roll-call.

Mr. PHILIPS. Have not you been out of the Capitol?

Mr. WARNER. Several times.

Mr. PHILIPS. To-night, though.

Mr. WARNER. I have been in the Capitol.

Mr. McGOWAN. I move that he be excused.

Mr. VALENTINE. I move that we fine him an unlimited amount of silver.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move that his case be reported to the House when there is a quorum present to look into the question.

Mr. McGOWAN. I insist upon my motion that the gentleman be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules have for a long time seriously considered this question touching calls of the House. Now, I have been here, sir, for a considerable length of time, and have seen during every session calls of the House. It seems to me that there must be some power in the House of Representatives, when it has agreed upon a night session, by which its members may be compelled to be present and attend to the duties of the House. [Applause.]

I have been compelled to come here sick to-night, and I came here at the special order of the House, to attend to the business of the House. There was a vote of 89 for the measure and 16 against it; and then every proposition was made to the sixteen against it by and then every proposition was made to the sixteen against it by which a vote might be had in the House by yeas and nays; and the gentlemen, who have the right, I admit, exercised that right and demanded that a quorum of this House should be present, and declared that no compromise would be consented to at all. The result was— There could not be but one. This House would sink into contempt if it did not compel a quorum of the House would sink into contempt if it did not compel a quorum of the House to attend; and we have spent four hours in endeavoring to get a quorum in this House, and we have no more now than we had the moment we commenced.

A MEMBER. Not so many. Mr. FRYE. Some gentlemen have left this Hall when they have been once here and answered to their names. And gentlemen know they have no right to do that. They know it is a contempt of this House, and it is a contempt, too, that ought not to be lightly over-with the dozen brought in, there are no more members present now than there were when we commenced this proceeding.

Now, sir, another word about this. I do not understand why gentlemen cannot be brought here, when the Sergeant-at-Arms is armed with a warrant from this House to go and seek gentlemen and bring them here. I fail to perceive why in four hours' time no more than a dozen gentlemen have been brought here. And when it is the duty of the Doorkeeper to keep the door closed, I fail to see why, with the dozen beautiful them.

I say the Committee on Rules considered this long and seriously. They knew there must be power in the House to call together the members to perform public business before the House of Representatives. members to perform public business before the House of Represent-atives. A motion was made to do away with a call of the House. Why, sir? Simply because the experience of every man who has been here for years is this, that when gentlemen are arrested and brought here to attend to the duties their constituents sent them to attend to, the whole thing is turned into a farce, a circus, a mere oc-casion of attempts at wit and foolish jokes, and all dignity of pro-ceeding is dropped, and the thing brings itself into the contempt it deserves. The committee knew that and tried their best to devise some method by which this state of things could be changed, and yet deserves. The committee knew that and tried their best to devise some method by which this state of things could be changed, and yet it failed. I say, sir, it depends upon the members of this House them-selves whether or not the dignity of this House shall be preserved, and whether or not the business the people have sent us here to do shall be done. And I call upon the members of the House in the name of the constituents who sent them here to do business, in the name of a country that demands that business shall be done—I call upon gentlemen to treat this matter as it ought to be treated, as a matter of dignity, of treat this matter as it ought to be treated, as a matter of dignity, of solemnity, of absolute necessity to the performance of the high duties to which we have been called by our constituents. [Applause.] Mr. CULBERSON. I move that the House do now adjourn. Mr. MILLS. I hope the House will not adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] that the House was taking a vote on a motion to excuse the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER.]

Mr. SPARKS. Then how came we to have this speech reflecting on certain members of this House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No one objected.

Mr. SPARKS. I think it due that something be said on the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No one raised a question as to the right of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] to address the Chair. The Chair had put one side of the question on the motion to excuse

The Chair had put one side of the question on the motion to excuse the gentleman from Ohio and had not put the other.

Mr. McGOWAN. I demand the regular order, which is the vote on my motion to excuse the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS.]

Mr. SPARKS. I understood the gentleman from Maine to reflect on some fifteen or twenty members of this House.

Mr. McGOWAN. There is a question pending on which the House was voting, and I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair listened to the gentleman from Maine, supposing he rose to say something on the question before the House, which was whether the gentleman from Ohio should or should not be excused; and it seemed to the Chair that his remarks had a bearing on that question.

had a bearing on that question.

Mr. FRYE. I submit that my remarks were directed to the question which was pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated it seemed to the Chair that the remarks of the gentleman from Maine bore on that question, at least as to the terms on which the gentleman should be excused

Mr. WARNER rose.

Mr. WARNER rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] is on the floor.

Mr. SPARKS. I wanted to say simply this for the gentlemen with whom I have acted: a bill was before the Committee of the Whole House, and to which I seriously object. Under the rules I demanded a quorum to vote on that bill. I knew we were in the minority, and I made the point of order that there was no quorum. Some gentlemen then suggested that we could pass over this bill and go to the other business on the Calendar for which this session of the House was held. I accepted that proposition. I wanted that so that we might have an effective meeting to-night. As regards this bill, I felt for myself it was my duty to oppose it by all the parliamentary means known to this House; and I have simply done that. If I had been alone, Mr. Speaker, in this without anybody aiding me, I should not have put myself in conflict with this whole House; of course not. But I was backed up in this by some twenty gentlemen who agreed with me; and we felt it was our duty to do this.

Now, touching the remainder of the speech of the gentleman, I cor-

Now, touching the remainder of the speech of the gentleman, I cor-dially agree with him. This House ought to have the power to bring members here to vote; and we ought not to convert our sessions into what we have converted this session into to-night—a kind of holiday or hurrah. We should have been more serious about this matter, and our officials should have been compelled to bring members here to discharge the duties which their constituents have sent them here to discharge.

Mr. MILLS. I want to say, in justice to the Doorkeeper of this House

Mr. WILSON. Regular order!
Mr. WILSON. Regular order!
Mr. MILLS. I want to say a word, and I think it due to the officers of this House because of the remarks made by the gentleman on the other side; and those who do not want to hear me can leave.
Mr. HAZELTON. They cannot leave.

Mr. MILLS. I have been a member of this House for eight years. There are gentlemen here who have been members longer than that; others have been members for a shorter time. It has always been the custom of this House, under a call of the House, when members have occasion to go outside of the Hall, that they should go on their pledge occasion to go outside of the Hall, that they should go on their pledge of honor to return. They imperil the officer who stands at that door if they do not return, and he is bound to accept the honor of a gentleman. Whether he speaks it or not, it is implied. An honorable gentleman ought to feel it as strongly as though he had written it down in his own blood. [Applause.] And gentlemen cannot leave the Hall by that door when an officer of this House is commanded by the Speaker to guard it and let no one go out; they cannot pass that door without they do it at the peril of their honor to return, or else subject the officer to punishment. The fault is with the members of this House who will go away from the House when they know, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has said, that they go in contempt of the authority of the House; and such members ought to be brought back to this House and punished.

Mr. WARNER. I desire to make a further explanation.

Mr. WILSON and others. Regular order!

Mr. WARNER. I desire to make a further explanation.

Mr. WILSON and others. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Warner] says he desires to say something further in excuse for his absence, and the Chair thinks he has the right to do so.

Mr. WILSON. Has the vote been taken upon the motion to excuse him?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has not.

Mr. WARNER. When I left the House the call of the roll in Committee of the Whole was in progress. Believing that the House would soon adjourn, and having some duties which I desired to attend to elsewhere, I started to go to my room. Perceiving that the House was still in session, I returned here and found the doors closed. The doors were not closed when I left, nor had the order been made to close them.

I wish to say further, in reference to the remarks of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. Frye,] that I can myself see little difference between absence from this Hall under circumstances like these and being present and refusing to vote, as I have seen the gentleman from Maine more that once do, and preventing a quorum from transacting business here. What is the difference? I can see none. I have seen the gentleman from Maine more from Maine lead filling to the properties of the properties. the gentleman from Maine lead filibustering here for the purpose of defeating legislation.

When I left the Hall I was satisfied that nothing more would be done to-night, and that I might do something elsewhere. This is my

Mr. CULBERSON. I move that the House now adjourn.
Mr. WILSON. Is not the House dividing on the motion to excuse the gentleman from Ohio?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair had risen to put the question, and had in fact stated the question to the House. No gentleman had voted, however, when the gentleman from Maine rose and submitted his remarks to the House.

Mr. McGOWAN. Had you not put the question and called for the affirmative vote

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question had been put, but no affirmative vote had been taken. Mr. WARNER. I desire to say that I feel my responsibility to my constituents quite as much as does the gentleman from Maine to his.

Mr. McGOWAN. I make the point of order that the motion to adjourn is not now in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is disposed to entertain the motion to adjourn as one of high privilege. The House can vote it down if it shall see proper.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 37, noes 74.

Before the result of this vote was announced,
Mr. CULBERSON called for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were not ordered; there being upon a division—ayes 21, noes 86; not one-fifth in the affirmative.
So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs upon the motion to excuse the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER,] who states that he was not one of those who were present when the doors were ordered to be closed.

ordered to be closed.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to say simply one word. I had no special reference to the gentleman from Ohio. My remarks were made from the experience of the whole evening, and I did not intend to make any personal attack upon the gentleman from Ohio. I have a high respect for him, and am satisfied that he has given a sufficient excuse for his absence. He states that he left the Hall before the doors were closed. My remarks were intended for gentlemen who are still absent, and who left the Hall after their names were given to the Doorkeeper. L hope the gentleman from Ohio will not for a moment think that I was making any attack upon him. I simply took the advantage of the motion then pending to address any remarks at all to the

Mr. WARNER. I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that I was mistaken. I did not at first suppose the gentleman had reference to me; but before he was through with his remarks, I thought perhaps he did allude to me. I desire to withdraw anything that I may have said by way of retort to the gentleman from Maine, because I agree generally in what he has said.

Mr. STEVENSON. After the remarks that have been made, I think that those of us who have been here during this entire session owe it to ourselves that there should now be a call of the House so that it should appear on record who have left contrary to the rules, and who have remained here to abide the order of the House.

Mr. VALENTINE. The gentleman at the door has a list of those who have left.

Mr. STEVENSON. I move that the names of those who were pressent when the doors were closed and who are now absent be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a motion which must first be disposed of-the motion to excuse the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER.]

WARNER.]
The question being taken, Mr. WARNER was excused.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STEVENSON] now asks, as the Chair understands, that the list of names of gentlemen who were present when the doors were ordered to be closed may now be read, so that gentlemen present may respond.
Mr. STEVENSON. I think that is a matter of justice to those of us who have remained here during this whole session.
Mr. SIMONTON. I rise to a point of order. I submit that the House being without a quorum, no business is in order except a motion to suspend further proceedings under the call or a motion to adjourn.

Mr. ATHERTON. Let it be done by universal consent.

Mr. SIMONTON. It is a proceeding not proper to be demanded, and I shall interpose objection because gentlemen may have retired temporarily. In the House to-morrow, or at any other time, we can take proceedings against gentlemen who may have absented themselves improperly after the closing of the doors; but we cannot proceed against them to-night.

ceed against them to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is certainly a new question, and a somewhat difficult one, as to what this House, sitting here without a quorum, can do with respect to those gentlemen (if there be any such) who have retired from the House after the closing of the doors.

Mr. VALENTINE. Without going into that question, is it not competent for us at this time, in connection with the pending proceedings, to inquire what members have gone away from the House since its order was made that they should stay here?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the very question the Chair has suggested for the consideration of the House.

Mr. VALENTINE. Without determining what should be done after the fact is ascertained, is it not proper for us to ascertain now the fact as to who are absent, and leave it for a quorum to determine what shall be done, if anything, after that fact is ascertained?

Mr. KENNA. If the House really desires to reach those gentlemen who were here when this call was begun, and who have since absented themselves, would not the object be reached if the House should now dispense with further proceedings under the present call, and then order another call? order another call?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Those members would not appear present at the next call of the House.

Mr. KENNA. That is true; but would they not be included in the order of arrest under the new call; and could not the House, when they present themselves to be excused, inquire as to whether they had absented themselves during a former call?

Mr. VALENTINE. I think I am right in the position that the House, in connection with the present proceedings, has a right to ascertain who have left the Hall since the order was made closing the

Mr. BURROWS. I do not see how less than a quorum can enter upon that inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the difficulty which suggests itself to the Chair.

Mr. BURROWS. There being no quorum present we can do no business; therefore we cannot enter upon that inquiry at all.

Mr. FORT. We have been considering questions of excusing mem-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Less than a quorum has the right to do that Mr. FORT. And we have been proposing to fine them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is all incident to a call of the House—incident to the effort of the House to secure a quorum.

Mr. FORT. Is it not incident to a call of the House to keep members here after we have brought them here?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is; but these gentlemen are not included in the warrant issued by the House. If they were there would be no difficulty as to what the House might do.

Mr. VALENTINE. If it be ascertained that members have left since the door was closed, is it not competent to issue a warrant for their expect?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That question is not now presented. No gentleman has risen in his place and made any charge or statement that any particular member who was present in the House when the doors were ordered to be closed has since left the Hall. In the indefinite shape in which the matter presents itself now, nothing could be done even by a quorum.

Mr. MILLS. Would it be in order to move that a committee of

Mr. MILLS. Would it be in order to move that a committee of three be appointed to ascertain and report to the House what members have left since the House ordered the doors to be closed?

Mr. STEVENSON. I can name some of them.

Mr. BURROWS. That certainly would not be in order for the same reason; there is no quorum.

Mr. STEVENSON. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that all proceedings under the call be dispensed with; and I do that for the purpose of moving that there be another call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois, the immediate effect of that would be to destroy the force of warrants which are now in the hands of the officers of the House, and new warrants would have to be issued for all the absentees.

Mr. STEVENSON. The suggestion which the Chair made in reply

Mr. STEVENSON. The suggestion which the Chair made in reply to my remark a short time ago seems to me should be complied with by the House.

Mr. MILLS. The object of a call of the House is to secure a quo-by the House.

Mr. MILLS. The object of a call of the House is to secure a quorum. The Constitution vests the minority of this House, less than a quorum, a small portion of the House, with power to compel the attendance of a sufficient number of members to constitute a quorum. Now, after they have brought members into this Hall and they leave the House, how is it able to obtain the quorum it is intended to secure? If this House has not the power to punish gentlemen who go out after it has ordered them to remain, then it is useless to have a call of the House, for you can never secure a quorum. The House must have the power now to bring these continues have two have must have the power now to bring those gentlemen back who have must have the power now to bring those gentlemen back who have left the House.

Mr. SAMFORD. It is an incidental power.

Mr. MILLS. An incidental power, certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that the power of the House to compel those present to remain is very clear under the rules because the House orders the doors to be closed immediately and kept closed. That is the means by which the House under the rules can secure the continued attendance of members. Now if a member power that the true order of the House. members. Now, if a member, notwithstanding the order of the House has left the House under such circumstances as has been stated here this evening, it seems to the Chair it constitutes ground for a charge against the member or against the officer of the House who has per-

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise to a point of order. All of this discussion about what can be done with those who have left since the doors were closed and about what ought to be done with them, charging they are absentees from that list, cannot be sustained because there is no are absentees from that list, cannot be sustained because there is no legal evidence before the House that there is anybody absent. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. MILLS. Would it not be in order to move the appointment of a committee to ascertain that fact and report to the House?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I make the charge that Mr. REAGAN, of Texas, was here when the roll was called, and that he has left the House, and has not returned. I do that in order to present the question.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I make the point that at this stage of the proceedings no such charge can be received.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. And Mr. GILLETTE, also.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A mere charge without a motion to proceed against the member amounts to nothing.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move the House proceed against those members.

members.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If any such charge is made it will be entertained.

Mr. McCOOK. The object is to reach a knowledge of the members who left after the doors were closed. I understand there is in the possession of an officer of this House a quasi-official paper containing the names of members who left after the doors were closed. taining the names of members who left after the doors were closed. I wish to know whether it is not perfectly competent and proper to have that list read when the question is raised—to have it laid before the House by the Speaker, so the House may be in possession of the information contained in that official document?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If any gentleman rises in his place he can make the charge and base it on whatever information he has.

Mr. McCOOK. I have no personal knowledge of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the House can have none.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I make the statement—

Mr. McCOOK. It is an official statement.

Mr. BARBER. Why cannot we have another roll-call to ascertain whether there is a goorum present? The House can call the roll at whether there is a quorum present? The House can call the roll at whether there is a quorum present? The House can can take the any time.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I make the charge that Mr. Gillette and Mr. Reagan have left the House after having answered to their names and have not returned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What motion does the gentleman make?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move that proceedings be taken against them for contempt of the House.

Mr. McMillin. I make the point that the motion of the gentleman from New York cannot be entertained at this stage of the proceedings because no motion is in order except to dispense with all further proceedings under the call of the House or to adjourn.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is a proceeding in the nature of a call of Mr. BARBER. I move that the roll of the House be called to ascertain if a quorum be present.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I rise to a point of order. There is no business before the House, and two gentlemen are present under arrest. The point of order I make is that the first business in order is rest. The point of order I make is that the first business in order is to relieve them from arrest if they can purge themselves of the con-tempt of the House.

tempt of the House.

Mr. HOUSE. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, if a minority have not the power to punish members for a contempt for leaving the House after the doors are ordered to be closed that that power of the minority to enforce the attendance of a quorum will be entirely nugatory. I think the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, that the roll of the House be called of those who were present at the time the doors were ordered to be closed, is in order. How can we enforce the attendance of a quorum here if members can come in and leave at their own pleasure? We have a right to send for them, and, as incident to the pleasure? We have a right to send for them, and, as incident to the pleasure? We have a right to send for them, and, as incident to the power to enforce a quorum, we have a right to punish them for contempt, although we are a minority, for a minority have the right under the Constitution to enforce the attendance of absent members. I think the roll of those who were present when the doors were ordered to be closed ought now to be called so that we may ascertain who have left the Hall since that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the roll of members who answered to their names on the call of the Hays he new called again in order to ascertain who were present.

the House be now called again, in order to ascertain who were present the House be now called again, in order to ascertain who were present on that call and have since left the House.

Mr. BARBER. My motion is to call the roll of all the members. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Another gentleman, from Tennessee, on the right, makes the point of order that this cannot be done by the House as now constituted. It is an entirely new question, and the Chair prefers to submit it to the House as to whether or not it is in order, under the circumstances known to all the members here, to have the roll called for the purpose of placing upon the record of the House the evidence of the fact, if it be a fact, that certain gentlemen have left since the roll was called.

Mr. MILLS. Will the Chair permit me to call the attention of the House to the language of the Constitution upon this point. The latter portion of the first clause of section 5 of article 1 of the Constitution provides, in reference to this question—

But a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to

But a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, in such manner, and under such penalties, as each House may provide.

compel the attendance of absent members, in such manner, and under such penalties, as each House may provide.

The House has control of the whole subject, and may determine for itself how it will proceed, even a minority of its members, and compel the attendance of absent members.

Mr. FORT. Mr. Speaker, I think it should be placed upon record that there can be no fault attached to the Doorkeeper or the officers of the House for the absence of those gentlemen who have chosen to leave. If they have gone, as alleged or insisted upon here, they have left their parole of honor with the Doorkeeper, and it ought to appear that the officers of the House are not to bear the blame for the absence of members, which has resulted from no fault of theirs.

Mr. SAMFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAMFORD. I understand that no business can be transacted except when the House has a quorum present. That being the language of the rule, what is to be done in case a member should be brought in by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House to the bar of the House who proved retractory and refuses to submit to the proceeding of a minority? What remedy would there be in that case? My point is that the House has power to do anything incident to the exceution of the order directing its members to be brought to the exceution of the order directing its members to be brought to the exceution of the House, in other words, has power to enforce everything incident to carrying into execution its orders. Now, in order to produce a quorum, a part of that necessity and power of the House is to send for its absent members. This power to send for absent to produce a quorum, a part of that necessity and power of the House is to send for its absent members. This power to send for absent members is vested in a minority of the House under the Constitution, and certainly if members have failed to answer to a roll-call we have that power and right. To enforce that order which it has attempted to enforce by sending the Sergeant-at-Arms for the refractory members is certainly incident to the execution of the order of the House, and is a power that must exist in it.

and is a power that must exist in it.

I think the practice has grown up in this House—
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama will notice that he does not go to the foundation of the difficulty in this case. It has not been stated, as a fact, up to the time that the statement was made by the gentleman from New York, that any gentleman had left the House after the proceedings had begun. Now it is proposed to proceed against those gentlemen who have left, and to proceed against absent members and in their absence. This applies to members who are not present at all. members who are not present at all.

Mr. SAMFORD. But the point is that members have absented them selves since they were brought in by the Sergeant-at-Arms. The question is now, has the House power to enforce its own orders? If it has the power to send for members, it certainly should have the power to maintain a quorum after it has succeeded in getting it by sending its officers to arrest absent members. It seems to me that there must be some parliamentary method by which those members who have left may be brought back.

Mr. HOUSE. The suggestion has been made, Mr. Speaker, that members who were here when the doors were ordered to be closed have absented themselves. Let us ascertain whether that be a fact or not. That can be done by calling the roll, as has been suggested, and then the House can determine that question for itself, and also determine what further course it will take.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I ask the attention of the Chair to the point of order which has already been made, and which presents a question of high privilege. Two gentlemen are here under arrest, and I desire to know what is to be done in their cases. These gentlemen are desirous of explaining to the House why they were absent; and I submit to the House that it is something that ought to be done to relieve them from arrest.

sent; and I submit to the House that it is something that ought to be done to relieve them from arrest.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar of the House, having in custody, in obedience to the orders of the House, Mr. Taylor, of Ohio, and Mr. Myers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. Myers, you have been absent from the sittings of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

you to offer ?

Mr. MYERS. I am a member of a select committee of this House, Mr. MYERS. I am a member of a select committee of this House, and on Wednesday morning was appointed chairman of a sub-committee of that committee to look after some matters in the Department. I paired with my colleague, Mr. Orth, and was not in attendance at the sessions of this House either yesterday or to-day. When the deputy of the Sergeant-at-Arms came to my house this evening he found me at work. I had not retired. I was not aware the House was in session and was not in contempt of the House.

Mr. COVERT. I move that the gentleman from Indiana be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. TAYLOR, you have been absent from the sittings of the House without its leave. What excuse have on to offer ?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I intended to have been here this night, and made my arrangements to that effect, when immediately after dinner, at my room, I was called on by a citizen of my place having important business before the Department to-morrow morning necesimportant business before the Department to-morrow morning necessary to be performed. I looked over his papers and gave a little time to his matter, feeling it necessary for me to be there. When I had finished this it was later than I supposed, and not feeling the necessity of being here myself as strongly as I ought to have done, I stayed in my room and in due time retired. When called for I came cheerfully, and now cheerfully submit myself to the action of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. As the gentleman is a new member, I think he should be excused. I make that motion.

The metrion was agreed to

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms desires to make report for the information of the House in regard to certain genlemen who are on his list and who have not been brought to the bar.

tlemen who are on his list and who have not been brought to the bar.

The Sergeant-at-Arms made his report, as follows:

Mr. DAVIDSON reports himself sick. Mr. DUNN, Mr. HULL, and Mr.

THOMAS TURNER report themselves sick. Mr. P. B. THOMPSON, jr., says he has leave of absence. Mr. Henkle was not found at his home. Mr. Herbert was not found. Mr. Marsh, Mr. O'Reilly, Mr. Phelps, Mr. H. B. Smith, Mr. Stone, Mr. Baker, Mr. Beltzhoover,
Mr. Brigham were not found. Mr. Harmer reports himself sick.
Mr. Ferdon reports himself sick. Mr. Chalmers reports himself sick. Mr. Hayes reports himself sick. Mr. Mason reports himself sick. Mr. Bliss, Mr. Buckner, and Mr. Scoville could not be found.
Mr. Waddill reports that his wife is sick and he cannot leave her.
Mr. T. L. Young could not be found. Mr. White could not be found.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Whataction will the House take with reference to the report of the Sergeant-at-Arms?

Mr. BREWER. I heard the name of Mr. Phelps reported. He was excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He was excused by order of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He was excused by order of the House.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think we ought to understand the rightfulness of the motion to call the roll in order to ascertain those who answered on the call of the House and are not now present.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a motion with reference to the report just submitted by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. HHLL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have not yielded the floor for that purpose. I only yield for the purpose indicated by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to move, with the leave of the gentleman from Connecticut, that those reported sick by the Sergeant-at-Arms be excused.

Mr. FORT. Some of those gentlemen ate a very hearty dinner today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut has the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw my motion if objected to. Mr. HAWLEY. I think it well for the House to settle our right to call the roll of those who answered to their names at the call of the House. Every man will see on a moment's reflection that having found one hundred and twenty-three here on that call and having at the last call of the roll found only one hundred and twenty-one the proceedings to compel the attendance of absentees becomes a perfect farce if we have not the right to call the roll again, to ascertain who have left the Hall. It does not appear to be proposed that any proceedings should be instituted against them for contempt. But we cannot maintain the rights of this House as laid down in the Constitution and in our own rules unless we have a right to call the roll. For that is the whole business under this proceeding, to call rolls and

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. When this call commenced, as in the case of every other call of the House, the first thing to do was to close the doors. Then I think every member who answered to his name case of every other call of the House, the first thing to do was to close the doors. Then I think every member who answered to his name and every member who was brought in the moment he was in the Hall was in custody. If not, why close the doors?

I take it the officers of the House have a duty to perform to keep the members in custody. When a member passes out through the door he still remains in the custody of the officer; and it occurs to me the proper thing is not to call the roll but for the officer of the House to be held responsible. And if any gentleman has broken loose from his custody, he has the right to arrest him and bring him back. It is the duty of the officer to know who has left the Hall. If he keeps a list, he can consult that list and find out where the member is, and wherever he may be, whether he has broken loose from the officer who is detailed to go with him when it was necessary for him to retire from the Hall, or whether he has broken his parole, it is for the officer to make the arrest and bring him back to the Hall. If the member has broken from arrest, the officer can report that fact, and then, if necessary, the question can be discussed by the House as to what disposition shall be made of the case.

Mr. HAWLEY. The officer has no right to issue a warrant against that member, if his name is not upon the list of those against whom the warrant is issued. He might be arrested upon a warrant issued under the call of the roll which has been suggested.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. He has the same authority to take him as a neare officer has to take a prisoner who has escaped from him.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. He has the same authority to take him as a peace officer has to take a prisoner who has escaped from him.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not consider by any means that we are under

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. We are in custody.
Mr. HAWLEY. Those who are here are in no respect in the custody of an officer.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to say, and to give my reasons for so saying, that I am opposed to taking any steps here to-night, before the existing order for a call of the House is suspended, against any gentleman who it is said has left the Hall.

The proposition is gravely made here in the American Congress that we should call the roll in order to ascertain a fact to the prejudice of absent members of this House. It has been charged here that after the call of the House was ordered some of these gentlemen passed out of the door of the Hall and have forfeited their honor by failing to remain here. Now it is gravely proposed to ascertain that fact in the absence of those gentlemen. [Great laughter.] To do that is to do something in violation of the very fundamental principles that underlie our Federal Government.

It has been suggested by gentlemen that the list of names which the Doorkeeper has should be read. I beg to remind gentlemen that that is not an official document at all, and cannot be used as evidence against these gentlemen. They have a right to be present and to traverse and deny the charge that they have violated the rules of this Head I reportfully be leave to the very large and the past to the state of the contract of the state of the st this House. I respectfully beg leave to say that you can take no steps against them except to summon them to come here and answer the charge.

Mr. MILLS. We must make a charge against them. Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Must we not ascertain if they are absent?

Mr. WILSON. Suppose you call the roll. What does that amount to? The gentlemen may have been here before the call of the House was ordered; for although they may appear on the record, they may have left before the call. I ask gentlemen to go slowly in this matter. We have no authority to assume that these gentlemen have violated the rules of the House.

Mr. HAWLEY. We do not assume anything.
Mr. WILSON. You cannot summon them here. You can take no step except to adjourn or to suspend further proceedings under this

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I desire to make a suggestion. It appears to me that there ought to be in parliamentary law some common sense, and I think there is. This House is here for the purpose of doing business, and under the Constitution and under its rules it has full right to compel the attendance of members and to punish members for a contempt of its rules.

At the present time, and in obedience to a precent of the House.

At the present time, and in obedience to a precept of the House, the Sergeant-at-Arms is attempting to bring in absent members. But in the mean time this House is not shorn of all the rest of its power.

It is clear to me that this House is not shorn of all the rest of its power. It is clear to me that this House may do everything that is incidental to and in harmony with the nature of its proceedings for the purpose of compelling the attendance of absent members.

I say, therefore, that if this House can be informed here and now that members are now absent who have been here and answered to their names, it is certainly in the power of this House to issue a precept for those gentlemen which shall run along with the other precept and have them brought here. [Applause.] Otherwise we remain here powerless. here powerless.

Mr. WILSON. You have no right to issue a warrant to arrest any one unless he is charged with some fault and that charge is sustained one unless he is charged with some fault and that charge is sustained by affidavit.

Mr. ROBINSON. I submit in reply to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Wilson] that there is no wrong done.

Several Members. Call the roll!

Mr. ROBINSON. It is not a call of the roll that is required, because calling the roll will not disclose the fact we wish to ascertain. I suggest that what is necessary is the call of the list of names of those who answered and were present at the time the order was made for closing the doors, and that will show the fact. When we have ascertained that fact then let us propose the necessary remedy.

Mr. SIMONTON. Is not this the fact, that while the roll was being called, before the doors were ordered to be closed, gentlemen could leave the Hall? The calling of the roll would not disclose the fact whether they left the Hall after the doors were closed or not.

Mr. REED. Under the Constitution we are authorized to provide rules for such an occasion as this. We have provided a rule, and under that rule the doors of this House were ordered to be closed, and we then directed that members who appeared to be absent be and we then directed that members who appeared to be absent be sent for. That seems to have been all that the rule has provided to be done.

Our rule contemplates that the doors shall be closed in order to prevent the egress of members. The officers of the House, of their own motion, allow members to go out and come in. It seems to me that that is outside of the rules of the House. If any difficulty has arisen, it has arisen on account of the action of the officers of the House, an action, it ought to be said, so that I may not seem to be casting blame upon any officer, which is sanctioned by the long usage of the House. But that custom or usage is not contemplated by the rule. The rules go upon the idea that members are kept in by the closing of the doors. I think that the proposal to call the roll is something that has no precedent whatever. This is simply a case where the rules of the House fail to accomplish the object for which they are intended. I do not see how they can be stretched for a purthey are intended. I do not see how they can be stretched for a purpose of this kind.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman is right; the rule does provide for closing the doors; but does the gentleman mean to say that this House is then utterly without any power to ascertain whether the rule has been violated or not?

Mr. REED. By no manner of means.

Mr. HAWLEY. The motion proposed here is to call the roll of those who answered on the first roll-call, to see whether the rule in regard to the closing of the doors has been violated. I exclude from consideration all this unofficial proceeding of the Doorkeeper. The sole question is whether, when men who were here to answer to that roll have since absented themselves, we have the right to know it.

Mr. REED. Then the officer in charge of the door can report whether he has performed that duty or not

Mr. REED. Then the olineer in charge of the door can report whether he has performed that duty or not.

Mr. TALBOTT. There is a question as to the time at which the Doorkeeper ought to close the door—whether at the conclusion of the call or at the beginning of the call.

A MEMBER. When the Speaker of the House orders it.

call or at the beginning of the call.

A MEMBER. When the Speaker of the House orders it.

Mr. REED. There is another point. In the case of a call of the House it is not until the call of the roll is finished that the doors are closed. A member, after answering to his name, may leave the Hall, thus breaking the spirit of the rule, possibly, but not breaking its letter, because there is no closing of the doors to prevent his going out. Now, it seems to me that the trouble in which we find ourselves is the result of a defective rule.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Maine

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Maine that, as it seems to me, we are in this Hall now not because the doors are locked, (although the rule provides that in certain proceedings we will close the doors,) but because we have other and broader rules which compel the attendance of members at all times. We are all bound to be here, whether the doors are open or not; and if a gentle-man has left, it is not any excuse that he happened to find the door open. I maintain that even if no order were issued to close the doors, members are bound to be here and attending to business when the House is in session.

Mr. REED. Nevertheless the object of the procedure is to keep men here by closing the doors.

Mr. ROBINSON. If a member is brought here for a violation of the rules in passing out of the House, the fact that the doors were not closed might, perhaps, be presented by way of excuse, whatever it might be worth.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I move that the House adjourn. The question being taken, there were—ayes 26, noes 57. Mr. WILSON. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to offer an amendment to the motion, so as to instruct the Doorkeeper of the House to report to the House the names of members who have left since the doors were

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a motion to call the roll.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. It is a motion, however, to call the roll so as to ascertain who have left the House. It is the duty of the Doorkeeper to know who have left the House, and the members who are here, in getting a quorum, have the right— Mr. COVERT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Had not the Speaker determined the pending point by stating that he would submit it to a vote of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair had done so, and he was ready to put the question; but gentlemen were continuing to address the Chair. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] moved that the roll of members who had answered to their names be now called again in order that it might be ascertained who, if any of them, had left the House since that time. The gentleman from Tennessee made a point of order upon that motion, and the Chair announced that he would submit the question of order to the House, it being an entirely new one. Therefore the question which the Chair proposes to submit is, whether or not it is now in order to call that roll for the purpose of ascertaining what members, if any, have left the House since

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire that the form of the motion be as I have

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire that the form of the motion be as I have reduced it to writing and send it to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not about to put that motion, but to submit the question of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair is about to put the question whether my motion shall he entertained; and I desire the motion to be put in the shape I now present it, so that the House may understand what it is before deciding the question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] in its present form.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the names of members who were present when the doors were closed be now called, and that those who do not answer to their names be taken into custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms and brought to the bar of the House.

Mr. McMAHON. That is not a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair submits to the House the question whether or not it is in order to entertain that proposition.

Mr. HOUSE. Not that proposition. There are two things in that.

Mr. SPRINGER. My colleague submitted a proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is this an amendment to it?

Mr. SPRINGER. This will bring the committee to a direct vote on the question as to what we intend by calling this roll. What is the use of calling it?

use of calling it?

Mr. HAWLEY. Call it first.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All those who are of opinion it is in order to entertain the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, which would be supported to the content of the second or the second is that the roll of members who answered to their names be called again, will answer "ay." Those of a contrary opinion will say "no." The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. Division!
The House divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 13.
Mr. SIMONTON. We want the yeas and nays on that. It is a matter of a good deal of importance, and I should like to be recorded in the negative.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point that there is no quorum. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the very question which is embarrassing the Chair and induced him to submit it to the House.
Mr. CONGER. Ithink that proposition will settle the right whether fifteen or less than a quorum can do what the rules do not permit. The Constitution says less than a quorum may compel the attendance of members under such rules as each House may prescribe. There is no way to compel the attendance of members but by the rules which this House has prescribed. The House has prescribed fifteen members, with the Speaker, if there be one, may in a particular manner compel the attendence of members, which is by the roll-call. I say there is but one way in which that constitutional provision can members, with the Speaker, if there be one, may in a particular manner compel the attendence of members, which is by the roll-call. I say there is but one way in which that constitutional provision can be carried out, and that is according to such rules as this House prescribes. This House has prescribed the way and the manner, and that is when fifteen members, with the Speaker, if there be one, propose to compel the attendance of members the roll shall be called, not twenty times, but once, and the absentees may be sent for in the manner prescribed by that rule, and only in that manner.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Let me ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CONGER. I will when I have finished my remarks. [Laughter.] We have followed the constitutional provision and the rule under it. The roll has been called. Those who were present have answered to their names. The absentees found by that roll-call have been sent for. Some of them have been brought here; others remain to be brought here. There is no provision under these rules, except where the doors shall be closed, to deal with those who have answered to their names when called. What other provision is there in these rules? The House—not these fifteen or more men, but less than a quorum—may act on such questions as that. On the two hundred and twenty-first page of the rules it says no motion, except a motion to adjourn or some motion relating to the call, is in order. Now, this new call for no other purpose than to bring those who have put themselves in contempt of the House or to find out who they are has no relation whatever to the call and is not amotion to adjourn and is out of order. This number of fifteen or more, but less than a quorum, cannot make these motions and cannot act as a House in my index these motions and cannot act as a House in my index these motions and cannot act as a House in my index. of order. This number of fifteen or more, but less than a quorum, cannot make these motions, and cannot act as a House, in my judgment. The precedent never has been established. The question has arisen a thousand times and no one ever pretended they could do more than compel the attendance of members. It is for that reason I call the attention of the Chair and the House to this establishment of a new precedent contrary to the rules and by which less than a quorum will undertake to do what the rules do not permit.

Mr. BARBER. Does not the fact that no quorum is present necessitate the call of the roll?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course. When the motion was made by the gentleman from Illinois to call the roll the Chair was aware of the fact and the House was aware of the fact that there was no quorum present, because that fact constitutes the foundation of the proceedings taken to-night. Therefore the Chair submitted to the House the question whether or not, under that state of facts, it was in order to entertain this motion to call the roll. But the House has voted it is in order, notwithstanding the fact there is no quorum present, and it settles by its vote the question which the gentleman from Michigan makes. It was that very question which was embarrassing the Chair and which he submitted to the House.

rassing the Chair and which he submitted to the House.

Mr. BARBER. A call of the roll may disclose the presence of a quorum. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. PRICE. Under the rules, Mr. Speaker, providing for a call of the House, as we practice them in this House, it results just exactly as every gentlemen knows here full well, in a perfect farce. I will give the reason in a moment, and you all know it before. We commence the call of the roll, when a call of the House is ordered. A is called and answers to his name and walks out of the House. B is called and answers to his name and walks out of the House. B is called and answers to his name and goes out. C is called and answers to his name and goes out; and so on, all through the alphabet, and when you get through with the roll you are in about the same position you were before, or maybe a little worse, for they have all gone. That is true; it cannot be denied; it has been done to-night. It is not the first time it has been done. Any gentleman who has seen any service here for six, eight, or ten years knows it has been done again and again and again. We are here to-night, and gentlemen of intelligence and experience are the experience and experience and experience and experience are the experience are the experience are the experience are the experience and experience are the experience are the experience are the experience and experience are the experience are the experience are the experience are the experience and experience are the experience a and again and again. We are here to-night, and gentlemen of intelligence and experience and parliamentary knowledge around me say that we are powerless to know even who have gone out of the House after having answered to their names, or after being arrested and brought into the House. A is gone, B is gone, G is gone, F is gone, and we are powerless to know who is gone and who is left. We send out our warrants and officers and arrest members and bring them in, and go through the farce of hearing their excuses, then let them go and go through the larce of hearing their excuses, then let them go again, and we get perfect nonsense out of the whole matter. [Applause.] And we succeed only in punishing ourselves.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McCOOK. What is the question before the House? The SPEAKER pro tempore. That the roll be called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That the roll be called.

Mr. PRESCOTT. We desire to have the question reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the roll of names of the members who answered upon the former roll-call be again called. [Cries of "Regular order!"] mer roll-call be again called. [Uries of Regular The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll; that is, the roll of members who answered upon the call of the House.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. Mr. Speaker, [cries of "Regular order!"] I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair before the roll-call is commenced. I desire to know, Mr. Speaker, whether it is in order to make that roll-call during the time when a call of the House is in progress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has just decided that the time when the control of the second call of the House is the chair had submitted it to the House.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. But was that in order? Was not that in Was not that in direct violation of the rules of the House? [Cries of "Regular order!"]
I do not understand that the Speaker has answered my question.

[Loud cries for the regular order.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the gentleman from Kentucky well knows, it has been the constant practice of the presiding officer of the House to submit questions to the House when the Speaker had doubts, and especially during the last session since the adoption of the new rules. The present occupant of the chair simply followed the cus-tom heretofore adopted in that respect, and submitted the question to the House, because the decision of the Chair is always subject to an

to the House, because the decision of the Chair is always subject to an appeal and revision by the House.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. But no appeal was taken. [Laughter.] I desire to have an answer to the question from the Chair. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I hope gentlemen will preserve order themselves. I understand the rule of this House to provide that nothing shall be in order during a call of the House except a motion to adjourn or a motion to suspend further proceeding under the call of the House. That is a fixed rule adopted by this House. Then I ask how can it be in order to have this roll-call now? I understand the Chair to say the reason of the call is that it has been ordered by the House. But I make the question of order that it is not in order for the House to direct that call to be made under the express language of our to direct that call to be made under the express language of our

Mr. COFFROTH. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. BACHMAN, my colleague, was excused from attendance and is at home sick. He did not answer to the other roll-call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll of those members who answered to their names on the first roll-call, and report to the House the list of those who fail to answer to their names on this call.

The roll was called, and the Clerk reported the following members as having failed to answer to the roll-call: Mr. Beale, Mr. Berry, Mr. Bland, Mr. Gillette, Mr. Harris of Virginia, Mr. Page, Mr. Phister, Mr. Reagan, Mr. Ross, Mr. Rothwell, and Mr. Sherwin. Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, in reference to Mr. Sherwin, that he is on a committee that has leave to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Although Mr. SHERWIN was present and answered to his name on the first call of the roll, he had leave of absence from the evening session by order of the House.

Mr. SIMONTON. Can we call the names of gentlemen who were brought into the House by the Sergeant-at-Arms? Some of them may have gone.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

 $\it Resolved.$ That the Clerk read the names of those who have been brought before the bar of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. I suggest that the resolution be amended by adding to it the words "and excused."

Mr. KING. I accept the amendment.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I move to amend the resolution by substituting the word "call" in place of the word "read."

Mr. KING. I accept the modification of the resolution.

The resolution as modified was then agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to call the names of those members who had been brought to the bar of the House by the Sergeant-at-Arms, all of them answering to their names.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in the return made by the Sergeant-at-Arms he gave the name of Mr. Phelps, of Connecticut, as being absent. The Clerk will probably remember that Mr. Phelps got leave some days ago to be absent from all night

Mr. ATHERTON. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That each of the members, except Mr. Sherwin, who answered to their names on the first roll-call on the call of the House, and not on the second, be forthwith arrested by the Sergeant at-Arms and brought before the bar of this House, and the Speaker issue his precept for that purpose.

Mr. KING. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has been recognized.

Mr. REED. I know it is very difficult to present a question of this importance at ten minutes past three in the morning; but at the same time we shall find ourselves recorded as doing what we do no matter at what time of the day or night it is done. And I hope the attention of the House will be fixed on this subject for a few minutes in order to prevent its doing what it seems to me is not justified by any of our rules or by the Constitution of the United States. I think I can make my position on the subject plain whether I can convince members of the correctness of it or not.

The Constitution of the United States provides that this House shall consist of a quorum of its members. Less than a quorum of its members is not a House but is a number of gentlemen seeking to make a House. And the Constitution declares that—make a House. And the Constitution declares that

A majority of each (House) shall constitute a quorum to do business; and a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized—

They have no power of themselves, but they may beauthorized to compel the attendance of absent members

How? Not unqualifiedly, but-in such manner and under such penalties as each House may provide.

That is, the House consisting of a quorum of members has got to prescribe beforehand the way and manner in which the House shall compel the attendance of members. This delegated power it has given to us, and it is a power which is limited by the rules established by the House, which must consist of a quorum. I fancy I have made that matter plain.

Now the question is relative to the constant of
Now the question is, what is the rule which the House has established? And recollect all the time that it has got to be a positive rule, conferring power upon gentlemen who have no inherent power themselves except what the Constitution gives them and what the House gives them under the Constitution. The second section of Rule XV declares what we shall do, and confers upon us all the power themselves except what the Constitution gives them and what the House gives them under the Constitution. The second section of Rule XV declares what we shall do, and confers upon us all the power we have, unless gentlemen can show me some other rule; and I am open to that correction, for I have made the examination only tonight. That rule says:

In the absence of a quorum, fifteen members—

Never less than fifteen; the House might have authorized less, but it authorized only fifteen:

In the absence of a quorum, fifteen members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, and in all calls of the House the names of the members shall be called by the Cl erk, and the absentees noted; the doors shall then be closed, and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured, and the House shall determine upon what conditions they shall be discharged.

Now, it seems to me that our power is limited to what the House has conferred upon us; that the theory upon which that rule proceeds is that the members who are here when the call is made shall be kept here by a closure of the doors, and those whose absence is noted shall then be sent for.

Mr. VALENTINE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? Mr. REED.

question 7
Mr. REED. Yes, sir.
Mr. VALENTINE. What does the gentleman understand is meant by the words "and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged?" Is that a quorum, or only fifteen members, if there be only fifteen, who have ordered that the absentees be brought in? Does it mean the fifteen members or a quorum of the House?

in? Does it mean the fifteen members or a quorum of the House? If it means a quorum, then our proceedings to-night and on all similar occasions since I have been here have been irregular.

Mr. REED. That suggestion has occurred to myself.

Mr. BURROWS. If the gentleman will permit me, I will answer that by referring to a decision. There was a case contested in the Thirty-seventh Congress in which the Speaker held that where less than a quorum can compel the attendance, by parity of reasoning less than a quorum can excuse a member.

Mr. VALENTINE. By the same parity of reasoning cannot the same body of persons under this authority bring in those who absent themselves after the first order is made for the arrest of absences?

Mr. KING. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A resolution has been offered by the

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A resolution has been offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON] that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed forthwith to arrest and bring before the House the members who answered to their names at the call of the House and not on the second call. That resolution is pending, and gentlemen are discussing whether or not this body has the power to make such an

Mr. McMILLIN. It has been suggested, and very truly, that we are going into an unknown region so far as construction of rules is are going into an unknown region so far as construction of thies is concerned. We are establishing to-night what may hereafter be looked to as a precedent, and cannot be too careful in acting.

The gentleman from Maine has read and commented upon the rule in so clear a manner that I will be freed from the necessity of referring to it minutely. But I want to state to the House the condition in which I conceive we will find ourselves if we adopt and attempt to carry out the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. ATHER-TON.

It is provided by the rule that when the House finds itself without a quorum "the roll shall be called" and the absentees shall be noted; that the doors shall then be closed, and the absentees may be sent for. We have just now made a record of what has been done under that roll-call.

order.

roll-call.

If we adopt this resolution and bring in here one of the members who departed since the former roll-call and propose to punish him for so doing, he can claim that there has been no complete roll-call. Now, will not our whole proceedings fall to the ground for want of that foundation without which we are not permitted to move one step if we go on the idea of a second roll-call?

Mr. VALENTINE. The gentleman certainly must admit that the member brought in cannot take advantage of what he now claims, because the name of some other person was not called on the call of because the name of some other person was not called on the call of the roll. That would give him no excuse.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think that when there are two ways of doing a thing, one of which is clearly in accordance with the rule, and the other is doubtful, this House ought to take that course which is unquestionably in accordance with the rule.

We have a means of reaching these absentees.

We have a means of reaching these absentees. What is it? Dispense with further proceedings under the original call. Then call the roll anew, and upon that new roll-call those who are absent will be recorded, and we can then proceed properly, as all will admit.

As it is now proposed, will we first start to punish one set of absentees, and then attempt to bring in another set who are not liable under the proceedings of the first call? Under that second call you would have a wheel moving within a wheel in a manner very novel, to say the least of it.

Let us either have a new correlate.

Let us either have a new, complete roll-call, after dispensing with further proceedings under this, or go on the hypothesis that no second roll-call is necessary to enable us to have those arrested who have departed since the first call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the very question now under

Mr. ATHERTON. I fully agree with what has been urged by some gentlemen here.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have not had an answer to my parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. That is the question the House is now considering and is about to decide.

Mr. ATHERTON. I fully agree to the proposition made by gentlemen on the other side of this question, that we are not now here as a quorum of the House, but simply as a number of members who are attempting to compel the attendance of a quorum. And we cannot do anything except what the few members present are authorized to do by our rules. Still, I think the rule clearly authorizes the arrest of these members, as proposed in my resolution.

of these members, as proposed in my resolution.

Let us look at the language of the rule and see if it is what the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Reed] understands it to be, and whether the language of the rule itself is sufficient to enable this House in the absence of a quorum to make these arrests. What is the rule?

In the absence of a quorum, fifteen members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members.

That is the object to be accomplished by the rule. As an incident to it we ought to be able to do whatever may be reasonably necessary to effect that purpose. We are not confined by that rule to simply one roll-call, as will be observed by reading the very next clause in it. It does not say that there shall be but the one roll-call and no other. The rule says :

And in all calls of the House the names of the members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted.

It does not provide that we shall have simply one roll-call, and that our power shall be exhausted by that one call. We may make calls of the roll just as often as is necessary to determine who is present, and as often as may be necessary to prepare the proper process for compelling the attendance of those who are absent.

compelling the attendance of those who are absent.

In the first part of the rule is the power of the House to compel the attendance of absent members. In the second part of the rule power is given for us to call the roll as many times as may be necessary to ascertain who is absent.

Then what? The doors shall then be closed. After every roll-call—not after one roll-call simply, but after every roll-call that is made—the doors shall be closed, and the absentees sent for. It is not now a question as to what we shall do when they are brought here; it is not now a question of punishment; it is simply a question of power upon the part of this House, or the members of the House who are present, to compel the attendance of absent members. The language is:

May by order of a majority of those present be sent for and arrested wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

There is, first, the power of the House to compel the attendance of absentees; then, to have as many roll-calls as may be necessary to ascertain who are absent and who are present; and after each roll-call the House shall be closed and the absentees sent for. Why should not that be so? Why, sir, it is said that at this very meeting to-night a considerable number of those members who answered to their names upon the first roll-call passed out in a secret way—not through that door, but through the window in the barber-shop—and thus escaped from the House. So that the Doorkeeper was not thus escaped from the House. So that the Doorkeeper was not responsible; nobody was responsible but themselves. If members can drop out in this way just as fast as they can be brought in, and there is no power to send for them, the rule is nugatory and the supposed power of less than a quorum to compel the attendance of supposed power of less than a quorum to compel the attendance of absent members cannot be effectually exercised.

I agree with the gentleman from Maine that if his construction of the rule is correct, the power of the House is exhausted in one roll-call; and then, as a matter of course, the proposition now before the House cannot be accomplished. But if he will look at the rule, I think he will agree with me that the members now present have the power to make one roll-call or as many as may be necessary; and just so soon as they find, either on the first roll-call or any subsequent roll-call, that members have absented themselves without authority.

Just so soon as they and, either on the first roll-call or any subsequent roll-call, that members have absented themselves without authority, the members present may then exercise this power of causing the arrest of members and compelling their attendance.

Hence it seems to me that this resolution should be adopted for the very reason that if this power cannot be exercised, the power of less than a quorum to compel the attendance of absentees would be nugatoric to the compel the attendance of absentees would be nugatoric. tory; we never could get a quorum present if there should be a dis-tory; we never could get a quorum present it there should be a disposition on the part of members to absent themselves.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker, with all deference to the great parliamentary knowledge of the gentleman from Maine, it seems to me that this question is decided both by our rules and by Cushing's Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies. It is res adjudicata. Let me read from Cushing:

While the proceedings for a call are going on, the Assembly may pass any orders (as, for example, that absent members shall be brought in to make their excuses on a future day, or that members absenting themselves after the first call shall be sent for) which fairly relate to the subject.

This is from Cushing's large work on parliamentary law, and refers to decisions in the Twenty-fifth Congress.

Now, the only question remaining is this: Do our rules overrule, as they would have the right to do, the ordinary laws of parliamentary practice? Our rules, so far as inconsistent with Cushing's Manual or any other manual of parliamentary law, must govern. The question is, are our rules inconsistent with the doctrine of parliamentary law as laid down by Cushing? What is the only provision of our rule on that subject? It is clear, distinct, and in few words. The whole of it applicable to this discussion is this:

Fifteen members shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent mem-

That is all there is of it. It is declared by our rule, in accordance with Cushing's Manual, that fifteen members may compel the attendance of absent members. How? It does not say. In any way that fifteen members may devise—by arrest, by bringing the absentees here in any way—by calling their names over. Full and plenary powers, without any restrictions whatever, are given to the fifteen members to compel the attendance of absent members. Every power is given that is necessary to carry out that power of bringing in absent members. I ask the gentleman from Maine whether in our rules there is any limitation or restriction as to the mode of proceeding or otherwise on the power of fifteen members, in the language of the rule, to compel the attendance of absent members?

ompel the attendance of absent members?

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, of course I am myself open to the criticism to which I have invited the attention of members of the House as applied to themselves. In attempting to decide a question of this kind at the present time I am compelled to do so with very little opportunity for examination. But I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Bowman] has not proved his point quite yet. The very clause to which he refers in Cushing's Manual, section 438, page 179, says:

A second call cannot be moved for when the first is decided in the affirmative.

A second call cannot be moved for when the first is decided in the affirmative, inasmuch as there cannot be two calls at once.

That is precisely the situation in which we now find ourselves—with two calls at once. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] It seems to me that the rule is to be construed as a whole. It declares in all calls of the House certain proceedings shall take place, and only certain proceedings, and that we are limited in our power to those proceedings. Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker, I was only going to ask the gentleman this: whether it is not true, on his own ground, that there has been but one call to-night? A call commences with A, at the beginning of the alphabet, and ends with Z, and there has been only one call; but, in pursuance of the power to compel the attendance of absent of the alphabet, and ends with Z, and there has been only one call; but, in pursuance of the power to compel the attendance of absent members, and it being necessary to know who are absent and who had run away, it became necessary to call from a shorter list of names, not in any sense a call of the House, and not so intended.

Mr. HOUSE. That is true.

Mr. BOWMAN. It was merely to find out whom to send the Sergeant-at-Arms for, and nothing else. But the next clause of the rule, Mr. Speaker, says "and in all the calls of the House." The gentleman says, as I understand him, that the rule says there shall be only one call. Where does the rule say so? The rule says, "in the absence of a quorum, fifteen members may compel the attendance," &c., "and in all other calls of the House, the names shall be called by the Clerk and the absentees noted." And as I scan hastily that rule, I do not find any reference to or restriction to one call.

called by the Clerk and the absentees noted." And as I scan hastly that rule, I do not find any reference to or restriction to one call. On the contrary, the term is "all calls."

Mr. REED. I was quoting from Cushing's Manual.

Mr. PRESCOTT. To avoid the criticisms with reference to the resolution presented, I offer an amendment that the words in the middle of it, "and not on the second," be stricken out, and in place of that the words be inserted "and are absent." That will avoid the criticism as to whether there have been two calls.

Mr. ATHERTON. I scent the amendment as to whether there have been two calls.

Mr. ATHERTON. I accept the amendment.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Beside, Mr. Speaker, it has occurred to me—and it does not seem to have occurred to any one who has spoken so far—that the closing of the doors, occurring as it does after the call is made, is evidence that the closing of the doors is not for the purpose of keeping in those who are in but keeping out those who are found to be absent.

of keeping in those who are in but keeping out those who are found to be absent.

Mr. ATHERTON. I accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. WARNER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. A number of gentlemen, myself among the rest, were brought into this House by the Sergeant-at-Arms. The question I wish to ask is whether we are still in arrest or whether we have been discharged; and I call attention here to the last clause of Rule XV: "And the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged."

Mr. WILSON. What page?

Mr. WARNER. One hundred and seventy-five. If we have been discharged, then the officers of the House are relieved from all respon-

Mr. WARNER. One hundred and seventy-live. If we have been discharged, then the officers of the House are relieved from all responsibility, and there is no violation of parole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Except to keep the doors closed.

Mr. WARNER. Yes, except to keep the doors closed. If a member leaves it may be in contempt of the House, but the officers are discharged. But if we are still under arrest—

Mr. ATHERTON. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. WARNER. I am making my point of order.

Mr. ATHERTON. I do not understand this is any discussion of the resolution at all

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has risen to put a parliamentary inquiry, and is now stating it.

Mr. WARNER. That I am proceeding to do, if my colleague will only listen to me.

Mr. ATHERTON. I do not want to be unkind, but I do not see what that has to do with this resolution.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman will see if he follows it. Now I hold, Mr. Speaker, that "the House," the word "House" as used in this rule, means a majority, a quorum, after they have been brought in here. There is no power in the min ority even to discharge from

Mr. HAWLEY. I think my friend from Ohio is mistaken on that point, for it has always been the custom that this minority trying to get a quorum has the right to excuse or fine, and that it has fined

Mr. WARNER. That is the question involved.
Mr. HAWLEY. That expression "House" does not mean a full House, otherwise no one could be discharged, no one could be excused, no one could be fined, until you got a quorum. But the custom has been settled from time immemorial, and men have been excused or fined by this minority.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is merely this: Shall we send warrants for a few absent members, absent without excuse, for whom warrants have not been issued? That is the whole question.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman forgets that we are proceeding under new rules, which have been adopted but recently.

The SPEAKER protempore. There are some gentlemen in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and this question should be disposed of as speedily as practicable, so that they can be relieved from that

The question is on the adoption of the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio, which the Clerk will report.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILSON. My point of order is that the parties are not named in this resolution.

Mr. ATHERTON. I move a further amendment by striking out the word "first."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will take the liberty of calling the gentleman's attention to the fact that the wording of the resolution as at present framed would direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to arrest all other gentlemen who have not been excused except Mr.

to arrest all other gentlemen who have not been excused except Mr. PHELPS and Mr. Sherwin.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Speaker, at one time, at nearly three o'clock, I think, when we had trouble very much like this and we had not succeeded in getting a quorum, an order was introduced before the gentlemen assembled, whether it was a House or was not a House, less than a quorum, which order provided that certain gentlemen by name should be arrested by the Sergeant-at-Arms and brought before the bar of the House at twelve o'clock the next day to give answer for their absence.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would suggest that the resolution be amended in this particular, to strike out the word "first."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has suggested that if the resolution stands as at present it will direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to arrest every gentleman now absent with the exception of the two gentlemen specially named in this resolution.

Mr. VALENTINE. I move to amend the resolution by inserting the names af all those who are absent for whom no warrant is issued, the names at all those who are absent for whom no warrant is issued, except Mr. PHELPS and Mr. SHERWIN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can be done by saying except those who have been excused by the House.

Mr. ATHERTON. Let it be amended in that way.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know what change has been made in this resolution.

Mr. TALBOTT. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Ohio—[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. KITCHIN. I have made a motion that the House adjourn.

Mr. TALBOTT. And I have made a motion to amend the motion of the gentleman from Ohio so that it will read, "all persons not excused by order of the House."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the resolution which the Clerk will report to the House again.

Mr. ATHERTON. Let the resolution be read as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Messrs. Beale, Berry, Bland, Gillette, J. T. Harris, Page, Phister, Reagan, Ross, and Rothwell, absent without leave of the House, be forthwith arrested by the Sergeant-at-Arms and brought before this House, and the Speaker issue his precept for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SAMFORD. Pending that, I move that when the House adjourns it ajourn to meet on Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that his motion is not in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Under the special order fixing the session for this evening, it will not be in order, for that resolution provided that certain business and none other should be transacted.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. ATHERTON. I now demand the previous question upon the resolution which I have submitted.

Mr. SPEER. I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution, if the gentleman will withdraw the demand for the previous question for that purpose.

Mr. REED. I hope the gentleman will permit me to have read a decision that bears upon this point.

Mr. ATHERTON. I decline to withdraw the demand for the pre-

SPEER read first Mr. ATHERTON. I will withdraw the demand for the previous question for a moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Georgia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "forthwith" and insert "at twelve o'clock meridian to-day;" making it read:
""Resolved, That Messrs. Beale, Berry," &c., "absent without leave of the House, be forthwith arrested by the Sergeant-at-Arms and brought before the bar of the House at twelve o'clock meridian to-day," &c.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that twelve o'clock to-day has long since passed. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON] demands the previous question.

Mr. ATHERTON. I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia. Mr. KENNA.

The amendment is not in order.

Mr. ATHERTON. Then I will not accept it. I will yield long enough to hear the decision read which has been referred to by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. I read from the House Journal of the second session of the Twenty-fifth Congress, July 7, 1838:

of the Twenty-fifth Congress, July 7, 1838:

A motion was made by Mr. Wise, that the fifty-fourth rule of the House be enforced as it respects the absent members, and that messengers be dispatched in pursuance thereof; which said fifty-fourth rule is as follows:

"54. Upon the call of the House, the names of the members shall be called over by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; after which the names of the absentees shall again be called over, the doors shall then be shut, and those for whom no excuse or insufficient excuses are made, may, by order of those present, if fifteen in number, be taken into custody as they appear, or may be sent for and taken into custody wherever to be found, by special messengers to be appointed for that purpose."

A motion was made by Mr. Potts, that all further proceedings in the call be dispensed with. This motion was rejected.

Mr. Cushing stated that Mr. Cushman had absented himself from the House after answering to his name on the call; whereupon

The Sergeant-at-Arms was directed to enforce the attendance of Mr. Cushman. Mr. Stanly stated that Mr. McKay had absented himself from the House after answering to his name on the call; whereupon

The Sergeant-at-Arms was directed to enforce the attendance of Mr. McKay.

Of course without careful comparison, we cannot be sure that that

Of course, without careful comparison, we cannot be sure that that covers this proceeding; but it seems to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON] demands the previous question.

Mr. BOUCK. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 8.

Mr. SPEER. I make the point that a quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not necessary to have a quorum in these proceedings under a call of the House.

Mr. SIMONTON. Is it not necessary to have a quorum in ordering the previous question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not; otherwise less than a quorum could not transact the business necessary to secure the presence or absentees.

Mr. SIMONTON. Is it necessary there should be an ordering of the previous question in such proceedings?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question has been seconded and the question is on ordering the main question.

The main question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on agreeing to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. ATHERTON,] which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Messrs. Beale, Berry, Bland, Gillette, John T. Harris, Page, Phister, Reagan, Ross, and Rothwell, absent without leave of the House, be forthwith arrested by the Sergeant-at-Arms and brought before the bar of this House, and the Speaker issue his precept for that purpose.

Mr. CULBERSON. Pending that, I move that the House do now adjourn.

adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Should the House now adjourn this would come up as unfinished business in the morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the main question being ordered.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest to the Chair that all proceedings under a call are arrested by an adjournment.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—

ayes 32, noes 61.

Mr. WILSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 15, noes 79.

were—ayes 15, noes 79.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were not ordered and the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred on the resolution offered by Mr. ATHERTON; and being taken, there were—ayes 70, noes 24.

Mr. DIBRELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 15; not a sufficient number.

So the resolution was adonted.

So the resolution was adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms is ready to make another report.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar of the House and announced that he had in his custody Mr. CAMP, Mr. MULDROW, and Mr. ALDRICH of Rhode Island.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. CAMP, you have been absent from the sittings of the House without its leave. What excuse have you

Mr. CAMP. Only this, sir: I came to the House at eight o'clock this evening. I remained till half past nine. I listened to some good speeches and some not so good. Believing the House was about to adjourn, and having some friends here from a distance who are going to leave the city to-morrow morning, I went to meet them in pursuance of an engagement previously made. As soon as I learned the House was in session, I think the Sergeant-at-Arms will bear me out in saying, with commendable alacrity I started for the House.

Mr. HUNTON. And got here at four o'clock.

Mr. COVERT. I move that my colleague be excused.

The motion was agreed to. to offer?

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. MULDROW, you have been absent from the sittings of the House without its leave. What excuse have

Mr. MULDROW. I do not know whether my excuse is a good or a bad one. I think it very doubtful whether I would accept it my-self from anybody else. But I thought that the probabilities were that no business would be taken up this evening upon which the roll would be called. Mr. MANNING.

Mr. MANNING. It is you who have been taken up.
Mr. MULDROW. I supposed the business which would be taken up was what would go through by common consent, and that nobody would insist upon putting through any business to which there was any objection. Therefore I thought I might safely go home and did so. I went to bed about my usual hour and was rapped up at three o'clock very much to my discomfort and very much to my regret. That is my excuse.

Mr. MANNING. I move that my colleague be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. Aldrich you have been absent from the sittings of the House without its leave. What excuse have What excuse have

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. The only excuse I have is this: I attended a session of the House on Thursday night on public business. I had an engagement on Friday night, which I kept; but as soon as I was advised of the session of the House, I came here at once.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. I move that the gentleman from Rhode Island be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE (at four o'clock and five minutes a. m.) moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to, upon a division-ayes 41, noes 58.

Mr. TUCKER. I move that the House now take a recess until tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. With less than a quorum it is not competent for the House to take a recess.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would like to inquire, if an order of the House be passed to require that the parties named in the resolution just adopted and the other absentees should be brought to the bar of the House at twelve o'clock to-morrow, would it continue the order now made, or if the House adjourn will this "forthwith" business cease?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair supposes that, under decisions which have been read showing the practice of the House heretofore in such cases, an order could be made directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to produce the absentees before the House at its session to-morrow, to be then dealt with by the House.

Mr. MORSE. Would the business of the House this evening con-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This business of course would cease upon the adjournment.

Mr. TUCKER. As I understand it this whole proceeding is for the Mr. TUCKER. As I understand it this whole proceeding is for the purpose of compelling the attendance of the members of this House in order to produce a quorum here now. We have no right, as I apprehend, to arrest these absent members and bring them to the bar of the House to-morrow, because we can only go to the point of compelling their attendance to constitute a quorum of the House to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The decisions have been just the contrary.

Mr. TUCKER. We cannot bring them before the House to-morrow for contempt, because our whole purpose is to compel their attendance in order to constitute a quorum of the House to-day.

Mr. NEWBERRY. If it is in order I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution just adopted was passed, for the purpose of moving an amendment to bring the parties named in it before the House on Saturday at twelve o'clock.

Mr. WILSON. What for?

Mr. NEWBERRY. To bring them before the House.

Mr. WILSON. For what purpose?

Mr. WILSON. For what purpose ?
Mr. NEWBERRY. For the same purpose that they are to be

Mr. WILSON. They are to be brought here now to vote.

Mr. NEWBERRY. A decision was read that a warrant could issue directing them to be brought before the House at a future time.

Mr. WILSON. I do not understand that the House has any authority to do that now

Mr. NEWBERRY. The House has authority when these members are brought before it to determine what shall be done.

Mr. VALENTINE. I do not think any such decision was read. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] stated that in his knowledge there was such a case.

Mr. FRYE. That may be so. But it is utterly impossible to reconsider an order that is already being executed. We cannot reconsider it or amend it in any way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has always been so held in the House.

The warrant has gone into the hands of the officer of the House.

Mr. SPEER. I offer the order which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered. That the Sergeant-at-Arms produce before the House, at twelve o'clock Saturday, the members who have absented themselves since the first roll-call and who were not excused by the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Pending that, I move that the House now adjourn.

House now adjourn.

Mr. FRYE. I make the point of order against that resolution, that it is an order touching the same gentlemen about whom an order has just been made, and which is still pending and being executed. The same reason that would prevent the reconsideration of that resolution would prevent the adoption of the one now offered.

Mr. McGOWAN. And no business has intervened since the last motion to adjourn has been disposed of.

Mr. KENNA. I make the other point of order, that this House cannot now make an order to bring members before the House at a subnot now make an order to bring members before the House at a subsequent meeting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] is that the House now adjourn. No business has intervened since the last motion to adjourn was disposed of. Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. A resolution has been introduced and read. The SPEAKER pro tempore. A point of order is made against it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Does not the introduction of a resolution constitute business?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has not yet been received.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to ask whether or not, should the House now adjourn, the bill which has been under consideration to-night will go over until Saturday?

will go over until Saturday?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not.
Mr. WILSON. Then the only object of bringing these parties before the House on Saturday would be to punish them for a failure to be present now. I make the point of order against that resolution, that members cannot be brought forward at a future day to be punished for not being here to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a point of order. It is a question of power for the House to decide.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar of the House having in custody Mr. BUTTERWORTH, of Ohio.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. BUTTERWORTH, you have been absent from the session of the House without its leave. What excuse absent from the session of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I regret exceedingly if my absence has caused any inconvenience or delay. I have no excuse to offer for being absent other than the accumulation of correspondence, which demanded my presence at my room, and I remained there to attend to it. I had such an abiding faith in the wisdom and judgment of my fellow-members here that I had no doubt any business that might be transacted would be wisely and properly transacted. I have no other except to offer.

excuse to offer.

Mr. KITCHIN. I move that the gentleman be excused.

The motion was agreed to, there being ayes 31, noes not counted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move that the House now adjourn.

The question being put, the Speaker pro tempore declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 49, nays 72, not voting 171; as follows:

The question being taken, there were—ayes 36, noes 52.
Mr. SAMFORD. I call for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
Mr. HAWLEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it allowable that gentlemen who sit here on the floor should not be at liberty to vote on account of pairs? I think we have very nearly a quorum; there were 121 on the last call, and a good many members present were naired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a question for the House. The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a question for the House. Regularly, gentlemen who do not desire to vote ought to ask to be excused. If the gentleman from Connecticut makes the point, members declining to vote may be required to give an excuse; but that excuse ought to be given before the roll is called.

Mr. BRAGG. Can this House compel a man to vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That question will arise when the House attempts to do so.

Mr. BRAGG. I make the inquiry for the reason that the Chair said that members declining to vote must give their excuses.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair said that if gentlemen desired to make excuses they should do so before the call of the roll commences.

Mr. MANNING, (at five o'clock and five minutes a. m.) I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. FRYE. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to demand the yeas and nays on the motion to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

Mr. KENNA. The gentleman from Maine rose too late to make that demand, as he rose after the announcement of the result of the vote by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine was really on his feet, but the Chair did not know for what purpose he rose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. A motion to adjourn, pending that motion, is in order. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to adjourn pending the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KENNA. Mr. Speaker, although the gentleman from Maine rose for that purpose, he had to wait until the result was declared. And yet he waited longer than that, and until after the gentleman from Mississippi was recognized to move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would then always be in the power of the Chair to prevent any gentleman calling for the yeas and nays by simply recognizing some other gentleman on the floor. Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to ask information of the Clerk as to whether my colleague, Mr. CALDWELL, of Kentucky; has been paired for this night's session, and if so, with whom?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that pairs have already been announced once to-night and will not be announced again. The Chair, however, will cause the fact to be ascertained by the Clerk.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask, then, that if there be a pair for my colleague its conditions be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the pair of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Caldwell.]

Mr. HEILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Caldwell.] and if the condition of the pair be that I have no right to vote, except to make a quorum, then of course I shall withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pair between the gentlemen will be announced.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Heilman and Mr. Caldwell are paired for this night's session, January 21, 1881.

Mr. HEILMAN. Then I withdraw my vote.
The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.
Mr. KING. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KENNA. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared before the bar of the House, having in custody, in obedience to its orders, Mr. McCoid.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. McCoid, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its consent. What excuse have you to offer therefor ?

Mr. WARNER. I make the point of order that the power of the majority of those present, under the fifteenth rule, is exhausted when the gentleman is presented to the House, and that it can proceed no further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If that be the case the Chair is unable to see how he can recognize the gentleman from Ohio to make the point of order. [Laughter.] The gentleman himself has been brought in under the same rule and has been excused.

Mr. WARNER. I think I am not excused, although the Chair rules that I have been.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman was excused and that he has a right to make the point of order, and the

Mr. WARNER. I must appeal from the decision of the Chair, believing this to be a most important question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hopes the gentleman will take an appeal, because this is a question that may arise under the new rules and it ought to be settled clearly.

Mr. WARNER. Having made my point, I will withdraw it for the present, as gentlemen do not seem disposed to discuss or consider

The Sergeant-At-Arms. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that one of the deputies visited Mr. Lowe of Alabama twice, and on the last visit was informed by Mr. Lowe that he would not attend.

WELL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. HARRIS from the sitting of the House without leave. Mr. Harris, you have been absent thout leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I have been here twelve years—will have been on the 4th of March next. In my twelve years' service in this House I have no recollection of ever having been absent from a call of the House. I was here last night, and suffering from a very severe cold and still am, as will be apparent to the members present from my voice. I went home about twelve o'clock, because I was unwell and did not believe there would be a quorum here to-night, and in that it appears I am right.

Mr. WARNER. I move the gentleman from Virginia be excused.

Mr. WILLITS. I wish to ask if this is one of the gentlemen who left the House after the roll-call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It so appears from the record.

Mr. EINSTEIN. Did he give his parol at the door as we had to do?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course the Chair has no knowledge

Mr. McGOWAN. If in order, Mr. Speaker, I move that the gentleman from Virginia be excused upon the payment of a fine of $50. Mr. EINSTEIN. I second that motion.

Mr. WARNER. I make the point of order that the majority present have no power to punish. That must be done by the House.

Mr. CAMP. I move to amend the motion. I move the gentleman be expend unordificately.

Mr. CAMT. I move to amend the motion. I move the gentleman be excused unconditionally.

Mr. McMAHON. I doubt, Mr. Speaker, whether the gentlemen who are at the bar now have been made aware of the transactions that have taken place in their absence. They may desire to make some statement. I do not know how that is, but it seems to me that they ought to be informed; that the absentees brought in under this special resolution are those who responded upon the first roll-call and were not afterward found in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, with the permission of the House, will state to the gentleman from Virginia that there was, by order of the House, a second call of the roll, embracing the names of those members who had responded on the first call, and who, therefore, were supposed to be in the House at the time the doors were ordered to be closed. And upon that second call the names of the three gentlemen who have just come in were called, and not responded to, together with some other members; and thereupon the House ordered that process should be issued against those particular members by name who were present when the doors were closed and who did not answer when the roll was called the second time.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. It has been reported these gentlemen have wiolated their parol to the Doorkeeper.

Mr. WARNER. I do not understand any parol was given.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair knows nothing of that.

Mr. MILLS. I think we have accomplished all we can accomplish to-night. Inasmuch as it has been the universal practice of members of Congress to absent themselves from the night sessions of the hers of Congress to absent themselves from the night sessions of the House, and inasmuch as these gentlemen have all the precedents heretofore for years in that regard on their side, and believing we have accomplished all the good we can and will not accomplish any further good by punishing these gentlemen, I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a question already pending before the House on experience the gentlement from Viscisia [Machine Language of the content of the content of the second of the content of the second of the content of the second of to avoid an extra session, particularly the gentleman from Virginia and his friends, and if they are to avoid having an extra session they must give their attendance here.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I have been here for twelve years and have not before, to my recollection, been absent from any call of the House. The House, I think, will bear witness that I have been a House. The Houpunctual member.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to excuse the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. McGOWAN. My motion was to excuse the gentleman on the

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion was made to excuse the gentleman from Virginia, whereupon, if the Chair's recollection be correct, the gentleman from Michigan offered his motion as an amend-

Mr. McGOWAN. I think not.

Mr. CAMP. I moved to excuse the gentleman.
Mr. McGOWAN. That was after my motion.
Mr. WARNER. I made the motion in the first instance to excuse the gentleman from Virginia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Warner] to move that the gentleman from Virginia be excused, and then the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McGowan] rose and moved that he be excused on the payment of $50. Then another gentleman, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Camp.] who had not heard the previous motion, moved that the gentleman be excused absolutely. It was really the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] who made the motion to excuse.

Mr. ROBINSON. I quite agree with what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has said. The House has proceeded very irregularly on former occasions of this kind; certainly during all my experience. And while of course we who have been here to-night feel larly on former occasions of this kind; certainly during all my experience. And while of course we who have been here to-night feel that other gentlemen should have been here, yet we know they have taken license from the practice heretofore of the House. I have been glad to see that we have conducted the latter part of this night's proceedings in better order. I hope with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Frye] that we will conduct these proceedings correctly hereafter. It may be, as has been suggested, that the Committee on Rules may report some further regulations in regard to the matter. But I hope the imposition of a fine will not be pressed against any gentlemen here at this late hour. I hope it will not be pressed even to the extent of being put to a vote. I think we will all be better satisfied if there is no fine imposed on the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. McGOWAN. Having made the motion that the gentleman from Virginia be excused on the payment of a fine, I desire to say a word. I did not make the motion with any personal animosity toward the gentleman. I only made it from the fact that there had been discussion with reference to the matter of gentlemen leaving the Hall after they had answered to their names on a call of the House. They knew the doors had been closed, and they left the members here without a quorum to bear the burden of a whole night's members here without a quorum to bear the burden of a whole night's session. If, however, it is thought best by gentlemen present that the motion should not be pressed, I am not disposed to press it. I should certainly like to have an expression from the members present on that kind of conduct. But having said this much, I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore.

The question is on the motion that the gentleman from Virginia be excused.

The motion was agreed to. Mr. MILLS. I now move that all further proceedings under the

Mr. TALBOTT. I move when the House adjourns it be to meet on Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order. This House as at present constituted is not competent to make such an order.

Mr. ROTHWELL, (at the bar.) I desire to make an inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROTHWELL. I gather from what was said in reference to the case just passed upon by the House that intimations have been made Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. So far as I was concerned, I felt unwell, and so announced to a number of gentlemen, and sought a pair before I left. I asked Dr. Lohing, who said the bill came from his section, and he desired to vote on it. I passed out of the door without giving any parole, with the intention of not returning. I did not intend to deceive the Doorkeeper.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. It would have been easy for the gentleman who are now here at the bar in response to a warrant of the Speaker of this House that their conduct was something different from the conduct of other members who are absent. I ask to know if under these circumstances the House will adjourn before those gentlemen who are here have been heard? I ask if this House is to adjourn with such an intimation on its record against honorable gentlemen, who have come here to-night under these circumstances. stances? I hope the House will not adjourn until at least one of them has been heard.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. WARNER. And I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not wish to cut off any gentleman who desires to be heard; but I desire to know whether, unless the point be made that no quorum is present, it is not within the power of the House to fix the day to which it shall adjourn. If the House has power to adjourn, which is a constitutional power, has it not the power to fix the day to which it shall adjourn, unless the point is made that no quorum is present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The difficulty is, the Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] that the Chair is bound to take notice of the fact that no quorum is present pending such proceedings as these which are now going on, because pending such proceedings as these which are now going on, because they are based on that fact.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If proceedings under the call should be dispensed with-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would be a different question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want all these gentlemen to be heard who desire to be heard. Then, in view of the hour at which this session will terminate, waiving the point of a quorum, I ask that a motion to adjourn until Monday next be agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. That is in violation of the order for the session tonight.

Mr. BLACKBURN. This House is clothed with the power to adjourn.

Mr. KEIFER. That is all.
Mr. BLACKBURN. And if so, can it not fix the hour or the day to which it shall adjourn?
Mr. KEIFER. It will be in violation of its order.
Mr. BLACKBURN. I grant that if the point be made that no quorum is present, then less than a quorum cannot adjourn over notil Monday. until Monday.

mtil Monday.

Mr. KEIFER. That point will be made.

The SPEAKER protempore. Both motions having been withdrawn for the present, the Chair will now proceed. Mr. Bland, you have been absent from the sittings of the House without its leave. Have you any excuse to offer?

Mr. Bland. I have no excuse to offer further than I am not well account to be been and was not well when I went away. I know that enough to be here, and was not well when I went away. I know that I should have asked leave of the House before going. But there was no quorum at that time, and it appeared to me there was no probability that there would be one to-night, and I did not deem it necessary to ask leave of absence.

I have not been well for several days, and I am not well now. I am very sorry if I have placed myself in contempt of the House in any way. I should not have left had I felt able to remain here to-any way. I should not have left had I felt able to remain here tonight.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the gentleman be excused.

Mr. FRYE. It might as well be said that members of the House are well aware that for years Mr. Bland's health has not been good.

The motion to excuse Mr. Bland was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. ROTHWELL, you have been absent from the sittings of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. ROTHWELL, I attack A. M.

Mr. ROTHWELL. I attended the night session of yesterday; the weather was very inclement indeed, but I was here. I was here tonight, and the record will show that I was here until after the first

I do not know what intimations have been made with reference to that matter, but I gathered from what was said in regard to one of the cases just passed upon by the House that some criticism has been made upon my absence under these circumstances. My reason for leaving, which was before the closing of the doors, and when in my judgment no man had the right to exact or expect a parol from me, was on account of being unwell.

Mr. WILSON. You gave no parol?

Mr. ROTHWELL. I gave no parol and nobody had a right to ask any of me. I went to my room and went to bed. I was unwell then and I am unwell now. I have been under the care of a physician for ten days or more.

ten days or more.

I came up here last night and to-night in order to forward the public business. I came up here at serious detriment of my health. Your record will show that from the time the gavel was raised on the first day of the extra session of this Congress, I have been here at every roll-call, unless I was sick at the time and excused, whether it was night session or day session. I did not come twelve hundred miles from my constituents to idle away my time in the city of Washington, with the many fascinations and pleasures that are found here. This is my defense. Inasmuch as I am recorded as absent from to-night's session, I appeal to the long record of this Congress to show that heretofore I have always been present; and if now, by the sacrifice of my health to-night, I can pass one pension bill for a poor soldier who has suffered and bled for his country, I am willing to do it. [Applause.]

it. [Applause.]
But when last night it was apparent to me that nothing was to be done, that the bill then pending would involve an all-night session and nothing then be accomplished; that the forty pension bills standing next on the Calendar were to go unheard perhaps for all the rest of this session, in consideration of the record I have made here in this House, and in consideration of the state of my health, I thought I might absent myself without drawing any unfriendly criticism for so doing.

I say, now, that if to-night there has fallen from the lips of any gentleman here—any friend of mine; for I have no foes here—anything that might in the least degree impeach my honor, he should now withdraw it. I make that request.

Mr. FROST. I move that my colleague, Mr. ROTHWELL, be excused.

Mr. MILLS. I think it perhaps necessary to state that what the gentleman from Missouri has alluded to occurred in the debate about the Doorkeeper permitting parties who were present to leave the Hall. There was a charge made, perhaps by one member of the House, that the Doorkeeper had not done his duty.

A MEMBER. It is all right now.

Mr. MILLS. I was saying that the remarks to which the gentleman may have alluded occurred in that way, and I am perfectly willing that the whole matter, unpleasant as it is, seeming perhaps to reflect on the Doorkeeper or on some of our members, be omitted from the RECORD. I ask that it be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion to excuse the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. ROTHWELL.]

The motion was agreed to.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar, having in custody, in obedience to the order of the House, Mr. CLAFLIN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. CLAFLIN, you have been absent from the sittings of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. CLAFLIN. I have no special excuse to offer. I attended the session last night according to my ordinary rule, and so far as I am aware I believe I have been in attendance at every night session since I became a member of Congress. I beg pardon of the House, and will only add that I came here upon the first intimation that my attendance was recessive.

ance was necessary.

Mr. SAMFORD. I move that the gentleman be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I rise to a question of privilege. This House has received from its Sergeant-at-Arms a report stating that a member has returned answer to the call of the House that he will not come. I refer to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Lowe.] In this reference I make no personal attack upon that gentleman; but I think it is the duty of this House to dispose of that case before we adjourn. [Cries of "Right!"]

The SPEAKER are tensor. Wh.

of "Right!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What motion does the gentleman make?

Mr. KING. I move that Mr. Lowe be called to the bar of the House on Saturday at two o'clock, to make his excuse or apology to the House—to purge himself of the contempt he has committed.

Several MEMBERS. Say Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] moves that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Lowe] be ordered to appear at the bar of the House on Saturday at two o'clock.—

Mr. KING. To purge himself of his contempt of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To give his excuse for not responding to the summons of the House as conveyed to him by the Sergeant-at-

Mr. VALENTINE. As the Chair puts the motion it does not seem to be the proper wording. Mr. Lowe has sent word to this House by the Sergeant-at-Arms or a deputy absolutely refusing to obey the order of the House.

order of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But this House, the Chair supposes, would not adjudge him to be in contempt before he appears. The Chair assumes that he is first to appear and be heard, and that then the House, if it thinks proper, may adjudge him to be in contempt.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Any other course would be condemning a man before hearing him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the very reason the Chair put the motion in the language he did, providing simply that Mr. Lowe appear to give his excuse.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, there being ayes 84, noes not counted; and accordingly (at six o'clock a. m., Saturday, January 22) the House adjourned.

The recess having expired, the Journal of yesterday's proceedings will now be read.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KEIFER. I rise to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, the privileged matter of the Florida contested-election case of Bisbee vs. Hull.

The SPEAKER. It was demanded, but not seconded.

Mr. SHELLEY. I shall move that the House do now adjourn.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, notifying the House of the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 6730) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, with amendments in which concurrence was requested.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KEIFER. If it be requisite, in order to bring this contested-election question up for consideration, I will move to dispense with the morning hour for reports from committees. I supposed, however, the morning hour for reports from committees. I supposed, however, it was up already.

The SPEAKER. Its recognition has been already made.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. State it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I see that Mr. BUCKNER, of Missouri, was reported by the Sergeaut-at-Arms as not found. He was excused by order of the House, and ought not to have been sent for.

The SPEAKER. It is a misprint, the Chair is informed, and has been corrected.

Mr. ACKLEN. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. Pending which, the gentleman from Alabama
[Mr. SHELLY] moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SHELLEY. That is made with no view of interfering with the business of the House, but quite a number of gentlemen have been up all night and are not in condition to work to-day.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist on it?

Mr. SHELLEY. I withdraw it for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Acklen] moves to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. HAYES. Does not the contested-election case come up as the unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. It does after the morning hour.

Mr. Acklen's motion was agreed to, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof.

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask now the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me to introduce a bill.

Mr. KEIFER. I cannot do so now.

FLORIDA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—BISBEE VS. HULL.

Mr. KEIFER. I demand the previous question on the resolutions reported from the Committee on Elections.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. Resolved, That Noble A. Hull is not entitled to retain his seat as a member of the Forty-sixth Congress of the United States as a Representative of the second congressional district of the State of Florida.

2. Resolved, That Horatio Bisbee, jr., is entitled to a seat as a member of the Forty-sixth Congress as Representative of the second congressional district of the State of Florida.

Mr. KEIFER. I insist on the demand for the previous question.
Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment before he demands the previous question?
Mr. KEIFER. After the demand is seconded I will yield to the gentleman if he desires to be heard.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. KEIFER moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me now for a few moments.

Mr. KEIFER. What time does the gentleman from Illinois want?

Mr. KEIFER. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois want?
Mr. SPRINGER. Five minutes, perhaps; certainly not exceeding that.

Mr. KEIFER. I will yield to the gentleman that length of time.
Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state, in explanation of the course pursued by some of the members on this side of the House yesterday, that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DAVIDSON] desired that his colleague might be permitted to have an opportunity, if he desired, to be present in the House when this case was decided; and at his instance gentlemen on this side of the House resisted the taking up of the case at that time. There were also some members upon this side of the House who thought that the case of Yeates vs. Martin should also be considered at the same time, and in connection with this case. I will state to the House that the case of Yeates vs. Martin is pending in the committee. It will be ready for a report in a few days. It was desired that these two cases should be considered at one and the same time. They were apprehensive, perhaps, without any good ground for it, that gentlemen upon the other side of the House, after this case of Bisbee vs. Hull was disposed of might interpose factious opposition to the decision of the House in this other case of Yeates vs. Martin, which involved the unseating of a republican and the seating of a democrat. But I am assured by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Keiffer,] who has charge of this case, that if this is disposed of without further delay, so far as he is concerned, there will be no such opposition upon that side of the House to the immediate consideration of the case of Yeates vs. Martin when that is reported. With that understanding, and believing the gentleman represents that side of the House upon that side of the Committee on Elections having charge of the case now before the House, and believing also that his arrangement or understanding will be acceded to by his friends on that side of the House, no further opposition so far as I am concerned will be mad that subject.

Now, Mr. Speaker, unless there are some other gentlemen desirous of being heard on that side, I will ask for a vote upon the

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not understand the gentleman from Ohio to say that I have misrepresented him.

Mr. KEIFER. No; I have only stated my own understanding as

So far as I know, no person on the committee present or absent has opposed the report of the committee in this case.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I asked the question because I see that the report is not signed.

Mr. KEIFER. Well, it is not usual to sign a report that is unanimous. I was instructed by the committee to make the report to the House unanimously, and it is not essential where the committee makes a unanimous report, and, in fact, it is not the practice to sign it under such circumstances.

Now, Mr. Speaker, unless there is some further question by some gentleman on the other side of this case or some gentleman who desires to be heard upon it, to whom I will yield a limited amount of time, I think that we had better have a vote upon the first resolution. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The resolution will again be reported to the House

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Noble A. Hull is not entitled to retain his seat as a member of the Forty-sixth Congress of the United States as a Representative of the second congressional district of the State of Florida.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The second resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. Resolved, That Horatio Bisbee, jr., is entitled to a seat as a member of the Forty-sixth Congress as a Representative of the second congressional district of the State of Florida.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. Horatio Bisbee, jr., then appeared at the bar of the House and qualified by taking the oath prescribed by section 1756 of the Revised Statutes.

DISTRIBUTION OF CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (H. R. No. 340) in reference to the distribution of the Congressional Record, for the purpose of moving concurrence in the Senate amendments. The joint resolution has reference to furnishing the Congressional Record to members of the Supreme Court of the United States. The amendments by the Senate are merely formal.

There was no objection, and the amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

After the word "the," where it first occurs in line 2, insert the word "associate." At the end of the joint resolution add the following:

"And the Public Printer shall also furnish to the Official Reporter of the Senate five bound copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for each session."

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF UNITED STATES COAST SURVEY.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Printing. I am directed to report back with a favorable recommendation the concurrent resolution of the Senate which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senats, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 3,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the year ending June 30, 1880, for distribution by the said superintendent.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The committee having considered the accompanying resolution respectfully recommend its passage without amendment. The cost of the publication will be about three thousand dollars.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missis-

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. The regular number of copies is 1,900. This resolution provides for printing exactly the same number as we print every year.

The resolution was adopted.

REPORT ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back without amendment and to recommend the passage of the Senate concurrent resolution which I send

Mr. KEIFER. No; I have only stated my own understanding as to what took place.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a single question.

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I wish to ask if this is the unanimous report from the Committee on Elections?

Mr. KEIFER. It was a unanimous report as to the sub-committee, indorsed by all the members of the committee who were present at the time the case was considered, and they were all present but three.

sale by the Public Printer under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereon added.

The resolution was adopted.

REPORT ON COTTON-WORM.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report with amendments the House concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 30,000 copies of the second revised edition, with necessary illustrations, of Bulletin No. 3 of the United States Entomological Commission, being a report on the cotton and boll-worms, with means of counteracting their ravages; 10,000 copies thereof for the use of the Senate, 18,000 for the use of the House, and 2,000 for the Interior Department.

The report of the Committee on Printing was read, as follows:

The committee after considering the accompanying resolution respectfully report it back to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass with the following amendments:

In line 11, after the word "thousand," insert the words "one hundred and eighty."
In line 12 strike out the words "two thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one thousand eight hundred and twenty."

The cost of the publication will be $3,165.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. The amendments simply relate to the distribution.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to,

and the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

HAYDEN'S ATLAS OF COLORADO.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back the House concurrent resolution which I send to the desk, with a substitute therefor, and to recommend the passage of the substitute.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the Public Printer be directed to furnish 3,000 copies of the Atlas of Colorado, by F.V. Hayden; 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The substitute recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

The substitute recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the Public Printer be directed to furnish 3,000 copies of the Atlas of Colorado, by F. V. Hayden; provided the same can be supplied in sheets in every way equal in style and quality to the edition published by order of the Department of the Interior, for a sum not exceeding $3.50 per copy; 800 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,515 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 685 for the use of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. SIMONTON. I wish to ask the gentleman who makes this report if he can inform the House why it is that reports of the Departments for this year have not yet been printed by the Public Printer? I particularly desired to obtain the report of the Secretary of the Navy in order that I might inform myself in regard to the appropriations for that Department, and I have not been able as yet to find it. There are also other reports not yet furnished, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi, the chairman of the Committee on Printing, if he can inform us why these things are so; and also if work of the kind now recommended does not tend to delay the printing of those other necessary reports which ought to have been printed heretofore for the information of the House in making approprinted heretofore for the information of the House in making appropriations for this year?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I can answer one of the questions of the gentleman from Tennessee; perhaps I cannot answer the

I have not the control of the Printing Office. All that the Committee on Printing has to determine is whether the resolutions referred to them are proper, and whether publication should be made or not. The Printing Office is entirely independent of that committee. I cannot tell why the reports referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee have not been printed and furnished to members. I do know in regard to some of them that the manuscript has not been furnished in time. I do not believe that the office has been in fault in this matter. There has been delay on the part of those who furnished the in time. I do not believe that the office has been in fault in this matter. There has been delay on the part of those who furnished the manuscript, and as matter of course the type could not be set up or the reports printed till the manuscript was there.

In regard to the second question, whether this would not tend to retard work already on hand, I would say that these sheets are furnished by parties outside who own the stone. Nothing has to be done at the Printing Office but to print the copies. It is a small matter. I move the adoption of the substitute.

The substitute was agreed to, and the resolution, as amended by the adoption of the substitute, was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. I call for the regular order, and call up the unfinished business, being House bill No. 4748, known as the interstate-commerce bill.

Mr. COX. I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Reagan] to yield to me to call up a bill from the Speaker's table.

Mr. REAGAN. I will do so if it leads to no debate.

Mr. COX. I will withdraw it if there is any debate upon it.

Mr. REAGAN. I yield for that purpose.

FOREIGN DECORATIONS, ETC., FOR UNITED STATES OFFICERS. Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 1396 be taken from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time. It is a bill authorizing the persons therein named to accept of certain decorations and presents from foreign governments. The Senate has consolidated in that bill several bills already passed by the House. I desire to have it considered and passed at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be itenacted, &c., That Joseph Irish, of the United States Marines, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept from the Spanish Government the Grand Cross of Naval Merit of the second class, for services rendered the officers and crow of the Spanish Government of the Grand Cross of Naval Merit of the second class, for services rendered the officers and crow of the Spanish Government of the Government of the Cross of the Legion of Honor, in appreciation of services in connection with the exposition of 1878 at Paris;

That General Francis A. Walker, Superintendent of the Crossus, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept from the President of the French Republic the Cross of the Legion of Honor, in appreciation of services in connection with the exposition of 1878 at Paris;

That General Francis A. Walker, Superintendent of the Census, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept a decoration of Knight Commander of the Swedish Order of Wasa, tendered him by the Government of Sweden, and also that of Commander of the Spanish Order of Isabella, from the Government of Spain, as a recognition of his services as chief of the bureau of awards at the centennial exhibition at Philadelphia;

That First Lieutenant Heury Metcalfe, of the Ordinance Department of the Sultan of That First Lieutenant Heury Metcalfe, of the Ordinance Department of the Sultan's appreciation of the efforts of the John of
There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

Mr. COX. I call the previous question upon ordering the bill to third reading.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was read a third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. COX. I desire to state that the House has already passed sep-

Mr. WRIGHT. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of this bill.

Many Members. Oh, no.

Mr. SHELLEY. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. LOWE. I rise to a personal explanation.

Mr. COX. I hope my friend from Alabama [Mr. Lowe] will allow this bill to be passed.

The SPEAKER. The pending motion is that of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. SHELLEY,] that the House now adjourn.

Mr. SHELLEY. I withdraw that motion for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT] demands the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill just taken from the Speaker's table.

The question was taken: and upon a division there were—aves 21

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 21, noes 126. So (one-fifth not voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were not ordered. The bill was then passed.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. LOWE. I see from the RECORD of this morning that the Sergeant-at-Arms last night reported me as refusing to obey an order of this House. In making that statement the Sergeant-at-Arms suppressed the excuse which I gave him at the time. I was sick, had taken medicine before nine o'clock, and had retired to bed. I had no disposition to treat the order of the House with contempt.

Mr. CARLISLE. As I happened to be in the chair last night when the report of the Sergeant at-Arms was made, perhaps I should say in justification of him that when he made his report to the House he stated distinctly that when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Lowe] was called upon the first time by his subordinate the gentleman from Alabama said that he was sick and unable under the circumstances to attend the session of the House but that when he was called upon Alabama said that he was sick and unable under the circumstances to attend the session of the House, but that when he was called upon the second time he refused to come. That is the whole statement made by the Sergeant-at-Arms as I understood it.

Mr. LOWE. That statement is supplemental to the one contained in the RECORD. It does not appear in the RECORD that I made any excuse whatever, but my excuse is suppressed. I stated to the Sergeant-at-Arms that I was sick and would not come.

Mr. STEVENSON. I move that the order of the House taken last pight in regard to the continuous from Alabama [Mr. LOWE] he

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHELLEY. I move that the House now adjourn.
Mr. BEALE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that for a moment.

Many Members. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Shelley,] that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 132,

Before the result of this vote was announced, Mr. REAGAN, and Mr. SINGLETON of Illinois, called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It is well known that we were up all last night, and I hope there will be no objection to an adjourn-

Mr. DIBRELL. A quorum of the House remained away and slept all night, and they can afford to work to-day.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were—ayes 34, noes 148; not one-fifth voting in the affirmative

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. REAGAN called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. KEIFER and others. Oh, no.
Mr. REAGAN. There are some gentlemen here who are ready to proceed with the debate upon the interstate-commerce bill.
Many Members. Regular order!
The question was taken upon ordering tellers, and there were 30 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being one-fifth of a quorum) tellers were ordered; and Mr. SHELLEY and Mr. REAGAN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 32, noes 148.

So (one-fifth not voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were not ordered on the motion to adjourn.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Pending the announcement of the result of the vote upon the motion

Pending the announcement of the result of the vote upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BEALE said: I rise to a question of privilege. From the proceedings of last night, as reported in the RECORD of this morning, it would appear that I had absented myself from the House after the doors were ordered to be closed, and the inference is that in so absenting myself I violated my parol. I wish to state that not a door had been closed when I left the House, I was here, responded to my name when the roll was called, and afterward, after responding, I left the Hall, not one door being closed at that time. No one stopped me, and no one had the right to stop me.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS. Iask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6730) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfelling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, be taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. WARD, for one week from Monday next, on account of urgent business;

To Mr. Walter A. Wood, for next week, on account of important business; he being required to attend the annual meeting of a company of which he is president; and To Mr. Evans, for ten days from to-day, on account of sickness in LAND-GRANT RAILROAD IN MICHIGAN.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, asking Congress to appropriate lands in aid of the construction of a railway from Saint Mary's Falls to the Marquette and Mackinaw Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

The result of the vote was then announced on the motion to adjourn; and accordingly (at one o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1921) to declare the true intent and meaning of the act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia," &c., approved June 16, 1880, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1956) to increase the pension of John H. Jessup, submitted an adverse report theron; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Franklin R. Sherwood, praying for an increase of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3487) granting a pension to James Forsyth Harrison, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which ported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WHYTE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) ratifying settlement of taxes made by the District commissioners with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 799) granting a pension to Richard P. Taylor, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill

(S. No. 1885) granting a pension to Thomas H. Canfield, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GROOMB, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2123) granting a pension to Albert L. Jack, reported it with an amendment to the title, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 624) granting a pension to Robert S. Goodall, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF LINE OF OLD CANAL.

Mr. HARRIS. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 369) making appropriation for filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the grounds south of the Capitol along the line of the old canal, and for other purposes, to report it favorably and with-the old canal, and for other purposes, to report it invorably and without amendment. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the joint resolution at this time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It appropriates $20,000 for the purpose of continuing the filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the old canal, the grounds of the United States south of the Capitol, along the line of the canal.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GENEVA AWARD FUND.

Mr. GARLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary have instructed me to report back adversely the bill (S. No. 1903) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and aucontinuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and authorizing the adjudication and payment of certain other claims upon the fund created by section 15 of chapter 459 of the laws of the Fortythird Congress, and in lieu of it to report a substitute, the passage of which they recommend. I would call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] to this matter.

The bill (S. No. 2091) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and for the distribution of the unap-missioners of Alabama chains, and for the distribution of the imappropriated moneys of the Geneva award, was read twice by its title.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to state to the Senator from Massachusetts who has a resolution before the Senate now standing for some considerable time on the Calendar, instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to report in reference to this subject, that the bill reported by the committee now is substantially the same bill that was reported by them at the last session of Congress. The report is not a unanimous one upon this occasion. Two of the Senators, I am authorized to say, differ in reference to that subject, and favor the bill that was to say, differ in reference to that subject, and favor the bill that was introduced originally by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] in the place of which this is a substitute.

The committee have not changed their opinion in reference to this question, but have authorized me simply to report back in substance the former bill. Although not agreeing with the Senator from Massachusetts upon the subject, I will aid the Senator from Massachusetts in getting it up for the disposition of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas if there was presented to the committee a netition signed by a very

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas if there was presented to the committee a petition signed by a very large number of the persons who would be benefited by giving this money to the insurers, disclaiming any desire on their part to have the money so disposed of, and expressing their opinion that it ought in justice to go according to the bill of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. GARLAND. That petition and other petitions and propositions were before the committee, but notwithstanding that disclaimer on the part of the petitioners referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts, the convictions of a majority of the committee were not changed as to the legal status of this question. As I said differing changed as to the legal status of this question. As I said, differing with the Senator from Massachusetts as also the Senator from Vermont in their views upon this proposition, yet as the majority of the Senate voted us down before, I shall throw no obstacle in the way of considering the question and arriving at whatever conclusion the Senate may think fit to adopt.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill reported adversely will be postponed indefinitely, if there be no objection, and the bill now reported placed on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SLATER (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2077) for the relief of Hadley Hobson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Com-

Hobson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ROLLINS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2078) to remit certain taxes, assessments, and penalties upon parsonage property in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2079) to provide for a free bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2087) to establish a post-route in the State of Florida; which was read by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. PLUMB asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2088) to amend section 13 of the act of Congress, approved July 12, 1876, making appropriations for the Post-Office Department; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2089) to extend to the ports of El Paso, in the State of Texas; Atchison, Leavenworth, and Topeka, in the State of Kansas; and Kansas City, in the State of Missouri, the privileges of certain sections of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALLISON (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2090) to confirm a certain land claim in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. MORGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2092) to repeal an act approved March 3, 1873, relating to the entry of coal lands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MCDONALD asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2093) authorizing the legal representatives to introduce a bill (S. AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. PLUMB submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the post-route bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

EXPORTATION OF CATTLE TO CUBA.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into the expediency of modifying the treaty with Spain so that cattle from all parts of the United States may be exported to the island of Cuba on equal and fair rates of duties.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolu-

Mr. CALL. I wish to say a single word in explanation of the obpet of the resolution. I have information from Florida that there is a large cattle trade growing up in that portion of the country with the island of Cuba, but that the rates of duties are unfair in their discrimination against the kind of cattle grown in the State of Florida. I think something like three or four hundred thousand dollars' worth of cattle were exported during the last year to the island of Cuba, but the rates of duty there, owing to the size of the cattle, I understand, are about twice what would be imposed upon cattle from the South American States and from other portions of our own country.

The object of the resolution is to have an inquiry by the Committee on Foreign Relations to see if some modification may not be made in the present treaty relations with the Government of Spain, so that the cattle of the State of Florida may be exported at a fair and legal rate of duty.

The resolution was agreed to.

ELLEN M. BOGGS.

Mr. BROWN. On Friday last I reported back the bill (S. No. 1880) granting a pension to Mrs. Ellen M. Boggs, widow of William Brenton Boggs, deceased, with a recommendation that it do not pass, and ton Boggs, deceased, with a recommendation that it do not pass, and it was indefinitely postponed. I learn that members of the committee desire that the Senate shall consider the bill. I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed, in order that it may be placed upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be reconsidered if there be no objection. It is reconsidered; and the bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

NOTICES OF BUSINESS.

NOTICES OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PENDLETON. I desire to say to the Senate that to-morrow morning, immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, I shall call up the bill (S. No. 2038) making appropriation for completing, compiling, and publishing the returns of the tenth census, and for other purposes. I desire to notify Senators of the fact that there is a printed report accompanying the bill, to which I invite their attention before the bill shall be taken up.

While I am on my feet, I desire to say that day after to-morrow, at the conclusion of the morning business, I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 1441) for the relief of the captain, owners, officers, and crew of the late United States private-armed brig General Armstrong, their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns. I call the attention of Senators to the fact that there is a report both in the House of Representatives and in the Senate on that bill.

DONALD M'NEILL FAIRFAX.

Mr. WHYTE. Through the courtesy of the Senate, on Thursday last, when the Calendar was up, the bill (S. No. 1513) for the relief of Commodere Donald McNeill Fairfax, United States Navy, was passed over on account of my temporary absence from the Senate. The bill will not take a moment for its consideration, I am sure, and I ask unanimous consent that I may call it up and have it disposed of. It is merely changing the number on the register of rear-admirals, with the consent of both of the rear-admirals who are below. It does not affect anybody's right, and it is a mere matter of pride to be restored to the place be had. to the place he had.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was passed over, the Chair remembers, without prejudice.

Mr. WHYTE. It is the last one that was reached on the Calendar. By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WHYTE. Since the bill was reported Commodore Fairfax has been appointed a rear-admiral and occupies the same position which he did as a commodore. Therefore I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to propose an amendment as a substitute for the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice of the Senate, to appoint Donald McNeill Fairfax to be a rear-admiral on the active list next after Rear-Admiral Thomas H. Stevens, being the original relative position held by him on the Navy Register for thirty years.

The amendment was agreed to, The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 340) in reference to the distribution of the Congressional Record.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (S. No. 1922) for the relief of Brigadier-General and Brevet
Major-General Edward O. C. Ord, United States Army;

A bill (S. No. 1396) authorizing the persons therein named to accept of certain decorations and presents from foreign governments, and of certain decorations and presents from foreign governments, and for other purposes; and A joint resolution (S. R. No. 144) authorizing the loan of certain flags and bunting to the committee on inaugural ceremonies.

The message further announced that the House had agreed in the following concurrent resolutions of the Senate:
A resolution for the printing of 3,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the year ending June 30, 1880; and
A resolution for the printing of 10,000 extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1880.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following concurrent resolutions; in which it asked the concurrence of the Senate:

A resolution for the printing of 30,000 copies of the second revised edition, with necessary illustrations, of Bulletin No. 3 of the United States Entomological Commission, being a report on the cotton and boll worms, with means of counteracting their ravages; and A resolution providing that the Public Printer be directed to furnish 3,000 copies of the Atlas of Colorado, by F. V. Hayden; provided the same can be supplied in sheets in every way equal in style and quality to the edition published by order of the Department of the Interior for a sum not exceeding $3.50 per copy.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 1894) authorizing the employment of an inspector of plumbing in and for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-Pres-

GENERAL ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to call up for consideration the bill (S. No. 1992) to place Ulysses S. Grant, late General, and ex-President of the United States, upon the retired list of the Army.

Mr. BAYARD was addressing the Chair while the Secretary called Mr. ALLISON'S name and he responded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Illinois, who proposes to take up this bill, a special act retiring the ex President of the United States and placing him upon the retired list of the Army, whether it would not be better to allow other measures to be considered in connection which have been presented to the Senate and supported by memorials, one of which I presented myself a few days ago and had sent by inadvertence to the Committee on the Judiciary, proposing in lieu of any special legislation upon this subject affecting only a single individual that there should be a general law supplying a deficiency, as I consider it, in the present legislation of the United States, and give to every individual who has ever occupied or shall hereafter occupy the great office of the Chief Magistracy of this Union a compensation for life in retirement in such proportion as should secure permanently independence against pecuniary want. Such a proposition has been made to the Senate and referred to one of its committees and I submit to the honorable Senator who has this special act in charge whether it would not be well ator who has this special act in charge whether it would not be well to allow a matter of such general interest and importance to come up at the same time and be considered with his own bill which has in view relief for a single individual only—which special case will, I believe, find itself amply provided for by a general law—which will apply to an entire class of cases in which the distinguished citizen referred to will be included.

I have no hesitancy in saying, as it is not a matter of recent thought with me but one of consideration for some time, that there should be in a popular government provision against popular caprice or passing temper for a ruler who independently and conscientiously performs what may be for the time an unpopular duty.

I cannot now propose to enter upon the merits of the respective propositions. I have no right to do so at this stage of the proceedings, but I submit to the honorable Senator and to the Senate is it not better for us to bring this question up broadly for deliberation and consider all these relative propositions all together.

For that reason I shall not vote to postpone the present order and take up this special bill reported by the honorable Senator from Illinois from the Committee on Military Affairs, because I desire that the discussion and the principles that underlie it should be made upon the different propositions at the same time.

the different propositions at the same time.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not intend to detain the Senate a moment; but inasmuch as the remarks of the Senator from Delaware have been to nasmuch as the remarks of the Senator from Delaware have been to a certain extent directed to me, appealing to me to allow this matter to go over on account of some important bill in a similar direction, I shall be excused for saying a word. It is a matter entirely with the Senate to say what disposition it shall make of this bill. I introduced the bill as providing for an exceptional case. I will not discuss the propriety of retiring ex-Presidents of the United States in connection with this bill; but I will merely say that in a great republic like this, where there have been so many bills passed in the Senate for cases of an exceptional character in connection with the military service the opposition to such a bill as this looks to me as being rather service, the opposition to such a bill as this looks to me as being rather of a personal character than on account of the features of the bill.

When this great country was seething and writhing in pain and a man led the victorious armies of this Union to preserve it for the benefit of you on that side of the Chamber as well as of us on this side, shall we be less magnanimous than monarchs have been in past side, shall we be less magnanimous than monarchs have been in past ages? When we read the history of England and see what was done for Wellington, their great general, and for Nelson at the head of the English navy, I ask is it wise for us, when a similar act shall be asked for one of the greatest leaders who ever led the Army for the preservation of the peace and prosperity of this great land, to higgle about the question as to whether a man should be retired as an ex-President the question as to whether a man should be retired as an ex-President or as an Army officer?

The office of major-general was made in the Senate but one week ago for an officer of the Army, that he might be retired upon that rank, he never having held that position; and that bill passed by unanimous consent, not a vote against it. When a man was placed on the retired list, one of the colonels of the Army, as a brigadier-general, but a little over a year ago, there was no voice raised against it. When a man residing in Oregon, who resigned his colonelcy in the Army at the beginning of the war for reasons that I will not now mention, was made a colonel in the Army by the action of the Senate and the House, and by almost a unanimous vote, that he might go on the retired list, not one objection was made here. I might cite case and the House, and by almost a unanimous vote, that he might go on the retired list, not one objection was made here. I might cite case after case that are precedents in this very line where the Senate has acted by unanimous vote without objection, though in fact no great military service had been rendered in the cause of this great Government, but merely because the persons benefited were favorites with a few, I will not say in this Chamber, but in this country. All this has been done without objection; but when the name of the great captain and leader of all the mighty host of this nation is presented by those who are friendly to him, that he may be placed on the retired list merely with the rank that he held before, (a position which he was much disinclined to part from and give up—I know this of my own knowledge,)—when he through his friends to-day asks that the same thing may be done for him that has been done for others—I will not say some that are unworthy, but for men certainly not the same thing may be done for him that has been done for others—I will not say some that are unworthy, but for men certainly not deserving as much at the hands of this great Republic of ours as is Ulysses S. Grant—opposition is made to it.

I intend to insist, while this session of Congress exists, that this bill shall be voted on in the Senate. Look at the banner that hangs upon the walls of this house in which we are to-day, typical of the banner upon the walls of this mighty nation; it reminds me that the people of this country owe one debt of gratitude that they never can pay, and that is the debt they owed to the defenders of this mighty Republic. I now desire to know if that has been wiped out from the memories and hearts of the American people.

But recently we were told and asked to believe that the hand that presented a shadow on the wall of this mighty nation of ours, calcu-presented a shadow on the wall of this mighty nation of ours, calculated at least to arouse fears in the minds of the people as to the future happiness and peace of this great Republic, would soon be withdrawn and the shadow disappear. I hoped that that might be true; but when the name of the man of all others to whom this country is indebted, yea, sir, indebted more than all the millions of gold now within the vaults of the Treasury could pay, is presented to the American Congress, there are substitutes offered; there are various American Congress, there are substitutes offered; there are various and divers ways of maneuvering and dodging around it, that something else may be done which will not make this an exceptional case. To retire this man as an ex-President, along with others, does not make it an exceptional case. I desire that it shall be exceptional, and that it shall be a recognition of Grant, not as President of the United States, but as the great captain of the loyal legions of this mighty Republic. It is for that reason that I desire this bill passed, and for no other reason. and for no other reason.

and for no other reason.

But a few days have gone by since by one united vote and effort on the part of the other side of this Chamber, a person was retired, at least as far as the Senate could do it, with the highest rank he had ever held in the regular Army of the United States. Let me ask Senators why retire that man? For his great services? For his great loyalty to this country? I will not say he was disloyal; but certainly he was condemned by his peers in the Army and dismissed from the service for improper conduct. Day after day Senators on that side of the Chamber stood up and pressed his claim, and against all the protests from this side that bill was passed. Then when there is presented the name of a man, against whom no word can be uttered as to his loyalty, as to his courtesy, as to his great ability as a soldier in the war of this mighty nation for its preservation, objections are made.

Sir, all I have to say is, let the future history of this mighty nation of ours, if it refuses to do this act for this man, stand out so that all the nations of the earth may read it and judge as to the generosity of the United States

I ask, sir, that this bill may be acted on now.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, this is a subject upon which every gentleman must speak for himself. It is not a party measure. I do not propose to be influenced in the slightest degree in my action I do not propose to be influenced in the slightest degree in my action upon this bill by anything that may be said on the other side, or on this side. I have given the subject thus far but little consideration, not as much as I desired to give it. I frankly confess the very strong inclination of my mind is to vote for this bill, if I can do so consistently with my sense of duty to the Republic and to the precedents of the past. I will not do so for precisely the same reasons given by the Senator from Illinois, nor for any reasons in that direction.

The bill cannot be supported on the idea of General Grant's loyalty, as it is called, for many others were as loyal as he, and suffered far more than he did, and are more needy than he is. This bill must be supported, if at all, on far higher grounds.

The view I take of the revolution through which we have passed may be a peculiar one, but it is one which has been formed after giving the subject very great consideration, and which, I believe, will be found to be correct in history. There have been three great fundamental epochs in American history. The first epoch is formed by the discovery and settlement of the colonies, embracing several centuries. The second is formed by the achievement of the independence of these colonies, and their formation of a new system of constitutional government, such as the world had never previously known, or seen, or dreamed of. That ended with the formation of the Constitution, 1787. The third great epoch in American history, in my judgment, will be known in history as that of 1861. That was a great revolution, and it accomplished very great results. It was a revolution, because the changes it wrought were wrought by force in a government founded in consent. I am not going to say anything about the motives which prompted the actors in that revolution, nor the agencies by which the results themselves were accomplished. All I shall now say is this, that, in my judgment, very great results were accomplished by the revolution of 1861; results which, in my opinion, are only less than those of the other two epochs to which I have referred. They will be considered very great results for many reasons. I am not going into those reasons now. The view I take of the revolution through which we have passed epochs to which I have referred. They will be considered very great results for many reasons. I am not going into those reasons now. I regard General Grant as the most remarkable man which the events of this last revolution have developed. Ido not say the greatest man in either an intellectual or moral sense; but in my judgment he is the one man without whom the revolution would not have been a success, and this is not a hasty or ill-considered conclusion. There were many who are more responsible—if the word "responsible" is a proper one in this connection—for the revolution than General Grant. There are men who are certainly much more responsible than he for many great mistakes which, in my judgment, have been committed since the actual war ended; but, I repeat, it is my deliberate opinion that whatever may be the merit or demerit otherwise of General Grant, the actual war ended; but, I repeat, it is my deliberate opinion that whatever may be the merit or demerit otherwise of General Grant, he will take his place in history as the great representative man of the revolution of 1861, simply because he will be regarded as the one man without whom that revolution would not have been a success.

Now, what these facts may incline me or may incline other Senators who agree or disagree with me on this subject to do in the direction suggested by the Senator from Illinois and by the bill which we are now asked to consider I am not prepared to say. At another and perhaps more appropriate time, when the subject is more fully up, I may or may not give the reasons more fully which have prompted me to say the little I have said this morning. I consider this movement a very important one; I consider it important because of the principles which it involves; I consider it important because of the principles which it involves; I consider it chiefly important because of the great character, the character which will be considered in his tory, the great character of the revolution connected with the movement, and who is proposed to be the immediate beneficiary of it; and I wish it distinctly understood that I do not make these remarks actuated by any disposition to cater to the other side, or to any prurient sentiment of loyalty, or to General Grant, or his adherents; nor do the remarks I make measure in the slightest degree any opinion I may have of General Grant as a statesman, or as a politician, or as a military commander. I simply say, because of the peculiar character of the man, the peculiar elements which formed him, the peculiar circumstances which surrounded him, and the remarkable events in which he was called to act a part, that these personal qualities combined with these events have made General Grant, in my estimation, and, I believe, will make him in the estimation of future generations, the one man without whom that revolution would not have been a success. His qualitie plied the one necessity-of success to his side in the war. How great that will make his name in history, how high the niche that will give him in the temple of fame I do not now propose to say. The truth is no man can yet form a well-considered or certain opinion as to the extent or character of the results of the revolution of 1861. To what extent or character of the results of the revolution of 1861. To what extent they may yet affect the character of this Government and the future history of this country no man can say. The real results of that revolution it will take a century fully to develop. Many of those results, I concede, are already, in my judgment, beneficial in a direction and to an extent that I never deemed possible twenty years ago. Whether they will be finally beneficial to the Government, whether they will be finally and ultimately beneficial to the white race or the black and the second of the control o the black race, men may differ. I confess I am most thoroughly convinced that the results of the revolution of 1861 will be more beneficial to the white race than to the black race, and if wisdom shall obtain in the future, they will be chiefly beneficial to the southern obtain in the future, they will be chiefly beneficial to the southern portion of this country.

So believing, I am ready to consider the proposition made by the Senator from Illinois, but I am not prepared to vote on it to-day. I confess that the inclination of my mind is to give it as favorable consideration as a sense of duty to the Republic will permit.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have listened with considerable interest to the discussion on this bill. I am opposed to it in principle from beginning to end, and I am opposed to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] He intimated that a general provision should be made covering the cases of all ex-Presidents. I am opposed to the entire scheme, whether in the shape of the bill now presented, or of that suggested by the Senator from Delaware. I do not propose to be dragged to-day into any partisan discussion, if I can avoid it, in regard to the late war or the historic personages that were concerned in it. General Grant will pass into history beyond question as the greatest general of that great struggle. For his military skill I express here now publicly what I have always expressed, the very greatest admiration. As for him personally I have not one word to say, and the southern people have evidenced in every way within their power their admiration of Grant as a soldier. For the course pursued by him at the close of the war when, upon the hills of Appomattox, he handed back to that other great soldier, Robert E. Lee, his stainless sword, every southern heart went up in gratitude to him; and when afterward he went as the special agent of the Government to the Southern States, and reported to the Chief Executive the undoubted loyalty and patriotism of the southern people, again every southern heart was prompt to thank him: and when a gracial festion was greated for him the ism of the southern people, again every southern heart was prompt to thank him; and when a special office was created for him, the rank thank him; and when a special office was created for him, the rank of General, no southern man interposed a single objection; and when at Cairo and Bloomington, after visiting during the last winter and spring all the Southern States, General Grant stated that the people of the South were as loyal to the flag and to the Constitution as were the people of the North, the people of the South again evidenced their gratitude. But, sir, when General Grant deliberately left the place provided for him by the representatives of the people, when he entered the arena of partisan politics, when he took the chances of public life, I for one hold that he should stand the hazard of the die. It does not belong to the democratic but it belongs to the republican side of this House to provide for their wounded and for their dead in the late political conflicts, and when his corpse was dragged upon that bloody arena in the city of Chicago the funeral and the obsequies belong not to the democratic side of this Chamber. We have funerals enough of our own, [laughter,] and wounded enough to take care of, and we do not propose to interfere with the funeral arrangements of our political opponents.

care of, and we do not propose to interfere with the funeral arrangements of our political opponents.

I am very well aware that for what I say here to-day I shall be deluged, as on a recent occasion, by the abuse of the partisan press of the country and followed up by the cry of "rebel," and "unreconstructed democratic Bourbon." Be it so. I said some time ago in regard to that distinguished personage, John Brown, that I thought him properly executed at Harper's Ferry, and immediately the partisan press of the country undertook to defend every act of Brown's life, and to stigmatize me as disloyal to this Government because I reand to stigmatize me as disloyal to this Government, because I repeated the declaration of the republican party made in open convention in 1860, when they stigmatized the same man as a criminal against the laws of this country. No such abuse can deter me from discharging my duty here.

I disclaim all personal hostility to General Grant, but I oppose this bill as a matter of principle. As a representative of the people I cannot consent to provide places for generals no matter how distinguished, who like ourselves have taken the chances of political life and been beaten.

Mr. LOGAN. Just a word, Mr. President. I am very sorry that any Senator should attribute a proposition of this kind to political reasons. I have tried, at least in this bill, to put it on the ground of military renown and success. So far as the killed and wounded are mintary renown and success. So far as the killed and wounded are concerned, I have naught to say, except this: we have always, so far as our part of the people are concerned, tried to do as well as we could by them, which is proper; and I will say to the Senator from Missouri that certainly he must be at times a little thoughtful, from Missouri that certainly he must be at times a little thoughtful, too, for well do I remember a speech of his—and his speech fits the case exactly, and therefore I will ask that he shall apply the language of his speech in the case that I shall mention—in regard to a certain officer at Baltimore who resigned in the early part of the war a colonel's commission. He did what the Senator says, he took his chances and depended upon the cast of the die. He returned into civil life until the war was over. When a majority of his friends entered this Chamber he was put on the retired list with the rank of colonel. That case is one in point. Certainly he was not put on the retired list for any services that he rendered during the war. That was not the reason. What was the reason? He resigned; left the service. You put him back and put him on the retired list, though he had performed no service during the war. I leave for the country to decide what the reason was. what the reason was what the reason was.

There was another case that I mentioned a while ago from Oregon, where a colonel retired at the opening of the war. You recently put him on the retired list with the highest rank he ever held in the Army, and for what? For services during the war? For services in time of peace? If so, I know not what they were. Why did you do it? You talk about precedents, and you have made the precedents here yourselves. You have retired men with the highest rank they ever held in the Army when they did not draw a blade or fire a musket for the preservation of this Union.

Is it true, sir, that we are so praindiced that if one of our friends.

I am aware has no prejudice, for he says he has none, that the refusal of this in this Chamber will live longer than some acts that people now think more of. Deny this man this privilege that you have given to men who were not as loyal as he was, men who did not perform services as he did, men who have not won the applause of their fellow-citizens in this land as he has, let the country understand that to be your position, and your children and your children's children will read in history of the great achievements of this man, and at the same time of the prejudices of other men. It will be a part of the history of this country that men who differed with this man in politics were so prejudiced that they could not give him the same act of kindness of this country that men who differed with this man in politics were so prejudiced that they could not give him the same act of kindness that they gave to others who were their friends, although he, as the Senator from Georgia has well said, was the one man of all others that this country is indebted to for putting down the late attempted rev-

If that be true, how much more dimly shall his light shine on the future pages of history than did the light of Lord Wellington; how much more dimly shall his light reflect its rays upon the mind of the American people in the future than did the conduct of brave Nelson of the English navy? True, we might repeat a long list of victorious leaders that have been preferred by the legislative department with the power in its hands on account of their meritorious conduct; and the power in its hands on account of their meritorious conduct; and shall the column of this mighty nation's array stand broken in the presence of future generations? Why? Because of party prejudice. Sir, it is not the kind of history for men to make; it is not the kind of magnanimity for men to show. Show me a man, no matter what his politics may be, no matter what his part may have been in political contests, that performed the service to this great country that this man has done, and I for one will never tear a laurel from his brow in this Senate Chamber or elsewhere, in political contests or otherwise. You may read where it has been printed what I have said, and you never a find one word attered in all that I have ever said account.

You may read where it has been printed what I have said, and you never can find one word uttered in all that I have ever said against the man who performed his duty well; not one, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Edmunds in the chair.) The Senator from Illinois will please suspend. The hour of half past one o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate its unfinished business, being the bill (S. No. 1773) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians, &c.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to give notice that I shall on to-morrow morning and every other morning, if my health allows me to be here, ask that this bill be taken up until it is disposed of by the Senate.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Why call it up in the morning hour?

Mr. INGALLS. Take it up now.

Mr. LOGAN. I had forgotten that I had moved to postpone all prior orders of business and take this bill up, and that the roll was being called on that motion when the Senator from Georgia, I think it was he, took the floor. That circumstance being recalled to my recollection, I ask now that the roll-call be completed. The roll was called and there was one response.

called and there was one response.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that inasmuch as debate was permitted after the roll-call had commenced, it must be treated now as if the roll-call had not commenced. Therefore must be treated now as if the roll-call had not commenced. Therefore the Chair cannot, without submitting the question to the Senate formally, as the Chair thinks, proceed with the roll-call.

Mr. LOGAN. Then I move to postpone all prior orders and take up this bill; and I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois moves that the present and all prior orders be postponed in order that he may move to proceed to the consideration of the bill on which debate was taking place at the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. INGALLS. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. The yeas and nays were asked for.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I desire to state that in the vote I am about to give I do not wish it understood that I thereby express an opinion for or against the bill; and I do not think the Senator from Illinois is justified, I do not think there is the slightest justification for the intimation and the charge which he has made, that those of us who do not at once and promptly consent to consider this matter us who do not at once and promptly consent to consider this matter are influenced by prejudice.

Mr. LOGAN. I made no such charge as the Senator refers to against any one. I made no charge against anybody. I replied to a state-ment of the Senator from Missouri.

ment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to say to the Senator from Illinois, who seems to be very much interested in this bill, that I shall give it my best judgment after mature deliberation; and I desire to say, furthermore, that I do not intend to be dragooned into voting for or against this bill by any insinuation of anybody. I shall vote now against taking the bill up, but as I stated I do not intend to express thereby my opinion for or against it. I think as important as this matter is, and I concede to the Senator from Illinois that it is an important bill, there are some other matters being considered by the Senate of equal importance, and the consideration of which will not prejudice this bill in any way. I merely say that in explanation of my vote against this motion. I have no prejudice whatever against General Grant. There is no Senator upon this floor who would go farther than I would to do him justice if injustice had been or was being done him, but before I can vote for this or any other bill of this character there must be some reason or explanation given to show the necessity for it. I have Is it true, sir, that we are so prejudiced that if one of our friends after performing any service whatever asks our support to put him on the retired list he shall have it, but if one who has performed higher and greater service than any other living man asks the same thing he shall not have it? What is the consistency in that, let me thing he shall not have it? What is the consistency in that, let me ask? And I say to my friend from the grand State of Missouri, who which might be sufficient or might not, and I shall therefore vote against the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. I only desire to say, in reply to the Senator from South Carolina, that I am very much surprised that he should use the word "dragooned." Who ever heard of a Senator dragooning the Senator from South Carolina? Who would expect to do such a thing? I should not. The Senator cannot dragoon me, and I would not undertake to dragoon him. All expressions of this character used in the Senate Chamber are mere idle words. I made no such attempt. I have only been earnest in pressing this bill to a vote, and I will only say to the Senator that I shall not be prevented from pressing it "in and out of season."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EATON, (when his name was called.) The Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] when he left the Chamber to go to the Supreme Court, desired me, if anything arose, to take care of his interest in the matter. I am inclined to think that he would vote to postpone all other business and take this bill up, and therefore, as I would vote not to postpone other business and not to take this up, I decline to vote

Mr. GARLAND, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.] If he were here, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. TELLER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HEREFORD] on all political questions, and from the direction which the vote is taking I presume this is a political questions.

this is a political question.

Mr. BURNSIDE. My colleague [Mr. Anthony] left word with me that he was paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. Here-

Mr. TELLER. Then I will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to state that the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER.] If the Senator from Texas were here, he would vote "nay" and the Senator from Texas were here, ne would vote and the Senator from Wisconsin would vote "yea."

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. WALLACE, (after having voted in the negative.) I notice that my colleague [Mr. CAMERON] is not in his seat. I was paired with him last week. I learn that he is now sick. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. BAILEY] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK.] I do not know how either of the Senators would vote if they were present.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 28; as follows:

HAYDEN'S ATLAS OF COLORADO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the Public Printer be directed to furnish 3,000 copies of the Atlas of Colorado, by F. V. Hayden; provided the same can be supplied in sheets in every way equal in style and quality to the edition published by order of the Department of the Interior, for a sum not exceeding $3.50 per copy; 800 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,515 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 685 for the use of the Department of the Interior.

REPORT OF COTTON WORM.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 30,000 copies of the second revised edition, with necessary illustrations, of Bulletin No. 3 of the United States Entomological Commission, being a report on the cotton and boll-worms, with means of counteracting their ravages; 10,000 copies thereof for the use of the Senate, 18,180 for the use of the House and 1,820 for the Interior Department.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 6062) donating certain lands in Lake County, State of Colorado, to the Veteran Union Association of Leadville for hospital and burial purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6942) to fix the times for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States for the western district of Texas.

THE COLLAMER STATUE.

Mr. MORRILL. I rise to give notice that on Monday next, one week from to-day, in the morning hour, I shall offer a resolution for the formal acceptance of the statue of Jacob Collamer in the Statuary Hall. I may add that it will take but a few minutes of time.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 6062) donating certain lands in Lake County, State of Colorado, to the Veteran Union Association of Leadville for hospital and burial purposes was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. No. 6942) to fix the times for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States for the western district of Texas was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LANDS IN SEVERALTY TO INDIANS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1773) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the States and Territories over the Indians, protection of the laws of the States and Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. Vest in section 7, line 2, to strike out the words "Indian Territory," and in lieu thereof to insert "reservations of the Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, Choctaws, and Chickasaws in the Indian Territory."

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I do not now recall a single argument in the course of this debate which at all disproves either the justice or policy of the amendment which I have offered. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has expressed apprehension that the adoption of this amendment will in some way create the impression that the Government proposes to violate the treaties heretofore made with the Indian tribes. I do not agree with him; but in order to obviate any Indian tribes. I do not agree with him; but in order to obviate any criticism, I ask leave to offer the following as a substitute for my original amendment:

Strike out the words "Indian Territory" in line 2 of section 7, and insert in lieu Strike out the words "Indian Territory" in line 2 of section 7, and insert in lieu thereof:

"Reservations of the Cherokees, Creeks, Choctaws, Chickasaws, and Seminoles in the Indian Territory, it being understood and hereby provided that no rights of any Indian tribe to any of the lands in said Territory are to be affected or impaired by this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The Senator from Missouri modifies his amendment.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, in order that there may be no miscon-reption as to the purpose of this amendment, I desire to submit a few remarks before the Senate votes upon the question.

The Indian Territory, or Indian country, as it should properly be termed, embraces an area of 41,098,398 acres of land. In 1866 all former treaties between the United States and the Chockaws, Chickagary, Checkagary, Chec asaws, Creeks, Cherokees, and Seminoles, known as the five civilized tribes, having been abrogated by their espousing the cause of the confederacy, new treaties were made between them and the Government, by the terms of which large quantities of land were ceded to the United States by the Indians, as follows:

By the Creeks, 3,250,560 acres, for $975, 168
By the Seminoles, 2,169,080 acres, for 325, 362
By the Coctaws and Chickasaws, the lands lying west of 96°

west longitude, for (The number of acres is not specified in the treaty, but was about seven million.)

The Cherokees conveyed no lands to the Government by the treaty of 1866

Of the entire Indian Territory, 25,948,692 acres have been already surveyed by the United States, embracing all the lands ceded by the civilized tribes, as before enumerated, leaving 15,149,706 acres unsurveyed in the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Ottawa, and Seminole reservations.

Article 3 of the Creek treaty of 1866 provides that-

In compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon, the Creeks hereby cede and convey to the United States, to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians as the United States may choose to settle thereon, the west half of their entire domain.

The Seminole treaty is in the same words. In the treaty of 1866 made with the Choctaws and Chickasaws the cession of lands is Just here I desire the attention of the Senators present to the issue now made between the Secretary of the Interior and the people who propose to enter the ceded lands in the Indian Territory, which is the cloud of war in that quarter now threatening us, as we are told.

I know that the Secretary of the Interior claims that this treaty between the Choctaws and Chickasaws and the United States is a conditional cession of these lands to the Government. Not wishing in a matter so important to do him the slightest injustice, I desire to read a communication from the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of War, containing the full argument upon which the proclamation of the President in reference to invasions of the Indian country has been based, and under which troops have been ordered to the southwestern border.

Says the Secretary of the Interior, after citing different treaties from 1834 to 1866 between the five civilized tribes and the Govern-

By these treaties title was guaranteed to the several tribes, and it was provided that the lands should never be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory, but should remain subject to the intercourse laws, which laws have, as before stated, continued in force in all parts of the Territory to the present time.

I admit that proposition to be fully sustained up to the treaties of 1866.

The title acquired by the Government by the treaties of 1866 was secured in pursuance and furtherance of the same purpose of Indian settlement which was the foundation of the original scheme.

That purpose was the removal of Indian tribes from the limits of the political State and territorial organizations and their permanent location upon other lands sufficient for the needs of each tribe. These lands being ample in area for the purpose, it has become a settled policy to locate other tribes thereon as fast as arrangements can be made, and provisions have been constantly made by treaties, agreements, and acts of Congress to effect these objects.

That purpose is expressly declared in the said treaties. The cessions of the Creeks and Seminoles are stated to have been made "in compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon." These words must be held to create a trust equivalent to what would have been imposed had the language been "for the purpose of locating Indians and freedmen thereon."

The lands ceded by the Choctaws and Chickasaws were by article 9 of the treaty of June 22, 1855, leased "to the United States * * * for the permanent settlement of the Wichita and such other tribes or bands of Indians as the Government may desire to locate therein."

The treaty of 1866 substituted a direct purchase for the lease, but did not extinguish or alter the trust. In 1867, the Kiowas, Comanches, and Apaches were settled upon these lands by treaty. In 1869 the Cheyennes and Arapahoes were located by executive order, the Wichitas being already upon a portion of the same prior to the purchase.

It will be seen from this communication that the Secretary of the Interior, who is not a lawyer, asserts the wonderful legal proposition that "the lands ceded by the Choctaws and Chickasaws were, by arthat "the lands ceded by the Choctaws and Chickasaws were, by article 9 of the treaty of June 22, 1855, leased to the United States * * * for the permanent settlement of the Wichita and such other tribes or bands of Indians as the Government may desire to locate therein." "The treaty of 1866 substituted a direct purchase for the lease, but did not extinguish or alter the trust." In other words, if Brown leases to Jones a tract of land to be used for agricultural purposes only, and Jones a tract of land to be used for agricultural purposes only, and Jones afterward buys the land absolutely and nothing is said in regard to its use in the deed, no limitation or restriction, the lease, by some mystic operation known only to the Secretary of the Interior, injects itself into the deed and controls its provistary of the Interior, injects itself into the deed and controls its provisions. I have been under the impression, Mr. President, that the deed would be the higher instrument, the larger muniment of title, and would speak for itself; that the lease would be merged, so to speak, in the deed, and would be functus officio. As the bill introduced by my friend from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] giving the Cabinet seats upon the floor of the Senate has not yet been enacted, I would be glad if some friend of the Secretary would for him and in his behalf explain this remarkable legal assertion.

That the treaty of 18(6) is absolute in its cession of lands for the

That the treaty of 1866 is absolute in its cession of lands for the sum of $300,000 and ignores all the limitations or trusts of the treaty of 1855, I quote article 3 entire:

of 1855, I quote article 3 entire:

The Choctaws and Chickasaws, in consideration of the sum of $300,000, hereby cede to the United States the territory west of the ninety-eighth degree west longitude, known as the leased district, provided that the said sum shall be invested and held by the United States, at an interest not less than 5 per cent. in trust for the said nations, until the legislatures of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations respectively shall have made such laws, rules, and regulations as may be necessary to give all persons of African descent, resident in the said nations at the date of the treaty of Fort Smith, and their descendants, heretofore held in slavery among said nations, all the rights, privileges, and immunities, including the right of suffrage, of citizens of said nations, except in the annuities, moneys, and public domain claimed by, or belonging to, said nations respectively; and also give to such persons who were residents as aforesaid, and their descendants, forty acres each of the land of said nations on the same terms as the Choctaws and Chickasaws, to be selected on the survey of said land, after the Choctaws and Chickasaws and Kansas Indians have made their selections as herein provided; and immediately on the enactment of such laws, rules, and regulations, the said sum of $300,000 shall be paid to the said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in the proportion of three-fourths to the former and one-fourth to the latter—less such sum, at the rate of $100 per capita, as shall be sufficient to pay such persons of African descent before referred to as within ninety days after the passage of such laws, rules, and regulations shall elect to remove and actually remove from the said nations respectively. And should the said laws, rules, and regulations to be made by the legislatures of the said nations, respectively, within two years from the ratification of this treaty, then the said sum of $300,000 shall ball the proper—the United States agreeing, within ninety days from the expiration of t

But this is not all. After citing the various treaties which set aside the Indian country for the home of the Indian in all future time, the Secretary of the Interior makes the following declaration:

The title acquired by the Government by the treaties of 1866 was secured in pursuance and furtherance of the same purpose of Indian settlement which was the foundation of the original scheme. That purpose was the removal of the Indian tribes from the limits of the political, State, and territorial organizations, and their permanent location upon other lands sufficient for the needs of each tribe. These lands being ample in area for the purpose, it has become a settled policy to locate other tribes thereon as fast as arrangements can be made, and provisions have been constantly made by treaties, agreements, and acts of Congress to effect these objects.

It will be noticed that the Secretary studiously ignores the fact.

It will be noticed that the Secretary studiously ignores the fact that the treaties made provision not only for Indians but also freed-men to be located on these ceded lands. Nor is it true that the treaties recognized the right of the Government to bring into the Indian country any but civilized Indians. The assertion of the Secretary of the Interior that these ceded lands were under a trust for the location of every class of Indians, and for none but Indians, is not sustained by the language of the treaties. The language of the treaty tained by the language of the treaties. The language of the treaty embraces both Indians and freedmen, and afterward, in article 3, the Indians to be removed into the ceded lands by the United States, are limited to civilized Indians. It follows, therefore, that every wild or blanket Indian forced into that Territory by the Government has been taken there in direct violation of solemn treaty stipulations. There are now twenty-nine tribes or fragments of tribes in the Indian Territory, besides the five civilized tribes in the western reservations; and many of these unfortunate creatures have, under the scheme of the Secretary of the Interior, been correct into removing there under the Secretary of the Interior, been coerced into removing there under such circumstances that it constitutes a blot upon our civilization as a Christian people.

I do not believe it any exaggeration to say that starvation, exposure, and climatic disease have killed more Indians under the scheme ure, and climatic disease have killed more Indians under the scheme than all the infantry, artillery, and cavalry of the United States Army. It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that Congress has by legislation virtually prohibited the removal of any other Indians to this Territory, and put its stamp of disapproval upon the settled policy and scheme of the Secretary.

In the Indian appropriation bill of 1877 the Government was prohibited from removing the Sioux into the Territory, and in the Indian appropriation bill of 1878 the removal of any Indians from Arizona or New Mexico into the Indian Territory is also forbidden. So that it may now be considered the settled policy of the Government, as indicated by the action of Congress, that no more Indians shall be removed into these ceded lands, whether civilized or uncivilized. In fact, I will venture to say, without undertaking to seize the Administration by the throat, that not one dollar can be obtained by the Department of the Interior for any such purpose. Department of the Interior for any such purpose.

There being no longer any freedmen under the operation of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution, and Congress having prohibited the removal of other Indians into the Indian Territory, what does the Government propose to do with the millions of acres of fertile lands, paid for by the money of the people, and now

If Brown purchases from Jones a tract of land upon which Brown desires to locate his son, and this son afterward dies, will any lawyer pretend that the land reverts to Jones? Or that Brown must hold it pretend that the land reverts to Jones? Or that Brown must hold it forever for no other use? Yet this is the identical case now presented as to the ceded lands in the Indian Territory.

Mr. President, I desire to preserve inviolate every treaty stipulation, and to counsel the strictest observance of law and order, but the man is an idiot who thinks that this vast domain, paid for with the common treasure, can be sealed into dead and stolid barrenness against the degrees of form. The Government has the military present the the decrees of fate. The Government has the military power to remove all persons from these ceded lands who may succeed in entering, and may with its bayonets bar the passage of others, but the courts can never punish a single person arrested, and the end will be, as it has always been, the onward march of civilization and Anglo-Saxon blood. I repeat, that I counsel no infraction of treaties, no lawless opposition to the Government, but whether the Secretary of the Interior be right or myself, in our construction of the treaties, the end will be the same.

Not in vain the distance beacons, Forward, forward let us range; Let the great world spin forever, Down the ringing grooves of change.

The amendment which I propose simply extends the privilege of taking their lands in severalty to the twenty-nine tribes or fragments of tribes now upon the ceded lands. If the principle of the bill be correct, and I so believe, if the home idea is the germ of Christianity and civilization, why should these Indians be refused this beneficent provision?

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] caused to be read in the course of this debate a protest from the representatives, as they style themselves, of the leading nations in the Indian Territory, against the passage by Congress of any law giving the Indians upon the ceded lands the right to take their lands in severalty. The extraordinary progress made by these Indians of the civilized tribes in all the methods and practices of civilization is evidenced by the alacrity with which they are now attending to everybody else's business besides their own. The Weas, Miamies, and Peorias have petitioned to have their lands allotted in severalty but these gentlemen know what is best for the petitioners and protest against their request being granted. The document is so unique and refreshing in its coolness that I shall ask to have it read again.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

PROTEST OF THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

To the Congress of the United States:

The Chief Cierk read as follows:

PROTEST OF THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

To the Congress of the United States:

As representatives of the leading nations of the Indian Territory we desire to call your attention to several measures pending before you, the purpose of which is to change the condition and compromise the safety of the Indian people. We refer to the bills for sectionizing and allotting in severalty the lands of the Indians. We have understood that such bills were not intended to apply to the Indian Territory, as there is no provision for white settlement in that country, and the treaties define that this allotment in severalty can only be done on the request of the Indian nations.

We therefore appeal to you not to violate your pledges to us in treaties. Doing this for a single tribe in the Indian Territory, as would be the case in passing H. R. No. 6022, for allotting lands of Peorias, Weas, Miamies, Piankesbaws, and Kaskaskias, would lead to local disturbance and produce great mischief.

Our people have not asked for or authorized this, for the reason that they believe it could do no good and would only result in mischief; in their present condition. Our own laws regulate a system of land tenure suited to our condition, and much safer than that which is proposed to be established for it.

Improvements can be and frequently are sold, but the land itself is not a chattel. Its occupancy and possession are indispensable to belding it, and it sabandomment for two years makes it revert to the public domain. In this way every one of our citizens is sure of a home.

The change to individual title would throw the whole of our domain in a few years into the hands of a few persons. In your treaties with us you have agreed that this shall not be done without our consent; we have not asked for it, and we call on you not to violate your pledges with us.

There are other reasons, involving our prosperity and safety, why the limitations of sectionizing should not be thrust over us.

Mr. VEST. It is almost incredible that these representatives who argue so strenuously for treaty stipulations and against tenure in severalty are themselves striking down their own treaties and attempting to destroy the system which they deliberately invoked and defended in 1866.

Article 16 of the Cherokee treaty of 1866 reads as follows:

Article 16 of the Cherokee treaty of 1866 reads as follows:

The United States may settle friendly Indians in any part of the Cherokee country west of 96°, to be taken in a compact form in quantity not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres for each member of each of said tribes thus to be settled—

In regard to these very lands they provided there for a tenure in severalty and one hundred and sixty acres to each Indian—the boundaries of each of said districts to be distinctly marked, and the land conveyed in fee-simple to each of said tribes, to be held in common or by their members in severalty, as the United States may decide.
Said lands thus disposed of to be paid for to the Cherokee Nation, at such price as may be agreed on between the said parties in interest, subject to the approval of the President; and if they should not agree, then the price to be fixed by the President.

or the President; and it they should not agree, then the price to be fixed by the President.

The Cherokee Nation to retain the right of possession of and jurisdiction over all of said country west of 96° of longitude until thus sold and occupied, after which their jurisdiction and right of possession to terminate forever as to each of said districts thus sold and occupied.

Article 11 of the Choctaw and Chickasaw treaty of 1866 has the following:

Whereas the land occupied by the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations * * * is now held by the members of said nations in common; * * * and whereas it is believed that the holding of said lands in severalty will promote the general civilization of said nations and tend to advance their permanent welfare and the best interests of their individual members, &c.

This was the deliberate opinion of the civilized tribes in 1866, and they advocated the tenure by severalty even in treaty provisions, but, like many of their white brethren, they have changed with the changing seasons, and now, secure in their own country and behind these treaties, they protest against other Indians, entirely separate and distinct from themselves, being granted the privilege of tenure in severalty upon lands for which the five civilized tribes have been fully paid.

I repeat that no argument has yet been made which successfully assails either the justice or propriety of the amendment, and I hope it will be adopted

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Vest.]

Mr. COKE. I rise to say that the modification of the amendment as proposed by the Senator from Missouri makes it acceptable to me as one of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I have conversed with one or two of the other members, and it is equally acceptable to them. I therefore have no opposition to make to it. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the bill by inserting after the word "reside," in the sixth line of the sixth section, the following words: And are hereby declared to have become citizens of the United States and entitled as such to the full protection of the Constitution and laws.

And are necessarized to have become cutzens of the United States and entitled as such to the full protection of the Constitution and laws.

I presume this amendment will not be objected to by any Senator. It is certainly a very grave question whether by the operation of the fourteenth amendment all the Indians under the jurisdiction of the United States have not become citizens; but it is claimed, with a good deal of force, that an Indian dwelling with his tribe, dwelling with a tribe which under the Constitution may make treaties with the Government of the United States, dwelling with a tribe which has entire civil and criminal jurisdiction over his person and property, is not within the jurisdiction of the United States within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment. But now it is proposed to place these Indians upon land in severalty, and to remove them entirely from the tribal jurisdiction. They are to be subjected by this section to all the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which they may reside. The limit of inalienability is affixed to their land for the period prescribed in the bill.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. COKE. In section 5 of this bill it is provided:

Mr. COKE. In section 5 of this bill it is provided:

That the lands acquired by any Indian under and by virtue of this act shall not be subject to alienation, lease, or incumbrance, either by voluntary conveyance or by the judgment, order or decree of any court, or subject to taxation of any character, but shall be and remain inalienable, and not subject to taxatios, lien, or incumbrance, for the period of twenty-five years from the date of the patent, which said restrictions shall be incorporated in the patents when issued.

If the Senator's amendment prevails, will not that provision be rendered nugatory?

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand it so. I do not understand that the authority of the United States can impose upon any person who is subject to all the civil and criminal laws of a State the incapacity to alienate his land, and that provision would be nugatory under the Constitution of the United States and under the constitutions of the various States where the Indians are to be located if it were to be various States where the Indians are to be located if it were to be treated as an imposition upon the person of incapacity to make a valid deed. But I suppose this bill goes upon the ground that the United States now having the authority to regulate these land titles may impose upon certain land, whether they authorize its conveyance to Indians or whether they authorize its quasi and qualified subjection to the jurisdiction of the State, the quality of inalienability for twenty-five years. I cannot convey to the Senator from Texas land in fee with a provision that he shall not convey it or that the person who inherits it from him shall not convey it for a term of time, because that is inconsistent with the deed. But the legislative power may at the same time grant land which the United States may now regulate the title of, and declare that the particular land so granted shall be alienated only in a certain way or shall be inalienable for a certain time. So I do not conceive that my proposition affects in the least the legality of the provision of the fifth section. That must be supported or overthrown entirely upon other considerations. My proposition is this: these Indians are to be made, not by their own consent but by the consent of a two-thirds vote of their by their own consent but by the consent of a two-thirds vote of their tribes, dwellers in severalty upon their lands, and subjected, whether with or against their personal and individual will, to all laws, civil and criminal, of the State in which they dwell. I understand that the theory of this bill goes on the ground that it is desirable to put the Indians among the whites, a neighbor among neighbors, to give him the hopes and habits and stimulus that come from the ownership of real estate. Now, I say it is entirely inconsistent with the policy of this Government, it is entirely inconsistent with the theory upon which the Constitution is based, to place any body of men anywhere in such a position, subject to every restraint of citizenship and subject to every obligation of citizenship, and take from them all the privileges which are attendant upon citizenship. My belief is that that would be the operation of this bill and of the fourteenth amendment without such a declaration as I propose to insert, but it seems to me that it is safer and better to declare the law in express terms.

Mr. MORGAN. If it be in order, Mr. President, I will offer a subby their own consent but by the consent of a two-thirds vote of their

Mr. MORGAN. If it be in order, Mr. President, I will offer a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is in order.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the following as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts: Strike out section 6 and in lieu thereof insert:

When any Indian has received a patent for land under the provisions of this act, he or she shall become a citizen of the United States, and shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of such citizenship, and shall be subject to all laws which affect the citizens of the United States, and shall not thereby forfeit any right in or to any property or annuity to which he or she should be entitled as a member of such tribe, or his or her right to participate with such tribe in the disposal of any land or other property held in common by such tribe.

Mr. HOAR. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama is not in conflict with mine in principle, but accomplishes, if I understand it from the reading, precisely the same result. The only difference is that mine is a perfection of the section as it stands, and his is a substitute for the entire section. If mine be adopted, therefore, it will still be in order to move his as a substitute for the section. I understand that under the parliamentary rule mine is first in order, being an amendment to the text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Alabama as offering his amendment as a substitute for the sixth section of the bill, but as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. If the Chair will look again the Chair will see that the amendment is to strike out the entire sixth section and insert in

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the point of order is certainly well taken by the Senator from Massachusetts. It is first in order to perfect the section, and then for the Senator from Alabama to move the strike it out.

Mr. MORGAN. While I am on the floor I will explain briefly the reason I had for offering the amendment. I concur with the Senator from Massachusetts entirely in reference to what will be the effect upon the Indian of accepting a patent from the Government of the United States. He will be thereby entitled, if he is not already entitled under the fourteenth amendment, to all the privileges and advantages of citizenship as well as be subject to the burdens of citizenship. But the sixth section of this bill introduces a feature which, unless it is remedied, I think will cause a very serious conflict between territorial government and the policy the Government of the United States may finally be compelled to adopt in reference to these Indians at the time when they cease to be members of a tribe and become citizens of the United States. I desire the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to that part of the sixth section of the bill, in lines 4 and 5, which subjects these Indians "to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which they may reside."

The object of the bill is to make the Indian, after he receives title to his land in severalty from the United States, subject to the laws.

The object of the bill is to make the Indian, after he receives title to his land in severalty from the United States, subject to the laws, civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which he may reside. My purpose is to make him subject to the laws of the United States, and to leave him under the control of the Government of the United States, as a member of his tribe, although a citizen of the United States, until such time as the Government may see fit to destroy, by act of Congress, the entire tribal relation.

This is a very delicate question indeed, and I suppose that every senator on this floor in common with those who have preceded us

This is a very delicate question indeed, and I suppose that every Senator on this floor, in common with those who have preceded us, in conformity to the established policy of the United States Government, desires to do all he can do for the benefit of the Indian and for the improvement of his condition. It is the most serious problem that we have to deal with in reference to any of our internal affairs to-day, and we surely cannot bestow too much attention upon it, nor can we be possessed of a spirit too frank and too careful in legislating in reference to the disposal that is to be made of these people.

Here is a band of Indians. I said the other day when this subject was up for discussion that we had a hundred and fifty different governments in the United States. I state now upon authority that we have more than five hundred distinct governments in the United States today, each one, as I remarked the other day, having the power to dispose of life, liberty, and property to a very considerable extent. Here is a band of Indians, one of these five hundred governments that we have to deal with in the United States. We propose by a method of segregation to draw these Indians out individually, one after another, to place them in contact with civilization, in possession of the rights of citizenship, and under the obligations of citizenship. That we suppose to be—and I am prepared to concur in that view of it—as good a method as we can adopt for the civilization of the Indians.

In proceeding to do that thing we have this difficulty to encounter, and it is a very serious one, indeed: First of all we must look at the Indian as history shows him to be, as the most clannish of all people in the world. The truth is that all Indian government is a government of clans. The membership in the clan defines the man's citizenship and defines all his rights. The tribal relation is to the Indian the most important relation that he holds in life, the one that he will be the last to give up, because in separating himself from his tribal

In proceeding to do that thing we have this difficulty to encounter, and it is a very serious one, indeed: First of all we must look at the Indian as history shows him to be, as the most clannish of all people in the world. The truth is that all Indian government is a government of clans. The membership in the clan defines the man's citizenship and defines all his rights. The tribal relation is to the Indian the most important relation that be holds in life, the one that he will be the last to give up, because in separating himself from his tribal laws and tribal institutions he commences by cutting the cords that bind him to his family. The relationships of the Indians are all by consanguinity, so much so that where the mother survives the father the relationship is transferred to the tribe from which the mother came. While the father is living the relationship of the Indian is then to the tribe to which the father belongs, and they derive their law and all that controls their domestic affairs through this bond of family relation. Therefore, when we undertake to deal with this business we must remember that if we expect the Indian to fall in with our plan of government we must accommodate ourselves as far as we can possibly to his own peculiar views of the binding efficacy of this family relationship upon bim.

Now, we have got the Indian with a patent in his hands; should we say to him the effect of that patent is to segregate him from his family and to destroy the holiest bond that the Indian can conceive of and the one that has always united him in obedience to the law? That is what we say to him: "You must give up your family relations and," as the bill has it, "you must also give up all your rights in the tribe; your participation in its annuities; you must lose your power to vote in its councils; when you come to sell the lands which have not been allotted, but which are held as communal lands, you are no longer a member of the tribe; you have no power to vote as to their disposition," &c. By this act of accepting a patent from the Government of the United States we say to the Indian, "You separate yourself entirely from the tribe so that hereafter you shall have no affiliation with them whatsoever." I suppose that out of two or three hundred thousand Indians that we have in the United States there is scarcely one who would sit down and contemplate the effects of this statute as contained in the sixth section who would consent to receive a patent upon these terms.

But again, take a tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska. There are several there. They are located upon reservations parceled out by the law, and it is upon these reservations that these Indians are to receive their allotments of land. You give to an Indian upon one of these reservations a patent for a tract of land, and thereupon according to the sixth section of the bill he becomes immediately subject, not to the laws of the United States and to the power of Congress further to deal with him, but he becomes in all respects liable as a citizen of the State, and becomes liable to its laws, both civil and criminal. You have the same reservation for six hundred Indians of whom there are perhaps twenty, or fifty, or one hundred, or three hundred if you please, who stand upon an entirely different footing with reference to the law from the rest of the tribe. It is true that this bill contains a compulsory provision by which the Indians are compelled to accept the lands within the period of five years, but that provision itself, it seems to me, will defeat this as a practical measure. Nevertheless I am supposing now that all the provisions of this bill will go into full effect. I object that when the Indian has received his patent he shall be made a citizen of the State or Territory in which he may reside. What power has the Government of the United States to create citizenship in a State? Citizenship in the United States has now been clearly defined to consist of two propositions, two distinct classes of citizenship, one of the United States and the other of the State. In the sixth section of this bill we say the Indians "shall be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which they may reside * * * and no State or Territory shall pass or enforce any law denying any such Indian within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law."

It is true you do not therein distinctly affirm that by act of Congress you make the Indian a citizen of the State; but what is the effect of it?

It is true you do not therein distinctly affirm that by act of Congress you make the Indian a citizen of the State; but what is the effect of it? What is the legal effect of such a provision as that? You give to the man the benefit of all the rights of citizenship in a State or Territory; you deny to the State or Territory the power to discriminate against him, and you confer upon him all the privileges of citizenship at the same time that you subject him to the laws of the State or Territory. Now I affirm that Congress has no such power. If it is meant by this language in the sixth section of the bill to confer on the Indians the duties, obligations, rights, privileges, and immunities of State citizenship, then the Congress of the United States has no power to confer those upon him; they must be conferred by the laws of the State in which the man is found, and only by those laws. There is no difficulty in getting along with this subject if we strike out this part of the bill, for the reason that, notwithstanding we have given a patent to an Indian and we have thereby made him a citizen of the United States to all intents and purposes, the Government of the United States still has power of control over him through an act of Congress over the tribe to which he belongs; and after this experiment has wrought its way until the Indians of a tribe, or a large majority of them I will say, have received patents under this law, there is then no difficulty in the Congress of the United States, which has reserved to itself full and complete jurisdiction over the subject, going forward and making further provision for the dissolving of the tribal relation and the admission of these people as a body to citizenship of the United States.

I therefore think that the amendment which I propose, and when it shall come in order I shall offer it, is a better amendment than that offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. It strikes out the objectionable feature of the attempt on the part of Congress to create citizenship in favor of an Indian within the body of a State, and it leaves the whole subject sub judice, under the power of Congress hereafter to legislate as they may be advised as to the best manner as to disposing of the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be voted down. The bill as framed by the committee is in harmony with itself in all its provisions. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, in my judgment, would raise a very serious question with section 5 of the bill, to which I referred the honorable gentleman while he was making his remarks. Section 5 prohibits the alienation of land by the Indians; it exempts the land from taxation, from lien or incumbrance for twenty-five years. A very serious question would exist, if the Indian were a citizen, as to whether this legislation with reference to a citizen would be constitutional and valid. If the Indian is made a citizen, can we discriminate between him and other citizens? Can we lay burdens upon Indian land not laid upon the land of other citizens when the Indians are citizens just as other men?

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. COKE. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator if he has any doubt of the power of the United States Government to grant to him or to me one of the public squares in the city of Washington with a provision that it shall be inalienable for twenty-five years.

Mr. COKE. Can the Government impose that condition upon a

Mr. HOAR. I asked the Senator it he had any doubt that it was perfectly competent for the Government to grant to him or to me one of the public squares in the city of Washington with a valid provision in the grant that it should be inalienable for twenty-five years? Mr. COKE. In reply to the question of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, I do not mean to say that the Government cannot do that. I simply mean to say that to make the Indians citizens and at the same time impose conditions, burdens, or privileges upon grants to that class of citizens not imposed upon others might raise a question that might be determined very much to the disadvantage of the Indians. I do not mean to say how it would be determined.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I want to point out to him that the bill takes care of that. The fifth section of the bill, as the Senator has reported it, does not enact that the lands owned by any Indian shall not be alienated at all; it enacts simply that "the lands acquired by any Indian under and by virtue of this act," simply this parceled land, shall not be alienated.

Mr. COKE. I think I understand the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, and I object to it, because questions may be raised upon that point and because I think that section 6, as it stands now, covers the ground fully. Section 6 provides—

That upon the completion of said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said

That upon the completion of said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allottees, each and every member of the respective bands or tribes of Indians to whom allotments have been made shall be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which they may reside.

This was as far as the committee thought it was necessary or proper to go. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts would go further and make Indians citizens as fully as any other person in the United States is now a citizen. We prefer that this should not be done, and would leave the subject there, simply stating the facts in the bill and allowing the courts to determine what would be the legal status of the Indians. We thought that was better because it would leave in the hands of the General Government the power.

MY HOAR Will the Senator from Taysa allow me a word? I do leave in the hands of the General Government the power.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Texas allow me a word? I do not know but that I am trespassing too much on his courtesy; but probably putting a question may save the time of the Senate in making a speech in reply. I should like to ask the Senator whether he desires to have the law so left that an Indian shall be planted between two white people, a land owner between two white neighbors, and made subject to the laws, civil and criminal, of the State or Territory where he dwells, so that any man may sue him, so that he may be defended in any suit, civil or criminal, so that he is liable as a defendant to the jurisdiction of the pettiest magistrate, without giving him, in his turn, the right to sue and to protect himself in the same way in which he is attacked? Why should he be defendant and not plaintiff?

Mr. COKE. I will answer the Senator by saying that the exemptions and privileges granted to the Indian in this section, in my judgment, compensate very well for the burdens that the Senator thinks he must lie under. In the first place, his lands are exempt from he must he under. In the first place, his lands are exempt from judgment and from execution, are exempt from taxation, which those of no citizen are. In the next place, he is entitled to the protection of the courts and of the laws; he is entitled to go into court as plaintiff, as I think the Senator will agree when he examines the bill. I desire him left in that condition, and not declared a citizen, in order that the Government of the United States may extend a protecting arm around him and may have jurisdiction left over him for that purpose. Mr. MORGAN. Now, will the honorable Senator allow me to inquire, if that he his purpose, why will he say that the Indian after

Mr. MORGAN. Now, will the honorable Senator allow purpose.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, will the honorable Senator allow me to inquire, if that be his purpose, why will he say that the Indian after getting into that condition "shall be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which he may reside?" After you put him subject to the laws of the Territory, then what becomes of the United States jurisdiction?

Mr. COKE. The Government of the United States has this to do with him: under the general laws, under the discretion vested in the Secretary of the Interior, a system of education has been adopted for the Indians which is being superintended by the Interior Department. That system I apprehend he will not be deprived of the benefit of by the passage of this bill. Such was the argument made on the passage of the passage of this bill. Such was the argument made on the passage of the Ute bill, the provisions of which are almost precisely like the provisions of this. In the discussion of that bill it was said by those who advocated it that the United States was retaining enough of jurisdiction over the Indian to enable the National Government to go to his aid with educational support, and, if necessary, with other support. It would necessitate still the keeping of Indian agents for the purpose of looking after the educational interests of the Indians. That was the construction placed upon the Ute bill, and this bill, I think, is exactly like, or very nearly like it, in these provisions. We do not wish to make him a full citizen now by act of Congress. If the courts declare him a citizen on the facts stated in this bill, of course he will have to take his chances as a citizen; but until they shall declare him a citizen we desire some jurisdiction by which the Interior Department, the representative of the National Government, can aid the Indian in his efforts to become civilized. For that reason we stopped where we did in framing the section which is sought to be amended. We discussed in committee such a provision as the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, and rejected it—if I may be permitted to state what occurred in committee; that is my recollection of it—and for many reasons, those that I have given among others.

among others.

I hope, Mr. President, that the section as it has been reported in this bill will be retained, and that the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be voted down.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I understand the avowed policy of this bill is to treat these Indians as human beings, and, instead of an army and a massacre and a slaughter, to surround them with the influences under which other reses have emerged from berbariem to fluences under which other races have emerged from barbarism to army and a massacre and a slanghter, to surround them with the influences under which other races have emerged from barbarism to civilization, to awake the dormant manhood and the gentle and humane qualities which are supposed to dwell in their minds, undeveloped, as in other human beings; and the first great step which is proposed in that policy is to give them the privileges, the opportunities, and the comforts of land owners, separate individual homes in separate individual ownership with separate individual titles.

It has been said that these men, just coming from the state of childhood, may be subject to be plundered by scheming and selfish greedy men; and therefore there is imposed, not upon the owner, but upon the land, the quality of inalienability for the space of twenty-five years, within which it is supposed by the framers of the bill the Indian will have learned enough of the value of land to be able to part with it or keep it, as may be best for his interest. At the same time and in connection with that the bill enacts that these men shall be subject to every obligation and liability of citizenship, and to all the laws of the State, civil and criminal. An Indian may be summoned before a petty magistrate; if he commits an assault he is liable civilly and criminally; but there is no protection held out to him. As White Eagle, the Ponca chief, said, commenting on this very bill, I think, or something like it, "he will be picked like a bird." What, in the case of all other human beings, has the experience of mankind pointed out as the proper method of protecting such rights in their homes as are conferred on the Indians here? It is equality of rights as citizens.

This bill makes the Indian a defendant, but does not entitle him

This bill makes the Indian a defendant, but does not entitle him to be a plaintiff. It makes him subject to be sued without the right to sue. Any neighbor may cite him into court; any neighbor may compel him to give bail; any neighbor may compel him to be imprisoned; anybody may arrest him on mesne process; anybody may attach his goods; and he is to have, according to this, what, as his protection?

Mr. COLE.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment Mr. HOAR. Allow me to finish my sentence, and then I will yield to the Senator. He is to have what as his protection for every right? The discretion of the Secretary of the Interior! If anybody steals his pony he is to have as a means of locomotion in future the bayonet of the Secretary of the Interior to remove him to some other place where that high official thinks it is expedient that he shall be compelled to go. Now, I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. COKE. I would refer the honorable Senator to the proviso of the sixth section:

Provided, That their lands shall not be subject to taxation or execution upon the judgment, order, or decree of any court; and no State or Territory shall pass or enforce any law denying any such Indian within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.

Now, I ask the Senator if under this bill the Indian would not have s good a right as any citizen to go into court for the protection of as good a right as any citizen to go into court for the protection of his person or his property?

Mr. HOAR. That is the very question that the bill leaves doubtful. I mean to make it clear, and I support my amendment by putting back to the honorable Senator from Texas precisely the question he puts to me: Shall the man have the right to go into any court and defend himself there? When I first put the question the honorable Senator answered, "He has the discretion of the Secretary honorable Senator answered, "He has the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior for his protection."

Mr. COKE. The Senator from Massachusetts entirely misunderstood my remark. I claimed in everything that I said that the Indian under this bill was secured equal protection with any other citizen by the laws of the State or Territory where he was located. In addition to that I stated that there was a certain jurisdiction retained over him by the General Government that would enable the Secretary of the Interior in the exercise of certain discretion vested in him to extend sid to the Indian in him to extend aid to the Indian.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas now calls attention to the last three lines of section 6:

And no State or Territory shall pass or enforce any law denying any such Indian within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law.

But unless the amendment which I have proposed is adopted or unless this is a simple declaration of what is already the sense of the bill, those three lines are mere idle enactment. The Indian is now in the tribal relation, and he has as is generally supposed, though there the tribal relation, and he has as is generally supposed, though there may be some authority to the contrary, no right as an individual to sue or to be sued in the courts of the United States or the courts of any State. The only remedy that he must have is through the tribal authority. That tribal authority is so far taken away from him that he is subjected to all the laws of the State or Territory. He does not get affirmatively the right to protect this little separate allotment of his in court simply by the enactment of the bill saying that no State shall pass a law denying him the equal protection of the laws. He must get it by some affirmative enactment. Now even the laws. He must get it by some affirmative enactment. Now even if it did mean that, the United States cannot by any legislative power confer upon anybody a right to sue in a State court. They may take away from him a shield that prevents his being sued there, may take away from him a sheld that prevents his being such care, the shield of his tribal relation, and that they do; but no other State can enact that A who is not now liable to be sued in the courts of Massachusetts shall hereafter be liable to be sued there. No act of Congress can make a valid enactment prohibiting Massachusetts from Congress can make a valid enactment prohibiting Massachusetts from depriving of the right to sue, a person whom she otherwise would have the right to deprive of the right to sue. That is beyond the constitutional power of Congress; and as far as the bill goes if it intends any such thing as that, it is beyond our capacity to make the enactment. The one thing we can do under our power of naturalization is to enact that these persons shall have the rights of citizens. If the bill does not mean that, it is essential to justice, it is essential to the protection of the rights von confer, it is essential to essential to the protection of the rights you confer, it is essential to any success in the policy which you now seek to inagurate, that the land-owner, the Indian land-owner, among white neighbors shall not depend for the protection of his little homestead, the value of which in the next twenty-five years is for the first time to be taught him, in the next wenty-nee years is for the first time to be taught him, upon anything but an equal right to sue and to be sued, to present himself as plaintiff, as complainant, in the criminal and the civil courts and to have his complaint heard by the honesty and humanity and sense of duty of a jury of the neighborhood. And I do not think we have enough experience of the value of the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior as a protection to the Indians against wrong and barbarism at other hands than their own to desire, if we are going to undertake this policy, to leave the protection of the Indians there and there only.

Mr. COKE. In reply to the remarks of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, I have to say that this bill leaves the Indians and their allotments of land, after they shall have been consummated, "subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which they may reside." Why are not the Indians and the lands subject now to the jurisdiction of those laws? Simply because the Government of the United States holds a paramount jurisdiction which excludes that of the States and Territories where the Indians and the lands now are. This hill simply proposes to release the irrie. and the lands now are. This bill simply proposes to release the jurisdiction of the United States over these two subjects-matter, the person and the land; and as soon as that release is made the jurisdiction of the State or Territory at that moment attaches. That is all there is about it; and when it does attach, although the Indian is not a citizen, he has the same right to sue in court for a personal injury done him, the same right to sue in court for an injury done his property, that any white citizen has. That this is the legal effect of the bill, I think the Senator from Massachusetts cannot even throw a reason-

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to put him one other question? From what source does the Indian, not a citizen, get a right to sue in a State court? Can he get it from an act of Congress? Where in the Constitution of the United States is lodged in Congress. the power to confer upon anybody the right to sue in a State court? He must get it, then, by the State authority. The State authority may give it at pleasure, or it may deny it at pleasure. Does the provision of this bill prohibiting the State from such denial have, in the judgment of the Senator, any validity or effect whatever? In other words, let me sum up the question: Where do you get the constitutional power to confer the right upon a person not a citizen to sue in the courts of a State?

Mr. COKE. I suppose, in reply to the question of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, that there is not a State in the Union in which any person, whether a citizen or not a citizen, may not sue for any right that is his or for any damage that is done to his person or any right that is his or for any damage that is done to his person or his property. I suppose there is not a State in the Union that denies to aliens the capacity to sue and be sued. Every adult person, every minor, everybody, so far as I know, who has rights of person or rights of property can find the means and the process in the State courts of any State in this Union to assert them; and I mean to say that this bill removes the only obstacle that now exists or that has ever existed to the States or Territories where the Indians are taking jurisdiction over them. The paramount jurisdiction of the United States being taken out of the way, the jurisdiction of the State attaches under general laws that I think exist in all the States to give a day in court to every person of any age, color, condition, or nationality whose rights ought to be adjudicated in court; and these Indians, under such laws, if this bill shall be passed, would have as many rights in the courts of the States where they are as the Senator from Massachusetts or myself to defend or protect either person or property. chusetts or myself to defend or protect either person or property.

There is an exemption here from taxation. There is a prohibition against alienation. One is a privilege and the other a burden. They are put there for the benefit and protection of the Indian.

are put there for the benefit and protection of the Indian.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I understood the Senator who has reported this bill to say that this section surrendered, on the part of the United States, the Indian to the protection of the State. If, therefore, he ever had any power to enforce any rights in the United States courts, that would be taken away. He can have no right, whatever may be given him by this bill, to institute any process in a United States court; but whatever process by or against him must issue in the State courts. The committee have made it absolutely plain that anybody can pursue him through the State courts to any United States court; but whatever process by or against him must issue in the State courts. The committee have made it absolutely plain that anybody can pursue him through the State courts to any extent they please, harass him in both real claims against him and imaginary claims against him, resort to every process of court imaginable to carry out any design against him. Now, what right has he to enforce his rights? The Senator says it is found in a provision that no State shall pass any law or enforce any law it has already passed to prevent his having the equal protection of the laws. Suppose the State does not pass any law at all; it is not the State against which he wants protection; it is against the individual. The State passes no law to deprive him of equal protection, but the individual commits a trespass against him or his property, and the State has done nothing. Where is his remedy? You cannot arraign the State because the individual has committed a trespass upon his person or his property. You cannot say that the State has violated this injunction? The State has done nothing at all; it is the individual; and yet there is no provision here by which the Indian can enforce his right against the individual in the State who has committed a wrong upon him.

If it be necessary to enact positively on this last provision in the bill that anybody can bring an Indian into court, why is it not just as necessary to enact positively that he can come into court of his own accord and bring any white man into court? What is the occasion of providing in the fore part of this section that he shall be subject to all the laws of the State, and then when he come in and asks that the laws of the State, and then when he coin in and asks that the laws of the State, and then when he coin and asks that the laws of the State, and then when he coin and asks that the laws of the State and the when he coin and asks that to all the laws of the State, and then when he comes in and asks that the laws of the State shall be enforced on his side you turn around and say that the State has been inhibited from doing anything that shall deprive him of his rights. It is the rights he is entitled to under the laws of the State. The State may enact in so many words that he shall have and of right enjoy every privilege that a white man may enjoy in the State, and yet if she does not also enact that he may have the right to enforce those laws in her courts, it is simply empty words and a mockery, and he has no ability to protect himself in her words and a mockery, and he has no ability to protect himself in her courts. This does not provide that in order to enforce his equal rights in the court he shall have the privilege of summoning any individual in the State into her courts upon a charge that this individual has violated the enactment of the State. The State may content itself with saying, "We have enacted all the laws; take care of yourself under the laws we have enacted." The State may content itself with saying, "If our Indians' rights are invaded by a white man we will enforce in our name his rights and redress in our name his grievances, and he may be therefore turned over to his petition to the authorities of the State to enforce for him a right which every citizen of the State is entitled by the laws of the State to enforce himself in her tribunals." himself in her tribunals."

If I understand this section aright, the Indian is far worse off with than without it. He is stripped of all opportunity to enter the courts of the United States confessedly by those who report this bill. He can appeal to the laws of the United States for redress of grievances in appeal to the laws of the United States for redress of grievances in no other way but by petition here or in the other branch of Congress. He, as White Eagle said, is stripped as well of his rights as he certainly would be of his earthly possessions, and left naked, exposed to every man's aggression who had the disposition to invade his rights, and then is left without remedy except by petition; and that is what is tendered to him to-day as a boon. That is one of the methods of this day for advancing the poor Indian to a level with the white man under this Government. That is what he gets from this bill—stripped of every right he may now enjoy in the courts of the United States, and to use the language of the Senator from Texas, surrendered (a good and to use the language of the Senator from Texas, surrendered (a good word it is) to the State; and it is positively enacted that in the State to which he is surrendered he may be called into her courts at any man's beck, but he must depend upon the disposition of the State as man's beck, but he must depend upon the disposition of the State as a State to redress any grievance that may be inflicted upon him, and cannot even, if I may be allowed, at the suggestion of my colleague, go into the courts of the United States by appeal from a State court, which should say, the State has enacted no law to prevent your enjoyment of your equal rights, nor has it enacted any law that shall give you this method of redressing your grievances.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, if I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hoar,] it is to confer all the rights of a citizen of the United States upon an Indian who has received.

by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] it is to confer all the rights of a citizen of the United States upon an Indian who has received his land on the reservation of his tribe in severalty under this bill. I incline very strongly to think that the Indian who has settled himself upon a homestead is a citizen already, under the fourteenth conitutional amendment; but if he is not, I am prepared to vote to make him one whenever he takes his land in severalty, and to give him the rights of a citizen if he lacks anything. The history of our dealings with the Indians is a sad history. And I think we owe something to them. When the white people, few in number—

I thought perhaps the discussion would not continue so long as it has, but as the bill will probably go over until to-morrow I should like to have the amendment printed. It is in the direction of the Senator's remarks, providing citizenship for the Indians. I ask that the amendment be printed.

Mr. BROWN. As I was stating, when interrupted by the honorable Senator from Illinois, when the white men appeared, few in number, upon the eastern shores of this continent the Indians possessed it. They were powerful; they were sovereign; they were the monarchs of this country; and it was by their toleration that we settled in their dominions. There was no dictating to them by the persons who first came here to settle on the eastern shores. The white men asked, may we purchase from you, the owners, a homestead here? The Indians met them with kindness and hospitality. When justice has been done to them I believe they have usually been proverbially kind. Negotiations were opened and certain tracts of land were conveyed, not by us to them, but by them to us.

by us to them, but by them to us.

They had the power then at any time to have exterminated the settlements upon the eastern shores of this continent; and it would settlements upon the eastern shores of this continent; and it would have taken armies to plant colonies here that could have sustained themselves. They did not think proper to do so. By their toleration the white people poured in and increased in numbers until they became most numerous, and then commenced to dictate to the Indians; and the stronger we became and the weaker they became, the more illiberal and unjust was our policy toward them. It reached a point at a certain stage when it was adjudicated, I believe, by our Supreme Court, that we owned the whole territory and they were mere occupants. It is true we then treated them, I believe, as persons, but now the question is gravely considered in the Senate and in the courts whether they are persons under the fourteenth constitutional amendment. The they are persons under the fourteenth constitutional amendment. The whole history of our dealing with them has, I think, been a history of wrong, mostly on our part. A distinguished officer of the United States Army when approached on this subject on one occasion said he never knew the Indians violate a treaty, and he never knew the white men to observe one. This may not be literally true, but there is too much truth in it. I will not go into a discussion of the various outrages that have been perpetrated upon them. As our people have advanced farther west and found territory they desired occupied by the Indians we have soon found occasion to get up disturbances or difficulties with them that led first to war, then to victory on our part, then to negotiations and a cession of the territory on their part.

This has been the sad history of our dealings with them. We have grown stronger and stronger until to day we number more than fifty million persons. They have been reduced all told as the last report shows, excluding Alaska, to 255,938.

At the first settlement of the country we were completely in their

At the first settlement of the country we were completely in their power, and they could dictate any terms they pleased to us. And when justly dealt by, they were kind and indulgent to us. Now they are in our power. We have a right, at least we have the power to dictate any terms we choose. Have we dealt as liberally with them as they did with us? We have driven them back from time to time, from reservation to reservation. We have made treaties with them that they are to hold their reserves "as long as water runs and grass grows," but we always get rid of the treaty when we are dissatisfied with it or when we covet the territory and determine to have it.

The bill now before us, as I understand, proposes to permit them to take in severalty lands in the proportion mentioned in the bill within the reservations assigned to them. I favor that bill. I believe they should have the same right that the white man has to take homestead on their reservation, and we should then give them a fee-simple title to it as we give to the white citizen or settler. What inducement have they now to labor to acquire property, to build houses, to clear have they now to labor to acquire property, to build houses, to clear lands, and to make homes comfortable for their future dwelling, when they know that they may be driven from it at any time when we choose to say they must leave? But when we have allotted the lands to them and each has his land in severalty, then he is entitled to the protection of the law; he can go forward and improve his homestead. If he knows it is his, he has a stimulant to industry, and there is something to induce him to make a good citizen and to bind him to good early at good conduct.

The man who is a robber and desires to possess himself of the property of the Indian goes upon the reserve, steals his ponies or his cattle, and brings them away. Is it unnatural that the Indian should pursue? Is it unnatural that he should attempt to protect his rights of property? He would be less than a human being if he did not seek to protect them. The Indian follows the robber, and the result generally is a collision; somebody is killed; and then war. Allot his lands to him in severalty; give him the right to build houses, to clear plantations, to raise stock upon it, with the guarantee of the Government that he shall not be driven from it, and we shall in a very short time see the progress in the far West that we have seen in the Indian Territory.

Indian Territory.

We will soon find the Indians upon their homesteads advancing in civilization; and under the benign influence of the Christian denominations, we shall see Sunday schools and churches planted among them; and instead of roving bands without fixed habitations, goaded to desperation by injustice and wrong, spreading death and destruction in their pathway, we shall find them in the comfortable homes of civilized man, not only a Christian people but many of them cul-

But the question is, shall the Indian be a citizen? I have said it seems to me he is a citizen already under the fourteenth constitutional amendment as soon as he severs his tribal relation and takes the homestead that the law now allows him to take. amendment is very broad in its provisions. It reads thus:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Is the Indian a person? He is the original sovereign of this continent, who had the title to it by a possession that may have run back a hundred generations; who met the white man when he came here kindly and fraternally, who during the wars that we have had with him has shown gallantry of the highest order and oftentimes military genius unsurpassed—is he not a person?

Was King Philip, who swayed the scepter over six powerful tribes, and who when he felt that his rights had been outraged, by his great genius and powers of organization and persuasion, formed a league of all the tribes of the Atlantic slope in a cause which they consider ont a person? Are the educated leaders of the five civilized tribes, some of whom possess intelligence of the highest order, not persons? Was Sequoyah, the author of the Cherokee alphabet and dictionary, who reduced their language to a system as complete as any other written language, not a person? The idea is absurd. If they are not persons what are they? You hold that the meanest and most ignorant negro who comes from the deepest jungle of the darkest part of Africa and plants himself here is a person, and you prescribe naturalization laws by which he has a right to become a citizen.

Every human being-

Said Governor Horatio Seymour-

born upon our continent, or who comes here from any quarter of the world, whether savage or civilized, can go to our courts for protection, except those who belong to the tribes who once owned this country. The cannibal from the islands of the Pacific, the worst criminal from Europe, Asia, or Africa, can appeal to the law and courts for their rights of person and property; all save our native Indians, who, above all, should be protected from wrong.

The Indian on the western plains who shows genius and gallantry and manhood is denied even an existence as a person.

Note the language of the Constitution:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States.

We claim that the jurisdiction of this country extends to the Pacific Ocean. Was the Indian born within that limit? No one questions it. He does not ask you for naturalization. He cares nothing about the uniform rules you may make on that subject. He claims his right as a birthright. He was born in the United States, and he is a person. But is he subject to the jurisdiction of the United States? The amendment requires that he be born in the United States and subject to its initialization.

to its jurisdiction. That question has been expressly decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in the tobacco case brought up from the Cherokee Nation by Mr. Boudinot. The Cherokees claimed under their tribal relations and under an express section of a treaty between them and the United States that they had a right to sell or dispose of any of their property, as they might think proper, without paying any tax to the Government of the United States; and Mr. Boudinot and his partner established the tobacco factory in the Cherokee Nation. The officers of the United States seized it for non-payment of internal revenue, and the question came before the Supreme Court of the United States for final adjudication whether the Indian Territory was subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and Territory was subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and whether it had a right to collect the revenue. The Supreme Court held that the jurisdiction of the United States did extend into the Indian Territory, and that Congress had the power to annul the treaty and collect the revenue. Here, then, is the express decision by the highest judicial tribunal in the Government, that the Indians on their own reservation are subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. They were born in the United States; they are subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and if they be persons there is no escape from the conclusion that they are citizens of the United States whether the Government may choose for the time to extend its criminal laws over them or their reservations, or not. And being citizens of the United States, they are entitled to the protection of the laws of the United States. United States.

Again:

Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Why is the Indian not a person? Then, if he is a person, you have no right to deny to him the equal protection of the laws. It is absurd to deny that the Indian is a person. But it may be said that the next, section of the fourteenth constitutional amendment disposes of this Let us see:

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed.

Yes, in making up the representative population of the State you exclude the Indians not taxed; but you do more than that by this

But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being wenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

If the Indian is not a citizen because we exclude him in the count If the Indian is not a citizen because we exclude him in the count for representation on the ground that he is not taxed, then you must also exclude from the count the white citizens of any State who may be denied the right of voting. To illustrate: suppose the population of a State be 1,000,000, and 100,000 of that number are Indians not taxed. When you go to make up the representative population of that State you would count it 900,000. Why? Because you exclude the Indians not taxed. Then suppose a State excludes from the ballotbox, for any cause, 10,000 of her male citizens over twenty-one, and the whole number of male citizens over twenty-one is 100,000; then you deduct one-tenth, or 100,000 of the whole representative population of that State, because 10,000 of the voters have been excluded. I apprehend that the 100,000 white people are still citizens, although you are not allowed in making up the representative population to count more than 900,000. Why? Because you have distranchised enough of your citizens to exclude 100,000 from the count. So in the other case with the Indians. You exclude 100,000 of the Indian from the rights of citizenship? The Constitution does not exclude the Indian from the representative count, because he is an Indian not taxed. It is argued, I suppose, that because he is excluded while not taxed from the representative count, therefore he is not a citizen. Then the 100,000 white people excluded in the other case are not citizens by the same parity of reasoning. Such reasoning is not sound.

Then I hold that the Indian is a citizen of the United States when born upon the soil of the United States, and especially so when he severs his tribal relation and takes his allotment of land and settles for representation on the ground that he is not taxed, then you must born upon the soil of the United States, and especially so when he severs his tribal relation and takes his allotment of land and settles severs his tribal relation and takes his allotment of land and settles down under the laws of the United States and pays taxes. It is true you exempt his land from taxes by this bill for a certain length of time. During that period you would have to exclude him from the representative count, but the moment you tax him, then how does it stand? He is a person; he was born in the United States, and is subject to its jurisdiction, and he pays taxes as a citizen. Why is he not a citizen, and why is he not then counted in the representative apportionment? I should like for some Senator to give a reason why. But we cannot truly say that the Indians are not now taxed. We have established trading stations among them, and all Administrations have appointed political favorites to conduct this business. We do not permit any one, under heavy penalties, to go into their territions have appointed political favorites to conduct this business. We do not permit any one, under heavy penalties, to go into their territory and trade with them as the competitor of the political trader appointed by the Government. They are compelled, therefore, to sell their produce to those favorites who are put there by our Government to make money off of them, and they are compelled to buy the goods they use from the same persons. The larger part of the money raised to support this Government is raised by a tariff upon imports. Almost every Indian tribe purchases from these favored traders certain amounts of imported goods, and every time he purchases a vard of most every Indian tribe purchases from these favored traders certain amounts of imported goods, and every time he purchases a yard of cloth manufactured in a foreign country, or pound of sugar or any other article made abroad, he pays a tax to this Government. Then why is he not a citizen, entitled to the protection of the laws made by this Government? Why is not his life sacred, and why should not the assassin who takes it wantonly suffer the extreme penalty? Why is not his property entitled to the protection of the law, and why is not this protection extended to him on his application? And if he is illegally imprisoned why is he not antitled to the herefits of the writ not this protection extended to him on his application? And if he is illegally imprisoned, why is he not entitled to the benefits of the writ of habeas corpus, which have recently been extended to him by an able Federal judge in one of the Western States?

Let it be borne in mind, furthermore, that this fourteenth amendment declares that they "are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside." I know in some minds there is a difficulty about State rights just here, about Congress declaring anybody a citizen. I think we are simply making a declaration here in a statute of a right that is already secured by the Constitution, that he is a citizen whenever he has complied with these terms.

Under the amendment we may declare him a citizen, but may not be able to count him in the representative population until he begins to pay taxes upon his land. But when he does he is then a person born in the United States, and a tax-payer, and has all the rights of a citizen under the Constitution.

As I do not care to stickle about the shadow of a question of State

As I do not care to stickle about the shadow of a question of State rights here, and as I hold he is a citizen whenever he has adopted the rules and conformed to the plan laid down in this statute any way, I am willing to say in the statute in express terms that he is a citizen with all the protection and duties of any other citizen. Why give it with all the protection and duties of any other citizen. Why give it to every person of every race and every color on the face of the earth who will come here and comply with our laws and not give it to the original inhabitants of our own country? He is "to the manor born," and you have no right to drive him into the Pacific Ocean or to slaughter him with his women and children because he will not submit to the imperious dictates of any officer of the Government. When you make a treaty with him and assign to him certain limits and say mit to the imperious dictates of any officer of the Government. When you make a treaty with him and assign to him certain limits and say "this is your land, Mr. Indian," he has a right to stay there and be protected, and when he conforms to the laws conformed to by other citizens and is made a taxpayer he has a right to claim citizenship, in the broadest sense, and you have no right to deny it to him.

Our mode of dealing with the Indian is in very striking contrast with that adopted by the British Government. Why are they not always engaged in war with the Indian in Canada? Why is it that they live in peace and harmony there? It is because the British Government has dealt justly and fairly with the Indians. It has not driven them from nost to nillar, but has assigned them reservations. driven them from post to pillar, but has assigned them reservations, where they have made their homes and built their houses and cleared their fields and raised their stock and erected their school houses and their fields and raised their stock and erected their school houses and churches. They have the rights of British subjects, and those rights are protected. They are treated humanely and kindly, and hence they are peaceable and loyal to that Government. Let it be borne in mind that the British Government has not driven them to her rein mind that the British Government has not driven them to her remotest boundary to be located. They have permitted them to take reservations on the spots where they were born, where they have always lived, and where their fathers are buried. I recollect, a few years ago, on a visit to Quebec, that I admired the valley of the Saint Charles as one of the loveliest I ever saw, and one that the white man might well covet. But in going ten miles from the city, I found in that beautiful valley on the river Lorette, which took its name from the tribe, the remnant of the tribe of the Lorettes living on the territory of their birth, and protected as British subjects, and they were as loyal as any other subjects that the British Government had in Canada. had in Canada.

I visited the residence of the chief in the midst of that magnificent valley, where I was received kindly, and among other curiosities I was shown what were called the "crown jewels," prominent among them a bronze medal presented to the chief by Prince Albert, and a silver medal presented by the Prince of Wales. These were regarded as treasures of the nation and the tribe blessed the names of the doas treasures of the nation and the tribe blessed the names of the donors. Their hearts swell with pride when they say, "I am a British subject." How marked is the contrast between that state of things and what we witness in our own country! There the Indian has been justly and kindly treated and is a willing subject to the government and a warm friend to the white man. Here he has been too often unjustly and harshly treated, and he is the natural enemy of his oppressors. There they are civilized, and in large numbers converted to Christianity.

Here on the plains the wild Indian is often butchered because he has defended his rights against some robber who plandered him of his has defended his rights against some robber who plundered him of his

It may be said we have the power to carry out this line of policy. That is true. But have we the right to do it? We are strong; we are powerful. But there is a Being stronger and much more powerful than we are. And we should not forget that nations as well as individuals have to answer for wrongs and outrages committed by them. In what way we may be called to answer I do not pretend to say. Whether it will be by pestilence or war, or in what other manner we may be scourged for our cruelty to the aboriginees of this country, I know not. But I believe the crimes committed by us against the Poncas, and in the massacre of the Cheyennes and other like outrages, will meet their reward in national punishment. Our course is condemned by the civilization of the age. It is condemned by human-ity, and it is condemned by Christian men and women everywhere who understand the facts.

who understand the facts.

I do not put the blame at the door of any particular person or official. I do not pretend to say where it rests. I do not call in question the motives of any one, but I do say the acts were criminal; they cannot be justified. What were the facts? The Cheyennes had been carried to the Indian Territory. They could not stand the climate and were dying fast with disease. Some three hundred escaped, and in midwinter, under the most adverse circumstances, made their way back toward their own country, and had gone several hundred miles before the military overtook them. When summoned to surrender, they refused to do so without a guarantee that they should not be sent back to the Indian Territory, saying that they would rather fight till they died than to return. The commanding officer gave them to understand, and they did understand, that they should not them to understand, and they did understand, that they should not be carried back to the Territory if they would surrender. After the surrender they were carried to Fort Robinson, and an order was then sent to carry them to the Indian Territory. They refused to go, and about one hundred and fifty of them, being all that survived, were imprisoned, thinly clad, in midwinter, when the thermometer was below zero, for five days at a time without food or fire, and three days of the time without water, to compel them to consent to return to the Indian Territory, where their ranks had been fast decimated by diseases incident to the climate, and when they preferred death to a return. If we were determined to carry out our dictatorial polto a return. If we were determined to carry out our dictatorial policy and compel them to return to the reservation, why did we not hold them at the fort and treat them humanely till we had provided the means to transport them, and then send them under military escort?

But I turn from this sickening theme, and will not dwell longer upon it by rehearsing scenes that attended the butchery of men, women, and children who attempted, by violence, to escape from this hearthly imprisonment.

horrible imprisonment.

If we treat the Indians as they do in Canada we may avoid wars. We need not have the Army always chasing them if we will do justice to them and not be always robbing them. In my opinion it is much better to expend a few millions in locating them and giving them agri-cultural implements, and in educating and civilizing them and their children, than it is to expend a hundred millions in pursuing them over the plains and slaughtering them like wolves.

But it is said by those disposed to give no quarters to the Indians that they are savage and cruel in their mode of warfare, often slaughtering indiscriminately, men, women, and children. This is unfortunately true; but what better could we expect from people who have nately true; but what better could we expect from people who have none of the advantages of the proper training incident to civilization, and who feel that they are greatly oppressed? The point I make, however, is that those wars in which they practice cruelty have usually been provoked by bad white men or by the agents of governments at war with the United States. The Indian is not naturally disposed to go to war with the white man. Our early history shows that very clearly. It was only when their rights had been trampled upon by the white man that they took up arms. The rattlesnake is the most peaceable reptile on the plains. When you come in contact with him, if you will not trample upon him or practice aggression that causes him to believe that you intend to do it, he will crawl away and leave you; but when you place your foot upon him he deslares war, and fights with savage desperation. So with these children of the forest, once so strong and now so weak and so near extinction.

But it may be said that they are savages, and cannot be civilized and made good citizens. Our experience has taught us very differently. On that point I want to call attention to two or three passages taken from the reports of the Indian agents for the civilized tribes. The agent says, speaking of these civilized tribes:

These people have recovered slowly from the effects of the war, but they are agent says, speaking of these civilized tribes:

These people have recovered slowly from the effects of the war, but they are now in a position, if not disturbed, to become a strong and wealthy people. Their only fear is that the United States will forget her obligations, and in some way deprive them of their lands. They do not seem to carefor the loss in money value so much as they fear the trouble and the utter annihilation of a great portion of their people, if the whites are permitted to homestead in all portions of their country, as is contemplated by so many of the measures before Congress.

Again he says:

Again he says:

Crime is no more frequent than in the adjoining States, and convictions by local authority are about as sure. The band of desperadoes, whites and Indians, who made their headquarters in the western part of this agency, and beyond, and who were the terror of the whole country last year, have all been killed or placed in the penitentiary. The feeling among these nations is stronger than ever for the enforcement of the law.

The Methodist, Presbyterian, and Baptist denominations have missionaries here and are doing good work. Some of the missionaries have been here for many years, and their influence for good is great. Their means for support is small, and they work hard, and only those remain in the field who possess a true missionary spirit. The church buildings are not expensive or ornamental, but are built for use. The Sabbath is well respected and observed. Many of the Indians are ordained ministers. Some of them have been educated in the States, and returned to labor among their own people.

The schools of these nations are conducted upon the school system of the States. The English language is tanght exclusively. Many of the boys and girls are being sent to the States to be educated at the expense of the nation. Many of the wealthy send their children East to be educated at their own expense. The result is a surprise to the stranger who meets so many well-educated people among the nations. There are also private schools with good attendance. I am of the opinion that the solution of the Indian question, if it is ever solved before the last one is driven from the face of the earth, will be in the education of the Indian children.

It appears, therefore, from the reports from the five civilized tribes that they have made great progress in education, and they are probably doing as much or more with the funds at their disposal now for ably doing as much or more with the funds at their disposal now for the education of their children than we are doing. Among them are intelligent divines, intelligent lawyers, intelligent judges; in a word, they are a civilized people, with dwellings and farms and orchards and gardens and stock, and are fast rivaling us in the arts of civilization. Why may not other tribes reach the same elevation with the same advantages? There is no reason why it may not be so. Indeed it is almost a certainty that it will be so.

In the same report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs I find statements in reference to the wild tribes that have been located

In the same report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs I find statements in reference to the wild tribes that have been located there. Even the Modocs, who were carried down under circumstances so unfavorable, are making, as the agent states, very decided progress toward becoming civilized. It may be said, then, why not carry out the policy that has been carried out heretofore, of taking them from their homes West, and, after killing off a large proportion, carry the little remnant there, and get them all together. I say it is cruelty; it is outrage. Put them upon reservations upon their native heath, let them take their land in severalty on their reservations, encourage them to go to work, and when they have gone ervations, encourage them to go to work, and when they have gone to work protect them in their labor and in the property they acquire by their labor. In a word, extend the protection of the law over them, and subject them to its penalties when they violate it. Treat them as persons, as human beings, not as wild animals.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator says the Indians should have their lands in severalty. I should like to inquire of the honorable Senator if the progress in civilization made by the five civilized tribes has not been with land in common?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; I understand they hold the fee-simple in com-

Mr. BROWN. I have no doubt in a very short time they will abandon the practice of holding the fee-simple in common. With their order of intelligence and enlightenment they will soon have the ame idea of individual rights of property and of individual protection that we have. It is true, as I understand our treaties, (and I am for strict good faith in the observance of treaties,) we have no right to compel them to take their lands in severalty; but I have no doubt in a few years they will divide them in severalty among themselves. As we started out wrong, I think in the future in dealing with the different tribes we should start right, and give the land to them in severalty at the commencement. veralty at the commencement.

Mr. President, I want this matter put where there can be no doubt about it, so that when the Indians desire to conform to the laws they shall have the right to do it under the protection of the law.

In the treaty made in 1854 with the Omahas there was provision made that their lands might be allotted in severalty whenever the President thinks proper to do so. I understand that they have sent petition after petition to the President to permit the division, and let them have their lands in severalty, but that a deaf car has always been turned to them. The time has not yet come when the President has in his discretion concluded that it was best to permit them to have those treaty regulations carried out. I would make the provision imperative, that when they comply with certain provisions laid down by law they shall have a right to the patent. Take the Omahas, for instance. As they have not any land in severalty, what inducement is there for the industrious, frugal, attentive Indian to labor for his advancement and the advancement of his family? If he undertakes to build a house and clear lands and raise stock he knows not what time he may be driven away from it. He knows not whether under a new apportionment that land will fall to him or to another, or whether it will be taken by the white may. Our own race would neither build houses, clear lands, nor make other improvements under any such uncertainty as to their right to enjoy the fruits of their labor in future.

If the Omaha says. "The treaty provides that I may have my land." labor in future.

If the Omaha says, "The treaty provides that I may have my land in severalty," the reply is, "You have never got the exercise of the discretion of the President to permit you to do it." What encouragement is there then?

I understand there are bad Indians in every tribe and there are good Indians; there are lazy Indians and there are industrious Indians; good Indians; there are lazy Indians and there are industrious Indians; and the way to encourage industry is to let each man who labors with his hands feel that he labors on his own soil and is protected by the laws of the country that are thrown over him, and, like a shield, guarantee him against robbery and wrong. Then you stimulate his industry; he has something to work for; but where he is driven from post to pillar at the will of the Government, or an official of the Government or of the Army, what inducement do you hold out to him to act industriously or to make him a comfortable home or make his family comfortable and happy? None whatever. We hold out the reverse. The ancestors of the present Indians once held the whole continent in fee-simple. We have taken it from them. Is it asking too much of us, when we have a vast unoccupied territory that the white man is not yet able to cultivate, that the descendants of the original proprietors of the whole should have the privilege of locating homesteads on this vast domain where they can labor tory that the white man is not yet able to cultivate, that the descendants of the original proprietors of the whole should have the privilege of locating homesteads on this vast domain where they can labor for a livelihood and be protected in the fruits of their labor?

I understand it is the wish of the chiefs of many of the tribes to continue the tribal relations. They are like all other human beings, I suppose; they love power, and they want to continue things as they are so that they may have control of their people. Therefore they carry them from point to point, and frequently we see that they come here and sell out; the country is disposed of by four or five men agreeing that they will move off a hundred or a thousand miles from the place of their nativity, and all the tribe must leave their homes because a certain amount of money has been spent on four or five chiefs here. I say to encourage the common Indians to take their homesteads and settle down upon them and go to work and abandon the tribal relations and become peaceable citizens of the United States, is in my judgment the best solution of the Indian question. As long as they roam or are driven from one point to another we cannot expect they will settle down and become good citizens. Whenever you hold out the inducement and say to the Indian, "take your homestead here, build your house, clear your plantation, raise your stock, send your children to school, and he who comes here to steal your pony shall atone for it in the penitentiary; he who takes your life shall go to the gallows, and you, too, shall conform to the laws or suffer the penalties," you will find them or at least a large proportion of them ready to do it. If there be those among them who will not do it, subject them to the laws until the penal statutes properly executed have brought them to subjection. That is a large proportion of them ready to do it. If there be those among them who will not do it, subject them to the laws until the penal statutes properly executed have brought th

I knew a few of them in my own State who staid when the Cherokee tribe left there, mostly half-breeds, some quadroons. They have taken reservations there, and are as good citizens as any we have in the State. They are intelligent, they are law-abiding, they are or derly; part of them are good, Christian men and women, and they are exemplary citizens. Why may it not be so elsewhere if we give them the same opportunities?

I trust, Mr. President, that we shall pass this bill in a shape that will give every Indian a home on his reservation, and guarantee it to him and his children for all time to come, and that the power of alienation will be restricted until he has learned the rights and the duties of an American citizen. After that let him and his posterity take care of it or alienate it as may any one else. Fix a reasonable time; exempt their homesteads from taxation. After that time there is no further exclusion in the fourteenth constitutional amendment in the way of counting them in the representative population of the States where they may reside, and no reason that I can see why they may not be full-fledged citizens and voters.

TOBACCO LICENSE.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 7015) to enable planters and other employers to furnish their laborers, tenants, and croppers with tobacco without first obtaining a license as retail dealers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

DELAY IN PRINTING.

Mr. SIMONTON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved. That the Public Printer inform this House of the cause of delay in printing certain reports necessary for the information of Congress; and why the same were not printed and furnished at the commencement of the present session of Congress, namely, report on foreign relations, of Chief Signal Officer, Navy and Interior Departments, Chief of Ordnance, and report on finances.

NICHOLAS W. NEW.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 7016) for the relief of Nicholas W. New; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be

EMORY WILLIAMS.

Mr. DUNNELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 7017) for the relief of Emory Williams; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DANIEL N. RUNNELS.

Mr. CONGER presented the petition of Daniel N. Runnels, for the passage of a law to relieve him from certain injuries arising from a changed ruling of the Treasury Department; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

JOSEPH H. WEATHERBE.

Mr. BRAGG introduced a bill (H. R. No. 7022) for the relief of Joseph H. Weatherbe; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

GUINEA GRASS IN ARKANSAS RIVER VALLEY.

Mr. SLEMONS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 7023) making appropriation of money to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to ascertain the origin and the best method for the extinction of the guinea grass in the valley of the Arkansas River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

Will the Chair now entertain the motion I submitted a while ago for the passage of a resolution of inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees. This requires a two-thirds vote.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 59, noes 48.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the morning hour was not dispensed with not dispensed with.

Mr. STEPHENS. I ask now for the consideration of my resolution.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I rise to make a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The House has decided to have a morning hour.

The Chair will recognize the gentleman later in the day. The call of committees for reports will now proceed.

TAX ON NATIONAL-BANK STOCK.

Mr. LOUNSBERY, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 6913) to legalize the collection of taxes on account of shares of stock in national banks.
Mr. CONGER. I would like to hear that bill read.

The bill was read.

Mr. REED. Is there a report accompanying the bill? The SPEAKER. There is.
Mr. REED. I would like to hear it read.

The report was read.

The bill was then ordered to be placed on the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES COURTS FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with an amendment to the title, the bill (H. R. No. 6942) to fix the time for holding the district and circuit courts for the western district of Texas; which was placed upon the Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON DISEASES OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS.

Mr. COVERT, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 362) to authorize the printing of 100,000 copies of the special report of the Commissioner of Agriculture relative to diseases of swine and infectious and contagious diseases incident to other domestic animals; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

EFFICIENCY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 6788) to promote the efficiency of the Navy.

Mr. CONGER. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. CONGER. If there is a report accompanying the bill I would like to hear it read.

The report was read, and then the bill was ordered to be placed upon the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be

NORMAN WIARD.

Mr. BRIGGS. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report back the petition of Norman Wiard, and to move that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. REED. Is there a report?

The SPEAKER. The committee makes no report, except to ask that the petition be referred to another committee.

Mr. REED. I would like to hear the petition read.

Mr. BRIGGS. It is very long.

The SPEAKER. The petition is reported back merely for reference to another committee, because the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Chair supposes, deems that it has no jurisdiction of the subject, which is really in the nature of a claim.

Mr. BRIGGS. It has been before Congress several times and has

Mr. BRIGGS. It has been before Congress several times and has always been referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion of Mr. BRIGGS was then agreed to; and the petition was accordingly referred to the Committee on Claims.

THOMAS G. CORBIN.

Mr. BRIGGS also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3532) for the relief of Thomas G. Corbin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be

J. J. WILLIAMS AND J. D. THORNTON.

Mr. BREWER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 5601) for the relief of John J. Williams and J. D. Thornton.

Mr. REED. I ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. REED. Let the accompanying report be read.

The report was read and ordered to be printed, and the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whell was the Brights Calendar.

referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPH.

Mr. MONEY. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to which was referred a resolution in relation to a Government telegraph, have instructed me to report the same back and ask that it be placed on the House Calendar.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved. That the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing by law a telegraphic postal system under the Government of the United States; and also as to the cost of reproducing the facilities for transmitting telegraphic messages equal to those now possessed by existing corporations, and as to the expense of operating the same, with power to send for persons and papers, and to report at any time by bill or otherwise.

Mr. CONGER. Is that a proper subject for a committee to report

Mr. CONGER. Is that a proper subject for a committee to report upon during this call?

The SPEAKER. The committee can select its own time for reporting such a resolution. The resolution having been referred to the committee, under the rule it must be reported upon within one week.

Mr. CONGER. Then I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed there is none.

Mr. CONGER. Then it is in violation of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that this being in the nature of a resolution of inquiry does not require a report.

of a resolution of inquiry does not require a report.

Mr. CONGER. I think the committee should inform the House of their conclusion upon the resolution.

Mr. MONEY. This resolution simply empowers the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to inquire into certain matters. the Post-Omee and Post-Roads to inquire into certain matters. The resolution has not been adopted by the House, and if proper to do so, I will ask consent that it be considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that, under the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MONEY,] a report from the committee is required in order to conform to the rule.

Mr. MONEY. A report upon a resolution of inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read clause 2 of Rule XVIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

No bill, petition, memorial, or resolution referred to a committee, or reported therefrom for printing and recommitment, shall be brought back into the House on a motion to reconsider; and all bills, petitions, memorials, or resolutions reported from a committee shall be accompanied by reports in writing, which shall be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that under the terms of the rule a report from the committee is required.

Mr. MONEY. Then I will withdraw the resolution for the present.

RAILROAD ON STATEN ISLAND, NEW YORK.

Mr. KETCHAM, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 6229) to grant the right of way for railroad purposes through certain lands in Richmond County, New York. Mr. CONGER. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. CONGER. Is there a report accompanying the bill? If so, I ask to have it read.

The Clerk began the reading of the report, but before concluding,
Mr. REAGAN said: Is it in order to read that report during the morning hour for the call of committees, unless action is desired upon morning hour for the call of committees, unless action is desired upon the report of the committee?

The SPEAKER. The practice has been to allow reports to be read when the reading is called for by any member.

Mr. REAGAN. If the bill was up for consideration at this time the reading of the report would be proper. But I do not understand that it has been the practice to read reports except at such times.

Mr. COVERT. As I understood the request of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Conger,] it was for the reading of the bill and not for the reading of the report.

Mr. CONGER. I called for the reading of the report also.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read Rule XXXI.

The Clerk read as follows:

When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to ive a final vote is demanded, and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

Mr. CONGER. There was no objection to the reading of the report when I called for it.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no objection to the reading of the report if the House is now to act upon the bill; otherwise I do object.

Mr. CARLISLE. The House is not called upon now to give any vote upon the bill, because, under the rule, the bill being reported from a committee at this time must be referred to one of the calen-from a committee at this time must be referred to one of the calendars. It is therefore out of order for the report to be read now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not interrupted the reading of reports during this call, because, until now, no objection has been made to their reading. The Chair thinks that under the rule bills with their accompanying reports when reported under this call go to their respective calendars, and without a vote of the House it is not in order at this time to have the reports read.

Mr. MORRISON. You might just as well call for the reading of the bill bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been read already.

Mr. REED. The bill has been read, and the Clerk has proceeded with the reading of the report. It is now too late to make objection. The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the report to be read through. The reading was begun and not objected to.

Mr. REAGAN. Does the Chair decide that it is in order to read

The SPEAKER. The reading of the report was asked for, and there was no objection. The reading has already been begun.

Mr. KEIFER. The reading had commenced, and it is too late now to make objection.

Mr. REAGAN. It is a waste of time, I submit.

The reading of the report was resumed and concluded.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LAND TITLES IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 6629, a bill (H. R. No. 7024) to quiet land titles in California; which was read a first and second time, the second reading being in full on demand of Mr. CONGER.

The bill was then referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LAND TITLES IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. DUNN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 6525, a bill (H. R. No. 7025) to quiet the title to certain lands in the upper peninsula of Michigan, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

VACATION OF ARIZONA LEGISLATIVE ACT.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah, from the Committee on the Territories, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 5501) to vacate, annul, and set aside an act of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Arizona.

Mr. CONGER. Let the bill be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill; but before he had con-

Mr. UPSON. I make the point that the morning hour has expired. The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and this bill goes over till the next morning hour for the call of committees.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN TEXAS.

Mr. UPSON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 6942) to fix the times for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States for the western district of Texas be taken from the House Calendar and considered now.

Mr. WILSON. It is merely to change the time of holding certain eourts.

Mr. UPSON. One of the courts will commence in March, and it is absolutely necessary to pass the bill now that it may go to the Senate. It provides for nothing else than simply changing the time of holding court.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the district and circuit courts of the United States within and for the western district of Texa shall be holden at to times bereinafter specified, namely: At Austin, commencing on the first Tuesdays in January and June: at San Antonio, commencing on the fourth Tuesdays in March and October; at Brownsville, commencing on the fourth Tuesdays in April and November. SEC. 2. That all laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed. SEC. 3. That this act take effect on the 1st day of March, A. D. 1881.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom the bill was referred, have reported an amendment making a change in the title. The amendment will be read. The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "of" and insert the word "for."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. UPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VETERAN UNION ASSOCIATION, LEADVILLE, COLORADO.

Mr. BELFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 6062, and that it be now put on its passage. This is a bill applicable exclusively to my own State, and I hope there will be no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 6062) donating certain lands in Lake County, State of Colorado, to the Veteran Union Association of Leadville for hospital and burial purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That the following-described tract of land, situated in Lake County and State of Colorado, be donated to the Veteran Union Association of Leadville, in said State, for hospital and burial purposes, to wit, the north half of the southwest quarter of section 23, township number 9 south, of range 86 west, excepting, however, from said tract that part included in the United States survey No. 271; and also donating to said association the south half of the northwest quarter in the section, township, and range aforesaid. Said land is bereby donated upon the express condition that it shall be used exclusively for hospital and burial purposes; and should there be a failure to comply with the conditions herein expressed, then said land shall revert to the Government of the United States.

The amendments reported by the Committee on the Public Lands were read, as follows:

In lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "for hospital and burial purposes" and sert "for the use and purpose of locating thereon a hospital and cemetery." After the word "donating," in line 11, insert the words "for the said uses and purposes."

In line 15, before the word "hospital," insert the word "such."

After the word "expressed," in line 17, insert "for two years from the passage of this act, or should said lands ever cease to be used for said purposes."

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the bill. The amendments reported from the Committee on the Public Lands were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engressed, was accordingly read the third time, and

Mr. BELFORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONSULAR REPORTS.

Mr. AIKEN. I ask by unanimous consent the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed and bound in one volume 50,000 copies of the numbers issued by the State Department of reports from the consuls of the United States on the commerce, manufactures, &c., of their consular districts; 35 000 of which shall be for the use of members of the House of Representatives, and 15,000 for the use of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. That will go under the law to the Committee on Printing

Mr. AIKEN. Is it not in order by unanimous consent to put it upon its passage now?

The SPEAKER. There is a law on the subject requiring that all printing exceeding in amount $500 shall be referred to the Committee on Printing. Mr. AIKEN.

Mr. AIKEN. It will exceed that amount. The SPEAKER. The law will be read. The Clerk read as follows:

All motions to print extra copies of any bill, report, or other public document, shall be referred to the Committee on Printing of the House in which such motion is made.—Revised Statutes, section 3793.

The concurrent resolution was received and referred to the Committee on Printing.

DAM AT LAKE WINNIBIGOSHISH.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and pass a bill (S. No. 2008) amending the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, completion, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 14, 1880.

Mr. BOUCK. Let that bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the act of Congress of the United States entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, completion, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved Jime 14, 1880, contains the following appropriation, that is to say: "For the reservoirs at the headwaters of the Mississippi River, to be used in the construction of a dam at Lake Winnibigoshish, $75,000: Provided, That all injuries occasioned to individuals by overflow of their lands be ascertained and determined by agreement or in accordance with the laws of Minnesota, and shall not exceed in the aggregate $5,000;" and Whereas some lands of the United States embraced in an Indian reservation may be affected by the flowage from the construction of said dam: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &x., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain what, if any, injury is occasioned to the rights of the Indians occupying said reservation by the construction of said dam or the cutting or removing of trees or other material from said reservation for the construction said dam, and to determine the amount of damages therefor; and the sum of $5,000 of the sum heretofore appropriated for the construction of said dam is hereby made applicable to the payment of the same when so ascertained and determined; and the appropriation heretofore made for the construction of said dam is hereby made applicable to the payment of the same when so ascertained and determined; and the appropriation heretofore made for the construction of said dam at Lake Winnibigoshish shall be applied to the construction of said dam immediately after the passage of this act.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, I object.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I object.
Mr. WASHBURN. This makes no additional appropriation, but simply allows the Secretary of the Interior to settle with these Indians for damages occasioned by overflow of their lands. It is an appropriation made last Congress, and this simply makes that appropriation and labels. priation available.

Mr. REAGAN. The matter is being investigated, and the informa-tion required to be furnished by the Secretary of the Interior is very desirable to the House with reference to future action.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas object?

Mr. REAGAN. No; but, on the contrary, I say the bill ought to pass, because it will give us desired information.

Mr. SCALES. I must object.

APPORTIONMENT.

Mr. COX. I am directed by the Committee on the Census to report, as a substitute for House bill No. 6958, a bill (H. R. No. 7026) making an apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the tenth census.

The bill was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed and recommitted to the Committee on the Census.

Mr. COX. The majority fix the number of members under the tenth census at three hundred and eleven, and the minority, in their amend-ment, at three hundred and nineteen. I ask that both propositions be printed in the RECORD.

be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. SHERWIN. I present an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, as the views of the minority.

The SPEAKER. Both propositions are ordered to be printed in the RECORD. Both are recommitted to the Committee on the Census.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I reserve all points of order on that amendment of the minority.

Mr. COX. The bill and the amendment of the minority have been recommitted, and I give notice I shall call the matter up to-morrow. It is a question of the highest privilege under the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. Both propositions have been recommitted to the Committee on the Census, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The bill reported by Mr. Cox from the Committee on the Census is as follows:

as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That after the 3d of March, 1883, the House of Representatives shall be composed of three hundred and eleven members, to be apportioned among the several States, as follows: Alabama, eight; Arkansas, five; California, five; Colorado, one; Connecticut, four; Delaware, one; Florida, two; Georgia, ten; Illinois, nineteen; Indiana, thirteen; Iowa, ten; Kansas, six; Kentucky, ten; Louisiana, six; Maine, four; Maryland, six; Massachusetts, eleven; Michigan, ten; Minnesota, five; Mississippi, seven; Missouri, fourteen; Nebraska, three; Nevada, one; New Hampshire, two; New Jersey, seven; New York, thirty-two; North Carolina, nine; Ohlo, twenty; Oregon, one; Pennsylvania, twenty-seven; Rhode Island, two; South Carolina, six; Tennessee, ten; Texas, ten; Vermont, two; Virginia, ten; West Virginia, four, and Wisconsin, eight.

The accompanying report is as follows:

The Accompanying report is as follows:

The Committee on the Census, to whom was referred the question of apportionment among the several States under the tenth census, beg leave to report the following bill, which enacts that after the 3d of March, 1883, the House of Representatives shall be composed of three hundred and eleven members. For the distribution of said members in detail, the committee refer to the bill. There were differences of opinion among the members of the committee as to the number, some being for more and some for less than the above number, but to avoid delay and to bring the matter speedily before the House, the majority of the committee have concluded to report the accompanying bill.

The amendment, in the nature of a substitute reported by Mr. Sherwin on behalf of the minority of the committee, is as follows:

SHERWIN on behalf of the minority of the committee, is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That from and after the 3d day of March, 1883, the House of Representatives shall be composed of three hundred and nineteen members, to be apportioned among the several States as follows:

To the State of Alabama, eight members; to the State of Arkansas, five members; to the State of California, six members; to the State of Colorado, one member; to the State of Connecticut, four members; to the State of Delaware, one member; to the State of Florida, two members; to the State of Georgia, ten members; to the State of Illinois, twenty members; to the State of Indiana, thirteen members; to the State of Mass, eleven members; to the State of Louisiana, six members; to the State of Maine, four members; to the State of Michigan, eloven members; to the State of Massachusetta, twelve members; to the State of Michigan, eloven members; to the State of Minesota, five members; to the State of Mississippi, seven members; to the State of Missouri, fourteen members; to the State of Nebraska, three members; to the State of Nevada, one member; to the State of New Hampshire, two members; to the State of New Jersey, seven members; to the State of New York, thirty-three members; to the State of North Carolina, nine members; to the State of Ohio, twenty-one members; to the State of Oregon, one member; to the State of Pennsylvania, twenty-eight members; to the State of Rhode Island, two members; to the State of South Carolina, six members; to the State of Tennessee, ten members; to the State of Texas, ten members; to the State of Vermont, two members; to the State of Virginia, four members; to the State of Virginia, four members; to the State of Visconsin, eight members.

SEC. 2. Whenever a new State shall be admitted into the Union, the Representative or Representatives assigned to it shall be additional to the number—three hundred and nineteen—herein provided for.

SEC. 3. In each State entitled under this apportionment, the number to which such State may be entitled in the Forty-eighth and each subsequent Congress shall be elected by districts composed of contiguous territory, and containing as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants, and equal in number to the Representatives to which such State may be entitled in Congress, no one district electing more than one Representative.

GLOBE AND MAP FOR COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privi-leged report from the Committee on Accounts. I am instructed unan-imously by the committee to report back the following resolution. The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Librarian of Congress be requested to purchase one terrestrial globe and one large map of the world for the use of the Committee on Foreign Affairs: Provided, That the same shall not cost more than $150, to be paid for out of the contingent fund of the House.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution, reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, having for its object the purchase of one terrestrial globe and one large map of the world for the use of said Committee on Foreign Affairs, have had the same under consideration and respectfully report that in view of the various international questions pending before said committee, and the frequent necessity of referring to globes and maps illustrative of the business before the committee, these articles should be purchased. We therefore recommend that the resolution be passed.

Mr. WILSON. This is a unanimous report from both committees.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. REBECCA REYNOLDS.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill for an increase of pension to Mrs. Rebecca Reynolds, and ask that the same be put upon its pas-

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows: A bill (H. R. No. 6423) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca Reynolds.

Mr. MORRISON. What is the bill?
The SPEAKER. It is for the increase of the pension of the widow of General Reynolds.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the bill be read. The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I object.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 6972) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KEIFER. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the House now resolve itself in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to proceed with the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6972) just reported.

Mr. PRICE. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a, moment. Mr. BOUCK. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, that the House resolve itself in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the Union for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CARLISLE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 6972) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, as this bill of necessity must be considered by clauses, unless there be objection I will ask, in order that time may be economized, to dispense with the first formal reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentle-man from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, illustrating the purpose of the Committee on Appropriations to get to final action on these general appropriation bills with as little delay as possible, it is not the purpose of that committee or any member of it to make any extended remarks upon the bill now before the Committee of the Whole on the remarks upon the bill now before the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for its consideration. The Committee on Appropriations believe that they will be sustained by the judgment of this House in their claim of having presented a fair and liberal appropriation for every department of the postal service of this country. It is true that in many particulars the bill does not meet the full measure of estimates submitted by the Department. I will not detain the committee more than to refer them to the calculations and tain the committee more than to refer them to the calculations and tabulated statement of the committee appended to the bill. This bill recommends an appropriation of $40,760,432. The estimates upon which this bill is predicated, submitted by the Department, aggregated the sum of $42,475,932. The appropriations for the present fiscal year were $39,093,420. The estimated postal revenues for the next fiscal year are $38,845,174. The increase of estimates for 1882 over the appropriations for 1881 was $3,382,512. The increase of appropriations recommended by this bill over appropriations for the present fiscal year is $1,667,012. The difference between the appropriations recommended by this bill and the estimates of the Department for the next fiscal year is $1,715,500.

The failure of the Committee on Appropriations in recommending the full amount of all the estimates made by the Department will the full amount of all the estimates made by the Department will appear in detail as we proceed to the consideration of the bill; and the committee with perfect confidence undertakes to satisfy the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union that there has been no reduction made and no failure of appropriation as demanded by estimates that the records of the Department and the present interest of the service will not fully sustain and warrant. It is but just that in starting out upon the consideration of this bill I should say that the country has reason to congratulate itself in having arrived for the first time at a point where the appropriations presessary for the supcountry has reason to congratulate itself in having arrived for the first time at a point where the appropriations necessary for the support of the postal service of the country are within less than two million dollars of the estimated revenues of the Department. There is no measure of commendation to which that Department in any of its branches is fairly entitled that has not been regarded by the committee in examining the estimates and fixing the amount of this bill, and which it is not the desire of the Committee on Appropriations to give it full credit for. That some of the estimates have been excessive in some respects, the committee feel ready to demonstrate.

Now, sir, with this brief summary statement of the purposes of the committee and the scope of the bill, feeling assured that as we reach its several clauses we will in detail discuss them carefully, I ask that the Clerk may be allowed to proceed with the reading of the bill by sections, for its consideration.

sections, for its consideration.

Mr. CONGER. In order that we may understand before we reach the particular sections the difference between the recommendations of the committee and the estimates of the Department, will the gen-of the committee and the estimates of the Department, will the gentleman from Kentucky indicate in what respect the several appropriations fall short of the estimates?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will. In the matter of the compensation to postmasters the bill recommends $50,000 less than is asked for in the estimates; and in passing I may say, speaking for myself alone, that I am not altogether clear in my mind the action of the committee is entirely was republic in that respect entirely warrantable in that respect.

For payment of letter-carriers the bill recommends an appropriation $100,000 less than the estimates of the Department. I do feel assured that when we reach that clause of the bill the committee will be able to satisfy the House that that reduction upon the estimates was fully warranted and that the full amount of the estimate is not

Upon the miscellaneous and incidental items the estimates have been reduced in the recommendation of the committee to the extent of $100,000, and we feel assured the House will sustain the action of the committee in that respect. The largest, by all odds, of the differences between the recommendation of the committee as embodied in ences between the recommendation of the committee as embodied in the bill and the estimate of the Department, is in the item of in-land mail transportation. And I will say in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Michigan, that the committee feel assured they will demonstrate to the satisfaction of the House that there is prac-tically and really no reduction upon the estimate there at all, for this reason: we take the report of the Postmaster-General, and we take the estimate of the Department of the Postmaster-General, the estimate of the Department and we practically allow the Departthe estimate of the Department and we practically allow the Department its full estimate, plus $$1,000. Under the act of 1879, known as the Thurman bill, which provided for the repayment by the Pacific roads to the Government of the interest paid by the Government under its guarantee on their bonds, we find by the personal examination of the Sixth Anditor who has charge of the accounts of the Post-Office Department, that we are entitled to a credit of $$81,000 a year upon that item of inland transportation by railroad. So that, it being perfectly apparent that the Department based its estimate upon its full needs but failed to give credit for the $$81,000 which comes back in the shape of a rebate under the provisions of the act of 1879, the committee cut short and reduced the estimates, not to the full difference, but to $$00,000 instead of $$81,000. Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the Government can use that money?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the gentleman that it is just as available—and it was so admitted by the officers of the Department whom the sub-committee had before them—it is just as available as whom the sub-committee had before them—it is just as available as any dollar you are asked to appropriate in the bill now under consideration. It simply came to this: the Department was making the estimates for the expenses of the Post-Office, or rather this item of inland transportation by rail, without giving the Government any credit at all for $881,000, which, under a fixed law, must come back the next year, as it did come back last year, in the shape of rebate or credit to the Government, from Pacific Railroad Companies.

If, therefore, the committee had taken the estimate of the Post-Office Department, and then taken the statements made to it by the officers of the Department, and granted those estimates to the fullest measure, we would have reduced the estimate just $881,000. But the recommendation embraced in this bill is a reduction to the extent of $800.000 on that item.

$800,000 on that item.

The next difference between the recommendation of the bill and

The next difference between the recommendation of the bill and the estimate of the Department is found in railway post-office car service. There is a reduction there as recommended by the bill of $34,000 from the estimate submitted by the Department.

For facilities on trunk lines, which the House understands doubtless very well mean what is known as the fast mail service of the country upon trunk lines where special facilities are asked for in order that expedition in the delivery of mails may be secured over these great thoroughfares, the committee recommends a reduction of $50,000 npon the estimate of the Department in that regard.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman from Kentucky will merely give the items of reduction at present, leaving the statement of the reasons until we reach the items in the reading of the bill, my object will be accomplished.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I will omit the reasons and merely call attention to the few remaining items on which there is a difference between the recommendation of the committee and the estimate of the Department.

There is in the item of inland transportation by star routes $100,000 less recommended by this bill than asked for by the Department. For inland transportation by star routes there is $385,000 less recom-

For inland transportation by star routes there is $385,000 less recommended by this bill than estimated for by the Department.

Mr. STEVENSON. May I ask the gentleman from Kentucky how the amount for the star service recommended in this bill corresponds with the amount appropriated last session?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the question by giving him the exact figures. The appropriation in this bill is 12 per cent. more than we appropriated for the year ending June 30, 1881, for this purpose, which was $7,375,000.

Mr. PAGE. Did that include the amount appropriated at the previous session?

Mr. BLACKBURN. In the patters of a deficiency.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In the nature of a deficiency?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir. Mr. BLACKBURN. It did.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It did.
Mr. PAGE. And you appropriate in this bill 12 per cent. more than was appropriated for the current fiscal year?
Mr. BLACKBURN. This is an increase of 12 per cent. over the appropriation for the present year plus the deficiency which was met by the first session of the present Congress.
This, if I mistake not, and I think I am correct, is the largest appropriation which has been made for that service since the war, and it lacks but $385,000 of being the amount estimated for by the Department. It is more than $500,000 increase over the amount appropriated for the present fiscal year including the deficiency.
Mr. HASKELL. If the gentleman has concluded his statement concerning the star routes and will allow me, I desire to say that I

Mr. HASKELL. If the gentleman has concluded his statement concerning the star routes and will allow me, I desire to say that I find in the summary of the bill a statement that the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, is $39,093,420, and that the amount recommended for the next fiscal year is $40,760,432. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Blackburn] if the deficiency appropriated last year was added to the amount contained in the original appropriation bill. It would appear by the report that this bill proposes to appropriate for the next fiscal year. I want to ask the gentleman if the deficiency appropriated last year was taken account of, or is that simply the difference between the original appropriation bill of last year and this appropriation bill?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Of course, when I gave the figures covering the appropriations of last year, I intended to include the amount appropriated for deficiencies.

Mr. HASKELL. How much was the deficiency?

Mr. HASKELL. How much was the deficiency?
Mr. BLACKBURN. They came in the shape of different items; I do not have them before me just now. There was a deficiency of a million and over in the star-route service. The deficiency for the star-route service last year was $1,100,000, and there was $50,000 in addition to that for new service.

addition to that for new service.

In answer to the question of my friend from Kansas, [Mr. Haskell,] I state that when we came to prepare the item for an appropriation for the star service, which I said was 12 per cent, increase, we calculated it fairly, and predicated it not alone upon the original appropriation for the current year, but upon that appropriation plus the deficiency, because it had been ascertained that the amount represented by the original appropriation, and by the deficiency which was passed, was necessary for that service. We put those two items together and recommended in this bill an amount equal to those two items and 12 per cent. in addition.

The next item of difference between the recommendation of this bill and the estimate is in the clause which appropriates for the purchase of mail-locks and keys. The Department asked for $50,000, and the committee recommend the appropriation of $15,000, which reduction will be explained when we reach that clause of the bill.

The only remaining difference between the estimates of the Department and the recommendation of the committee is for mail-bags and mail-bag catchers, where a like sum of $35,000 is taken from the esti-

Mr. CONGER. Is the appropriation for locks and keys $25,000 less than the estimates

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is $35,000 less, the difference between $15,000, as reported by the committee, and $50,000 estimated for by the Department.

There is one other item which had escaped my memory, where the estimate of the Department has not been allowed by the committee. That is for the manufacture of adhesive stamps. The Department estimates for $113,000, and the committee recommends the appropriation of $105,000; a reduction of the estimate by the amount of Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.
Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to lines $1 and 82 of the printed bill:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, $400,000.

I did not get the statement of the gentleman, if he made one, of the difference between this sum and the amount appropriated in the last bill for that purpose.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In the last bill we gave $350,000 for special facilities on trunk lines. For the next fiscal year the Department asked for $450,000, and the committee have recommended in this bill an appropriation of $400,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. An increase of $50,000 over the bill of last year.
Mr. BLACKBURN. An increase of $50,000 over the amount appropriated for the present fiscal year, but $50,000 less than the amount estimated for. I will refer the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. estimated for. I will refer the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Robinson] to the report of the Postmaster-General to warrant the action of the committee. He will find in that report nothing in the shape of an anticipated deficiency, and nothing that in the judgment of the committee warranted an increase of more than $50,000 over the sum allowed for the present fiscal year.

Mr. ROBINSON. I merely inquired, so that I might understand that there was no reduction.

Mr. BLACKBURN. On the contrary—
Mr. ROBINSON. On the contrary there is an increase; and I am not only satisfied but gratified.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.
Mr. McMILLIN. Section 2 of this bill provides:

That if the revenue of the Post-Office Department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations made by this act, then the sum of $1,915.258, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the revenue of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1882.

I desire to inquire if that amount is included in the $40,760,432 given in the note to the bill as the total sum recommended by this bill?

Mr. BLACKBURN. In answer to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMillin] I will say that the section of the bill to which he refers is the same as has heretofore been borne in every Post-Office appropriation bill passed by Congress. It simply means to give an approximate estimate by Congress as to what will be the deficit or difference between the revenues of the Department and the expenditures of the Department for the next iscal year.

It is in no wise obligatory; it does not affect the authority of the Department in the matter, or its disbursements; it is simply the expression of an approximate calculation made as to the difference between the revenues and the expenditures of the Department. It has no legal force or effect whatever. If the gentleman will look at the first paragraph of this bill he will find the words inserted "out of any money in the Treasury arising from the revenues of said Department."

Mr. McMILLIN. Then this is the difference between the estimate of what will accrue from the revenues of the Department and the estimate of what will be necessary to carry on the Department.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is it exactly. Now, Mr. Chairman, if there are no other questions to be propounded, I ask that we may proceed to consider the bill by sections. All points of order, I understand, have been reserved.

Mr. CLARDY. On page 289 of the report of the Postmaster-General, the general superintendent of railway service recommends a special appropriation of $75,000, to be available from and after the date at which such service goes into effect, together with a sufficient the gentleman inform me whether that item is embraced in the bill memorated by the committee?

Mr. BLACKBURN. In answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Missouri, I will say that we have before us the report of the Post-Office Department in which the item of inland mail service transportation by railway is very elaborately discussed, at the con-clusion of which an estimate is made; and it is true that in that regu-lar annual report the Postmaster-General does recommend that an

Mr. BLOUNT. That is the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, not the Postmaster-General. The item is not embraced in the Book of Estimates, and is not recommended by the Postmaster-General.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I was comming to that. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General does recommend a special appropriation of $75,000 for the inland railway route to which the gentleman from Missouri now refers. But there is no communication from the Post-Office Department to the House on this subject; the recommendation is simply a part of the regular report of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, and is not covered by the Postmaster-General in his estimates to the House

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman will allow me, the very same offi-cial has proposed in many of his reports that we change the mode of compensating railroad companies; and he makes various other suggestions.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I think the question of the gentleman from Missouri would have been in better time had it been reserved till we reached that clause of the bill; but as he has made it, and as I am endeavoring to answer it, I may go one step further and say that in the very same annual report in which this recommendation is made by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General we have estimates for the service for the next fiscal year; and I undertake to say to the House that we have not only failed or refused to reduce these estimates, but upon the figures of the Post-Office officials themselves, upon their own records and books, we have granted to that department of the service every dollar that the estimate calls for, and $31,000 herides. besides. No special communication relative to that route has been before the committee at all.

The CHAIRMAN. If no other gentleman desires to take part in the general debate upon this bill, the Clerk will now proceed to read paragraphs.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Postmaster-General:
For mail depredations and post-office inspectors, including amounts necessary for fees to United States marshals and attorneys, $175,000; and not exceeding $5,000 of this amount may be expended for fees to United States attorneys, marshals, clerks of courts, and counsel necessarily employed by post-office inspectors of the Post-Office Department, subject to approval by the Attorney-General, and hereafter the superintendent of railway mail service and the chief of post-office inspectors shall be paid their actual expenses while traveling on the business of the Department.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I notice a provision here which strikes me as unnecessary; and for the purpose of obtaining an explanation, I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 10 and 11 strike out the words "including amounts necessary for fees to United States marshals and attorneys;" and in lines 12 to 17 strike out the following words: "and not exceeding $5,000 of this amount may be expended for fees to United States attorneys, marshals, clerks of courts, and counsel necessarily employed by post-office inspectors of the Post-Office Department, subject to approval by the Attorney-General."

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of the Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of the statement of any reason which may probably have influenced the committee in incorporating this provision, it seems to me that the appropriation is quite unnecessary. Under existing laws the United States district attorneys, marshals, and clerks of courts already receive compensation for all the service that they may be required to render in prosecutions for any violation of the postal laws. I do not know of any necessity for providing additional fees for any processes which may be issued by the clerk of a United States court or served by a marshal or for any prosecution which may necessarily be conby a marshal, or for any prosecution which may necessarily be conducted by a United States district attorney. If there is any reason why an additional appropriation should be made to pay for such serve why an additional appropriation should be made to pay for such services, I will, of course, withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the gentleman from Tennessee wants to reduce the amount appropriated by this bill, but if so, the amendment read by the Clerk does not do it.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I propose to strike out so much of this provision as proposes to pay additional fees to United States district attorneys, marshals, and clerks of courts for enforcing any of the laws of the Government or punishing anybody for their infraction. Every process now issued by United States courts, or that may be issued hereafter for the violation of any of the postal laws, is provided for by existing statutes; so that an appropriation to pay additional fees to officers already provided for by law seems to me unnecessary.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the gentle-man from Tennessee and myself are not fortunate in understanding Mr. CLARDY. On page 289 of the report of the Postmaster-General, the general superintendent of railway service recommends a special appropriation of $75,000, to be available from and after the date at which such service goes into effect, together with a sufficient amount for clerk hire, to equip a line from the city of Saint Louis to Texarkana, Texas, as a second daily railway mail service. Will $175,000, not more than $5,000 of it shall be appropriated for the payment of these expenditures to which he alludes; and the bill further says that this appropriation of $175,000 shall be all that is made, including these expenses. The gentleman's amendment does not propose to reduce the amount of $175,000 at all, but he does propose to strike out those two provisions of the bill, one of which says this amount shall include all services of this nature, and the other says that such services shall not amount to more than $5,000 of this sum.

I will say for the benefit of the gentleman from Tennessee and for I will say for the benefit of the gentleman from Tennessee and for the committee that this, as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, is exactly a verbatim copy of existing law in the nature of a limitation upon the Department, that they may employ the services of these officers named for the purposes indicated, but that they shall not ask a separate appropriation; that this is an amount to cover all such cases; that out of the amount of $175,000 not more than $5,000 of it shall go for this purpose.

And, further, let me call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the fact that this is a verbatim copy of the existing law.

nessee to the fact that this is a verbatim copy of the existing law. It appears as far back in these appropriation bills as 1877. It used to be $7,500. This bill limits the maximum expenditure for this purpose to $5,000. And with this statement I am perfectly content to let the committee pass upon the amendment.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I wish to explain my amendment a little. I believe I do understand my amendment myself. If I was not fortunate enough to make the gentleman from Kentucky under-not fortunate enough to make the gentleman from Kentucky understand it, it is not my fault. In order to meet his technical objection, I propose to reduce that appropriation from $175,000 to $170,000. He has given me no reason why this appropriation should be made. The fact that this has been included in former appropriation bills, and is already a law, certainly constitutes no good reason why it should remain a law if originally there was no use for it. As I said before, every officer who serves will be required under this appropriation—

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to say a word?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman from Tennessee will look a little further than to the officers and employés of the Federal Government who are provided for in this section he will find there is a provision made there for the payment of any fee that may accrue by reason of an inspector of the Post-Office Department having to employ a lawyer or counsel in any part of the country. If you do not provide for the payment of that fee in it, then let me suggest to the gentleman there is no provision made anywhere for the payment of provide for the payment of that fee in it, then let me suggest to the gentleman there is no provision made anywhere for the payment of it. I am unable to see that any gross abuse can possibly arise from the discretion given to the Department by this appropriation, for so far as the postal service of the country goes, from one end of it to the other, the very bill before you provides no more than $5,000 shall be used from that fund for the payment of all expenses incurred and remuneration to be given to the United States attorneys, marshals, clerks of courts, and individual, private, non-office holding counsel and attorneys whose services may be found necessary by the inspectors of the Department.

ors of the Department.

Mr. DWIGHT. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. DWIGHT. What amount has been usually issued for that

Mr. BLACKBURN. Seventy-five hundred dollars have been hitherto allowed annually. Last year only $5,000 was allowed. Five thousand dollars it is proposed by this bill to allow now; and it seems thousand donars it is proposed by this offit to anow now; and it seems to be ample for the use of the Department.

Mr. DWIGHT. Was that amount expended?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say to the gentleman the expenditures for that purpose were inside of the amount given last year and the amount recommended this year, which is $5,000—

Mr. DWIGHT. If it is not expended for this purpose it is left over?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will trench no further on the time of the gentleman from Tennessee. Not a dollar is expended unless, under the discretion of the Post-Office Department, there shall be warrant for it, and then the approval of the Attorney-General has also to be secured.

Mr. DWIGHT. No abuse has grown out of the appropriation hith-

Mr. BLACKBURN. None.

Mr. BLACKBURN. None.
Mr. DWIGHT. And would not be likely to now?
Mr. BLACKBURN. No, sir.
Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The gentleman from Kentucky has wholly failed to give me any satisfactory reason for this item of appropriation. If it is to be paid to private lawyers who are retained at the discretion of the postal inspector, then I object to this vicious legislation, and the sooner it is stricken from the statute-book the

This has been an abuse existing for years in this country. Thousands upon thousands of dollars, perhaps hundreds of thousands, have been paid to private attorneys who have performed the duties which the United States district attorney ought to have performed, and who in many cases performed no duty whatever.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The amount here, however, is limited to $5,000. Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The amount does not matter; it is the principle of the thing. If it is only five cents and wrong it ought to be stricken from the bill. I maintain that there are sufficient United States district attorneys in this country who are capable of discharging all of these duties without the aid of private attorneys to assist them in the prosecution of any person engaged in the infraction of the postal laws.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I will teach my friend from Georgia a lesson in courtesy. I will yield to him with pleasure—something he never does to anybody else.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am very much obliged to the gentleman. I desire to ask this question: if he cannot conceive of a case where a United States district attorney is engaged at his court, and some persons are arrested in another part of his district, his duty being of such a character at the court as to prevent him from going and attending to these cases which require an investigation to be made at the time? I say, is it impossible for my friend to imagine a case where it would be necessary under such circumstances to employ outside or additional attorneys—nivate attorneys—to perform this where it would be necessary under such circumstances to employ outside or additional attorneys—private attorneys—to perform this duty and make the investigation?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I think I can clearly conceive of no possible case where a district attorney in any part of this country cannot give full consideration and attention to questions involving an infraction of the postal laws in his district. It is hardly likely that the postal service of the country will become so dishonest that there will be more than one or two violations of the law in any one district. Now, nearly every district attorney, perhaps every one in this country, is allowed an assistant at from $1,500 to $2,000 a year, and, as the gentleman from Kansas has stated, in some districts there are two or more allowed; and it is hardly likely, or at all events it are two or more allowed; and it is hardly likely, or at all events it is exceedingly improbable, that any case will arise where the district attorney himself in person or some assistant in his office will not be able to attend to it.

This is a system of legislating that ought to be stopped. It has been an abuse for more than twenty-five years. Whenever a violation of law has occurred the effect of this legislation has been simply to allow a United States district attorney in some part of the country to employ some friend of his to take charge of the case at most extravagant remuneration. There have been instances, Mr. Chairman and the property of the country to employ a property of the case at most extravagant remuneration. extravagant remuneration. There have been instances, Mr. Chairman, under my own observation where men wholly incompetent have been employed to represent the Government who did not earn one dollar by their services, but who demanded and were paid extravagant fees. Let us adopt such legislation as will put competent men in office to discharge the duties, and it will not be necessary to employ incompetent assistants or any assistants at all to aid them in the discharge of their duties at extravagant prices. There is not a competent United States district attorney in all of this country who cannot discharge all the duties that devolve mon him without costa competent United States district attorney in all of this country who cannot discharge all the duties that devolve upon him without costing the Government a single dollar outside of the salary which is now allowed to him by law. I maintain, therefore, that this appropriation is quite unnecessary and ought to be stricken out of the bill. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted for some time; but as there has been no objection the Chair has allowed the debate to run.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Unless there is objection, in which case I shall move a pro forma amendment, I ask to be heard for a moment in response to the comments made upon this item of the bill.

sponse to the comments made upon this item of the bill.

This is not the first time, Mr. Chairman, that I have vainly endeavored to enlighten the understanding of the gentleman from Tennessee who has just taken his seat, and I have at last despaired of any success by reason of his unwillingness to be convinced. I want to say, that it is hardly consistent for him to conclude that the postal service of this country is not to become corrupt, if he can see a lurking danger in the appropriation of this enormous sum of $5,000, to be carried in an appropriation bill covering over forty million dollars, not one dollar of which can be disbursed except under the order of the Postmaster General, and subject to the approbation of the Attorney-General. If that provision be dangerous legislation, if it is not a proper guard upon the part of the Treasury, I agree that the gentleman's position is well taken and that his amendment should be sustained. But I do not know what data the gentleman has succeeded in obtaining upon which to found his opinion that it is not probable that more than one or two instances will occur in any district where a violation of the postal laws of the country will require the intervention or employment of counsel. It may be that the gen-tleman takes his own city as the boundary and limit of all crime in his judicial district, for there the United States district attorney and his assistant both live. But we do know, sir, that there is scarcely a day that there is not a demand and need for the employment of counsel and the advice of attorneys in order that inspectors of the Post-Office Department may properly and intelligently discharge their duties.

their duties.

It is not required or expected or claimed that post-office inspectors shall be lawyers; and when the inspector is sent upon his mission to inspect a post-office where any improper conduct is alleged, and he is confronted by a question of law which he cannot solve, is he to return and go no further in the investigation because he is unable to discharge that duty? Is he thereby to allow a greater loss to occur in the shape of mileage that must be paid to the United States attorney to travel to the scene of the alleged impropriety and discharge the duty which the inspector could have discharged if he had been allowed to employ a private attorney at an expense which is limited by the very terms of this bill to instruct him in his rights and duties?

It is a simple question of appropriating $5,000 for this purpose, to be expended under the direction of the Post-Office Department, and there is a double guard thrown around it of the approval of the Attorney-General of the United States.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky if it be not true that if this business was done by the United States attorney he would be entitled to a fee payable out of the Treas-

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, and his mileage as well.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. And therefore if a private attorney should receive this pay whether it will cost the Government any

Mr. BLACKBURN. On the contrary, I believe it is a saving of at least 75 per cent. of what would be the actual cost to the Government if the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee should prevail.

Mr. BLOUNT. I like to see my friend from Tennessee getting economical. To show how much so the gentleman is I will read a sentence or two from the report of the Postmaster-General. He says:

The number of persons arrested during the year was 577, of whom 497 were prosecuted in United States courts, and 80 in State courts. Of the former, 215 were convicted, 18 acquitted, 1 escaped, 34 proceedings were dismissed, 3 forfeited bail, and 226 await trial.

And notwithstanding the great number of these cases all over the country, it is possible for but $5,000 to be used throughout the United States for any such purpose. Therefore I do not think my friend need to apprehend any very great drain on the Treasury in this regard. I well remember an instance in my own town, where the United States district attorney was engaged at the Federal court; there had been a robbery of the post-office at Columbus; a party was arrested and brought over there. He was ably defended and it became necessary to employ counsel, which was done under this fund; and it is only in that class of eases this fund is used. It is used from year to only in that class of cases this fund is used. It is used from year to year and the appropriation is repeated in this bill simply because it is apprehended that the language in the annual appropriation bills does not continue it in force from year to year, and out of abundant caution the clause is inserted.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last word. After the efforts of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to enlighten both me and the House I think I shall be sustained by the universal judgment of its members when I say if my friend has not succeeded judgment of its members when I say if my friend has not succeeded in enlightening both me and them it is because of no want or persistent effort on his part. In reply to a part of his argument I beg to show the House a fallacy which lurks very near its surface.

The gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Georgia defend this provision in the bill upon the ground that it is a retrenchment of public expenditures, inasmuch as it prevents the payment of large sums of money for mileage and traveling expenses of United States attorneys by the employment of private counsel. These gentlemen are lawyers, and I beg to ask them if they do not know that there is but one place in most of the judicial districts of this country where infractions of law of this kind can be prosecuted. There are but a very few of our judicial districts where there is more than one point of holding court. All these violators of there is more than one point of holding court. All these violators of law, therefore, when arrested, must be brought for indictment and trial in that court at the place where the United States district attorney and his assistants reside; so that there is no necessity for any expenditure of money whatever in payment of traveling expenses of any one of these officers.

My friend from Kentucky thinks I form my judgment from a local standard; that because people are more honest in my district than in his, I think there is therefore no necessity for this appropriation. It is possible it may require more than one United States district attorney and more than one assistant, and an appropriation of more than five thousand dollars to make people honest in the district of the gentleman from Kentucky. But in mine the officers of the Government, with the compensation already allowed them by law, are amply able to vindicate the law and punish every violator of a single one of its provisions.

one of its provisions.

So far from conceding, on account of the argument of the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Georgia, that this appropriation is proper and necessary, I am the more confirmed in my judgment, after listening to them, that it is not necessary and ought not to be tolerated for a single moment by this House. The gentleman from Georgia read from the report of the Postmaster-General showing that there are two hundred and twenty indictments now pending in different courts for violations of postal laws. I presume there are 2,200, perhaps 22,000, cases pending for violations of other provisions of the statutes; and I have not heard it was thought necessary to make a special appropriation to employ private counsel for the prosecution of these cases. For violation of the internal-revenue law in regard to tobacco and whisky probably there are 20,000 indictments now pending in the United States courts; and I do not know any proposition has been made to pay private counsel by an appropriation proposition has been made to pay private counsel by an appropriation in any general appropriation bill to assist in the prosecution of any

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I wish to say just one word. There are thirty-five or forty special agents of the Post-Office Department who travel over the whole length and breadth of the country. It is sometimes necessary they should have legal advice where the United States attorney is not accessible. It was thought then to be wise years ago to give them the authority to employ counsel where it was necessary, and even that they did at their peril, for this employment of additional counsel must not only be necessary, but it must be afterward approved by the Attorney-General. In my opinion this is a very proper appropriation, and therefore I think it should not be stricken out.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. Young, of Tennessee, and it was not agreed to; upon a division, ayes 22, noes not

The Clerk read the following:

For advertising, $35,000; and hereafter the Postmaster-General shall cause advertisements of all general mail lettings of each State and Territory to be conspicuously posted up in each post-office in the State and Territory embraced in said advertisements for at least sixty days before the time of such general letting; and no other advertisement of such lettings shall be required; but this provision shall not apply to any other than general mail lettings.

Mr. PAGE. I am compelled to make a point of order on this paragraph. I would like to state my reasons for thinking that it should not be adopted, but I will first submit the point of order. This par-agraph changes section 3941 of the Revised Statutes, which I ask the

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3941. Before making any contract for carrying the mails other than these hereinafter excepted, the Postmaster-General shall give public notice by advertising once a week for six weeks in one or more, not exceeding five, newspapers published in the State or Territory where the service is to be performed, one of which shall be published at the seat of government of such State or Territory; and such notice shall describe the route, the time at which the mail is to be made up, the time at which it is to be delivered, and the frequency of the service; and the Postmaster-General shall direct, by special order in each case, the newspapers in which mail lettings, or other proposals relative to the business of his Department, shall be advertised, and no publisher shall be paid for such advertisement without having been requested by the Postmaster-General to publish the same.

Mr. PAGE: This paragraph changes the section of the Powiced.

having been requested by the Postmaster-General to publish the same.

Mr. PAGE. This paragraph changes the section of the Revised Statutes which has just been read, by providing that all general mail lettings shall be advertised by conspicuously posting up notices in each post-office in the State or Territory embraced in said advertisements for at least sixly days before the time of such general lettings, "and no other advertisements of such lettings shall be required." The statute provides that the advertisements shall be made in five newspapers published in the State or Territory where the service is to be performed. If this paragraph of the bill shall be enacted into law it will limit the advertising to simply posting a notice in each post-office in the State or Territory. I submit now the point of order simply. I would like to show in this connection that the change proposed is not desirable.

Mr. BLOUNT. To what rule does the gentleman refer as sustain-

Mr. BLOUNT. To what rule does the gentleman refer as sustaining his point of order?

Mr. PAGE. I had supposed that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] was so familiar with the rules that it was not necessary for me to refer him to Rule XXI, which provides that no provision in an appropriation bill or amendment thereto shall be in order changing existing law, unless it retrenches expenditure.

Mr. BLOUNT. And the gentleman tells this committee that this will retrench expenditure.

Mr. PAGE. I have made no such statement. Upon the other hand, the estimate for this branch of the service is $35,000, and the committee propose to appropriate $35,000, so that it will require no more to carry out the law as it is than to carry out this provision.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] indicate the words he proposes to include in his point of order?

Is it the whole paragraph?

Mr. PAGE. Not at all; only the portion following the amount appropriated, leaving the paragraph, if my point of order shall be sustained, to read:

For advertising, $35,000.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me suggest to the gentleman that the portion of the clause to which he objects is in exact accordance with the law as it stands to-day.

Mr. PAGE. What does the gentleman say?

Mr. BLACKBURN. All that portion of the paragraph to which the gentleman objects is the law to-day, and has been the law since 1876. We have re-enacted year after year a verbatim copy of this paragraph in the appropriation bill for this year.

Mr. PAGE. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky
[Mr. BLACKBURN] that that is no reason why it should be in this

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will take up no time in discussing the point of order, for I am satisfied that the Chair sees clearly the only point between us. The statute which the gentleman has had read requires advertising in one or more newspapers, not exceeding five in each State or Territory in which these lettings are to be had. The provision of this bill, which was the provision of the Post-Office appropriation bill of last year, and so on since 1876, requires that such advertisement shall be posted conspicuously in every post-office in the State or Territory where the lettings are to be had. Now, it is a very easy matter for each member of this committee to determine for him-easy matter for each member of this committee to determine for himself which method of advertising is the most efficacious.

I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that since 1876 there has not been an appropriation bill passed by Congress for the service of the Post-Office Department that has not carried in it the identical provision which this bill is carrying, and upon which the gentleman from California [Mr. Page] makes his point of order. Whether this be the better method of advertising or not I think admits of no doubt. Whether it be amenable or not to the point of order I am perfectly willing to submit to the decision of the Chair, coupling with it the willing to submit to the decision of the Chair, coupling with it the statement that the Committee on Appropriations are fortified in reproducing in this appropriation bill this clause verbatim from the various Post-Office appropriation bills since 1876.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let me correct the gentleman.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In what?

Mr. BLOUNT. In former appropriation bills the word "provided" was used instead of the word "and" used in this bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am obliged to my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. BLOUNT] for the suggestion. The difference between the provision of the Post-Office appropriation bills passed heretofore for this purpose and the one in this bill is, that in former appropriation bills the word "provided" appears, while in this the words "and hereafter" are used. That is the only difference. As it had been re-enacted in every Post-Office appropriation bill since 1876, the object of the committee in submitting it now in this form, striking out the word "provided" and inserting the words "and hereafter," was to make it a permanent law instead of a law from year to year.

Mr. PAGE. I suppose the only question now before the Committee of the Whole is on the point of order. It may be true, as the gentleman from Kentucky suggests, that the last two appropriation bills.

Mr. PAGE. Those bills may have contained such a provision as this; but because the attention of no member of the Committee of the Whole was called to the matter, and therefore no point of order was made, it does not follow that this provision must be retained in this bill now when a point of order is made against it. If it were proper at this time to discuss the merits of the proposition, I should be pleased to do so. Mr. BLACKBURN.

Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would be glad to have the gentleman from California state whether he does not himself believe that on the very face of the provision it is not amenable to the point of order, because of necessity it tends to the reduction of expenditures.

of necessity it tends to the reduction of expenditures.

Mr. PAGE. Not at all.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the gentleman believe it to be as cheap to advertise all general mail lettings in at least one and possibly as many as five newspapers in every State and Territory in which the contracts are to be let as it is to put up a circular notice in each post-office of the State or Territory interested?

Mr. PAGE. In answer to the question of the gentleman, I say that evidently this committee believe that the manner of advertising provided for in this paragraph is not less expensive than the mode of advertising under the old law, because they have made the amount of the appropriation the full sum asked for in the estimate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; I beg the gentleman's pardon. Since 1876 we never appropriated a dollar for this purpose except under this very identical provision.

wery identical provision.

Mr. PAGE. All that is asked by the Department for advertising is $35,000. I think that is ample; and whether this provision offered by the committee be retained or not, the expense, I presume, would not be increased or diminished.

But I desire to say that a mere notice posted up in an obscure post-office is not the best method of circulating information as to pro-posals for lettings on important mail routes. People have acquired the habit of looking at newspapers of general circulation for adverthe habit of looking at newspapers of general circulation for advertisements of mail lettings. But this provision is that in an obscure post-office, where perhaps the salary of the postmaster is but $12 a year, a printed notice shall be posted to inform the people of that locality that proposals for mail lettings are to be submitted at a certain time. Whether advertisement in the newspapers costs three times as much as this plan or not, I claim that it is the interest of the Government, the interest of economy, that advertisements for proposals for these mail lettings should be sent broadcast all over the country, so that those who desire to enter into competition for mail lettings, whether they reside in the Territory of Idaho or in the city of Washington, may have information. But I digress. I am speaking of the merits of the bill, my remarks in that direction having been called out by the question asked me by the gentleman from Kentacky. Clearly upon the point of order there is no question that the chairman of the Committee of the Whole will rule this paragraph amenable to the provisions of the twenty-first rule.

Mr. BLOUNT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman from Georgia proceeds the Chair would like to inquire whether the authorities at the Post-Office Department have or have not decided that this provision in the appropriation bill supersedes for the time being the section of the Povised Statutes?

the appropriation bill supersedes for the time being the section of the Revised Statutes?

Mr. BLOUNT. They have. In 1876 this provision changing the method of advertisement was placed in the appropriation bill, and the appropriation was then reduced in consequence. From year to year the expenditures for this item appear officially in the report as reduced by reason of this method of advertising.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to put a question to the gentleman from Georgia. He has been a member of the Committee on Appropriations for some time and is more familiar than I am with what has been for some time and is more familiar than I am with what has been done heretofore in this regard. I ask him to send up to the Clerk's desk to be read the changes that have been made by appropriation bills in the law on this subject since 1876.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have not the bills at my desk.

Mr. PAGE. I must disagree with the gentleman when he states that there has been such a radical change in the law.

Mr. BLOUNT. As a matter of fact, from year to year the expenditure for this purpose has been kept down by virtue of this provision in the appropriation bills. It has been uniformly held by the Department.

ment—
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I will hand to the gentleman the original act passed in 1876.
Mr. KEIFER. Let it be sent to the Clerk to be read.
Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Illinois has kindly handed me the act of 1876, the provision of which is identical in language with the provision in this bill. It has been repeated in every bill of this kind since 1876. I ask the Clerk to read this paragraph from the act

The Clerk read as follows:

For advertising, $40,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall cause advertisements of all general mail lettings of each State and Territory to be conspicuously posted up in each post-office in the State and Territory embraced in said advertisements for at least sixty days before the time of such general letting; and no other advertisement of such lettings shall be required; but this provision shall not apply to any other than general mail lettings.

Mr. BLOUNT. It will be seen now, Mr. Chairman, the exact language has been used that has been used in all the bills, and it has uniformly been held by the Department as binding on the Department. And the object the committee had in view in putting in the word "and" was to avoid any possibility of construction that it was not permanent in its character. That is all.

Independent of that, the gentleman's own statement puts it within the rule, admitting it does change existing law. The gentleman says when you insert this you cannot advertise in the newspapers of the country: that you limit it to the circulars of the Post-Office Department.

country; that you limit it to the circulars of the Post-Office Department. These very facts which appear in this bill and the arguments of my friend bring this provision under the protection of the rule, and which the gentleman quotes to prevent its consideration.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GOODE having taken the The committee informally rose; and Mr. Goode having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, which announced the passage of joint resolution (H. R. No. 369) making appropriation for filling up, draining, and placing in sanitary condition the grounds south of the Capitol along the line of the old canal, and for other purposes.

It further announced the passage of a bill (S. No. 1513) for the relief of Commodore Donald McNeill Fairfax, United States Army, in which concurrence was requested.

concurrence was requested.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee then resumed its session, Mr. CARLISLE in the chair.

The committee then resumed its session, Mr. Carlisle in the chair. Mr. KEIFER. I desire to say a word on this point of order. We had the same question up—although, I think, not decided—when we were considering the pension appropriation bill. And this is an important question in view of the fact that we have had a great deal of temporary legislation on appropriation bills.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you will note one of two things is true: first, this clause against which the point of order is made is wholly unnecessary in this bill, or the point of order should be sustained. When the question was put by the Chair to the gentleman from Georgia, I believe, asking what had been the construction of the Post-Office Department in relation to these clauses in the several appropriation bills partment in relation to these clauses in the several appropriation bills since 1876, the answer was made truthfully, but calculated to mislead the Chair, I think, that the Department has construed it as changing the general law. I agree that far the statement was true, but it is not that the Department has construed it as affirmatively changing existing law. This Appropriations Committee was not prepared to say there was an existing law fixing and changing section 3041 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?
Mr. KEIFER. Yes, sir.
Mr. HISCOCK. In your judgment does it not permanently change

Mr. KEIFER. In my judgment it does not; and if you will take the several acts from year to year up to the present time, you will be led to the same conclusion that the Committee on Appropriations was led to, to wit, that in order to make it a permanent law, they should again re-enact it, and re-enact it in the form in which we now sind it—that that was in order that it should be perpetual.

And, as the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky just stated a little while ago, the Appropriations Committee decided that there was no permanent change of section 3041 of the Revised Statutes, and they would make it once for all, so it would be a permanent change. So, in addition to what appears in former appropriation bills, they have put in the words "and hereafter the Postmaster-General shall cause advertisements of general mail lettings," &c. So the absence of this provision, and as it has been construed, as I undertake to say, by the Post-Office Department, and as it has been construed by the Appropriations Committee every year up to the present time, the clause applied really to the year for which the appropriation was made. So much in regard to that point.

The gentleman argues, notwithstanding the fact this may be an attempt to change existing law, that it is a retrenchment of expenditure, because they say an advertisement may be made cheaper under this clause, if it should become a law, than under section 3041 of the General Statutes of the United States. The point, then, is that it is a little economy in the matter of publishing, printing, and posting up that they are looking to and no to the general question of advertising done over a State, as it may be done through the public press under section 3041, and thereby getting more competition and letting the contract cheaper. They require, Mr. Chairman, in order to sustain this paragraph of the bill, to find as a matter of fact that cheap advertisement is economy to the Government. To that extent they will go if they provide that the only advertisement for making an important mail contract needed was on the day of the letting that the postmaster should get on a store-box in front of the post-office important mail contract needed was on the day of the letting that the postmaster should get on a store-lox in front of the post-office and make outcry—and that would not cost anything—and cry out then and there there was to be a mail letting. Gentlemen on the committee would say if such a clause as that was in their bill it would be in the interest of economy and retrenchment, although the letting which might occur under such outcry and such advertisement might cost the Government thousands upon thousands of dollars by reason of the fact that there was no competition. Now, it seems to me in the two roints it does not appear affirmatively that seems to me in the two points it does not appear affirmatively that seems to me in the two points it does not appear affirmatively that this would retrench expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to direct his attention to the real point?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not embarrassed as to the question whether this retrenches expenditure, as that is a matter of speculation and argument.

Mr. KEIFER. I suppose so.

The CHAIRMAN. The language of the rule is:

Nor shall any provision in such a bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order unless it retrench expenditures, &c.

Now, it seems to be admitted that the provision contained in this

Now, it seems to be admitted that the provision contained in this bill is the existing law of the United States.

Mr. KEIFER. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. But it is contended that it is not a permanent law of the United States. The point the Chair desires to call the gentleman's attention to is, whether, in order to bring an amendment or provision in an appropriation bill within the inhibition of this rule, it must change an existing permanent law.

mr. KEIFER. I am very much obliged to the Chair for calling attention to that matter, which had in some measure escaped me.

Now, I understand that this rule of ours is to be given a reasonable construction. If the Chair is to hold that in order that this clause may be subject to the point of order made against it by the gentleman from California it must change the law that applies to the appropriathe taw that applies to the appropria-tion made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and the Chair holds that is necessary before he can rule it out of order, then I agree the point is not well taken. But we must not stop at this point. This question has a wider range. If the change of existing law is applied to the appropriation before us, an appropriation made in this bill, which is for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, it does change it, and it seems to be conceded by the Appropriations Committee, or they would not report it. Then it does change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. In the first appropriation bill, not a permanent

Mr. KEIFER. It changes existing law that would apply to the provisions that would remain in this bill if it should become a law. Then it changes the law that would affect the disbursement of the moneys revided for in this particular appropriation.

I do not think you are expected to rule that it changes existing law that applies to any other appropriation. But we are to deal with this rule as though it applied to law that would affect the appropriation about to be made in this bill, and that undoubtedly would be ation about to be made in this bill, and that undoubtedly would be existing law. The law is still in force. It still exists. The law that would apply to the business of this class is in force, and is section 3041 of the Revised Statutes. That exists to-day. All you can say, then, is that in so far as it is applicable to the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, it would suspend that; but it is still existing law, and never has been repealed. It never was repealed; it never was proposed to be repealed either by implication or directly until in this appropriation, when the committee thought it wise to insert the words "and hereafter," preceding this clause. And the law passed last year, Mr. Chairman, as suggested, only exists and applies to that appropriation, and not as to the one we now propose.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, perfectly satisfied that the point of order is understood by the Chair, and will be properly ruled upon, however that may be, the committee is content to rest upon upon, however that may be, the committee is content to rest upon the authority of the Chair in deciding this matter, which I am sure will commend itself to the judgment of the House, to throw around this the guard and protection that the Appropriations Committee have deemed proper to throw around this item of the bill. If it is not in the direction of economy, if it does not reduce expenditures, then the committee has failed in its views and failed in its judgment; that is all. It was not, it could not have been inserted for any other purpose. I, at least, will be content with the disposition of the question as made by the Chair, no matter what that may be upon this point as made to the Chair, ho matter what that any be upon this points of order. I will give notice, however, without undertaking to forecast the decision of the Chair, that, if in his judgment he shall hold it to be such a provision as comes within the objections raised by the gentleman from Ohio last on the floor, and as coming within the distinction drawn by him between the difference of the provision the distinction drawn by him between the diherence of the provision already established as authority in an appropriation bill and that contained in this, the other carrying the provision for only one year, while this proposes to make it permanent, after such decision I shall ask to be allowed to perfect the text of the bill by striking out the word "hereafter" and inserting the word "provided," and put it back exactly at what it has been ever since 1876.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I only want to say a word. This rule of course should receive a reasonable construction. You can give two constructions to it. Now, what are the facts? In 1876 the method of advertising for mail lettings was changed and that plan continued of advertising for mail lettings was changed and that plan continued for four years up to the present time. Under the existing law there is an advertisement pending this day for services, which I can demonstrate as a much better mode of advertisement than the old method, and has always produced good results. That being the case, why should it be changed? Now, if the point of order raised by the gentleman from California should be good, then we return to the old practice as it used to exist prior to 1876. The rule being susceptible of two constructions, the plainest possible construction should be given to it, and one which will not change a system which has worked well for the last four or five years that it has been in operation.

to it, and one which will not change a system which has worked well for the last four or five years that it has been in operation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, of course, desires to construe the third clause of the twenty-third rule according to its spirit and the manifest object and intent of the House in adopting it. The difficulty in the mind of the Chair arises upon two points, first, whether the provision in the act of 1876, which is substantially the same as the present one, was really a temporary or permanent provision. We all know that a great many provisions incorporated in appropriation bills are permanent. Therefore, if the provision incorporated in the act of 1876 merely provided that no part of the money thereby appropriated merely provided that no part of the money thereby appropriated should be expended in advertising otherwise than by posting up notices in the post-office, it clearly would have been a temporary provision, which would have ceased to be of any force or effect after the expiration of that year. But that was not the language. It pro-expiration of that year. But that was not the language, It provided, not as to the mere manner of expending the money appropriated by that act, but definitely as to the manner of advertising mail lettings thereafter; so that the Chair has doubt upon that question. And then the Chair has doubt upon the question suggested to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] as to whether, to come within the prohibition of this rule, it must not change existing law, whether the existing law be a permanent one or temporary. Entertaining these views, the Chair thinks he ought not to exclude the amendment, and prevent the committee from voting upon it. Therefore ment, and prevent the committee from voting upon it. Therefore, without absolutely deciding either one of the questions, the Chair prefers to submit the paragraph to the vote of the committee, and overrules the point of order for that purpose.

Mr. PAGE. Then I move to strike out all after the word "dollars," namely, these words:

And hereafter the Postmaster-General shall cause advertisements of all general mail lettings of each State and Territory to be conspicuously posted up in each post-office in the State and Territory embraced in said advertisements for at least sixty days before the time of such general letting; and no other advertisement of such lettings shall be required; but this provision shall not apply to any other than general mail lettings.

I desire to say a few words in reference to this question of advertising the general mail lettings. They are advertised now every four years under existing law. It has been the habit, or the law and the custom, so long as I remember, that the advertisements should be printed in some leading newspapers published in the State or Territory. The people of the western country where these mail lettings occur are in the habit of looking for the advertisements in these papers; the advertisements giving a minute description of every mail-route to be bid for at such a time.

The pending paragraph provides that there shall be no advertise-The pending paragraph provides that there shall be no advertisement except by posting a notice at the post-office. If a person twenty miles from a post-office desires to bid for a mail contract, he is compelled to go to the post-office and to copy the description of the route in all its minutiæ, so that he can insert it in his printed blank and submit his bid to the Department at Washington; whereas, on the other hand, if he could find in a newspaper a minute description of every route to be bid for, he could have it before him and asserts in all the facts in connection with it; whether the service was certain all the facts in connection with it; whether the service was once, twice, or six times a week; whether it required a 5 per cent. deposit under existing law or not, being over $5,000.

This is a matter of very considerable importance. I admit, if you want to keep the mail contracts in the hands of the present men, who are supposed to know what is the law and the changes that are made in it here in Washington and have their attorneys here, this will meet the bill exactly. But if you want to inform the people of the country that at a certain time there are to be submitted certain proposals for carrying the United States mails throughout the western country, it is then important that every person may know that, and that he can have a newspaper before him in which he will find a description of the routes that he desires to bill for so that he may a description of the routes that he desires to bid for, so that he may comply with the law in every respect.

This proposition compels the man to go to the post-office, perhaps.

distant ten or fifteen miles. And when he found the advertisement which somebody had nailed on the door or behind the door, he would be compelled to copy from that the description of the route or routes for which he desired to bid.

Therefore I say whatever view this House may take of this propo-

Therefore I say whatever view this House may take of this proposition it will not, in my judgment, be favorably received by the people of the country. Advertising does not cost a great deal. It may benefit a few newspapers. But at the same time you give information to the people of the country that you cannot give by tacking up behind a door a printed schedule or advertisement for the letting of postroutes or mail contracts; and I hope this House will retain the laws which now exist.

This foolish economy—if it is economy, as I very much doubt—is for the purpose of suppressing that information which ought to be given to the people of the country. Otherwise all you have to do is to post up this information at the Post-Office Department in Washington. Then all the mail contractors can find it out. But if you want to disseminate this information, if you want to have every one bid who is willing and who desires to bid, place the information before every such person in a weekly or daily newspaper, from which he can copy the description into his bid and send it to Washington.

I think you should let the law remain as it is.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Just one word in reply.

I am willing to submit to the judgment of the Committee of the Whole House whether the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. Page] looks toward the accomplishment of either of the two purposes that this clause of the bill contemplates; whether it looks to a dissemination of information of the mail lettings which it is proposed to advertise, or whether it looks toward even an economical dissemination of that information.

dissemination of that information.

Now, the gentleman from California talks about having these posted notices stuck up behind the door of a post-office. Does the gentleman undertake to conclude in advance that every postmaster in the United States is going to violate the law in every State and Territory of this country? for the law can be made no plainer than it is written if you adopt this bill and refuse to strike out this section. It says in every post-office in every State and every Territory where such lettings are to be made this notice shall be posted up—not behind the door of a post-office but "conspicuously" in such post-office.

The gentleman proposes as a better method to go back to a statute that has had no practical effect, that has not been employed since 1876, which uses newspapers as mediums of advertising instead of these conspicuously posted notices.

these conspicuously posted notices.

The gentleman says that if you will employ the newspapers every-body will have an opportunity to see the advertisement, but that if you hold to the policy that has been followed since 1876, which has been found to work well and against which no word of protest has come from the Post-Office Department, nobody will see it. How are you to get your newspapers unless you go to some post-office? You dare not cross the threshold of a post-office under this bill unless you want your eyes to meet this advertisement of mail lettings conspicwant your eyes to meet this advertisement of mail lettings conspictionsly posted in that office and staring you in the face.

The Post-Office Department within the last three days has been engaged in opening bids for mail lettings. Sixty thousand bids were pending in that Department to be opened and examined. Will you tell me that the process you have been applying since 1876 has failed to bring in a liberal number of competitive bidders? Will you find a scintilla of protest or objection on the part of the Post-Office Department? Will you find a mail contractor or bidder for a contract, whether he be a lucky or an unlucky one, that complains that he has not had fair notice and ample opportunity to advise himself of every general mail letting? We have applied this plan since 1876. It has met the judgment of all parties concerned. It is now simply a question whether by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman tion whether by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman tion whether by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] this House will go back to the old, effete, useless, and repudiated process of advertising. If you adopt the newspaper system, it is in the discretion of the Post-Office Department to advertize in either one, two, three, four, or five newspapers in the State or Territory where the mail lettings are to be had. He may select one and say that he is contented with that.

Mr. BLOUNT. May I interrupt the gentleman for a moment?

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to this fact: in the last appropriation bill under the old system of advertising the sum appropriated for advertising was $50,000; and at that time the expense of the postal system of the country was many millions below the present expendisystem of the country was many minions below the present expenditure for our mail service.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thank my colleague on the committee for the interruption. There is the net result of the two practices—$80,000 for advertising mail lettings under the system to which the gentleman from California [Mr. Page] proposes to go back, when the number of routes and the expenses of the service were incomparably smaller than now; and new $35,000 is found to be amply sufficient for the advertising under this new system, which resulted in sixty thousand bids in your Post-Office Department last Friday to be opened.

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will be through in a moment, or I will yield to the gentleman now if he prefers it.

Mr. PAGE. Very well; go on.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If you adopt the amendment of the gentleman from California and go back to the old practice you will give the Post-Office Department the discretion to advertise these general mail Post-Office Department the discretion to advertise these general mail lettings in but one newspaper in a State or Territory; and in his discretion he may select that newspaper in the remotest portion of the State or Territory, with a circulation which does not amount to one hundred outside of the bailiwick in which it is printed. It is a dangerous thing to do.

Mr. PAGE. Now, if the gentleman from Kentucky will allow me

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.
Mr. PAGE. The gentleman stated a few moments ago that it required $80,000 to advertise the letting of mail-routes four years ago.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Prior to 1876.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman from Kentucky knows, I presume, that every four years there occurs the general mail letting for the western country, and that every year there are small lettings for the Southern and Middle and New England States. Now, it is reasonable to suppose that every four years the appropriation for advertising may be larger than at any other time.

I only want to say one word more. I have always believed that by advertising in newspapers of general circulation throughout the country the people were apt to get more information than by posting notices on board fences or on brick walls. But if this Committee of the Whole has come to the conclusion that advertising in the public journals in the country is not the best manner of disseminating that kind of information, and that it is better to post up notices on board fences, or on trees, or in some little post-office kept perhaps in a barroom, then the committee will so decide.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me show to the committee exactly how much there is of value in the suggestions made by the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE.] He would have us believe, as he doubtless believes himself, that this universal expenditure of $80,000 for advertising was attributable to the fact that it was for one of those occasions that come around only once in four years, when a general mail letting was to be had.

Mr. PAGE. I certainly supposed so.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now let me show the gentleman how much he is mistaken, for I have the figures here before me.

In the year 1875, under the operation of the general statute to which the gentleman wants to remit us, we appropriated $30,000; and there was an additional appropriation of $15,000, making $95,000 in the aggregate. In the very next year, under the operation of the old statute, no four years running round for the recurrence of another general mail letting, the appropriation was $100,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have before me the appropriation for the previous year, 1874.

Mr. BLACKBURN. So have I.

Mr. BLOUNT. The amount is $70,000.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I can show the gentleman that instead of recurring every four years, the appropriation reached something like this amount every year. In 1874, as the gentleman from Georgia has just stated, we appropriated $70,000; in 1875, $95,000; in 1876, $100,000. At that time the old method was discontinued and a clause similar to that embraced in this bill was inserted in the annual appropriation bill. From that time the appropriations have been $40,000 for 1877; $60,000 for 1878; $60,000 for 1879; $60,000 for 1880; $35,000 for 1881; which is proved by the report of the Postmaster-General to be sufficient; and hence we propose to appropriate $35,000 for 1882.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from California, which is to strike out the clause that will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And hereafter the Postmaster-General shall cause advertisements of all general mail lettings of each State and Territory to be conspicuously posted up in each post-office in the State and Territory embraced in said advertisements for at least sixty days before the time of such general letting; and no other advertisement of such lettings shall be required; but this provision shall not apply to any other than general mail lettings.

The question being taken on the amendment it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 28, noes 79. The Clerk read as follows:

For preparation and publication of post-route maps, including revision of former editions, and maps, diagrams, and other information, $45,000; and the Postmaster-General may authorize the publication and sale of said maps to individuals at the cost thereof, the proceeds of said sales to be applied as a further appropriation for said purpose.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend the clause just read by striking out "$45,000" and inserting "$50,000" in line 13.

Mr. Chairman, I have before me the estimate for this item; but I am aware that the amount appropriated by the last Congress for the present fiscal year was wholly inadequate. Very many of the route agents of the country who are compelled to pass an examination that they may receive their commissions, or that they may be entitled to promotion, are unable to obtain from the Post-Office Department a map of the country through which their route runs. I have within the last month received letters from four route agents employed in part in the congressional district which I represent, saying that they have been running for three or four years and have been unable to obtain a map of the country through which they run. Now, I insist that it is not wise for the Government to refuse a simple postal map

It may be replied by the gentleman having this bill in charge that the amount proposed in this item is equal to the estimate of the Department. If that were true, (and I think it is not true,) this bill Department. If that were true, (and I think it is not true,) this bill seems to give to the Department a permission to sell these maps. But ought it to be expected that these agents shall purchase maps out of their meager salary? If there be in the service of this Government any persons who perform much service for little pay, it is the men who for $900 a year act as route agents. There are many routes in Minnesota where these men run three hundred and forty miles in twenty-four hours. A route agent is not allowed his commission till he has men it months. I asked one man who failed to receive his commisrun six months. I asked one man who failed to receive his commission at the end of six months whether he had been furnished with any map. He had had no map of the country through which he was compelled to run. Now, I insist that the Government ought to appropriate a sufficient amount of money to furnish a map as often as issued to every route agent in the country. To-day one-half of our route agents are denied a map of the country through which they run.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman will allow me, I will remind him that we have not yet come to the clause affecting the pay of route agents; and I will say further, by way of anticipation, that we have given in this bill every dollar that the Post-Office Department estimates for these purposes.

Mr. DUNNELL. On page 153 of the estimates I find these words: Preparation and publication of post-route maps, including constant revision of former editions, and furnishing maps, diagrams, and other information, by the topographer and assistants, $50,000.

This bill appropriates for that purpose $45,000, while the estimate is $50,000. My amendment proposes to bring the amount of the appropriation up to the amount of the estimate. I see no reason why $50,000 should not be appropriated. If there is a single item in this bill upon which we shall be justified in voting the amount of the estimate, it is this precise item. It seems to me a mean thing for a great, mate, it is this precise item. It seems to me a mean thing for a great, rich government to deny a map to a route-agent doing service for $900 a year and running sometimes three or four hundred miles every twenty-four hours, half of that time in the night. The otherday I took to the office of the topographer four letters, applying for these maps, and he gave me two maps, saying that he was unable to furnish maps for the other two men. There are four or five others who have written to me asking for maps. Now, what good reason is there why we should not appropriate just what the Department asks? What virtue is there in appropriating $45,000 when the officers of the Government say they want $50,000? It is not economy; it is not good legislation; it is not statesmanship.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, I did not need to be advised by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] that he offered an amendment proposing to increase the item of the bill by adding $5,000. I knew that, and I knew equally well he had made a speech which did not apply to this amendment at all. He moved to increase the appropriation for the publication of postal maps and made a speech to increase the salary of route agents and mail messengers. It the appropriation for the publication or postal maps and made a speech to increase the salary of route agents and mail messengers. It is not an effort on the part of this Government to deny to any postal-car clerk or mail messenger or route agent or local agent any post-route map. If they are entitled to receive them and have not got them it is not the fault of Congress nor a deficiency in the appropriation, and is nobody's fault but that of the Post-Office Department.

The Post-Office Department has estimated for $50,000 for this purpose. Their own report, which I hold in my hand, shows they do not need it. We gave them last year $42,000. They ask this year for pose. Their own report, which I hold in my hand, shows they do not need it. We gave them last year $42,000. They ask this year for $50,000. This bill offers them $45,000. The report of the Postmaster-General, which I hold in my hand, shows that for this purpose they have never used nor found necessity to use but $41,945.87, which is inside the appropriation given them last year and more than $3,000 inside the appropriation offered them in this bill.

And as to the hard worked and poorly paid class to whom the gentleman from Minnesota refers, railway post-office clerks, route agents, mail messengers, and local agents, five classes, this committee by this hill have recommended the appropriation in each of those items to bill have recommended the appropriation in each of those items to the last dollar the Post-Office Department has estimated for.

The question recurred on Mr. Dunnell's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 70.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to insert in line 33, after the word "thereof," the words "plus 10 per cent.," in order that this may conform to the

Mr. BLOUNT. I reserve the point of order till after I have heard the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, it is in the direction of economy

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, it is in the direction of economy very clearly, because under the general rule by section 3809 of the Revised Statutes we furnish to anybody who desires it any Government publication, provided he orders it before the printing, at cost plus 10 per cent., for the cost, as ordinarily estimated by Government officers, would not equal the cost any private individual would estimate. The Government hardly takes in the expense of plant, postage, &c. So, then, this does not make it more than cost as estimated by private individuals.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no doubt it is just to the Government.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no doubt it is just to the Government. Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I have no doubt ordinarily as applied to other publications than this particular one the gentleman's amendment is right and proper; but I do not think it ought to be adopted in connection with these maps. The persons who buy these maps are oncection with these maps. The persons who buy these maps are postal clerks, route agents—

Mr. HAWLEY. Not at all.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. They do not get them, or at least no considerable number, because there is not money enough appropriated to furnish them. I grant there is authority under the law to give them these maps if the Government had them, but we do not appropriate liberally enough to furnish them. Postal clerks in postal care. them these maps if the Government had them, but we do not appropriate liberally enough to furnish them. Postal clerks in postal cars unless they have these maps showing the post-routes frequently fail to perform their duty. It is within my knowledge that many of these clerks, and indeed, so far as I know, most of them, take their own money to buy these maps rather than do without them.

Now, there is no considerable number of people, other than these postal clerks, who do buy these maps. It is not proper that an officer who ought to have these maps should pay 10 per cent. more than their cost for the purpose of propuring them.

cost for the purpose of procuring them.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should much rather have voted for the $5,000 in addition proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota if I did not suppose all the postal agents and route agents were entitled by their appointment to these maps. It is impossible for them intelligently to discharge their duties and pass the requisite examination without them. I have myself repeatedly, as the gentleman from Minnesota said he has, asked the Department to send these maps, and I have never failed to get them. I did get, on my last application, notice from the topographer that it was with great difficulty he could furnish them, but he managed to get them. He said he was short in his appropriation for these maps appropriation for these maps.

I take it for granted in making my amendment the Government officers who need these maps in the performance of their duty will get them. I apply this only to the general outside public who buy these maps as they do other publications of the Government.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will take his amendment, then, and apply it to that class of people. To my knowledge many route agents and postal clerks have to purchase these maps with their own money. maps with their own money.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will modify the amendment with your permission, Mr. Chairman, so as to apply to individuals not in the service of the Government, that they may get these maps at the cost thereof plus 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNELL. I should like to hear the amendment once more

Mr. HAWLEY's amendment as modified was read, as follows:

After the word "individuals," in line 33, insert "not in the service of the Government," and after the word "thereof," in the same line, the words "plus 10 per cent.;" so it will read:

"For preparation and publication of post-route maps, including revision of former editions, and maps, diagrams, and other information, $45,000; and the Postmaster-General may authorize the publication and sale of said maps to individuals not in the service of the Government at the cost thereof, plus 10 per cent., the proceeds of said sales to be applied as a further appropriation for said purpose."

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I suggest to the gentleman that he let it read "maps to individuals at 10 per cent. increase, and at the cost thereof to persons in the service of the Government."

Mr. ROBINSON. The difficulty here—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Connecticut that as the amendment now stands by his modification they could not be sold at all to persons in the service of the Government.

Mr. ROBINSON. That was what I intended to call attention to.

think that amendment fixes a limitation upon the power of the Department to dispose of them except as suggested by the Chair.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the gentleman from Connecticut, as well as the gentleman from Illinois, did not make their remarks prior to the vote upon my amendment. These two gentleman from the connection of the control of the tlemen from the Committee on Appropriations confess that the Government does not appropriate a sufficient sum to give to the officers of the Department, who really need them, these maps. They make that assertion, and they are members of the Committee on Appropri-ations. They ought to have made that confession before the vote was taken upon my amendment, and they ought to have voted for that

Now, in reference to the statement that the Post-Office Department, Now, in reference to the statement that the Post-Office Department, under this appropriation, or the topographer, does not issue maps for sale practically. While he is authorized to do so, he does not issue a sufficient number of maps for the purpose, and it would be impossible for me to go to that office to-day and buy a map, or for a route agent of my district who is not supplied by the Government, if he needs one in his business. This provision is ineffective. There has not been enough money appropriated for the purpose. Of course, if money appropriated, the maps cannot be issued. It is money enough is not appropriated, the maps cannot be issued. It is not always possible for the office to know how many maps will be demanded in making their estimates, and a large sum of money, for instance, may be required to make a new edition. Now, although there was a little of the old appropriation left on hand, there was not enough to justify the office in getting out another edition, with the improvements that should be made.

It is a fact I believe according to the statement have that there

It is a fact, I believe, according to the statement here, that there was a little of the money left over, but that fact is no argument to prove that enough was appropriated for the purpose. Now, these gentlemen on the Appropriations Committee admit that there was not enough, and therefore, if it be in order to offer an amendment at this point, I move to strike out "$45,000" and insert "$48,000."

Mr. BLOUNT. I insist that that is not in order.

Mr. HAWLEY. My amendment, Mr. Chairman, ispending and I desire to modify it so as to meet the suggestions of the Chair. I will make two modifications of it; one by inserting the words "individual in the service of the Government," so that it may read "that any individual in the service of the Government may purchase these maps at the cost price thereof;" and then I propose to offer another amendment or modification in accordance with the existing statute "that to other parties outside they may be sold at the cost, plus 10 per cent.;" desiring of course that all persons in the service needing them shall have them free as at present.

Mr. PRICE. I would ask the gentleman from Connecticut whether by that amendment he would not prevent the employés of the Government getting them at all without paying cost price for them?

Mr. HAWLEY. Not at all; that is not contemplated by the amendment. The very words of the paragraph imply an authority or discretion on the vert of the Poetmester General in that respect ment. The very words of the paragraph imply an authority or discretion on the part of the Postmaster-General in that respect.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I prefer the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut as it was first offered instead of as at present modified. I do not like the idea to be conveyed that is conveyed in the modification, that the Government proposes to sell the postal map to route agents at any price, whether cost price or otherwise. I think that they ought to be supplied with them without cost.

On the other hand I am not prepared to concede what the gentleman from Minnesota insists is true that a sum of money has not been provided sufficient to furnish these maps to the employés of the Department.

Mr. DUNNELL. I did not hear the remark of the gentleman from

Mr. BLOUNT. I stated that I was not prepared to concede what was claimed by the gentleman from Minnesota, that a sufficient sum of money had not been appropriated to give these postal maps to the employes engaged in the postal service. The demand for this increase is just like everything else in the Government; it is constantly growing from year to year, and there is no telling where it is to end or what is to be the limit of it. Just a few years ago the sum appropriated for this purpose was a trifle in comparison to what is now asked. The twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars then was considered ample for all purposes. For some years it continued at that rate before it was urged that by the increase in the number of maps and also the increase in the number of routes and route agents demanded that the appropriation should be increased to thirty thousand. This continued growing from year to year until, as I said, last year I believe it was, they undertook to show that $40,000 would be necessary, while in the Forty-third Congress only $27,000 was required.

I know, sir, as a matter of fact, that many of these maps have gone

I know, sir, as a matter of fact, that many of these maps have gone to private parties. They have gone to people engaged in the newspaper business, and to parties engaged in selling books all through the country. These maps have not been restricted in their distribution to the employés of the Government. Whenever the gentleman shall undertake to show to this House that the number of maps printed is not large enough to supply the number of employés, and demonstrates that fact to this House, then I shall most readily concur in increasing the appropriation, but at present I see no necessity for this change. I regard the amount as ample if the maps are properly distributed. But when they are sold or distributed to private individuals and private parties throughout the country at the very time that it is alleged the employés of the Government cannot get them, I am entirely unwilling to increase this appropriation a single dollar. I venture to say, Mr. Chairman, that if there was a provision inserted that none of these maps should be given to any one but the postal employés that this appropriation would be found ample for all purposes.

Mr. DUNNELL. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] does not seem willing to admit that there has been a deficiency in the supply of maps for the route agents throughout the country. Now, when I asked the topographer of the Post-Office Department for some maps when the route agent wrote me for them, I was told there was no when the route agent wrote me for them, I was told there was no when the route agent wrote me for them, I was told there was no supply; that I must apply to the superintendent of the Chicago division. I made an application for these maps to the superintendent of the Chicago division, and he wrote me he was unable to obtain from the Post-Office Department a single map; and in his letter he admitted there were very many route agents in his division that could not be supplied by the Post-Office Department or by him, and requested of me personally that I should seek in the appropriation bill of this year an increase in the amount, that this deficiency might be made up.

be made up.

This increase, Mr. Chairman, from $43,000 to $45,000 is wholly disproportionate to the increase in the amount of service performed in the country. There has been a very large increase in the service during the past year, and my amendment proposing $48,000 is not in proportion to the service more than the $43,000 of last year. There have been appointed many new route agents during the past year, more in proportion than the difference between the sum named in the bill and that which I propose as an amendment.

I think the members of this committee will bear me witness that I do not offer an amendment to any appropriation bill that I may occupy do not offer an amendment to any appropriation bill that I may occupy the time of the committee a single minute. That is not my manner. I offer this amendment in good faith. The demand is very great in my section of the country that there shall be a larger appropriation for this item; and I say that the Committee on Appropriations give no reason why we should not appropriate the amount called for. There has been no reason given by the gentleman from Georgia why the committee say $45,000 instead of $50,000. It is simply a cutting down of the estimates into which this committee has gone, which has become its prevailing style, and by which it has sought to gain for itself somewhat of reputation. Fifty thousand dollars are asked by the Department and called for by the service, and yet the Committee on Appropriations say $45,000. on Appropriations say $45,000. Mr. BLOUNT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Minnesota that there is no amendment now pending before the committee except the one offered by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.] Mr. BLOUNT. I move to strike out the last word, with the view of saying to the gentleman from Minnesota, who indulges in the use of loose abuse, very common, especially among gentlemen who have not investigated the matters reported by the Committee on Appropriations, that if he had taken the pains to look over the report of the topographer of the Post-Office Department he would have found that that topographer had misled him, and that his speech was all wrong; so that he ought to apologize to the Committee on Appropriations. I have before me the report of the topographer himself, in which he gives a detailed statement of distribution of post-route in which he gives a detailed statement of distribution of post-route-maps during the year ending September 30, 1880, as follows: To offi-cers and clerks of the Post-Office Department at Washington, 908; to postmasters, 914; to railway mail service, (besides special tracings and diagrams,) 853; to post-office inspectors, 168; to officers of other governmental Departments of the United States, 1,239; to Senators-and members of the House of Representatives, 667; to committees of Congress, 160; to educational and scientific institutions, libraries, and geographical publishers, 281; to miscellaneous, including officers of railroads, telegraph, and express companies, and other individuals, 2624; to State authorities and State libraries, 195; to foreign gove of railroads, telegraph, and express companies, and other individuals, 2,624; to State authorities and State libraries, 195; to foreign governments, 33; number of sheets sold during year, 873; total, 8,915. Thus the great bulk of them were outside of the mail service. I have read this, showing that according to the report of the topographer more than one-half of this expenditure has been made in publishing maps and issuing them to parties who had nothing to do with the distribution of the mails.

Mr. SIMONTON. The amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. Hawley,] it seems to me, with all due deference to his judgment, has the effect by implication to repeal the law, if there be a law which now allows these maps to be distributed gratuitously to the postal clerks, because it in effect provides for the sale to them at a certain specified price. It appears to me, therefore, that by implication it repeals the law while it effects but a very small saving. I presume these maps do not cost very much, and a commission of 10 presume these maps do not cost very much, and a commission of 10 per cent. would amount to very little. Though I favor the spirit of the amendment, I must vote against it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I had no idea when I offered my amendment that this attempt to make this paragraph conform to the general statutes, would give rise to this general discussion. I wished, if the postal clerk was to be charged for the map he used to guide himself in his duties, and if there were any others in the service of the Government duties, and if there were any others in the service of the Government outside of the postal clerks who required these maps, the distinction should be made between those and others, to whom the maps should be furnished at cost with 10 per cent. additional. But I do not suppose there would be a thousand dollars saved to the Government by this, and I withdraw the amendment to save the time of the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 31 strike out "$45,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$48,000," so that it will read:
"For preparation and publication of post-route maps, including revision of former editions, and maps, diagrams, and other information, $48,000."

mer editions, and maps, diagrams, and other information, $48,000."

Mr. BLACKBURN. Before the vote is taken, I desire once more to remind the Committee of the Whole that the sum appropriated or recommended by this bill is more than $3,000 in excess of the sum expended for this purpose last year as shown by the report of the Postmaster-General now before me. I do not see why we should be called upon to appropriate for these different purposes more than the report of the Department itself shows has been found necessary. If the Committee on Appropriations were recommending a sum less than the Department needed, I would recognize the propriety of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, but we recommend more than $3,000 in excess of the highest amount that has been appropriated under this head. It seems to me to be worse than useless to increase the recommendation of the committee, and I trust the less to increase the recommendation of the committee, and I trust the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire that the committee shall retain in mind this distinct fact, when the vote comes to be taken, that the present appropriation is insufficient to furnish the route agents of this country with copies of this map.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And I desire to reply and controvert the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. Dunnell,] and show by the report of the Postmaster-General himself, that he did not last year expend the amount which Congress gave him for this purpose. Yet this year we add $3,000 to the amount we gave last year. If the route agents did not get these postal route maps last year it was not for want of an appropriation. Here is the report: forty-two thousand dollars was given by Congress, and only forty-one thousand and odd dollars was expended for that purpose. Now the Committee on Appropriations propose to give $45,000, $3,000 in excess of the amount appropriated for any year heretofore.

Mr. DUNNELL. And wight have been for $50,000.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And might have been for $50,000, if you are not to be guided by the expenditure.

The amendment of Mr. DUNNELL was not agreed to upon a division—ayes 47, noes 74; no further count being called for.

The Clerk read the following:

The Clerk read the following:

Office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General: For compensation to postmasters, $7,750,000.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph just read. I move to strike out "$7,750,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$7,800,000." I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Blackburn] to this fact: when this amount was agreed upon both in sub-committee and in the whole comamount was agreed upon both in sub-committee and in the whole committee, before the bill was reported to the House, we had before us the Auditor's statement for the last fiscal year, and from that statement deemed this amount to be sufficient. But the growth of business and the increased compensation have been so great that I apprement deemed this amount to be sufficient. But the growth of ousless and the increased compensation have been so great that I apprehend this amount is not sufficient.

I went to the Sixth Auditor this morning and he informed me that within the last two or three days he had ascertained what had been paid for this purpose for the first quarter of the current fiscal year, and the amount was $1,966,053.33. Therefore, if the demands for the next fiscal year should be as they are running for this fiscal year, there will be required something like eight millions of dollars instead of $7,800,000, as estimated for. In any event, whether my amendment be adopted or not, I have no doubt that next year there will be a deficiency of at least $200,000. I think we had better give the full amount estimated for by the Post-Office Department.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will ask the Clerk to read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not mean to antagonize this amendment, for in the brief opening statement which I made upon this bill I called attention to the fact that it was possible and even probable that the amount was not entirely sufficient; that although the Committee on Appropriations had followed the best data in its possession at the time this bill was framed, yet since that time information had been received direct from the Sixth Auditor's Office which tended to show that the actual expenditures for this purpose were greater than the committee was induced to helieve from the data in their possession.

received direct from the Sixth Auditor's Office which tended to show that the actual expenditures for this purpose were greater than the committee were induced to believe from the data in their possession. I do not mean to question the propriety of the amendment offered by my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, and I dare say it is proper. The committee supposed that they had given enough; it may be that they have given more than enough. But the last report from the Sixth Auditor shows that the expenditure in this direction was so close upon the estimate that I simply express my willingness to let the Department have the amount it has estimated for.

The amendment of Mr. Cannon, of Illinois, was agreed to

The amendment of Mr. Cannon, of Illinois, was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Fer compensation to clerks in post-offices, $3,850,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] in charge of this bill if the amount named in this item is the amount estimated for?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, it is not.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I would call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to the fact—
Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Dun-

NELL] refer to the clause making appropriation for compensation to clerks in post-offices?

Mr. DUNNELL. I do.
Mr. BLACKBURN. The amount named in that clause is exactly the same as the amount estimated for by the Department
The Clerk read the following:

Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General: For inland mail transportation, namely: For transportation on railroad routes, $9,488,282.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am satisfied that there is going to be a somewhat protracted discussion upon the clause of the bill just reported by the Clerk. As it is now half past four o'clock, although I do not desire to discontinue the consideration of this bill, I am perfectly willing to allow the Committee of the Whole to pass judgment upon willing to allow the Committee of the Whole to pass judgment upon the question whether we shall go on an hear longer or rise now. And, without expressing any preference for such motion myself, in order to test the question, I will move that the committee now rise. The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Carlisle reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6972) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

UNCLAIMED DIVIDENDS OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 6847) to provide for the distribution of unclaimed dividends among the creditors of national banks; which was placed on the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of a joint resolution relative to pensions, and that it be taken up now for consideration. It will take but a moment. It is really a private bill.

The SPEAKER. Can the gentleman indicate the number of the resolution?

Mr. O'NEILL. I cannot at this moment.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair will recognize the gentleman again for the purpose he has in view.

SECTION 989 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. LAPHAM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 7027) to amend section 989 of the Revised Statutes so to extend its provisions to all officers of the United States in the performance of official acts in which the United States is a party or has an interest; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

EVENING SESSIONS FOR PENSION BILLS.

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask unanimous consent to offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That on Tuesday the 25th, Wednesday the 25th of January, and Tuesday the 1st, and Thursday the 9th of February, 1881, at five o'clock p.m., or at such other hour as the House may indicate on either of the above named days, a recess shall be taken until seven and one-half o'clock for the purpose of considering bills on the Calendar reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHELLEY and others objected.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. Steels for the day, on account of illness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the Committee on War Claims papers in the matter of the trustees of the Presbyterian church at Beverly, West Virginia, and in the case of the Methodist Episcopal church, at Webster, West Virginia, there having been no action or adverse report in either case.

MRS. EVARISTE BLANC.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the House certain executive communications.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER then laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting papers in the Louisiana private land claim of Mrs. Evariste Blane; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

MAIL CONTRACTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Post-master-General, transmitting a list of bids offered and contracts made master-General, transmitting a list of bids offered and contracts made for carrying the mails; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. REAGAN. I move that this communication be printed.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Had we not better send it to the committee and let them decide whether it should be printed?

The SPEAKER. This communication is transmitted in pursuance of law, and it has usually been printed.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I have no objection.

The motion of Mr. REAGAN was agreed to, and the communication was ordered to be printed.

TELEGRAPH LINE FROM WINNEMUCCA TO WALLA WALLA

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Chief Signal Officer recommending an appropriation for the purchase of the telegraph line from Winnemucca, Nevada, to Walla Walla, Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ARMY CLOTHING.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to a deficiency in Army clothing for the fiscal year 1881; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HARBOR AT KEWAUNEE, WISCONSIN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from Major H. M. Robert, Corps of Engineers, upon a survey for a harbor at Kewaunee, Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF BUFFALO BAYOU.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the survey of Buffalo Bayou; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ESTIMATES OF ENGINEER DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting special estimates of the Chief of Engineers for certain works for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ICE-RREAKERS ON OHIO RIVER.

Mr. LOGAN. I present the memorial of a number of Illinois soldiers, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims, what is known as the sixty-surgeons bill. In other words, it is the bill proposed by the Commissioner of Pensions for the purpose of establishing courts all over the country at the expense of pensioners, which the pensioners dislike and so do I. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN presented resolutions of the Legislature of Illinois in favor of legislation for the prevention of pleuro-pneumonia, and for on Commerce. Mr. LOGAN.

Mr. LOGAN presented resolutions of the Legislature of Illinois in favor of legislation for the prevention of pleuro-pneumonia, and for the establishment of rigid rules for the inspection of cattle for the export trade; which were referred to the Select Committee on the subject of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious and infectious diseases of cattle and other domestic animals.

Mr. McDONALD presented the memorial of John Y. Smith and 14 others, citizens of Iowa, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1067) to quiet titles to the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other nurposes; which was referred to the

Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Select Committee on the subject of pleuropneumonia and other contagions and infections diseases of cattle and other domestic animals, reported a bill (S. No. 2097) for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, and for the suppression and prevention of contagious diseases among domestic animals; which was read twice by its title, and, on motion of Mr. JOHNSTON, recommitted to the committee.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. M. M. Chambers, postmistress at Morganton, North Carolina, praying for relief from liability for moneys stolen from her as postmistress, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was agreed to.

Offices and Post-Roads; which was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Committee on the Judiciary have had under consideration the bill (S. No. 1935) to confirm to the city of Chicago the title to certain public grounds, and have instructed me to report the same back with amendments and recommend its passage. They have also instructed me to submit a report which I desire printed. I give notice that, with the indulgence of the Senate, on Friday next, after the usual routine of morning business is through, I shall ask the Senate to have the bill considered. I have not asked the indulgence of the Senate upon any other matter, and this is a very important measure. If it passes at all it ought to pass this winter, and there will be but little time for the other House to consider it. I am instructed to say that the Committee on the Judiciary have agreed to this report with the exception of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who desires me to say that he dissents, and that he will prepare his dissent in a minority report. I move that the report be printed.

SETTLEMENTS WITH RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, which was instructed by a resolution of the Senate passed on the 27th of January, 1880, to inquire and report whether any discrimination or difference of treatment had been made in settlements with certain southern railway companies under the act of February, 1875, providing for the settlement of matters in dispute with certain railway companies, to report that the committee have heard the executive officers of the Government and counsel for the particular railway company interested in this question, and that we are of opinion that no discrimination or difference of treatment under the law has been made in respect of any of the companies by the executive officers. We therefore ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

The report was agreed to.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT FOR 1880.

Mr. WHYTE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution for printing extra copies of the Smithsonian report for 1880, to report it with amendments and recommend its passage. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That 15,500 copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1880 be printed; 2,500 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,000 copies for the use of the Smithsonian In-

The amendments reported from the Committee on Printing were to strike out, in line 1, "15,500" and insert "15,560," and in line 3, after "6,000," to insert "60;" so as to read:

That 15,560 copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1880 be printed; 2,500 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,060 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,000 copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

The amendments were agreed to.
The resolution as amended was agreed to.

REPORT OF DISTRICT HEALTH OFFICER.

Mr. WHYTE. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report, with a favorable recommendation, the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives to print 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and concurred in, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia be printed; 300 copies thereof for the use of the House of Representatives, 100 copies for the use of the Senate, and 2,100 copies for the use of said health officer.

REPORT ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. WHYTE. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution to print extra copies of the first and second volumes of the Reports of the United States Fish Commission, to make an unfavorable report thereon, and ask that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That 3,000 copies each of the first and second volumes of the Reports of the United States Fish Commission be printed, of which 700 shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,800 for the use of the House, and 500 for the use of the Commission of Fish and Fisheries.

Mr. BECK. I should like to have the resolution placed on the Calendar, if there is no serious objection.

Mr. WHYTE. There can be no objection to that course. I should like to state that it will cost about $7,500 to print these volumes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky desire the resolution to be placed on the Calendar?

Mr. BECK. I should like it to be placed on the Calendar, so that I can see more about it before it is finally disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

INDEX TO CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. WHYTE. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report an original joint resolution in regard to the printing of a semi-monthly index to the Congressional Record for the convenience of members of Congress, and I ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. No. 146) to provide for printing and distributing the index of the Congressional Record semi-monthly was read the first time by its title.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be'tt resolved, de., That the Joint Committee on Printing be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to make the necessary provisions and arrangements for hereafter issuing the index of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD semi-monthly during the sessions of Congress, beginning with the next ensuing session.

That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, directed to print and distribute the same number of copies of said semi-monthly index as he prints and distribute of the daily issue of the RECORD, and to the same persons and in the same manner.

That the Public Printer shall employ such person to prepare said index as shall be designated by the Joint Committee on Printing, who shall also fix and regulate the compensation to be paid by the Public Printer for the said work and direct the form and manner of its publication: Provided, however, That the compensation allowed for preparing said semi-monthly indexes, including their compilation into a session index, shall not exceed the average total amount now allowed by the Joint Committee on Printing for compiling the session index.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole,

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amend-ment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I notice a provision at the end of the joint resolution that the expense of this shall not exceed the pres ent expense. Do I understand from that that there will be no additional expense whatever, not even the employment of a person? was struck with the force of it if that is so.

Mr. WHYTE. It is so. We have taken the average of the expense for the last six or eight years, and to do this work will not cost the Government one dollar more than the present session index will cost if it is continued in the same way. The mode of compensation is changed, which will be a great advantage to the Government. Now the index is paid for at so much per thousand ems, and of course it is the interest of the indexer to increase the size of the index. This is to be done upon the same theory and plan as has been adopted in indexing the first ten Journals of the two Houses of Congress by Mr. Ordway. There has been a report made, and the Joint Committee on Printing of the two Houses has taken the subject under consideration, and we have agreed that this will be the wisest and best mode of indexing bereffter and add also the bit most the index.

or a new employé should be added to the roll without expense to the Government, that I could hardly refrain from asking an explanation of the Senator from Maryland. Of course there is a provision for preparing the index, and I take it the Senator knows what he talks about, as he generally does; but it is so far in the right direction that I can hardly help complimenting the Senator and his committee upon doing a new work and adding a new employé without costing the Government anything additional.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the representative of the committee what is the present state of the law in respect of these indexes and what is the present state of the law in respect of these indexes and the person employed to make them?

Mr. WHYTE. The law is very loose upon the subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So is the index, for that matter.

Mr. WHYTE. I grant it, and we want to improve upon it. It is in the direction of improvement that this resolution has been conceived. I will state to the Senator from Vermont, what of course he called a solution and it only requires a suggestion to revive his recollecknows already and it only requires a suggestion to revive his recollection of it, that a contest ensued here from 1867, I believe, down to 1873 between the old Globe contractors and others and those who pre-Printing Office; and I think in the very last moments of an expiring Congress a law was passed which put the printing of the debates, the preparation of the indexes, and everything connected with the production of the RECORD, in the hands of the Committee on Printing on the part of the Senate. It was, I think, rather an oversight in the haste in which the law was drawn to leave it in the hands of the Senate committee alone, and we have always invited the House committee to take part in our deliberations in regard to all this work. The whole of it is practically under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing under the act passed in 1873. There are no specific details in any law, and the whole is left in the discretion of the two committees,

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do I understand, then, that under the existing law the Senate Committee on Printing or the Senate and House Committee on Printing together are the authority who select the person employed to make the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD'S index as it now is?

Mr. WHYTE. If the Senator will allow me to explain, without merely answering him affirmatively—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. WHYTE. They authorize the Public Printer to make a contract with some person. It is done by contract. It changes from tract with some person. It is done by contract. It changes from time to time, and a new contractor comes in; but it has been done by contract ever since 1873.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it seems to come to the point, without meaning any present reflection upon the Committees on Printing, that they are primarily responsible for the selection of the persons who are to make these indexes. If that is so, I do not know that I could wish to sentence the committee to the penitentiary. I am sure I should not, but I should wish to express the hope that in exerting that never heave of teachers will transcribe the committee to the penitentiary. that power hereafter they will try to get somebody who knows enough that power hereafter they will try to get somebody who knows enough to make an index.

Mr. WHYTE. That is the trouble.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They have got the power it seems now, and whether this is to benefit the exercise of that power is not so clear to my mind. There might be this difficulty possibly in turning it over to a joint committee, because it is said the law now leaves it with the Senate Committee, which is one body, or rather to the two committees. As everything is a matter of great political ambition in the way of the prizes of contracts and appointments. Acc.; if the Honse of Rep. of the prizes of contracts and appointments, &c.; if the House of Representatives should happen unhappily to be republican after the 4th of March, and the Senate should happen still to stick to the rock of political ages, moss-grown and barnacle-eaten as it is, the two committees might fall into a tremendous difficulty as to the selection of the proper person to make the indexes, and if they should, and could not agree, and we should come to a state of absolute despair, (as I am told received in the proper person to make the proper person to the proper person to make the proper person to make the proper person to the person to the proper person to the person to th not agree, and we should come to a state of absolute despair, (as I am told we are in about counting the vote for President just at present,) we should not have any index at all. How much worse that would be than the present indexes that we are having, would be a question to be considered by some standing committee, I suppose.

It seems to me on the whole that the joint resolution had better be printed and go over until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is too late to raise an objection to the onsideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many times has it been read?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Three times; and the question now is,

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it has been read three times, an objection is too late.

Mr. WHYTE. I will state to the Senator from Vermont that we have given this subject a great deal of consideration. The Committee on Rules, under the lead of Hon. ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS, if I may use his name in this presence without violating any rule, has examined this subject very thoroughly in addition to our Committee on Printing, and has recommended this method of indexing in the highest terms in a printed report which has been before Congress for a year and a half. We have considered it recently very thoroughly, and we want to get it out of that rut in which we found the indexing when we came in charge at the beginning of the present Conof indexing hereafter, and add also the bi-monthly index.

gress. It has been going on in this way from the Globe days, when Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is so unusual that a new officer the index was in a very small compass in the front of each volume of the Globe. It has now grown to be a volume almost as large as each volume of the RECORD itself.

The object of the joint resolution is to digest the index, to get it The object of the joint resolution is to digest the index, to get it more in a concrete form, more perfect in its cross-indexing, and to comply more with the plan, as I have stated, of the index of the Journals of Congress, which we have upon our tables and have examined with great care. I hope the joint resolution will pass.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to ask the Senator having charge of the joint resolution, as it states that this work shall be done at the same cost which is now paid has the Senator the figures of the at the same cost which is now paid, has the Senator the figures of the cost in his mind?

Mr. WHYTE. Yes, sir. Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will the Senator be kind enough to tell us the cost ?

Mr. WHYTE. It averages from $5,000 to $7,000 a Congress.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then the compensation of this individual is not to exceed from $5,000 to $7,000; is that it?
Mr. WHYTE. That is exactly the provision, that the average cost is to be taken, and all the expense is not to exceed that.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the Senate ready for the question, which is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

The joint resolution was passed.

STATEMENTS ON THE FUNDING BILL.

Mr. BAYARD submitted the following order, which was agreed to: Ordered. That the Committee on Finance be authorized to employ a stenographer to report the statements of the Secretary of the Treasury, Comptroller, and other officers made before said committee in relation to the refunding of the national debt, and to print the same for the use of the committee.

CALENDAR OF HOUSE BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That at the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House bills which have been favorably reported, and continue such consideration until half past one o'clock; bills to be taken up in their order upon the Calendar; and this order shall commence immediately after the call for "concurrent and other resolutions."

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the resolution be printed and lie on the table, and I give notice that I shall ask the Senate to consider it tomorrow morning.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

FREE SHIPS.

Mr. BECK submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved. That all provisions of law which prohibit our citizens from purchasing ships to engage in the foreign carrying trade or which prevent the registration of them as American ships when owned, commanded, and officered by citizens of the United States, ought to be repealed, and to that end Senate bill No. 741, or a bill containing the general provisions thereof, ought to pass.

Mr. BECK. I submit the resolution now for the purpose of giving notice that on Thursday morning next, after the close of the morning business, I shall ask the Senate to allow me to offer some remarks in regard to it. A sub-committee of the Committee on Finance have been considering the subject for a long time, and I have their assent to be heard then, if the Senate will hear me upon the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and laid the subject to the cell of the Senate will be printed and laid.

Mr. GARLAND submitted the following resolution; which was read: Resolved, The Committee on Public Printing be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reprinting for the use of the Senate — copies of the report of the joint commission appointed under the eighth section of the act of Congress of June 21, 1860, to examine into the organization, system of discipline, and course of instruction of the United States Military Academy at West Point, submitted December 13, 1860, and report by bill or otherwise.

The book I hold in my hand is a report of the commission appointed under the eighth section of the act of Congress of June 21, 1860, to examine into the organization, system of discipline, and course of instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point. That commission was composed of Jefferson Davis and Sol-Point. That commission was composed of Jefferson Davis and Solomon Foot, on the part of the Senate; Henry Winter Davis and John Cochrane, on the part of the House; Major Robert Anderson and Captain A. A. Humphreys, Army officers. They repaired to West Point, and after holding a long consultation and examination there they made a report to Congress of three hundred and fifty printed pages, which I now have. The copy of the report which I hold is the only one that I can ascertain to be found anywhere. This I managed to get from the Document Room. It contains information that I have not been able to find elsewhere. It is the only connected and thorough examination that I have seen of that institution. AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. WITHERS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the post-route bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

GENERAL ULYSSES S. GRANT

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to state that yesterday I voted for the motion of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Logan,] to take up the bill (S. No. 1992) to place Ulysses S. Grant, late General, and ex-President of the United States, upon the retired list of the Army, notwithstanding at that time I was under a pair with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. Saulsbury,] upon political questions, a fact which I entirely overlooked. If it had occurred to me I should not have voted. I now state this morning for the purpose of setting the matter right, that such is the fact, and the further fact also, that I unter right, that such is the fact, and the further fact also, that I understand if the Senator from Delaware had been here he would have voted against the motion to take up the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. If the morning business is over I move that all prior

Mr. LOGAN. If the morning business is over I move that all prior orders be laid aside temporarily, in order to take up for action the bill (S. No. 1992) to place Ulysses S. Grant, late General, and ex-President of the United States, upon the retired list of the Army. I do not desire to discuss the bill at all. If any gentleman desires to be heard, I do not. I ask for a vote by yeas and nays upon the motion. Mr. LAMAR. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the question. It is upon the motion of the Senator from Illinois, that the pending order of business which is the consideration of the Calendar of General of business, which is the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under the special order of the day, be postponed for the pur-pose indicated by him, upon which he demands the yeas and nays.

pose indicated by him, upon which he demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. President, I am in favor of having this bill disposed of; and when it is called up for action I shall vote to place General Grant upon the retired list of the Army.

Had General Grant at any time when he was General desired to be retired from the command of the Army, I presume no one would have objected to the liberal provision proposed in this bill. It is the policy, in my opinion the proper policy, which the Government has adopted for its generals, its admirals, and its judges. It means that such officers shall devote their lives to the discharge of their great duties, and that in return the country shall secure them honorable and adequate independence. So far from objecting to the principle, I am willing to extend it. But the people of the United States did not give General Grant the opportunity of retiring. They summoned him to abandon his place of professional eminence in order to become President. Whatever may be my opinion as to the political admin-him to abandon his place of professional eminence in order to become President. Whatever may be my opinion as to the political administration of General Grant, I do not think his consent to the expressed wish of his country ought to deprive him of the provision which is secured to those who served in the Army with him and after him.

I would with great pleasure vote for a law by which every President, upon closing his administration, should be placed upon the retired list, with such allowances as are fitting for the rank of Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy given him by the Constitution. I think it eminently proper that a President should retire from active politics, and equally proper that he should be able to live in quiet. politics, and equally proper that he should be able to live in quiet independence. The proposition that I see urged in some of the journals and magazines, that an ex-President should be given a seat in the Senate, seems to me anomalous. The Senate is the representative of States. Equality of representation is guaranteed, and a Senator not representing a State would have no life under the Constitution. not representing a State would have no life under the Constitution. But I do not propose to discuss any general plan. If I would have voted to retire General Grant at his own request from active service, if I would have done this after eight years' administration of the Presidency, I do not see why I should not vote for it now. I cannot consider this a question of any political consequence. It involves no breach of the Constitution to pass it; it will be the violation of no constitutional duty to reject it. As it is presented, I am willing to consider it the expression of a popular wish that the general most eminent in a war which a majority of the American people do, as we all know, regard as sacred in its motives and as important in its consequences as the war of the Revolution, should be secured an honorasequences as the war of the Revolution, should be secured an honora-e competence at the close of long and ardnous service.

Nor do I see any sectional feature in this measure. It threatens danger to no southern interest; it does not impair any southern right; it ought not to be considered as wounding any southern sentiment. I am willing to accept the popular appreciation of General Grant as a great soldier, and acquiesce cheerfully in this method of its expression. But I cannot vote for this bill unless the second section is stricken out. There are many grave and insuperable objections to it which I will not here present. I will state one. It seems to me to be in violation of the principle upon which the retirement of officers rests. It interferes with the actual, proper administration of the active service, and will not by its omission in the slightest degree diminish the honor or justice of the position assigned.

Without any reference to the principles involved in General Grant's administration of the National Government, without any reference to the merits of the strategy of his military campaign, I am in favor, as was done with those who had completed their service under the Roman eagles, of writing opposite the name of General Ulysses S. Grant—Emeritus.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALLACE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GARLAND, (after having voted in the negative.) Yesterday I was paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] who I see is not in his seat this morning. I suppose, therefore, the pair still holds good, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BURNSIDE. My colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. HEREFORD.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. FERRY. I desire to state that the Senator from Texas [Mr. Mayer lie neighbor with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER.]

MAXEY] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER.] The Senator from Wisconsin, if present, would vote "yea" and the Senator from Texas would doubtless vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 28; as follows:

MILITARY WARRANT LAND LOCATIONS.

Maxey,

Sharon, Wallace.

Mr. McDONALD. I move to postpone the present and all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the bill (S. No. 19) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes. I wish to have a vote on the motion to reconsider.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana moves to post-pone the pending order for the purpose, if that motion should carry, of moving that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let that bill be read for information. I should like to know what it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

Mr. McDONALD. Does the Senator from Vermont desire the entire bill read ?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is exactly what I desire. I wish to know what it is the Senate is to take up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask the Senator from Indiana, inasmuch as it is evident this measure will take some time, to yield to me that I may ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up Senate bill nay ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 2038, a bill of which I gave notice yesterday, and which provides an appropriation for taking and publishing the results of the census. I think the bill will probably elicit no discussion whatever, and I desire to have it considered and acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WHYTE in the chair.) Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McDONALD. As the Senator from Vermont asks to have the online bill read I shall not press; it this morning but give notice that entire bill read, I shall not press it this morning, but give notice that to morrow morning, at the close of the morning business, I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill I have indicated. The reading of the entire bill at this time would perhaps consume the residue of the morning hour. I therefore withdraw my motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think it right to say that I hope the Senator from Indiana will not insist on the Senate taking up a bill until we know what it is.

Mr. McDONALD. If the Senator from Vermont does not know

Mr. McDONALD. If the Senator from Vermont does not know what it is after having fought against it a good part of the last session, I do not know when he will.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I confess that in a good many of the aspects of that bill, I do not know what it is. That was one of the reasons I voted against it, and why I presume a majority of the Senate voted against it; but I certainly hope that it will not be considered as impolite in this body to ask that a measure which it is proposed to take up out of its order for consideration be submitted for the information of the Senate before they are called on to vote. That is all I have asked its reading for.

Mr. McDONALD. I have withdrawn my motion, but I shall renew it to-morrow

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill; and by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

Mr. PENDLETON. I notice in line 9 of the second section of the mir. PENDLETON. I notice in line 9 of the second section of the bill what is evidently a misprint or a clerical error in drawing the bill. The word "Treasury" is substituted for the word "Interior," making it read that the contract there referred to shall be with the approval of the "Secretary of the Treasury." Obviously it ought to be the "Secretary of the Interior," and therefore I move to amend by striking out the word "Treasury" and inserting the word "Interior." terior.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, this bill is before the Senate and has been now for two weeks. It is accompanied by a printed report, which is extremely full on the points suggested by it. I have no disposition to detain the Senate for a moment unless objection is made, and I think none will be.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amend-

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like the Committee on the Census to explain to the Senate what appropriations have been made for this service, and what is the necessity for this increased appropriation.

Mr. PENDLETON. I hold in my hand a report, which states very fully the reasons for this appropriation. The appropriation which was made for the taking of the census has not yet been exhausted. The Department is fully within the moneys appropriated to it, but the extensive investigations that were made beyond those that were required by the laws of last Congress providing for the taking of the census are of such a character as that their publication will require more money than was appropriated. The reasons, given in detail and more money than was appropriated. The reasons, given in detail and specifically, are stated in the letter of the Superintendent of the Census to the Secretary of the Interior, which the Secretary of the Interior communicated to the Senate, and which was referred by the Senate to the committee. I do not know that I can state more briefly than the Superintendent has done, if I went into the subject so fully as he has, and therefore, if the Senator from Delaware is not satisfied as he has, and therefore, it the Senator from Delaware is not satisfied with the information already given in brief, I shall ask the Secretary to read the letter of the Superintendent of the Census.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, CENSUS OFFICE, Washington, D. C., January 5, 1881.

Department of the Interior, Census Office, Washington, D. C., January 5, 1881.

Sie: I have the honor to report that, in my judgment, an additional appropriation of $500,000 will be needed to secure a full and satisfactory completion of the tenth census, including the compilation and publication of its results.

By the twentieth section of the act of March 3, 1879, the sum of $3,000,000 was fixed and limited as the maximum cost of the census therein provided for, exclusive of printing and engraving; and this amount and no more has been appropriated for the purposes in contemplation of that act.

By the act of April 20, 1880, certain additional duties were charged upon the census enumerators, and for their services and expenses in connection therewith the additional sum of $310,000 was appropriated by the act of June 16, 1880. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars was also appropriated by the same act for the cost of engraving and printing. The two latter amounts, however, aggregating $335,000, are properly to be excluded from any consideration of the cost of the census, according to the scheme proposed by the act of March 3, 1879, and from any comparison of the cost of the tenth with that of the ninth census, the additional duties imposed upon the enumerators by the act of April 20, 1850, being entirely new to the law, while the cost of printing and engraving is not included in the accounts relating to the ninth census, sept in the Treasury Department.

The cost of the ninth census, as appears by the last statement furnished this office, was $3,336,000.

Although the population of the United States has increased 30 per cent. in the decade, the amount appropriated for the tenth census, as previously stated, was but $3,000,000, which is a million and a third less than would have been the cost of that census if taken on the scale of 1870. Indeed, the amount of $3,000,000, of the red to the tenth census if taken on the scale of 1870. Indeed, the amount of $3,000,000, referred to, was actually reduced, inadve

Indian tribes of the United States are also in contemplation of the acts aforesaid, though not made obligatory upon the Census Office if found inconsistent with existing appropriations.

It will be seen that the appropriation for the Tenth Census was painfully small, even on the scale of prices and wages which were prevailing when the act of March 3, 1879, was passed.

The Superintendent, however, loyally undertook to carry through the work upon the provision made. The very rapid rise of prices and wages which took place in the fall of 1879 and during the following winter, amounting in many cases to 30, 40, and 50 per cent., gave the first blow to the plans of the Census Office, necessitating a large increase of expenditure upon the field work.

If the census had been taken in June, 1879, it would have found a very large amount of professional and clerical labor unemployed, and active competition would have existed for positions in connection with the census. In June, 1889, commerce and industry were at the very height of their activity, and it was found difficult in many sections to tempt well-qualified persons to take the position of enumerator, even at the maximum (§4 a day east of the 100th meridian, §5 a day west of that line) which this office was by law authorized to pay.

A second cause which has increased the cost of the census beyond what was anticipated has been the unexpected increase in population during the decade. So rapid has been the unexpected increase in population during the decade. So rapid has been the course of immigration, and so completely have the American people recovered from the effects of war and of commercial and industrial depression, that the census of 1880 discovers a population two millions in excess of the highest estimate of this office. The result is avery gratifying one, but it has added 4 or 5 per cent to all the elements of the cost of the enumeration and compilation. Another cause which has increased the expenditures of the census beyond what was contemplated has been f deaf and dumb, insane and those, change, the finally, an investigation of very wide scope, now being conducted, with the highest expert knowledge, into the social and industrial condition of the great cities of the country.

Nothing that has been done in any of these directions will, in any event, be lost. Even if the work were now to be stopped, the results would fully justify the expenditure incurred; but, I believe that, if a sufficient provision can be made for continuing these investigations to their full completion, the tenth census of the United States can be made an almost perfect inventory of the industrial, social, and vital condition of our people.

The fourth cause which has increased the expenditure of the census beyond the original scheme has been found in the occasions which have developed in the course of the work of this office for a more rigid revision of the schedules returned by enumerators and special agents; a more various compilation of results, and a wider correlation of facts, than has ever been undertaken.

The schedules of enumeration, whether of inhabitants, of agriculture, of manufactures, or of mortality, form a mine from which the value of the product obtained may be made to increase with every successive application of labor in compilation and tabulation.

The most hasty compilation will obtain results of a certain value; but it is not unlikely that more of the gold will be found in the tailings of the mill than has been made into bullion.

Although the compilations of 1870 were very much more extended than any that had been previously undertaken, I feel that a great deal more matter of much statistical significance might have been obtained from the schedules; and I feel very desirous to be enabled to thoroughly work up the rich mass of material which has been brought into this office by the labors of the 31,000 enumerators, and the hundreds of special agents and experts, who have been employed during the past year.

Should it be the decision of Congress not to increase the appro

Hon. Carl Schurz, Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WHYTE. I move to strike out the second section of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) The Senator from Maryland moves to strike out the second section of the bill, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to obtain the printing, by contract, of such reports of the Superintendent of the Census as he may deem it important to issue at an early date: Provided, however, That no such contract shall be made until after proposals for such printing shall be invited by public advertisement for not less than fifteen days in newspapers of general circulation in such places, and in such manner, as the Secretary of the Treasure may direct ury may direct.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, with our large and amply provided Printing Office there is no necessity for seeking for private contractors to do this work. It can be done in the Government Printing Office as well as and probably a great deal better than it can be done by private contract

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, the committee reported this section of the bill to the Senate after very mature deliberation as to the necessity of a speedy publication of the returns of the census and also the embarrassment of the excess of business in the Printing Office. The report made to the committee by the Secretary of the Interior, after cularging upon the necessity of a speedy completion of the publication recessory. lication, goes on to say:

With the enormous pressure upon the Public Printer, where every Government service is clamoring for early action upon its own work, and where requisitions of weeks if not of months' standing must have priority to the census reports, a great saving of time could undoubtedly be effected by the adoption of the foregoing recommendation.

After this bill was reported to the Senate and this report made I had an interview with one of the controlling officers of the printing department, and when I explained to him what was the character of the reports that would probably be printed in this way, he agreed that possibly and probably their issue would be very much advanced by the adoption of this section of the bill.

Mr. WHYTE. When my attention was called to this bill, when it was reported by the Senator from Ohio, and I read the bill, I observed this provision in the second section in regard to the printing.

served this provision in the second section in regard to the printing, served this provision in the second section in regard to the printing, and felt it to be my duty to make some inquiry, representing as I do the Senate in part on the Printing Committee, as to whether there was any reason for the withdrawal of that portion of the public printing from the Government Printing Office. I had a conference with the Public Printer himself. I presume the Senator from Ohio must have conferred with somebody subordinate to the Public Printer, because the information I derived from the Public Printer was the very opposite of that which the Senator from Ohio has tated to have been derived from some other source. I found that the Census Office been derived from some other source. I found that the Census Office had had printed over twenty-one million blanks at the Government Printing Office, and over fifty thousand blank-books, and there had been no delay except that upon one or more occasions the paper could not be obtained from the contractor for paper. This section only provides for a contract for the printing; therefore, the contractor for the printing would be dependent, just as the Government Printing Office is dependent, upon the contractor for the paper, and if the paper was slow in coming, as a matter of course delay in printing must be occasioned. But the work that has been done in the past has been done, a great deal of it, on a peculiar class of paper. That period of time and that necessity have passed. The paper which will be required hereafter for the reports of the Census Office is common book quired hereafter for the reports of the Census Office is common book paper, a form and character which can be readily obtained, having no peculiarities about it. Consequently there can be no delay in the obtention of proper paper for the work to be hereafter required by the Census Department. And then, as to the character of printing, the Senator from Ohio will reflect that nearly all the printing hereafter will be tabulation rather than reports; so it will require the work of rule-and-figure printers, and I undertake to affirm that on account of their long experience, on account of the vast work that they have been called upon to do, no better experts in that class of work can be found in any printing establishment in the United States work can be found in any printing establishment in the United States than we have in our employ. Here we have a great Government Printing Office, doing all the work for the Government, with all the appliances, every arrangement provided at the greatest expense, with every new device for expedition and for neatness of execution of the printing, with the report from the office of the Public Printer that there is no difficulty in the way of doing this work. And in his behalf, and for the purpose of showing that he does not think there is any necessity of taking this work from his office, I ask that the Secretary may read a communication which I have received from him.

Mr. PENDLETON. If the Senator will excuse me, before the reading of that paper I will say to him that, so far as those members of the committee with whom I have consulted are concerned, it is not the committee with whom I have consulted are concerned, it is not necessary that he should have that paper read. His own statement of the condition of the Printing Office and its facilities, based, as we know it is, on accurate knowledge and careful observation, will be for me entirely satisfactory. Our only object was to expedite the publication of these reports. If, therefore, the Senator having made this statement of his own knowledge, insists upon striking out the second section of the bill, and is not willing to intrust to the Secretary of the Interior an option in that respect, I think he will hardly meet with much opposition.

meet with much opposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland insist on the reading of the letter?

Mr. WHYTE. I should prefer that the letter of the Public Printer be put in the RECORD at all events, if not read; but I believe the rules of the Senate require us to have papers read before they can go into the RECORD. It will take but a few minutes, and I should rather have it read.

have it read.

Mr. PENDLETON. I do not object to it at all.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the letter, but before concluding was interrupted by

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour having expired

the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to the finishing of the reading of this communication and the further consideration of the bill. It is very apparent from what has been said that it will take but a few minutes now to complete the bill. ["No objection."]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the unfin-tshed business will be laid aside informally.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the letter,

as follows:

Office of Public Printer, Washington, January 19, 1881.

Washington, January 19, 1881.

Sir: I have the honer of replying to your verbal inquiry as to the expediency of authorizing the printing, by contract, such reports of the Superintendent of the Census as he may deem it of interest to issue at an early date.

Since the establishment of the Census Office there have been printed for its use 21,211,536 blanks and 51,738 blank books manufactured more expeditiously than it were possible to be done in any other printing and binding establishment in this country. There were, however, several instances of delay occasioned by a failure of contractors to furnish paper in proper time. This same difficulty would be morapt to be experienced by any one having a contract to do the printing.

As the reports now to be printed will be done on book paper, no such cause or delay will exist, as there is no difficulty of keeping a supply of that kind of paper on hand.

These reports will be mainly rule-and-figure work, and it is represented to the contract of the c

These reports will be mainly rule-and-figure work, and it is proper to say that the corps of compositors supployed in this office on that class of work have no equals anywhere, because of their greater experience than is to be found in any other office.

other office.

There is no establishment anywhere so well prepared to execute that kind of work, and no one can be prepared to do it without an expenditure of a large amount of money, which would not be made until a contract should be obtained.

If copy for a report is furnished, and there should be no delay caused by the return of proofs, I guarantee that it shall be printed in less time than proposals can be advertised for and a contract entered into. A return to the contract system would delay the publication of the reports and result in inferior work.

Very respectfully, yours, &c.,

JOHN D. DEFREES

JOHN D. DEFREES, Public Printer.

Hon. W. P. WHYTE, Chairman of the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland to strike out the second section of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PENDLETON. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the title should be amended by striking out the words "and for other purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. PENDLETON. The amendment of the Senator from Maryland makes that necessary.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House has concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6614) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4451) to provide for the erection of a monument at Schuylerville, New York, commemorative of the battle of Saratoga, and for other purposes; and and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 7029) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for interest on the 3.65 loan of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 340) in reference to the distribution of the Congressional Record; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6969) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments

PENSION ARREARAGES.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I present a letter to the Secretary of the Interior, written by the Commissioner of Pensions, in regard to arrearages of pensions. The Committee on Appropriations now have the pension appropriation bill before them, and I move that this letter be printed, so as to be before them to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

service of the Post-Omce Department for the nscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VEST submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 1979) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at Howell's Ferry, Missouri; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GROOME submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 1933) to establish and equalize the grades and regulate appointments and promotions in the Marine Corps; which was ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 6969) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2098) in relation to the resignation of judges of the courts of the United States, who may become permanently disabled to discharge their duties; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GROOME asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2099) to authorize the Southern Maryland Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 6970) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for interest on the 3.65 loan of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The bill (H. R. No. 4451) to provide for the erection of a monument at Schuylerville, New York, commemorative of the battle of Saratoga, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

LANDS IN SEVERALTY TO INDIANS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Whyte in the chair.) The unfinished business is Senate bill No. 1773.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I should like to be allowed to call up a bill which I think will not take five minutes. I do not wish to interfere with the unfinished business.

Mr. COKE. I must insist on the regular order.
Mr. JOHNSTON. Very well.
The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1773) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the States and Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hoar.]

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Last week I gave notice that to-day I would ask the Senate to consider House joint resolution No. 116, relating to the geological survey, but there is unfinished business before the Senate and, of course, I have no wish to interfere with it; but I desire now to give notice that on the disposal of this bill I shall ask the Senate to take up House joint resolution No. 116.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be reported.

Massachusetts will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 6, section 6, after the word "reside," insert "and are hereby declared to have become citizens of the United States and entitled as such to the full protection of the Constitution and laws.

States and entitled as such to the full protection of the Constitution and laws."

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, I trust that none of the amendments which have been offered to this bill declaring the rights of citizenship in the Indians will be passed. The committee sought carefully in the framing of this bill to avoid questions which might give rise to as great a difference of opinion as that subject will. Their purpose was to strip the bill, as far as possible, of all extraneous questions and to direct the attention of Senators solely to the question of the tenure by which the Indians should hold their property. And this was done not because they sought to avoid any responsibility, or because they sought to leave the Indians in any unprotected position, to leave them where their rights could not be asserted in the amplest and fullest form, but because they were extremely anxious that this bill should be stripped of every other question than the single one of the holding in severalty of the lands of the Indians.

I am very much inclined to believe with the Senator from Georgia who spoke yesterday [Mr. Brown] and several Senators who have addressed the Senate, that under the fourteenth amendment propriovigore the Indians are citizens of the United States; but that is a question which would lead to great discussion, to many differences of opinion, and it would involve this simple question, simple as I think it is, in a debate that would only confuse wisdom upon this particular measure. The question of citizenship may involve the right of suffrage, and we know that the question of the extension of suffrage to the Indians are citizens under the fourteenth amendment, then it requires no declaration by the Legislature to invest them with any of the rights belonging to that character. If they are not citizens

If the Indians are citizens under the fourteenth amendment, then it requires no declaration by the Legislature to invest them with any of the rights belonging to that character. If they are not citizens by that amendment, and it requires the passage of a law, then the committee desire that that law should be prepared with care, and brought before the Senate for consideration as a separate bill.

The enjoyment of the rights of citizenship, whether it be in exercising the right of suffrage or in any other respect, is not essential at all to the enjoyment of the rights of property under this bill with which we seek to invest the Indians. They may, without the right of suffrage, without being citizens, be invested with the titles to land and be protected by the courts of the United States and of the States and be protected by the courts of the United States and of the States in all their rights just as aliens are protected. The Senator from Massachusetts, indeed both the Senators from that State, seemed to be very much concerned lest if we pass this bill without a declaration of citizenship of the Indians, they would be left unprotected. Now, sir, according to section 1977 of the Revised Statutes, these Indians will be protected in all their rights in all the Territories of the United States, at least, because that section provides:

All persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every State and Territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of persons and property as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, penalties, taxes, licenses, and exactions of every kind, and to no other.

whatever question there may be as to the jurisdiction of the United States, as to its power to confer these rights upon citizens or persons within the States, there is no question as to the power of Congress to pass that law as applicable to the Territories of the United States. They are under its jurisdiction, and by the force of that proposition these Indians are protected at least in all the Territories of the United States. Now I should like to know (and I ask for information) whether there is any State in this Union which prevents an Indian from suing in the courts of the State? I know of none. I do not profess to speak after having examined the constitution and laws of each of the States; but this I do know, that if there is any State which has passed a law of that kind the law is in direct conflict with the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, which provides, as was read so pertinently by the Senator from which provides, as was read so pertinently by the Senator from Georgia, yesterday:

Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

And this Government has not found it difficult, as experience in the last few years has shown, to devise a means by which to enforce that amendment whenever a State violates it. So I think without any amendment declaring citizenship in these Indians, under the provisions of the Revised Statutes and this bill itself, these Indians will be thoroughly and fully protected in all the rights, in all the enjoyments, and in all the duties which are devolved upon them by the

My friend from Alabama, [Mr. Morgan,] who several days ago dis-cussed this bill, and yesterday indulged in debate upon it, found great fault with the committee that they had made this a general bill applying to all the tribes in the United States, within the discretion of the President and the consent of the tribes themselves; and he said that the committee should have taken up this subject and considered the condition of each tribe, considered the character of its lands, and introduced a special bill for that particular tribe as might be recommended to it by the consideration and examination of might be recommended to it by the consideration and examination of the condition of the tribe and of the land. It is within the recollec-tion of the Senator, and certainly of the committee, that at the last session when the committee reported a special bill applicable to the Ute Indians alone, the chief argument the Senator from Alabama made against it was that it was a special bill, and that the commit-tee should have taken the trouble to formulate and introduce a gen-eral bill on this subject, and if I am not mistaken the Senator led us to home that if we should introduce that bill we should have the to hope that if we should introduce that bill we should have the to hope that if we should introduce that bill we should have the value of his able support.

That Senator, too, in his criticisms upon this bill found great fault with the committee in that they had allowed two-thirds of the various tribes to decide upon their fate, so far as the allotment is concerned, and he has seemed to think it was a great wrong that two-thirds of the tribe should have the power to nullify a law of the United States. Why, Mr. President, there is nothing in the language of this bill that justifies a criticism of that kind from a gentleman who uses language so accurately and fluently as the elongent Senator from Alanguage. bill that justifies a criticism of that kind from a gentleman who uses language so accurately and fluently as the eloquent Senator from Alabama. This bill provides that its provisions shall be applicable to all the Indians and all the reservations in the United States, with the consent of the President upon the one side and the approval of the Indian tribes upon the other. It provides a general means by which allotments may be made. But inasmuch as each tribe of Indians, by purchase or by treaty or by presidential reservation, has some title to the land, either of ownership or of occupancy, it provides that the consent of the tribe shall be given and that quoad koc two-thirds of the tribe shall constitute the whole. And the remedy that my friend from Alabama provides for this act of the committee in permitting two-thirds of a tribe to nullify, as he calls it, an act of the Congress of the United States is that instead of two-thirds the whole tribe shall be able to do it. be able to do it.

He also has found that it was a great subject of criticism with this bill that two-thirds of the tribe were able to sacrifice the rights in the common property of the remaining one-third. The remedy that he proposes for that is that the Government of the United States shall the common of the land without the sense of any of the tribe. take possession of the land without the consent of any of the tribe, either in its organized or unorganized capacity, and dispose of the land at its option, and move these Indians when and where its pleasure shall decide, doing, as the gentleman so well said, no injury, and remembering that it is the highest attribute of power to exercise that power justly.

Mr. BUTLER. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it the opinion of my friend that the fourteenth Mr. BUTLER. Is it the opinion of my friend that the fourteenth amendment applies to a person occupying membership in a tribe that bears an independent relation to the Federal Government? In other words, does the word "person" contemplated in that amendment refer to people occupying a foreign relation to the United States Government; such as, I hold, every Indian tribe occupies to the Government as long as the Government treats with it as a tribe? Can the word "person" apply to an Indian until he has dissolved his tribal relations are dissolved and we cease to treat them as a foreign power, then perhaps the letter of the fourteenth amendment might apply and they might sue and be plaintiffs and defendants: but how that and they might sue and be plaintiffs and defendants; but how that can be the case as long as they are under the control of a separate and distinct government from the Government of the United States, confess I cannot see.

I submit further to my friend from Ohio that I do not exactly comprehend how we can accomplish that, except by some such amendment as is proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

I make the suggestion to the honorable Senator from Ohio as one of the difficulties I have with the bill in the form in which it comes from the committee.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, I stated that I inclined to think that under the fourteenth amendment the Indians were citizens of the United States; that is, the class of Indians to whom reference was made; but at present I am disinclined to argue the question further, made; but at present I am disinclined to argue the question further, because I do not think the answer to it in any way involved in the passage of this bill. My opinion is that whether they are citizens or not under the fourteenth amendment, under the provision of the Revised Statutes they are sufficiently protected in the enjoyment of the rights and in the performance of the duties imposed upon them by this act. I therefore decline to argue that constitutional question. I believe that the provisions of the law cover the case of every Indian as well as of every alien. I believe that those provisions are perfect in the Territories of the United States. I have no reason to believe that they are not perfect in all the States of the Union, at all events in all the Western States where these Indians are to be found; and I expressly stated that if it should turn out that the protection of a State was not extended to them and that there was an inhibition upon State was not extended to them and that there was an inhibition upon them to invoke the courts of justice of a State to protect them in their rights, means could be found under the fourteenth amendment to give them that protection. It may be necessary that that shall be done by declaring them citizens of the United States; it may be necessary that other means shall be found to accomplish the same result; but whatever the danger may be, it seems to me too remote to involve with the discussion of this question the consideration of that larger ques-tion in all its consequences and results which will come from an interpretation either way of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitu-

Now, Mr. President, I do not believe, and I say it frankly, that any bill can be framed upon this subject of Indian control which is entirely logical, entirely consistent, and entirely satisfactory; and the reason is a very simple one. There are difficulties surrounding this subject which are inherent and artificial, and in both aspects they are very great. They arise from the fact that our constitutions and our laws were passed for the control and the government of the white citizens of the country and not for these Indian tribes; they arise from the fact that when those constitutions and laws were passed citizens of the country and not for these Indian tribes; they arise from the fact that when those constitutions and laws were passed these Indians were treated as quasi-foreign nations; that treaties were made with them; that a vast territory was set apart for them in which they could indulge in their natural habits, habits entailed upon them by centuries of practice, indulge in the chase, in fishing, and in war among themselves. We had no connection with them except by the passage of the non-intercourse law, to prevent the intrusion of our own citizens among them. As long as they confined themselves to their reservation—I mean that vast expanse of territory which was known under the name of the Indian Territory, or a few years ago as the unorganized territory of the United States—they might pursue the chase, they might pursue fishing, they might make war among themselves, they might commit any barbarities and wrongs among themselves, and we take no notice; and it was only here and there by a sporadic and ineffectual attempt at teaching them the arts of civilized life that we had any connection with them whatever except when they intruded upon our territory and mawhatever except when they intruded upon our territory and ma-rauded upon our citizens.

It was easy enough comparatively to deal with a class of men whom we recognized as nations, with whom we made treaties, whom we segregated from our citizens, and to whom we assigned that vast expanse of western territory. But that condition of things has entirely changed; the times have passed; the conditions of this Government and of those governments (if I may call the Indian tribes such) have entirely changed. Our villages now dot their prairies; our cities are built upon their plains; our miners climb their mountains and seek the recesses of their gulches; our telegraphs and railroads and post-offices penetrate their country in every direction; their forests are cleared and their prairies are plowed and their wildernesses are opened up. The Indians cannot fish and hunt. They must either change their mode of life or they must die. That is the alternative presented. There is none other. We may regret it, we may wish it were otherwise, our sentiments of humanity may be shocked by the alternative, but we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that that is the alternative, and that It was easy enough comparatively to deal with a class of men whom these Indians must either change their modes of life or they will be these indians must either change their modes of life of thely will be exterminated. I say, Mr. President, in order that they may change their modes of life, we must change our policy; we must encourage them to industry and self-dependence; we must give them, and we must stimulate within them to the very largest degree, the idea of home, of family, and of property. These are the very anchorages of civilization; the commencement of the dawning of these ideas in the mind is the commencement of the civilization of any race, and the mind is the commencement of the civilization of any race, and these Indians are no exception. It must be our part to seek to foster and to encourage within them this trinity upon which all civilization depends—family, and home, and property. These are the institutions that make the barbarian a civilized man, and as these are developed they make the civilized man that which we are told it was said he would be if he are of the tree of knowledge—like unto God, discerning good and evil.

This bill is all in that direction. It means nothing else. It means the allotment of these tribal lands to the individual; it means to encourage the idea of property; it means to encourage the idea of home; it means to encourage the idea of family; it tends to break up the tribe; it tends to build up the home; it tends to anchor the family, and it tends to encourage the love of home and family by the pleasures and advantages and benefactions and beneficences which pleasures and advantages and benefactions and beneficences which the idea of individual property will give.

I do not know, Mr. President, that I could say more in behalf of this bill than that. To me, that is the very idea upon which it is founded; it contains the argument upon which it is based. If carried out, in my opinion it will be most beneficial; it will encourage these Indians in the arts of civilization; it will take them from the barbarism in which many of them now are, and from the semi-barbarism in which the rest are, and elevate them into a plane which will not only make them fit to be citizens, but fit to rise higher and higher in civilization.

Sir, I know the difficulties that surround this subject.

Sir, I know the difficulties that surround this subject. I know well. I have heard it from members of the committee that the tomahawk and the blazing cabin at midnight, and the family turned out in penury and in suffering, do not encourage that calm deliberation that should pertain to the consideration of all questions of this nature; and I am perfectly aware, also, for we have heard that said, that comand I am perfectly aware, also, for we have heard that said, that comfortable homes and warm firesides and houses grown radiant with gas and comfort, encourage very much that complacency with which we can look upon the terrors, and fears, and sufferings of friends, at a distance, as being imaginary or chimerical. I know very well that the blood of our American people glows and pulses when it hears the words of my eloquent friend from Missouri [Mr. Vest] in which he tells that Anglo-Saxon progress will drive the car of civilization across the prairies that are yet reserved to the Indians. Ay, sir, it will do it, even though the wheels are axle deep in individual suffering and rain: but that is not the spirit in which we must look upon ing and ruin; but that is not the spirit in which we must look upon these measures; that is not the spirit in which this great American people must consider this question which, although it relates to a few Indians upon these far-off plains, yet touches the very heart and core of the integrity of the legislation of this nation, and its desire to do of the integrity of the legislation of this nation, and its desire to do justice in the smallest and the greatest of things. I would rather invoke Senators and their constituents from the East and the West, in view of the condition of the Indians, in view of our prosperity and their humility, in view of our increasing fifty millions and their fading two hundred thousand, to encourage the spirit of that philosophy which laid the foundations of our beneficent and progressive, and exulting civilization in the maxim of a Divine charity, which saith to nations as to individuals, "bear ye one another's burdens."

Mr. President, I rose only to express my opinion as to the necessity of passing any of these amendments in relation to the citizenship of Indians. I wandered off to give my idea of the central point upon which this bill rests, and I repeat, the arguments in favor of the provisions of the bill find their value and their strength in the main central idea that it is intended to encourage within the Indian the love of home and family and fireside, and all made attractive and beneficent by the value of individual property.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Brown] yesterday to say that there was a denial on the part of many that Indians were "persons" under the law and within the meaning of the Constitution. Now, sir, I have never understood that to be the point made by any one in regard to the position of the Indians in the point made by any one in regard to the position of the Indians in the United States. The language of the fourteenth amendment is

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States.

Nobody has ever contended, as far as I have heard, that Indians were not persons. We punish them; we drag them to Fort Smith week after week and hang them under the laws of the United States, and how could they be hanged if they were not persons? They are tried, sentenced, and hung as individuals and as persons. If they are citizens I should be much obliged to any gentleman who would answer me one thing: are they within the jurisdiction of the United States within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment? That is the question. Are they within the jurisdiction of the United States within the meaning of that amendment? The Constitution recognizes the fact that these Indian tribes are neither States nor foreign nations. The Constitution says that Congress shall have power "to regulate The Constitution says that Congress shall have power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes." So they are neither States nor foreign nations. The truth is they are sui generis, a peculiar political entity, not foreign nations, but they have been defined over and over again by the Supreme Court of the United States to be Indians in the United States and yet not of it. Years and years ago it was so decided; and it has been affirmed over and over again, the last time decided in the Cherokee tobacco case, where the previous decisions were affirmed. On the basis of these decisions I do not believe that these Indians are citizens of the United States, and I have no doubt that when the Supreme Court comes to decide the question it will hold that they are not citizens. Chief-Justice Marshall in delivering the opinion of the court in an early case said :

Throughout, the Indians, as tribes or nations, have been considered as distinct, independent communities, retaining their original, natural rights as the undisputed possessors of the soil, from time immemorial, subject to the conditions imposed by the discoverers of the continent, which excluded them from intercourse with any other government than that of the first discoverer of the particular section claimed. They could sell to the government of the discoverer, but they could not sell to any other governments or their subjects, as the government of the discoverer acquired by virtue of their discovery the exclusive pre-emption right to purchase, and the right to exclude the subjects of all other governments, and even their own, from acquiring title to the lands.

In other words, England discovery

In other words, England discovered a country peopled by savages; the barbarian could sell to England but could not sell to others without the consent of the discoverer; and to-day the law of the United States provides that if Indians within sight of the United States flag and a United States fort upon an Indian reservation take one of their number out and torture him to death under their law, the United States Government shall not interfere. Within their own autonomy, within their own tribe, the courts have decided that they are competent among themselves to administer their own laws. If an Indian goes out of the reservation and attacks the rights of a white man, then he is subject to the jurisdiction of the United States courts; but as between the white man and the Indian, he is subject to the State and Territorial courts; as between themselves, the Indians are governed exclusively, according to the decision of our Supreme Court, by their own laws and their own customs. The treaties have so pro-vided. The difficulty under the fourteenth amendment is that we have recognized them as a people sui generis, like none other upon this continent. They are, to use Chief-Justice Marshall's expression, domestic dependencies of the Government, and yet independent; and so long as that line of decisions shall obtain, and it is unbroken to this hour, the fourteenth amendment does not and cannot make them citizens of the United States citizens of the United States.

But all this is outside of the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, on which I wish to say a few words. I agree with the principle of that amendment, and, if it were necessary, I should vote for it. My only objection to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is that, unless I am utterly at fault and utterly at sea upon the law in regard to this question, there never has been a time since the foundation of this Government that an Indian could not sue in any State or territorial court. If an Indian goes off his reservation and works for a white man in a Territory, and there is a difficulty in regard to the contract, I say that Indian can sue in the territorial

Mr. MORGAN. How is the Indian going to get off his reservation?

Is he not kept there by duress?

Mr. EATON. In regard to an Indian suing in the State courts, let me suggest that I agree with my friend from Missouri that the Indian has the same right as the white man, the same right as the Chinese, who cannot be naturalized under our present laws, as it was held in New York the other day, and yet may maintain an action for an injury

New York the other day, and yet may maintain an action for an injury to person or property.

Mr. VEST. The Indian tribes are not States within the meaning of the judiciary clause of the Constitution, there is no doubt about that. They are neither a foreign nation nor a State. The Supreme Court has so decided; but I say when an Indian comes into the State of Missouri or the State of Connecticut, he is subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal courts there, and can be plaintiff or defendant.

Mr. DAWES. Is it not because an Indian who so does is treated by the courts as having abandoned his tribal relation quoad hoo?

Mr. VEST. That may be, but still he exists as an individual on this continent. I say it is a question of jurisdiction, whether he leaves his tribal organization and becomes subject to the law of the United States or not. If he does, of course there is jurisdiction of the person. As to his suing in the State courts there never has been any doubt about it. My understanding is, in fact I know cases where suits are pending now in the territorial courts where Indians are parties. If I thought there was any doubt about it, I might support this amendment; but I never had an idea that there was a suspicion that Indians were not subject to the State courts. The only question that Indians were not subject to the State courts. The only question now between the civilized tribes and the Committee on Territories of the Senate in the bill which has been reported here for the organiza-tion of a Federal court inside the Indian Territory, is that they object to the civil jurisdiction as in relation to controversies between them-

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me to ask him a question? Suppose an Indian to be in the State of Missouri, and a question arises whether some statute passed by Missouri violates the obligation of a contract, or whether the ruling of the court is in violation of a statute or the Constitution of the United States, in violation of the very statute of the United States under which he is now to receive these rights, can the Indian carry that question to a Federal court as the white man can? I ask the Senator's judgment.

Mr. VEST. I should think he could.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me to trespass a moment further, I supposed that was not questioned by any considerable portion of the profession; but the applicability of it in the case to which that doctrine was applied was very vigorously denied by a large portion of the people. A person not a citizen of a foreign power and not a citizen of any State was affirmed by the judges constituting the majority who decided a certain celebrated case to be without the right of resorting to a Federal tribunal, and it was also held that there was no constitutional power in Congress to give him such right. If that be true, unless you make these Indians citizens they are without that most important right.

most important right.

Mr. VEST. There is an appeal from territorial courts to the Supreme Court of the United States. I say if an Indian goes off his reservation, enters into a contract with a white man, and subjects himself to the jurisdiction of the territorial courts, I see no reach why that case could not be taken by him to the Supreme Court of the United States. One thing follows the other, and I affirm that there has been no question of it; I never heard it denied that whenever an Indian did leave his reservation and subject himself to the jurisdiction of the territorial courts, he had all the rights a white citizen of the United States would have so far as the courts were concerned. I believe, as I said before, that there is no necessity for this amendment. I shall vote against it under the impression that it is based on a mistake, that the Indians now have all the rights the amendment proposes to give them.

Mr. BROWN. My honorable friend from Missouri has referred to

Mr. BROWN. My honorable friend from Missouri has referred to my remarks of last evening on the fourteenth constitutional amend-ment as to whether the Indian is a citizen, and he has alluded to the decision in the Cherokee tobacco case, as I understand him, as adverse to my position. I take a different view of that decision and think it one of the strongest that could be made in favor of the position I have taken on this subject.

The first section of the fourteenth constitutional amendment says:

All person born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

My honorable friend from Ohio very beautifully alluded a while ago to the fact that under that provision of the fourteenth constitu-tional amendment Indians were entitled to the protection of their rights in courts because the constitutional amendment says no State rights in courts because the constitutional amendment says no State shall deprive any person of the right, &c. Well, if the word "person" in the constitutional amendment in that portion of it embraces the Indian, why does not the same word in the earlier portion of it, when it says "all persons born in the United States," embrace the Indian also? It says that if the Indian is a person and born in the United States, he is a citizen of the United States and of the State in which he resides. The honorable Senator from Ohio says that he has the right to protect his property because it is guaranteed there to every person within the jurisdiction of the United States. The Indian being a person there, according to the argument, so as to give him protection in the courts, must be a person under the previous portion of the same section when it declares that he is a citizen of the United States. But to be a citizen he must be a person subject the United States. But to be a citizen he must be a person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and my friend from Missouri says that the treaty-making power and the laws do not make him subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. As I understand him, he says the treaty-making clause gives the right to make treaties with Indians, and that they are not under the jurisdiction of the United States, but under the jurisdiction of their own tribes. That may formerly have been the rule, for the rule always in the case of the stronger party is to make might right, and the practice has been to encroach further and further upon Indian rights at every step in our history. What is one of the last decisions on that subject, however, as to the jurisdiction, the one referred to by my friend from Missouri? the United States. But to be a citizen he must be a person subject Missouri ?

Mr. Boudinot, a Cherokee Indian, claimed that the internal-revenue Mr. Boudinot, a Cherokee Indian, claimed that the internal-revenue laws of the United States did not apply to the Cherokee country, and that there was an express provision in the treaty made by the United States with the Cherokee tribe that they should have a right to sell their property as they might choose and pay no taxes to the Government of the United States, and he put up a tobacco-factory in the Indian Territory, he being one of the Indians. The factory was seized because he did not pay the internal-revenue tax. He denied that he owed any tax, because he was in the Indian Territory, not subject to the jurisdiction of Congress to impose a tax, but more particularly because the treaty stipulation with that tribe of Indians expressly provided that they should not be taxed. What said the Supreme Court? Mr. Justice Swayne, delivering the opinion, quotes in juxtaposition the section of the revenue laws under which the United States authorities were proceeding and the section of the treaty in these words—first revenue law section 107. these words-first, revenue law, section 107:

That the internal revenue laws imposing taxes on distilled spirits, fermented liquors, tobacco, snuff, and cigars shall be construed to extend to such articles produced anywhere within the exterior boundaries of the United States, whether the same shall be within a collection district or not.

Article 10 of the treaty with the Cherokee Indians provides:

Every Cherokee Indian and freed person residing in the Cherokee Nation shall have the right to sell any products of his farm, including his or her live-stock, or any merchandise or manufactured products, and to ship and drive the same to market without restraint, paying any tax thereon which is now or may be levied by the United States on the quantity sold outside of the Indian Territory.

Now, the court say-

On behalf of the claimants it is contended that the one hundred and seventh section was not intended to apply, and does not apply, to the country of the Cherokees, and that the immunities secured by the treaty are in full force there. The United States insist that the section applies with the same effect to the Territory in question as to any State or other Territory of the United States, and that to the extent of the provisions of the section the treaty is annulled.

Considering the narrowness of the questions to be decided, a remarkable wealth of learning and ability have been expended in their discussion. The views of counsel in this court have rarely been more elaborately presented. Nevertheless, the case seems to us not difficult to be determined, and to require no very extended line of remarks to vindicate the soundness of the conclusions at which we have arrived.

Then, without reading the rest of the decision, I will simply state that the court went on to hold that the act of Congress annulled that provision of the treaty, and that we had a right to collect revenue from the Indians there. Then it seems to me that it is very clear that from the Indians there. Then it seems to me that it is very clear that the Indians in the Cherokee Nation are under the jurisdiction of the United States Government. If a treaty made with them can be set aside at the will of Congress by a statute and annulled, and revenue collected from them in the teeth of the treaty, they surely are under the jurisdiction of the United States. The language of the Constitution is: "All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens." I think this decision shows very clearly that the Indians are within the jurisdiction of the United States even in their own reservations. If so, then the constitutional amendment, if it means anything, says the Indian is a citizen provided he is a person. The Senator from Missouri admits that he is a person; the Senator from Ohio admits that he is a person within the provision of the Constitution. If so, and he is under the jurisdiction of the United States, how do you escape the provisthe jurisdiction of the United States, how do you escape the provisthe jurisdiction of the United States, how do you escape the provision that declares he is a citizen?

Mr. President, there is a law that gives to an Indian under certain circumstances the right to take a homestead, and provides for his protection in the homestead. Suppose he comes outside of his reservation, sets down upon one hundred and sixty acres of land as a homesteader, a head of a family, and the time arrives when he pays tax on that. He is a person, he has been recognized by the United States and been permitted to take a homestead and pays his tax; he was born in the United States. Why is he not a citizen under these provisions? It seems to me there can be no real difficulty on that point. I admit that there is difficulty in dealing with this question so far as the rights of the Indian on his own reservation and in his tribal relations are concerned, as to the commission of crime by one Indian against another, or any violation of the laws of the tribe. The United States have left them to control such matters; but in the very homestead case that I have mentioned it is provided that the Indian by taking the homestead does not sacrifice his rights as a rery homestead case that I have mentioned it is provided that the Indian by taking the homestead does not sacrifice his rights as a member of the nation. For instance, there is a certain amount of interest due tribes on bonds every year from the Government of the United States. To encourage the Indians to abandon the tribal relation we give them homestead and declare that they shall, in addition to the homestead, be entitled to the same tribal rights that they would if they were still with the tribe. So in reference to criminal jurisdiction, the United States may tolerate the Indian authorities punishing for crimes committed against Indian law among its own jurisdiction, the United States may tolerate the Indian authorities punishing for crimes committed against Indian law among its own citizens, and it seems it does; but it has the power under this decision, which says Congress may set aside a treaty when it chooses, to extend its criminal jurisdiction over the reservation when it chooses; in other words, it can take hold of these citizens and govern them and control them; control the rights of property and hold them amenable to the criminal jurisdiction whenever it chooses to do so. The fact that we tolerate the Indian laws and the Indian execution of their laws is no reason why the Government should shandon its of their laws, is no reason why the Government should abandon its right over its citizens.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I feel some solicitude that this bill should pass and pass substantially in the shape in which it is reported from the committee. There are in my State a considerable remnant of one of the most courageous of the tribes that inhabited the American continent. I desire that some system shall be matured which may be applied by some additional legislation, hereafter to be had to the Indians now within my State.

I think the committee deserve the commendation of the country and of the Senate for the consideration which they have given to this subject and for the provisions of the bill which they have matured. In the main, in my judgment, they comply with the substantial requirements of the case and present some well-grounded hope that they may in the future harmonize the interests of civilization and the interests of the Indian tribes. I do not believe that there is any necessity for the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. It seems to me that the Senator from Missouri is clearly right in his proposition, and that the whole question may be easily solved by applying this test: in so far as the treaties made with the Indian tribes do not inhibit the United States from making the Indian a citizen of the inhibit the United States from making the Indian a citizen of the United States without his consent, in so far as he has been guaranteed by the faith of the Government of the United States that he shall not be arbitrarily subjected to the operation of its general laws; in so far as the provisions of our treaty stipulations, made in pursuance of the Constitution, do not exempt him from this control; in so ance of the Constitution, do not exempt him from this control; in so far as there is no violation of the treaty obligation, beyond a doubt he is within the provisions of the fourteenth amendment, and having been born in the United States and subject to its territorial jurisdiction, what is to prevent him from having the benefit of the constitutional provision as to citizenship, except the treaty stipulations which guarantee him this exemption?

Again, personal rights, the rights of property, are not dependent at all upon the political status of the individual. Territorial sovereignty imports absolute legislative sovereignty. All persons upon the soil are subject to the laws and have the right of their protection.

eighty imports absolute legislative sovereighty. All persons upon the soil are subject to the laws and have the right of their protection, and unless there is some law to the contrary, to sue in the courts. Will it be said that there is any provision depriving any resident of the right, because he has not obtained a political status, to sue in the courts of the country? I know of no State in which there is such a provision; I know of no ground upon which it can be denied in the Territories. I do know the fact that in many of our States individual Indians who have left their tribes have always possessed civil rights have become citizens have here allowed to sue have in all rights, have become citizens, have been allowed to sue, have in all cases had the full measure of civil rights which any individual pos-

But this question seems to me to be fully settled by the history of the Indian. He was found here by the European nations and defined in their laws and treaties as an occupant, not the subject of general sovereignty, of legislative and executive power in its ordinary application. In all cases and in every nation that established colonies on this continent the status of the Indian was defined to be that of an occupant, and by our treaties he was so designated. His rights, whatoccupant, and by our treaties he was so designated. His rights, whatever they were, have not been given to him as a person subject to the general legislative and executive power of the country, but as a person whose rights and relations to the Government were prescribed by express treaty stipulations. He resisted the dominion of the civilized governments on this continent; he resisted the dominion of the colonies; he resisted by force, and in all cases his status became the subject of treaty stipulations. This was coeval with the colonial hissubject of treaty stipulations. This was coeval with the colonial instory. This status was followed by the Government in its new condition as the Government of the United States, and to-day the status of the Indian is defined by treaties made in pursuance of an express provision of the Constitution of the United States, and he is guaranteed against the extension of the laws of the United States over him, and against the obligations and the duties and responsibilities of citizenship. But this does not imply that he may not consent to their being extended over him.

These treaties were not intended to forbid him from becoming a These treaties were not intended to foroid him from becoming a citizen or an inhabitant or a resident of any of the States or Territories, but were strictly limited to the territorial limits within which the treaties operate. Manifestly the treaty stipulations in this respect were not intended to exclude the Indian from residence upon or the cultivation and ownership of land, but they were concessions to him of land upon which he might live under his own laws and his own tribal relations.

As has been well observed by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST,] there can be no question that the status of the Indian under our Constitution and under our treaties is that of a person exempted by the express guarantee of our laws from the obligations of citizenship and from the power of the Federal Government to extend it arbitrarily over him. This solemn pledge of the Government of the United States, made under the authority of an express provision of the Constitution, exempts the Indian from the force and effect of the What, then, is the objection to this bill? It is true that the range of possible legislation in behalf of the Indian is very narrow and limited. It is unquestionably true that the consequences of that legislation are very great and all-important to him. This range lies between the alternatives of the tribal relation and his subjection to between the alternatives of the tribal relation and his subjection to the general laws of the country, between the communal principle of tenure of property and the several tenure of property in land, between the full measure of his responsibilities and duties as a citizen and a modified form of guardianship over him.

There is no reason for the opinion that the Indians in any large number either desire or are willing to perform the full duties and obligations of citizenship or to be subject to these responsibilities directly. There is no evidence that he now possesses the ability to protect himself as the owner of property against the wiles and the artifices of the shrewd men of the white race. There is no evidence that he possesses the self-denial to resist the vices of civilization which would enable him to retain possession and ownership of property after would enable him to retain possession and ownership of property after it is conferred upon him. We have quite as much, indeed a great deal more, reason to believe that the minors, the infants of our own race under disability, are capable of becoming the owners of property and protecting and defending their own rights than we have that the great mass of the Indian population possess that capacity. But yet there is no question of the fact that the lands occupied by the Indians are demanded by the necessities of civilization, and that they cannot be permitted to roam over these vast areas of unoccupied land and to prevent their occupation and cultivation. It is neither for their own good nor for that of the white race that it should be so. The great problem is to harmonize the interests of the Indian and the white man, to develop the habits which will make the Indian self-sustaining and to restrict these vast areas of land which have been heretofore used by them for hunting grounds and bring them to the uses of fore used by them for hunting grounds and bring them to the uses of civilization and occupancy.

This bill is a step in that direction. I should be glad to see the system of the tribal relation and the communal principle of property preserved among any considerable number of Indians who may desire it. I should be glad to see, together with the conditions of this bill, which requires the consent of two-thirds and the concurrence of the President of the United States in sanctioning the change from the communal to the several tenure, another provision added, that if there is a third or any considerable number of a tribe who desire to continue the obligations of a treaty, that some provision should be continue the obligations of a treaty, that some provision should be made in the bill by which, as to them, the communal principle and the tribal relation should still be preserved, and a suitable portion of their reservation allotted to them for the continuance of their tribal relation and their reservation. bal relation and their common tenure of land.

I do not believe that it is always best to extend what is called the protection of the laws over this people. The laws are oftentimes administered in a spirit of harshness. Under them the poor and the ministered in a spirit of harshness. Under them the poor and the weak are subject to be wronged and overreached as much by the cunning and strong as they are subject in the savage state to violence and wrong. I think that in many cases it is quite probable that the tribal relation is a better security for their protection than a direct amenability to the law and the several tenure of property. The tribal relation has some great advantages for the Indian. It interposes a barrier between him and the strong and artful man. It is an everying of nower which brings to bear upon him, for his protection poses a barrier between him and the strong and artful man. It is an exercise of power which brings to bear upon him, for his protection or his punishment, the opinion of his tribe assembled in council. It is not inconsistent with his advancement into a higher form of civilization, nor with a love for home and family.

But the bill cautiously and carefully proceeds with a preliminary period, a probationary period of twenty-five years, which shall be a period of preparation for them before their ownership of land shall be complete. In addition to that it provides that this change shall only be made in the beginning with their consent, and it provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall have some kind of guardianship over him, and there shall be a duty resting upon him to see that ship over him, and there shall be a duty resting upon him to see that these people are provided with the best protection that the law affords. I think that, perhaps, is going as far as we can go. The provisions of the bill seem to be tenderly conceived in that respect.

In my own State we have a remnant of a tribe of Indians variously estimated at from three to six hundred. They are a portion of the Seminole tribe that made war with the United States, which was terminated in 1856, after having put the Government to a great expense. In the Seminole war which terminated in 1842 and which was revived twice by this remnant of the tribe, they had defied the power of the United States for a great many years, and now upon this last occasion they entered into a treaty with the Government by which it was agreed that they should remove to the West. The council of the Indians made this treaty. A large portion of the tribe refused to ratify it, and still remain in the State of Florida. They have had no assistance from the Government. They have not been the object of any of its beneficent provisions; they have received no aid in money; they have had no lands; but the example of white civilization has begun to impress itself upon them, and I am glad to say that now, even under these disadvantageous circumstances, there is a village of these people near Fort Meade in Florida who have become partially these people hear Fort Meade in Florida who have become partially civilized, who are industrious, who are sober, who are beginning to frequent the schools. They are docile, although they came from a tribe distinguished for its bravery and its blood-thirstiness; they are beginning to evince the characteristics of our civilization.

I believe that it is practicable to civilize the Indians. We had here a few days ago mention of an officer of the Army of the United States, Cantain Prott who in my own observation has contributed much Captain Pratt, who, in my own observation, has contributed much in this direction. I have none of that sentiment which looks upon the Indian as being always the wronged victim of our policy. I have in this direction. I have none of that sentiment which looks upon the Indian as being always the wronged victim of our policy. I have lived upon the frontier; I have been almost within hearing of the screams of murdered women and massacred children, and have seen the fire-light of the burning cabin of the frontiersman. I know how bloody and vindictive are those people; but still I say that the instances I have cited here to-day, which occurred within my own State, and which are known to me and to many others, evidence that with proper care and firm application of force when it is demanded, with tenderness and justice, and with a provision by which these people tenderness and justice, and with a provision by which these people shall be enabled to subsist until they become industrious and self-sustaining, that the Indians now remaining may become a civilized people and a useful factor in the future of this great country.

Surely to this end every consideration of justice and every humane and honorable sentiment demands that our best efforts should be directed

I hope, sir, that the bill will pass, and that it will pass without the amendment declaring the Indian a citizen. I do not see that there is any necessity for adding this amendment to the bill, and I think it is a very grave question whether we might not so amend the bill as to make Indians citizens before the time when he will be ready to assume the duties and responsibilities of citizenship.

I do not object to some of the amendments of the Senator from Alabama, which look to making the chief provision of the bill more definite.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

Mr. MORGAN. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That an Indian, when he or she accepts land in severalty, shall not thereby forfeit any right in or to any property or annuity to which he or she would be entitled as a member of the tribe, or his or her right to participate with such tribe in the disposal of any land or other property held in common by such tribe.

I think if the Senator from Massachusetts were in his seat he probably would accept that modification of his proposed amendment. It is very obvious that by taking the Indian out of his tribal relation and making him a citizen, as is proposed to be done by the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, we deprive him, unless provision be otherwise made, of his right after that time to his portion of the annuity and to his voice also in the disposal of the communal lands. I therefore think that the amendment that I offer is a necessary part of the proposition advanced by the Senator from Massachusetts. ably would accept that modification of his proposed amendment.

sary part of the proposition advanced by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Alabama will be voted down. It is in my judgment inconsistent with the theory of the bill. The bill does not propose that any Indians belonging to a tribe which accepts its provisions shall forfeit anything. I do not think that any such construction can be placed upon it. I see no necessity for providing against a forfeiture. Forfeitures are never taken by implication. The terms of the amendment may be held to apply to the reservation which the tribe may desire shall be distributed in severalty. The Indians who can be benefited by the bill own no land except that which they hold as reservations which they occupy. They have no common property except what they have in the reservation and on the reservation. Their annuities, the trust funds held for them by the Government, will still belong to them. Other Indians have heretofore received land in severalty and have these trust funds and these annuities, and annually the per capita or the interest is invested or expended for them or distributed, as was done before they received their lands in severalty. I cannot see what the terms of the amendment can apply to when it speaks of lands held in common, because it is the lands held in common that the bill proposes to divide and allot to the Indians in severalty. Can the Senator from Alabama tell me?

Mr. MORGAN. The bill itself provides, as I understand it, that after the Indians have been settled in severalty upon these lands, then the remainder of the lands held in common by the tribe may be sold by the tribe. The bill itself provides for it?

Mr. COKE. Certainly.

by the tribe. The bill itself provides for it?
Mr. COKE. Certainly.

Mr. COKE. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I cannot understand the purport of the Senator's question. There is a clear provision in the bill, and he asks me why it is that I offer an amendment to guard that right.

Mr. COKE. Because the amendment seems to anticipate that the Indians will still own land after they have disposed of their reserva-

Mr. MORGAN. Not at all.

Mr. COKE. Because the bill authorizes and requires the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate for the Government for the remainder which is not allowed in severalty.

Mr. MORGAN. After an Indian has received his land in severalty I want him to be one of the parties to vote, that he shall not forfeit his right to be a party to the negotiation by the fact of his having received his land in severalty.

Mr. COKE. The amendment brings up the point that was made by the honorable Senator the day that this bill was first taken up.

It brings up the proposition assumed by him, that the Indians who do not consent to the allotment of lands in severalty, although two-thirds of the tribe have consented, still have an interest of which they cannot be lawfully deprived. That, I believe, was the argument of the Senator from Alabama.

of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that that point is not presented in this amendment at all. It is not intended to be presented. The only point presented in the amendment is that an Indian by receiving his lands in severalty shall not forfeit his right as a member of the tribe to vote with the tribe under whatever regulation we may prescribe as to the disposal of the lands held in common, nor shall he forfeit his right to any annuity that may come to him under the laws of the United States in consequence of his having accepted lands in severalty.

lock up vast sections of valuable country from occupancy and from cultivation. That is one of the great objects of the bill. The fact that these reservations do exist, that Indians are protected upon them, and that the whites will intrude upon them, has been the cause of much the greater number of our Indian wars. We desire to get that prolific cause of trouble out of the way. We desire to provide the Indian with all the land he possibly needs, that his stock can graze upon, out of his reservation, and for the rest of it we desire to pay him a fair price and have it belong to the Government. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama proposes to retain still as common property, if the Indian prefers it, the land that is not necessary to make the allotments in severalty.

I object to the amendment because it will enable the Indians still to retain their lands in community when the desire is to give them land in sev-their lands in community when the desire is to give them land in severalty, and because it may defeat that portion of the bill which provides that they shall keep it in severalty, because the money that the Government will pay them for this excess may be absolutely necessary to enable them to go upon the land which they have accepted in

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Texas overestimates the value of his bill if he supposes that he has got it in a shape where it cannot be amended in the Senate of the United States. I will say that I be amended in the Senate of the United States. I will say that I consider this, although it is the labor of a very important and a very excellent committee, not entirely a perfect work. The Senator will find before he gets through with the discussion of this bill, I think, that he has got either himself or the Indians in several very bad positions from which I think the Senate of the United States ought to render its assistance in getting out him or the Indians, one or the other or both.

The Senator seems to think that there is a theory in this bill which The Senator seems to think that there is a theory in this bill which is violated by the amendment that I offer. If there is a theory in the bill that is violated by the amendment, then the bill is wrong, wrong in theory, and it ought to be defeated; but I did not suppose that I was warring upon any theory in the bill when I offered an amendment which protected the Indian in his rights of property as they now exist under the law and under the treaty at the time that he became a citizen of the United States—when I undertook to qualify the act of receiving the land in severalty and citizenship connected therewith by a proviso that his having acceded to this very desirable condition should not work a forfeiture of any right that he now held.

We have a homestead law that authorizes an Indian who does not belong to a tribe to go upon any lands of the United States and take belong to a tribe to go upon any lands of the United States and take his homestead just as it authorizes a black man or a white man to do the same thing; but attached to that law is a qualification that, although thereby he separates himself from his tribe, he does not forfeit his right as an Indian to his annuity or to any other right or privilege that he may hold in the tribe guaranteed to him by the laws of the United States. The amendment that I propose is precisely of that character, and follows almost the very words of a provise which was attached to the homestead law when enacted in behalf of the Indian for the purpose of preventing a forfeiture of his rights. What Indian for the purpose of preventing a forfeiture of his rights. What theory is there in the bill which would compel the Congress of the United States to deny to an Indian the reservation of these rights which are already guaranteed to him under the treaty and under the

Of course, the Senator understands his bill better than I do; he ought to understand it better than I do; but he is mistaken when he supposes that there is any theory in the bill which would compel the Congress of the United States to take from an Indian his right of annuity and his right to vote in reference to the disposal of the communal lands as a condition of his becoming a citizen and receiving lands in expression. lands in severalty.

Mr. COKE. There is nothing in the bill which takes from him this

Mr. COKE. There is nothing in the bill which takes from him this right.

Mr. MORGAN. That may be, but nothing can be wiser, and certainly nothing can be more satisfactory to the Indian when you present the proposition to him, than to have a guarantee in the bill that it should not have that effect. Where can the harm come of putting that guarantee in the body of the bill? What theory of the Senator's bill is disturbed by a guarantee of that kind? I cannot quite understand that, I confess.

The bill of the committee itself provides, first, that the lands shall be surveyed; second, that after they are surveyed agents shall be appointed for the purpose of locating the Indians upon them, first as heads of families and afterward as individual Indians, receiving lands in accordance with their ages. After the Indians are all located upon separate tracts of land, after every Indian of the tribe is prohim under the laws of the United States in consequence of his having accepted lands in severalty.

Mr. COKE. I take it that under the bill the agreement to be submitted to the Indians whenever they manifest a desire to have their lands allotted in severalty is an entirety, and embraces not only the allotment of the lands in severalty among the Indians, but a negotiation for the remainder of the lands in excess of that allotted for the General Government, the bill anticipating that one portion of the agreement would not be entered into without the other. The theory of the bill in the minds of the members of the committee, I am satisfied, is that the money which may be produced by a sale to the Government of the lands not allotted is necessary to aid the Indians in improving their severalty allotments and otherwise supporting them. I object to the amendment because it seems to anticipate that the Indians may take in severalty just what they want, and keep the other locked up as a reservation not sold to the Government, when it is the intention of the bill, when one of the main objects sought to be attained by the bill is to break up these great reservations, which make the contract for the purchase of the remaining lands, the lands held in common by the tribe, after the allotments have all been made. What I propose is, that an Indian who has received his land in severalty shall not thereby be excluded from a voice in the tribe with reference to the disposal of the remainder. What Indians does the honorable Senator think have a right to participate in the execution of this provision of the bill?

And provided further, That it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior, at any time, to negotiate with any Indian tribe for the purchase of such portion of its reservation as shall not be deemed necessary for the allotments of the members of such tribe, on such terms and conditions as shall be considered just and equitable between the United States and said tribe of Indians, which purchase shall not be complete until ratified by Congress, and the moneys agreed to be paid shall be appropriated and paid to said tribe, or invested for its benefit, as the case may be.

What Indians have a right to participate in the execution of this provision? The bill is uncertain about that proposition, and I propose to make it certain by adding a proviso that because an Indian has received his lands in severalty, he shall not be excluded from the right to participate in the very negotiation, in the very contract that the bill itself provides for. Is there any war against the theory of the bill in my proviso? Is it not the reverse, a preservation of every right of the Indian to participate, notwithstanding his tribal relations may have been dissolved?

may have been dissolved?

I offer my amendment as an addition to the amendment of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts. He wants to confer upon the Indian citizenship along with his title to his land; he wants to associate the Indian with all the rights and powers and privileges of citizenship when he accepts the duties, responsibilities, and obligations of that high character. In that I am thoroughly in accord with the Senator from Massachusetts, and I say now in my proviso that by accepting the duties of citizenship and accepting his lands in severalty and making this advance movement in the direction of civilization, he shall not thereby forfeit his tribal rights in so far as those rights may bring to him some advantage in the way of annuities or some advantage in the disposal of the lands held in common after the various allotments in severalty have been made.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator from Alabama put his finger upon any portion of the bill that will produce these results?

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator and myself do not read the text of the bill alike, or we do not interpret it alike. There is a sufficient reason for putting in this explanatory provision, which can do no possible harm and is bound to do good, and without which it seems to me the bill is not entirely perfect.

I do not desire to make any opposition to the bill as far as it is based upon correct principles. I desire to see it amended and perfected, and made a scheme, as it professes to be a scheme, which will control all the Indians in the United States from Alaska clear down to trol all the Indians in the United States from Alaska clear down to the borders of Texas, to make it just in all particulars, wise as we can make it according to our powers to forecast the future to-day, to make it useful and valuable for the great purpose of bringing these Indians within the reach of civilization. That is my purpose, and that is all my purpose. If the honorable Senator supposes that I have any hostility to his bill he is mistaken about that. I am a friend of the measure. It is true I might have preferred a different kind of measure to this, but anything that looks in that direction is something that commends itself both to my head and to my heart.

While I am ny I desire to call the attention of the Senato to the While I am up I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the ninth section of the bill, "that the provisions of this act shall not extend to any tribe of Indians until the consent of two-thirds of the extend to any tribe of Indians until the consent of two-thirds of the male members twenty-one years of age shall be first had and obtained;" and in connection with that the proviso that I have just read, "that it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior at any time to negotiate with any Indian tribe for the purchase of such portion of its reservation," &c. We have here a measure which, if it is enacted by the Congress of the United States in the form in which it is reserved by the committee will look any some of the west value. enacted by the Congress of the United States in the form in which it is presented by the committee, will lock up some of the most valuable territory of the Union, and an immense amount of it, by the way, beyond the power, as I believe, of the Congress of the United States hereafter ever to undo it. An act of Congress that confers upon an Indian tribe a grant of lands is something much more important, much more significant, and much more definite than anything that the Indian has a right to under the treaties that we have made with the Indians, because, as has been stated upon this floor to-day, the doctrine which pervades the whole of our treaty arrangements with the Indians is that the Indians are the occupants of the soil and have a Indians is that the Indians are the occupants of the soil and have a right of occupancy, a title of occupancy, but that they are not the owners of the fee-simple, and therefore we have a right by repealing owners of the fee-simple, and therefore we have a right by repealing a treaty that we have made with the Indians by an act of Congress to take from them this right of occupancy, and to remove them to any part of the territory of the United States that we see proper to do. I am speaking now of the naked right, not of the moral right, but of the legal and constitutional control that we have over these people and the property that they hold by title of occupancy in the United States under the treaties that we have made with them.

Now, we go further in this bill, and after we have got two-thirds of the male members of each tribe to consent to this enactment of Con-

Now, we go further in this only and after we have got two-units of the male members of each tribe to consent to this enactment of Congress, it becoming a law, we have two features incorporated in a law thus enacted, one of positive legislation making a grant, and the other of contract protected under the Constitution of the United States. I do not understand that after you have made a grant of land, it may be to a Hottentot, to an Indian, to a negro, or to a white man, thereafter you can destroy the rights which have been vested by that grant. I do not understand that it is within the power of Congress to repeal a grant, and especially is it not within the power of Congress to do this when that grant is based upon an actual contract.

Here you have in this legislation the two elements of grant and contract, and after you have done that you have it settled that the Indians who occupy the particular reservations that they are now on, whether they are located there by law or by Executive order, for that is the language of the bill, shall have a title that after that time becomes irrevocable, and indisputable, and inalienable also, unless by a vote of two-thirds of the male members of the tribe.

I think the honorable committee in their zeal to reach conclusions

I think the honorable committee, in their zeal to reach conclusions in reference to the Indian and to solve by an act of legislation that which has defied the wisdom of this country for a century, have committed themselves to a fatal mistake, if the ninth section of the bill shall ever be enacted. My attention was drawn to that subject very closely by a letter which I received from an Indian, and which I will read:

Being a tribal Indian and having lived with my tribe all my life, I am much interested in the "severalty bill." If an Indian desires to settle on a farm and improve it, under the conditions of this bill, he will have to get the consent of two-thirds of the tribe, and wait for the permission of the President, the Secretary of the Interior, and the agents before he can take his homestead.

A very just and a very profound criticism that is upon this bill.

A very just and a very profound criticism that is upon this bill.

This will put the result he is aiming at so far off into the future that he may not be willing to undertake it. The proposition is absurd on the face of it. The surplus land, after each Indian has a homestead, should not be sold without the consent of two-thirds of the tribe. Allow every Indian to take a homestead on his reserve, just as a white man does on the public lands, with no other conditions attached than that of making it inalienable for a certain term of years. The courts of the United States have held that the Indian tribes have only a title of occupancy in their lands, and the fee-simple is in the United States. Congress can eede the fee-simple, subject to the title of use and occupancy, which is held by the tribes at any time, without the violation of any law or treaty. Then let Congress cede to any Indian who shall make a settlement in accordance with the conditions of the homestead laws, the fee-simple to one hundred and sixty acres of land anywhere he may select it on his reserve.

The "Indian question," however, will never be settled until the jurisdiction of law is extended over us, and our property, liberty, and lives protected by it. As "wards," life, liberty, and property are in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. As "persons," we will be protected by written laws. All history proves that a government of laws is better than the government of one man, who may prove to be a tyrant. As citizens, the whole power of your government would be bound to protect each individual wright, and redress each individual wrong. There will be no more talk of exterminating an Indian when once he becomes a citizen.

It is an Indian girl who wrote the letter. Perhaps Senators may

It is an Indian girl who wrote the letter. Perhaps Senators may doubt about the fact of her ability to do so, but if they will examine her testimony before the Ponca committee they will understand perfectly well how it is that this young Indian woman has been able to comprehend a subject which seems at least to have defied the powers comprehend a subject which seems at least to have defied the powers of Senators on this floor for some time past.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for a moment by adding to his statement mine?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. The young Indian girl of whom he speaks addressed an audience in my city at a meeting at which I was present a few weeks ago, and her address was eloquent, sensible, direct, and one of the most moving that I ever heard from human lips. She is well and thoroughly known to many ladies whom I know well, and she is a person whose accomplishments and character would, in my opinion, do honor to any of her sex whatever their position in life.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the letter which I have just read is ample proof of the ability, and I think it is a most gratifying evidence of the capacity of the Indians of this country to understand our system, and after awhile become entirely harmonious with us in exercising power, even in the advancement of our present splendid position in civilization. The honorable Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] in civilization. The honorable Senator from Florida [Mr. Call] seems to think that the Indian has no capacity for government, that no influence can possibly fit him for capacity to exercise a controlling power in government. I differ with the honorable Senator very widely in respect of that opinion. Why, sir, we have civilized Indians, one of whom sits before me, at this hour in the Indian Territory who have constitutions, regularly ordained governments, statutes enacted and printed in two languages, the Indian language and the English language, and I undertake to say that a more perfect system of govlanguage, and I undertake to say that a more perfect system of government was never devised in reference to any class of people in this country or elsewhere than the Cherokees, Chickasaws, Choctaws, Creeks, and Seminoles have devised and put into thorough and complete execution in the Indian Territory. I have examined their statute-books, examined their constitutions; I have looked into the proceedings of their legislatures; I haveread the opinions of their supreme courts; I have conversed with their lawyers; and, sir, it is an honor to that race that these men have been able to accomplish so much and under circumstances not altogether favorable.

This bill is of such importance, there is so much in it, it is so comprehensive, it reaches down into the future so far, it fixes so many rights irrevocably, it deals with so many important and delicate questions, that I confess my mind has been drawn to its investigation tions, that I confess my mind has been drawn to its investigation with apprehension and awe lest we might make some serious mistake in dealing with this great question. For the purpose of finding out from those men who are better informed than any other set of men in the United States as to the actual condition of the Indians, I addressed a letter to Major Powell of the Geological Survey, who has had the Indian subject under his study for perhaps thirty years, and for the last ten or fifteen years has devoted almost his exclusive attention to it, and I asked him freely his opinion about the measure that is now before Congress, and inasmuch as the opinions of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs secretary of the interior and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs have been quoted by the honorable Senator from Texas, and perhaps by others, I ask that the Secretary read the letter of Major Powell in reply to my questions, which I now send to the desk, and I think if the Senate will give attention to it they will gain a great deal of information on this subject which we do not possess now.

The Secretary read as follows:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION, BUREAU OF ETHNOLOGY, Washington, D. C.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION, BUREAU OF ETHNOLOGY, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: In reply to your note I beg leave to make the following statement:

The great diversity of tribes and tribal governments within the United States is the principal source of difficulty in the administration of Indian affairs. It is not possible in a brief letter to set forth the magnitude of these difficulties; but the following statement will to a limited extent indicate their nature:

The most fundamental divisions among the North American tribes are those established by diversities of speech. Within the territory of the United States there are sixty-five distinct stocks or families of languages that differ among themselves as radically as they each differ from the English, the Hebrew, or the Chinese. Most of these families or stocks of languages are represented by from two to twenty languages differing from each other as much, for example, as the English, German, French, and Persian of the Aryan stock. In each stock there is a totally distinct set of traditions, customs, laws, and tribal government. Many of the tribes speaking different languages of the same stock differ widely in some respects. Again there are many instances of people speaking the same language with only difference of dialects who, yet have distinct tribal governments. The number of tribal governments within the territory of the United States cannot accurately be stated at present. Investigations carried on by this office are yet incomplete, though during the past two or three years this has been one of the principal subjects of study, and during the past year especially chief attention has been given to the subject; but it is safe to say that there are in the United States more than five hundred totally distinct tribal governments.

The following is an example of the tribal governments of one linguistic family or stock, namely, the Shoshonian. This family is one of the four largest in the United States, these being in order as follows: The Algonkian, the Dakotan, the Tribe.

Utes of Southern Colorado. Utes of Northern Colorado. Utes of Uintah Valley, Utah.	13	3 7 7 people.

Tribal government, therefore, being based upon kinship, has a kinship system of great complexity, with many curious distinctions, that in civilized life seem artificial and absurd, but under the conditions of barbaric society are plain and logical.

artificial and absurd, but under the conditions of the customary laws, traditions, and religion of primitive tribal society.

In Indian tribes individual or personal rights and clan rights are very carefully differentiated. The right to the soil, with many other rights, inheres in the clan. Indian morality consists chiefly in the recognition of clan rights; and crime in Indian society chiefly consists in the violation of these clan rights. In Indian society the greatest crime is the claim of an individual to land, and it is also a heinous sin against religion.

This subject of the tenure of lands is exceedingly complex and cannot be set forth in the limits of a letter like the present.

I send you inclosed herewith a manuscript prepared by myself some months ago on the "government of the Wyandot Indians" which will serve as a fair illustration of the nature of tribal governments.

The foregoing remarks apply to tribal governments in their primitive condition or before they were modified by the influence of civilization. There are now a few tribes that are already prepared to accept the institutions of civilization; and all have to a greater or less extent been modified.

Permit me to make a few remarks relative to Senate bill No. 1773 now pending. To introduce a new family system.

There are three prerequisites to the ultimate civilization of the North American Indians. The first is, they must adopt the civilization of the North American Indians. The first is, they must adopt the civilization. Third, they must abandon the industries of savagery and engage in the industries of civilization. The changes in savage society cannot be abruptly made. Savagery cannot suddenly be transformed by the mague of legal enactments into civilization. The changes in savage mentioned above must be made simultaneously. Civilized family organization, civilized property rights, and civilized industries can only be acquired slowly and contemporaneously.

For accomplishing these purposes the measure embraced in the bill above mentioned in its general scope is eminently wise, but in its present form will to a great extent be practically inoperative. The first step to be taken is a systematic and continuous registration of the members of the several tribes by families, as the family is recognized in civilized society so that legal lines of inheritance may be established.

continuous registration of the members of the several tribes by families, as the family is recognized in civilized society so that legal lines of inheritance may be established.

Second, there should be a system of recording land titles connected with the system of registration. These registrations and records should be carefully supervised by competent men appointed by the Government; the Indians themselves cannot properly perform the task.

Third. Section 9 of the bill is a practical nullification of all that precedes in its application to the greater number of tribes within the United States and with many would defeat its operation for the next century. It would be far better to provide that any Indian could take land in severalty on application to the agent; provision should be made to enable the agent to assist such application to the agent; provision about by the erection of a small house and by supplying him with the necessary agricultural implements. In most cases the present appropriation made to support and civilize the Indians would be sufficient for this purpose.

It is doubtful whether there are a half dozen tribes within the United States where a two-thirds vote could be secured in favor of the civilized land tenure, but it is probable that in every tribe there are individuals who would take advantage of it, and it is probable their example, aided by the Government, would induce others to try the same experiment.

I beg you to indulge me in one more paragraph. Citizenship with all its rights and obligations is incompatible with kinship society. Citizership in civilized society should be granted to the Indian only on the condition of his adopting civilized institutions or in one more paragraph. Citizenship in civilized society participation in civilized government.

The bill itself recognizes this condition by making the land taken in severalty inalienable for a number of years, and it would be wise to require the same term as a period of probation prior to assuming the responsibilities and obtaini

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Powell understands, I suppose, as much of Indian character and of the laws and languages of the Indians and their habits as almost any man living; and the testimony which he brings in that letter seems to me exceedingly valuable as throwing light on this question. It is the result of many years' close, diligent application and study. After he had sent me that letter, having first had a conversation on the subject, he addressed me another letter, which I will read, it is about the subject, he addressed me another letter, which I will read; it is short:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION,
BUREAU OF ETHNOLOGY, J. W. POWELL, DIRECTOR,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1881.

SIR: Since my basty reply to your note on Saturday last. I have had more time in which to carefully consider the provisions of Senate bill No. 1773, and beg permission to make an additional statement. No measure could be devised more efficient for the ultimate civilization of the Indians of this country than one by which they could successfully and rapidly obtain lands in severalty; and the suggestions I make are presented in this spirit.

I should like to emphasize the statement I made in my last letter relative to the effect of the ninth section of the bill. Almost every tribe in the United States is divided into two parties—the conservative, composed of people who desire to remain in their primitive condition, and the progressive, or those who desire to adopt civilization; and it would be especially disastrous if the law should demand that this fundamental step in progress toward civilization could not be taken by any Indian until a two-thirds vote of his tribe should sanction it.

It is probable that in every tribe there are persons who would avail themselves of a privilege of this nature, and their prosperity would eventually induce others to take the same step; and thus, gradually, tribal society would be transformed into civilized society; but, if no step could be taken until a two-thirds vote of the entire tribe should sanction it, the desired end would be postponed indefinitely.

The third provise of the fifth section is as follows:

"And provided further, That it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior, at any time, to negotiate with any Indian tribe for the purchase of such portion of its reservation as shall not be deemed necessary for the allotments of the members of such tribe, on such terms and conditions as shall be considered just and equitable between the United States and said t mistaken in regard to the effect of the two provisions taken in conjunction, and I simply beg to call your attention to the point.

I am, sir, with great respect, your obedient servant.

J. W. POWELL, Director.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN, United States Senate, Washington.

Indians.	No. of Indians on reservation.
Blackfeet, &c. Crow Fort Berthold Sioux.	16, 024 2, 150 1, 393 16, 677	26, 451, 200 6, 272, 000 8, 320, 000 31, 408, 551
Total	36, 244	72, 451, 751

I beg further to suggest, and as that letter does suggest, taking the ninth section and the proviso in the fifth section, and reading them together, and they must be read in pari materia, the proposition is an absolutely demonstrable one, it seems to me, to the mind of any man that by this bill you make to the Indians a grant of the reservations that they hold now, of these enormous bodies of land that they hold simply by right of occupation. You make a grant consisting in part of law and in part of contract when it is ratified by two-thirds of the male Indians of a particular tribe. Then I should like to see the skill of any Senator put to the test as to the undoing and unraveling and taking away that grant. This bill, while it has received the sanction of a very able committee, and doubtless their most matured labors, is as dangerous a product as was ever laid before this Senate—dangerous in theory, dangerous in its principles, and it does not commend itself to my I beg further to suggest, and as that letter does suggest, taking the dangerous a product as was ever laid before this Senate—dangerous in theory, dangerous in its principles, and it does not commend itself to my mind merely because the honorable Senator who has the bill in charge is able to say that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs want the bill passed. That is not reason enough to justify me in putting it in the power of the Indians to hold these reservations, in spite of the people of the United States, in perpetuity until we can get the consent of two-thirds of the male members in each of these tribes to let go. And then the point made by the Indian girl, what do you do by the ninth section? You carry it to a tribe; you summon the men who are twenty-one years of age into a council, and unless two-thirds of them will consent for this law to go into effect, no Indian in any tribe of the United States can take lands under the homestead law or any other, because this law, when enacted, of course, repeals all repugnant laws, repeals everything that stands in its way. You must get the consent of two-thirds of the Indian men in a reservation before any Indian under this bill can have a right to in a reservation before any Indian under this bill can have a right to a homestead, and if two-thirds of them do not vote for it, they can a homestead, and if two-thirds of them do not vote for it, they can hold the Indians in their tribal organization, and under the law as it is now, in absolute perpetuity. That is the bill we have commended to us by the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. President, I expected, after what was said in debate here the other day, after the remarks made by the honorable Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Teller,] and particularly after so much comment had been made in reference to the Ute bill, which we passed at the last session, that some account of the execution of that bill would have been laid before Congress in time to have had the benefit of the precedent upon the argument of this question; but so far from its being been laid before Congress in time to have had the benefit of the pre-cedent upon the argument of this question; but so far from its being forthcoming, it seems to be voluntarily and willfully withheld. Sir, I have no doubt that the experience of the Government of the United States upon that Ute bill, if it was fairly laid before the Senate, would crush this measure, which is based on the same principle, for there in reference to one tribe of Indians we have undertaken to do that which is undertaken now to be done in reference to all the Indians of the United States, and that has been a signal failure; and we ought to have the benefit of the facts in regard to it before we proceed further in the consideration of this cas diversity in reference to who are the heads of different families. Sometimes with one of the tribes the mother is the head of the family; and when a must not in charge of the bill, neither am I attempting to defeat any fair measure for the benefit of the Indians, for there is nothing that I have thought of in many years that is to my mind more attractive and more interesting to me than what I might be able to do as a Senator have carpy fashion and form of civilization. I want to see them receive every fashion and form of civilization that they are capable of enjoying; I want to see them incorporated into the citizenship of this country so that they can participate with all the rest of the people in this land in the great work we are carrying on here, and which work is still in the very swaddling-clothes of its infancy. Here we have governments of States, of the District of Columbia, of the Territories, of an Indian Territory, of Indian tribes. We have a long work ahead of us, an important work ahead of us, and, Mr. President, we shall never solve it by one act of Congress, I and, Mr. President, we shall never solve it by one act of Congress, I and farile. The Indian in his condition to-day is the most abject man that lives on the earth. Senators have been discussing the most have laws of the brings forward, it is supposed that the proposition laws of the country. He is called a ward and he is so treated, and how many guardians has he got? He has the military in the form of the Army and is treated as a prisoner of war on his reservation and he cannot go off the reservation without violating a statute of the United States and subjecting himself to very severe punishment. In one case a man as free as I am, or as any Senator on this floor is, because he went to visit a neighboring tribe in the Indian Territory, when he came back was brutally murdered by a United States soldier. That is only one case. I dare say there are many.

He is kept in the gnardianship of the Army that watches over him on the reservation. He is prevented from trading with any man except a licensed trader; perhaps that is a boon to him; I do not know. He must receive his education or that of his children at the hands of those who are hired to educate him. He must receive his religion at the hands of an appointed minister of the Gospel. He must receive his physic at the hands of a doctor of the United States Government, a man who is employed for that purpose. His blacksmithing must be officially done. He must have an educated farmer for the purpose of instructing him in agriculture. All these different functions are of instructing him in agriculture. All these different functions are performed by different men. He has the general supervision of the laws of the United States. We have five commissioners, I believe, to investigate all contracts for the purchase of supplies for the Indians. We have the Secretary of the Interior to watch over him, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and a large number of Indian agents and inspectors and subsectors.

Indians. We have the Secretary of the Interior to watch over him, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and a large number of Indian agents and inspectors and sub-agents.

Mr. President, the guardianship which the United States Government exercises over the Indian is not only the most expensive, but it is also the most extensive and the most intricate guardianship that was ever performed toward a ward in the world; and with all this nursing, with all this watching, with all this guarding, with all this nursing, with all this watching, with all this guarding, with all these restrictions for the purpose of protecting his morality, and his person, and his rights as an individual, the man is perishing. He is locked up a prisoner of war on a reservation; there he regards himself as a man who has been severed from his native home by an act of injustice, and his heart sinks in his bosom when he thinks of the calamities through which he has passed and the hopelessness of the future. The man has no incentive to work. There is none of the stimulus urging men in civilized life and of our family to move forward in the acquisition of property. The Indian is a heartless, homeless downcast man; a ward of the nation, and a ward who is nursed not by caresses, but by hands that are hard and severe.

Now, what this bill tries to do—and I am in sympathy with that idea—is to relieve him of this guardianship and to put him upon the foundations that we stand on, as far as possible. As the Indian girl, whose letter has been read, says, let his rights as a person be secured by written laws, and not a wardship under the discretionary powers that may be exercised over the Indians by this multitude, these swarms of agents that we send out to take care of him.

But, Mr. President, the ninth section of the bill will have to go out of it, or else we shall cede to the Indians by an absolute grant terri-

But, Mr. President, the ninth section of the bill will have to go out But, Mr. President, the ninth section of the bill will have to go out of it, or else we shall cede to the Indians by an absolute grant territory more magnificent than that which is to-day embodied in any State, yes, in half a dozen States of this Union. So I hope the Senate will consider this bill. They will find a great deal of it as they go along that is worthy of attention, and they will find when they come to ascertain what is the meaning of the phrase "head of a family," where it speaks of the head of a family being entitled to one hundred and sixty acres of land, one of the most intricate and involved subjects that has ever yet engaged the attention of the Supreme Court and sixty acres of land, one of the most intricate and involved subjects that has ever yet engaged the attention of the Supreme Court of the United States. The "head of a family" is mentioned in the bill. What sort of head of a family? The head of a civilized family or a savage family? Who is the head of an Indian family? The bill does not say. Mr. President, it is a very hard matter to ascertain, and out of the history of four hundred tribal governments in the United States you will find among them a vast contrariety and diversity in reference to who are the heads of different families. Sometimes with one of the tribes the mother is the head of the family: and when a
